The birth of an heir to the Hopetoun estates in Scotland was celebrated on the 28th ult. by the tenantry by a dinner held at Linlithgow. Lord Hopetoun was present.

Mr. Archibald Stirling-Maxwell, the late Sir Wm. Stirling-Maxwell's second son, who shortly comes of age, will, on succeeding to the Keir property in Scotland, drop the second name of Maxwell.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Crawford, LL.D., F.R.S., will preside at the 223rd anniversary festival of the Scottish Corporation, to be held in the Freemasons' Tavern, London, on St. Andrew's Day.

Russell & Co., shipbuilders, Port Glasgow, have contracted with an English firm of shipowners to build the largest sailing ship in the world. She will be upwards of 3,000 tons register, and have four masts.

It is stated that Major-General John Sprot, formerly of the 91st Highlanders, is about to retire voluntarily from the British army service. The gallant officer served in the Indian Mutiny campaign under Lord Clyde.

Aberdeen Synod recently discussed the agricultural depression. Rev. Mr. McQueen said their condition was hopeless, and declared his conviction that the whole system of landlordism would have to be swept away.

Mr. E. M. Griers, photographer, Glasgow, has perfected a process which renders the operator entirely independent of the ordinary sources of light, and which acts so suddenly that the iris of the eyes of the sitter cannot contract as in sunlight or in bright daylight. The process is called Kataplectic photography.

Twelve miles of waterworks pipe have been laid in Belleville, and if the weather continues favorable the contract will be completed by next month. The cost of the work is about $250,000.

A project is on foot to start a German-Canadian journal in Montreal. The idea is to circulate it extensively in Germany, with the object of promoting emigration to Canada.

The Canadian Pacific Railway telegraph line will probably be extended into Alaska

...ong for a Boy I Love.

Keep ahead of the world, if you can, my boy,
'Tis the sly sure way to succeed.
If you do fall behind, 'twill be hard to get back
To the spot where you once had the lead;
And there's no way to win in the battle of life,
So sly, so safe and so sure,
As to have a few dollars ahead of your wants—
For most of life's ills 'tis the cure.

But you never get dollars till first you get pence,
As from acorns the mighty oaks grow;
Work hard, and work ever, and save as you toil
No matter if progress seems slow;
Thus be true to yourself in the years of your youth,
And you'll rest without worry when old.
Save the pennies to-day, into silver they'll turn,
And the silver will grow into gold.

Let the fools try to tempt you to pleasures to-

That will take the small coin from your purse;
Store your brain in the hours they give to the world
With knowledge, you'll not be the worse;
For labor, and study, and saving in youth
Will give rest and content when you're old,
And the pennies to-day will be silver full soon,
And the silver will grow into gold.

Fair Italy lies on the Alps' farther side,
'Tis the place we have dreamed of alway,
But those Alps must be climbed by the stout limbs of youth
Ere by Time we pass age away;
So work, my brave boy, in the years of your strength,
If you want rest and plenty when old;
Take care of the pennies, to silver they'll turn,
And the silver will grow into gold.

L. J. BEAUCHAMA.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

And it was for this that she had come back to him through "The Valley of the Shadow of Death," bringing her baby with her.

Some strange feverish power seemed to enter into her and give her a fitful strength. She sat down at her husband's desk and began writing rapidly, and as the thoughts came to her; and when she had finished, she enclosed her letter with the torn fragment, and, after addressing it, sealed it carefully. As she did so she heard footsteps approaching the library, and slipped it hurriedly into the open drawer, and the next moment Sir Hugh entered with a telegram in his hand.

"I have been looking all over the place for you, Fay," he began, hurriedly; "and not a soul seemed to know where you were. Look here; I have just had this telegram from Fitz. He wants me to come up to town at once. I believe we have to start earlier than we intended."

And as Fay seemed to have no answer ready, he went on—"I am so vexed about it, my pet, for I meant to have driven you over to Pierrepoint after luncheon; you looked so pale this morning, and I had to arrange about so many things. Well, it cannot be helped; Raville is packing my 'Gladstone,' and I have not a moment to lose."

"Do you mean you are going off to Egypt now?" asked Fay, hardly able to articulate—her lips had grown quite white. What if she should be too late after all!

"Egypt, indeed! What a child you are, Fay; one can never make you understand things. No, I am going up to London to get what I want, and meet Egerton and Powis, the other fellows who are to join us. I shall sleep at the Club to-night, and you may expect me to be down to dinner to-morrow. The next day——" here he hesitated; "well, there is time enough to talk of saying good-bye then."

"Yes, yes, I understand now. Go and get ready; and, Hugh, don't forget to kiss baby."

"All right," he laughed good-humoredly; and then Fay stood quite still, holding the table, till he came back.

"My traps are in the hall; I must say good-bye quickly, darling." How handsome, how well he looked, as he stooped over her with his plaid over his arm.

He need not be fearful of her detaining him; there was no clinging, no agony of weeping this time. She put her two hands round his neck and held him for a moment, as her cold lips touched his, and then stood quite still and waved to him—sadly, quietly—from the window as he drove past, and that was all.

CHAPTER XXXII.

"GOOD-BYE—GOOD-BYE."

I never will look more into your face
Till God says, "Look!" I charge you, seek me not,
Nor vex yourself with lamentable thoughts
That peradventure I have come to grief.
Be sure I'm well, I'm merry, I'm at ease.
But such a long way, long way, long way off,
I think you'll find me sooner in my grave,
And that's my choice—observe.

E. B Browning.

Fay had made up her mind to be lost.

Could any one imagine anything so utterly ignorant and childish, and yet so pathetic? She was going to lay down her wifely rights and steal away, friendless and unprotected, into the great lonely world, so that Hugh might come back to his old home in peace.

With the rash impulse of despair—of a despair that hoped nothing and feared nothing—she was taking the most terrible step that a young creature could take. She was doing evil that good might come; she was giving up herself in complete renunciation and self-sacrifice in obedience to a miserable and mistaken idea. If she had been older; if her simplicity of character had been less childish, and her worldly knowledge greater, she must surely have hesitated before taking a step that must anger as well as grieve her husband. How would Sir Hugh's haughty spirit brook the publicity and the nine days' wonder of the world when they knew that his wife, Lady Redmond—the successor of all the starched and spotless dames who hung in the old guest-chambers—should so forget herself and him as to tarnish his reputation by an act so improper and incredible.

He might forgive his spoilt trip and all the trouble that awaited him in his empty home; but how will he ever bring himself to forgive that?

But Fay, poor mistaken child, thought of none of these things. She only felt that she must go and take her baby with her. There was no time to be lost, and she must make all her plans very quickly.

Fay's will was a strong one—there was no fear that she would falter in her purpose; but she never remembered afterwards how she carried it out, or from whence came the strange feverish energy that supported her. She was working in a dream, in a nightmare, in a horrible impatience to be gone—to be gone—where? But even this question was answered before many hours were over, for she was to make her poor little plans with the utmost precision. In the quiet evening time, as she paced restlessly through the empty rooms, she thought of a place of refuge where she might rest safely for a little. The moment the carriage had turned the corner, and she could see it no longer, she had taken the letter from the drawer and laid it on the table.

Such an innocent, pitiful little letter it was.

"Darling Hugh," it began, "do not be angry with me when you come back to-morrow and find your Wee Wifie has gone. What could I do—how could I stay any longer after reading your words. Indeed, I think I could have borne anything but this. No, this one thing I could not bear—that you should leave your home and country to free yourself from me.

"'You must go,' you say; of course it must be you," Darling, do you not know me better than that?

"I felt you could not love me, Hugh; but have I ever blamed you in my heart? I was too childish and young for such a man as you. Why did you marry me, dear—that was a great mistake. But perhaps you saw I liked you.

"I tried so hard to please you, but somehow I always failed. And then the baby came—our baby—and you did not care for him; and then, indeed, I thought my heart would break. I wonder if you know how I have loved you? I was not too young for that, though you thought I was. I never lay down to sleep without praying God to bless my dear husband, and sometimes—was it very childish of me, I wonder?—I put baby's hands together and made believe he was praying too.

"I think if you knew what I suffered, when they thought I was dying, and the angels would not come for me; I think—yes, I do think, Hugh—you would have been sorry for me then.

"Good-bye, my darling—I shall never call you that again, for I am going away for ever. You must not trouble about me, for I shall take great care of myself, and after a time I shall not fret so much. I shall take my baby—he cannot do without me, and I love him so. When he is older I will send him back to you. He is so like you, dear—a Redmond all over—and his eyes will remind me of you.

"I shall say good-by to you very quietly. When I try to speak there is a dreadful lump in my throat that seems to choke me; and I feel as though I could blush with shame for being so little and insignificant in your eyes. You are like a king to me, Hugh; so grand, and noble, and proud. Oh, what made you marry me? You did wrong there, darling, did you not?

"Good-bye, good-bye. I shall be quite lost. Do not look for me; only give me a thought now and then—one kind and gentle thought of your Wee Wifie."

She read through the letter dry-eyed, and kissed it, and laid it on the table. It would touch his hands, she thought. Later on she unsealed it, and added a short postscript. "Do not be anxious," it said; "I am going to some kind people who will be good to me and the boy."

She had placed the letter where Hugh would see it at once, and then she went upstairs. She wanted to have her baby in her arms, that its touch might lull the deadly faintness at her heart; and when she felt a little better she sent for Mrs. Heron and Janet.

Sir Hugh had gone off to London, she told them; they had telegraphed for him, and she was to follow him immediately. She would take her luggage with her, of course, for she did not intend to return to the Hall before going down into Devonshire; but they would see Sir Hugh again for a few hours—he would probably run up the following evening to give his final orders.

And would she be long away? asked Mrs. Heron. She thought my lady looked very ill, and required a thorough change.

"Yes," returned Fay, quickly; but she turned away as she spoke. She should most certainly be away all the time Sir Hugh was in Egypt. Janet must set to work at once, for they would have to start early. And then she explained that the cottage at Daintree was very small, and Sir Hugh had begged her to dispense with Janet's services, and only take nurse.

Janet looked very disappointed when Fay said this, for she adored her gentle little mistress. "I don't know what master is thinking about," she grumbled, in confidence, to Mrs. Heron. "This new nurse has only been here six weeks, and does not know my lady's ways. And who will wait on her, I should like to know, if I am to be left behind? but this is all of a piece with his selfishness." But she worked with a will for all that, and all the time her boxes were being packed. Fay wandered about with her baby on her arm collecting her little treasures, and dropping them in the boxes as she passed. Now it was a book Hugh had given her, or a picture, or the withered flower he had worn in his button-hole; an odd glove he had left on his dressing-table, and which she clutched with the greediness of a miser; and even a silk handkerchief he had worn round his neck—she put them all in. Such a strange little assortment of odds and ends. Janet thought she was daft.

And she would have none of her evening dresses packed up, or indeed any of her costly ones—she would not require them in the country, she said, quietly; but she would have all her jewels—not those Hugh had given her, or the old family jewels that had been reset for her, but those that had belonged to her mother, and were exceedingly valuable; there was a pearl necklace that was worth five hundred pounds. Hugh had drawn out a large sum of money that he had given in charge to her—he meant to have left it for domestic expenses while he was away. Fay wrote out a receipt, and put it with her letter. It would be no harm to keep it, she thought; Hugh could help himself to her money. There would be enough to keep her and the boy for more than a year, and after that she could sell her necklace. She was rich, but how was she to draw any more money without being traced to her hiding-place.

The last act before the daylight closed was to go to the stables and bid Bonny Bess good-bye. The groom, who knew that he was to follow in a few days with Bonny Bess and another horse—for Sir Hugh had been very mindful of his wife's comfort—was rather surprised to see her kissing the mare's glossy neck, as though she could not bear to part with her; when she had left the stables, Nero, who had followed her about all day with a dog's instinctive dread of some impending change, looked up in her face wistfully.

"Do you want to come with me, Nero?" she asked, sadly; "poor fellow, you will fret yourself to death without me. Yes, you shall come with me; we will go to Rowan-Glen together."

For all at once the thought had come to her of a beautiful spot in the Highlands where she and her father had stayed many years ago. If she remained in England, Hugh would find her, and she had a dread of going abroad. Besides, what could she do with baby, for of course she must leave nurse behind; she would have to engage a stranger who did not know she was Lady Redmond. And then she bethought herself that she would call herself by her husband's second name St. Clair—she would be Mrs. St. Clair.

Yes, she and her father had had a very happy time at Rowan-Glen. They had been to Edinburgh, and to the Western Highlands, and had then made their way to Aberdeen, as Colonel Mordaunt had some old Indian friends there; and, as they had still some weeks to spare, they had come down to the Deeside, and had fallen in love with Rowan-Glen.

But they could not obtain a lodging in one of the cottages, so the manse opened its hospitable doors to them. The minister, Mr. Duncan, was old, and so was his wife, and they had no children; so, as there was room and to spare, and their income was somewhat scanty, the good old people were quite willing to take in Colonel Mordaunt and his little daughter. Fay had forgotten their existence until now; but she remembered how kind Mrs. Duncan had been to her; and she thought she would go to her, and tell her she was married and very unhappy, and then she would let her and baby stop there quietly in the old grey house.

Nobody ever came there, for they were quiet folk, and Mr. Duncan was an invalid; and there was a dear old room, looking out on the old fashioned garden, where her father had slept, that would just do for her and baby.

Fay had a vague sort of feeling that her strength would not last very long, and that by and by she would want to be cared for as well as the baby. Her poor brain was getting confused, and she could not sleep—there was so much to plan before the next day.

Ah, what a night that was. If it had not been for the soft breathing of her infant in the darkness, Fay must have screamed out in her horror, as thoughts of the desolate future came over her; and yet it was easier for her to go away than to stay on at the Hall an unloved wife—a millstone round her husband's neck.

When Janet called her at the proper time she found her up and dressed and beginning her baby's toilet.

"Here, Janet," she said, with an unsteady laugh, "I don't think I am putting on baby's things very nicely, but I wanted to try, so nurse let me, but he cries so much that he confuses my head." And then she gave him up and went wandering through the rooms, saying a silent good-bye to everything; and last of all she went into her husband's library.

Ellerton found her there when he summoned her to breakfast. She would come in a minute, she said, quietly; she was only arranging Sir Hugh's papers as he liked to have them. Yes, she knew the carriage would be round directly, but Ellerton need not fear that she would be late. And then, when the old servant had closed the door, she went up to her husband's chair, leaning over it and embracing it with her two arms, while she rested her cheek against the carved ebony back. "This is where he will sit this evening," she said. "Good-bye, God bless you, dear; and then she left the room.

But she would eat nothing, and only asked for her baby. But just before she got into the carriage, she called Mrs. Heron to her, and bade her take care of the aged people at the Pierrepoint almshouses, and see they had their little packets of tea and grocery as usual; and then she shook hands with her and Ellerton.

"Good-bye to you all," faltered the poor child hurriedly. "You have been good friends to me, all of you. Good-bye—good-bye; and then she drew her veil over her face, and leant back in the carriage, while Nero licked her little ungloved hand.

Sir Hugh had sworn to love and cherish her until death, and yet he had brought her to this.

The journey was a very short one; but nurse afterwards remembered that Lady Redmond did not appear surprised, when they arrived at Euston, to find that Sir Hugh was not waiting at the station. "What are we to do, my lady?" she asked rather helplessly, for she was young and a country woman, and the din and bustle were overwhelming to her; but Fay was helping to identify her luggage, and did not answer. She told nurse to go into the waiting-room with baby, and she would come to her presently. And then she had her luggage put on to a cab.

"Nurse," she said, quickly, when she came back a few minutes afterwards, "will you give me baby a moment, and go to the refreshment room—it is just a little way down the station. I should like some sandwiches and sponge-cakes, and perhaps you had better get some for yourself, there is plenty of time;" and the woman obeyed her at once. Her lady looked faint, she thought; most likely she was disappointed that Sir Hugh was not there.

As soon as she had left the waiting-room, Fay went up to the person in charge, and asked her to give a sealed note to her nurse when she came back. "You remember her—the young woman with reddish hair who held baby just now; tell her I have gone to look after the luggage, and ask her to read it." And though the woman thought the request a little strange, she took the sealed packet without demur.

As Fay and Nero went outside the station, the porter who had loaded the cab was standing a little way off. Fay told the cabman hastily to drive off to King's Cross, as she wanted to take the Scotch express; and as the porter came up to claim his gratuity he found the cab driving off, but Fay flung him a shilling. By a strange fatality the cabman who drove them met with an accident that very day, from the consequences of which he died in two or three weeks' time; and this one thing checked all clue. When the inquiries were set afloat, the porter certainly remembered the little lady and baby and the big black dog, but he had not heard her instructions to the cabman.

Fay only took her ticket to York; she dared not go straight to her destination. When she arrived there she would not put up at the station hotel, but had herself driven to a quiet little hotel for the night. It was an unpretending place, kept by honest folk; but Fay found herself very comfortable. She made some excuse about not bringing her nurse, and the chambermaid helped her dress baby. She was almost too stupefied with grief and fatigue by this time to do anything but sleep helplessly; but she made the girl promise to call her early, and ordered a fly to the station; and when the morning came she got into it without telling any one where she was going, and took the mid-day train for Edinburgh.

It would be impossible to describe the nurse's feelings when she opened the packet in the waiting room and read her mistress's note. "Dear nurse," it said, "I am really very sorry to treat you so badly, but I cannot help it. I have gone away with baby, and I could not take you. Please go back to Singleton by the next train; you will find your box on the platform, and the porter will help you. Sir Hugh will tell you what to do when he arrives this evening.—Your affectionate mistress, F. Redmond." And enclosed were two months' wages. In spite of her youth, Fay had excellent business capabilities, only her husband had never found them out.

But unfortunately for the bewildered household at Redmond Hall, Sir Hugh never arrived that evening. First came a hazy telegram, informing them of a change of programme, and later on a special messenger came down from him bringing a letter from Sir Hugh—a very affectionate farewell letter.

Fitzclarance had acted on impulse as usual, and he and Sir Hugh had started that very night, leaving Powis and Egerton to follow them.

(To be continued.)

Scholarships for Canadian Universities.

Robert Bruce, a market gardener, who lived on the Ste Foy road, at Quebec, died a few weeks since at the age of 90, leaving a fortune of $120,000. His three daughters, all above middle age, have no children; only one of them, indeed, is married. To them he leaves the interest of his money during their lives; but on their death, without issue, the fund is to be vested in a trust consisting of the principals, or presidents, ex-officio, of Morin College, Quebec; Dalhousie College, Halifax; Bishop's College, Lennoxville; McGill University, Montreal; Queen's University, Kingston; Toronto University and Manitoba College, Manitoba, to establish bursaries and scholarships, of the annual value respectively of $25 and $100 each, to be called "The Robert Bruce Bursaries and Scholarships." The holders must be matriculated students of one or other of the universities named, actually pursuing a regular course of study in arts or science. The scholarships are to be divided into two classes, one for candidates at matriculation and the other for third year's men.

A G. T. R. Brakeman Saves a Lady's Life.

Wm. Jepson, of Niagara Falls, a Grand Trunk brakesman, has been tangibly rewarded by the company for his presence of mind in saving the life of a lady passenger at Prairie siding one day last week. The Pacific Express passes the accommodation at that point, but the former does not stop. The lady was stepping off the accommodation, and, not noticing the approaching express, was standing on the track. Jepson took in the perilous situation at a glance and caught her by the cloak and pulled her back. Her escape from instant death was very narrow, and, as it was, she was severely injured by a blow from the cowcatcher of the express engine.

Heaviest Truss in the World.

The first truss of the Poughkeepsie (N.Y.) bridge was swung into position on the 7th inst. It is 525 feet long between the centres of the towers, 82 feet deep and 35 wide, being the largest and heaviest steel truss in the world. It rests on steel towers 100 feet high, which stand on masonry piers, the foundations of which are 125 feet below high water and rise 30 feet above high water, and its total height from the foundation is 337 feet. It carries a floor system on top for a double-track railway, and is capable of supporting a rolling load of 3,000 pounds to the running foot on each track.

A Small Favor Asked.

Conductor (after the accident)—"Well, sir, we have at last found your valet, but sad to say he's cut in two."

English tourist—"Aw, vewy distressing! Sorry to trouble you, doutcherknow, but I've never travelled in this country before; would you see in which half is the key of my trunk?"

Natural History.

A Quincy teacher recently in giving primary language lessons wrote upon the blackboard the words "Ingrain," "Brussels," "Wilton," and requested her pupils to write each a sentence containing one of these words. One boy displayed his igenuity as follows: "A hedgehog has Brussels on his back."—Boston Commonwealth.

Easily Suited.

"Will you give me some cold victuals?" asked a mendicant at a Prospect avenue door yesterday. "We have none," was the reply. "Oh, well, hot ones'll do," said the beggar briskly.—Buffalo Courier.

Sir Charles Tupper arrived at Ottawa yesterday, and will probably leave for Washington on Monday.

Committees of leading workmen's Radical clubs held meetings in London yesterday, and decided to organize the fullest force to oppose the police edict closing Trafalgar Square on Sunday. Sir Charles Warren, the Chief of Police, demands that the police be reinforced with cavalry. Mr. Robert Graham, member of Parliament for the Northwest Division of Lanarkshire, an Advanced Liberal, will attempt to speak in Trafalgar Square on Sunday next in order to test the legality of the police edict closing the square on Sundays.

LATEST RAILWAY NEWS.

An Appliance to Prevent Accidents from Leaving Switches Open.

Some time since E. E. Springsteen, Michigan Passenger Agent of the Erie Railway, secured a patent on a railroad switch of his invention. The appliance is designed to prevent the accidents which occur almost daily through the carelessness of employees in leaving switches open. The models were submitted to a number of railroad men, including Chief Engineer Masson, of the Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee Railway, and he at once ordered one put on at Pontiac for the purpose of testing its adaptability. It is so constructed that the movement of the train of cars operating on a cam placed on the outer side of the rail controls the switch, closing it if it has been left open and locking it as well. A test was made on Thursday on the main line at Pontiac. Four engines were used on the main line. The switch was left open and the engineer tested its working, running at a speed of from 8 to 22 miles an hour. It worked to perfection, and on Monday next a party of local railway magnets will go to Pontiac to witness another test. A company will at once be formed to manufacture the switch.

Twenty-two miles of grading have been completed on the Northwest Central Railway.

To-day's News Notes.

George Russell, formerly of Paisley, Scotland, hanged himself in No. 2 Police Station, Toronto, on Saturday. He came to look for work and could not get it, and got disconsolate.

Louis Goettler, of Sebringville, cut his throat from ear to ear the other day. It is believed the suicidal mania was hereditary in his family, as his father took his own life some years since.

A Bothwell man named James Lesley has an affliction of the nose, called by the local physician glanders, which is said to be very contagious. Lesley is cut off from society as effectually as if he had leprosy.

A delegation from New Brunswick had an interview on Saturday with Sir Charles Tupper and other Ministers on the question of extending trade relations with the West Indies, which Sir Charles promised to bring formally before the Cabinet on his return from attending the Fisheries Commission.

Dissatisfied with the Music.

As an item of interest it might be stated a pile of strength that would reach half way to the moon is wasted in these parts every year by people holding up a hymn-book in church who don't know a B flat from the howl of John Thomas cat.—Jasper Tex. Hesperian.

Only One of Her Kind.

Visitor (to dime museum freak)—"Beyond being a very pretty young woman, I see nothing remarkable about you, miss. What is your specialty?" Freak—"I'm the girl who thinks she is homely, sir."—Harper's Bazar.

A Paris-ite.

"Pa," said little Johnny McSwilligan, "here's a piece in the paper about parasites, what are they?" "Parasites, my boy, are people who live in Paris. I think you ought to know that, and you in the third reader."

Who Supported Atlas?

"Now, Mary Ann," said the teacher, addressing the foremost of the class in mythology, "who was it that supported the world on his shoulders?" "It was Atlas, ma'am." "And who supported Atlas?" "The book doesn't say, but I guess his wife supported him."

Elegant English.

"Why, Miss Howjames," said the Chicago girl, "you don't mean that it is all over between you and Mr. Grimshaw?"

"What I have told you," replied the Boston young lady, haughtily, "is the—the undraped actuality."

It is proposed to bridge the North River from Hoboken to New York.

James P. McCabe, the murderer of Michael Riley, was hung at Honesdale at 12 p. m. yesterday.

Dr. McGlynn states that he will soon go to Europe, and make addresses on economic questions in England, Scotland and Ireland.

The Central Iowa Railroad was sold yesterday, and bid in by James Thompson, of New York, acting in behalf of the Stickney Reorganization Committee, for $2,400,000.

O. H. Anderson, a lunatic, was being conveyed to the insane hospital in an ambulance at Chicago yesterday morning and heard of Lingg's attempt at suicide. He concluded it would be a good idea for him to do likewise, and took a razor from his pocket and cut his throat. He will die.

UNCHANGED.

In the merry days of boyhood
Of mischief he was full,
And at the teachers faces mad
Behind their backs at school
He's now a portrait painter
Noted for his skill,
And to his predilections true
Is making faces still.

—The Princess Beatrice is convalescent and her infant is in excellent health.

—To-night the Young Men's Liberal Club will meet at 8 p. m. Friends invited.

—The thing that a woman always knows best is how some other woman ought to dress.

—The chestnuts are just beginning to fall from the trees and almanac makers are very busy.

—An exchange says: "Never go into the water after a hearty meal." We don't. We go to the restaurant after it.

—Peoria Transcript: "The Canadian papers are calling Mr. Chamberlain a 'Jonah.' Well, Jonah perhaps made a more extensive investigation of the inside of the fish question than any other man that ever lived."

—Once everybody used to send silver plate for wedding presents, but now cut glass and bric-a-brac are the rage. A Philadelphia bride received so many of the latter that she can hardly find room for them. Out of two hundred presents she received not one was in the silver line.

Hurrah, Hurrah, Hurrah!

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

Flesherton

Is the place to get IMMENSE BARGAINS in all kinds of

SINGLE, DOUBLE & CARRIAGE

HARNESS.

PRICES RIGHT every time.

JINGLE, JINGLE,

JINGLE!

Winter is at hand and the best place to get

Sleigh Bells

(Real Beauties) is at Clayton's Harness Shop. Come and see the stock.

KEEP ❋ WARM

By getting one of Clayton's elegant and comfortable

GOAT ROBES!

Cheap as Dirt!

WHIPS,

TRUNKS,

Sweat Pads,

Brushes,

Curry Combs,

Blankets,

Peerless Hoof Ointment

—and—

Peerless Axle Grease

Everything marked down at bottom prices. Inspection invited.

COME ONE COME ALL.

D. CLAYTON.

Opposite Manshaw's Hotel, Flesherton.

DUNDALK.

Dashes Here and There by an Advance Representative.

A representative of THE ADVANCE paid a flying visit to Dundalk on Friday evening of last week. Just as he got off the train at the depot, the genial and handsome scribe of the Shelburne Economist got on, and here he missed opportunity for fraternal greetings with one of his most esteemed brethren of the rural press. However he hopes to meet friend Smith in the neighborhood of his own "vine and fig tree" in the near future. But he had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Newell, who seemed to be lingering fondly around the scenes of his recent editorial labors, and spent an agreeable evening with that gentleman and his lady, who will shortly bid farewell to Dundalk. The best wishes of all will go with them.

As ADVANCE readers are aware, the Herald recently changed hands, the editorial chair being now occupied by Mr. Spurr, late of Toronto, and but five years landed from the shores of Old England—the country of his nativity. Mr. Spurr is an intelligent, clear-headed and jolly young gentleman, who is bound to achieve popularity. And—mark you, ladies!—he is handsome. Further, he is unmarried! Since taking charge of the Herald, Mr. Spurr has had many amusing experiences, which he narrated to THE ADVANCE man with great good humor—in fact he is the soul of good humor. We wish him unbounded success.

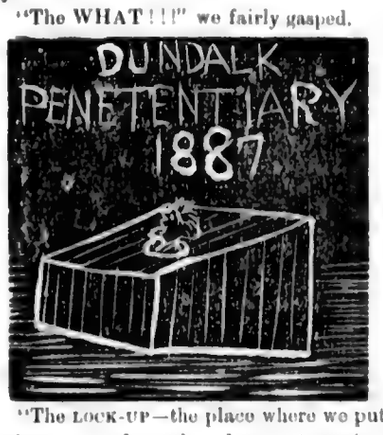
Shortly before six o'clock we left the Herald office and proceeded to call on our friend Mr. Newman Irish, of the Dundalk planing factory. We arrived at the door of the factory only to find it closed and the men gone home to supper. In retracing our steps we had a narrow escape from falling over a large box placed in a dangerous position on the middle of a gore-shaped street. We thought the Village Fathers rather careless in allowing such obstructions to remain on the public thoroughfares of the town and felt like calling on the Mayor and entering a protest. We are now glad we didn't, for on asking a citizen why such things were allowed in an incorporated village like Dundalk, he stared at us for some moments in a peculiar way and then said:—

"What do you mean, sir?"

"Why, that outrageous big box out in the middle of the street!" we exclaimed with some emphasis.

"Sir, I'd have you to know that's the Dundalk lock-up," he snorted indignantly.

"The WHAT!!!" we fairly gasped.



"The LOCK-UP—the place where we put prisoners and people who go tramping around at night axin' impudent questions!" howled the man—significantly emphasizing the last few words—as he strode off down a back street.

THE ADVANCE representative gazed at this remarkable box—beg pardon! lock-up—from every point of view, and finally leaned against the roof and sketched its picturesque outlines on a piece of paper. In imagination he saw a "prisoner"—before retiring—sticking his head out of the stove-pipe hole in the roof and calmly contemplating the starry heavens, while reclining in an easy attitude on his "pallet of straw!" It also occurred to him, that if wheels were placed under the bo-lock-up, the Chief of Police could hitch a horse—(a span of dogs might do)—to it and trundle it around the village on his various "beats." Occasionally he might vary the monotony by converting it into a family "carriage," thereby combining business with pleasure. By guaging it properly, he might be able to hitch it on to a railway train and rattle off to Toronto, where he could make money by exhibiting it as a curiosity at the Zoological Gardens. Or he might put it in his cellar and keep potatoes in it during the winter months. Then, if the Dundalk Village Fathers were so inclined, they could lend the potato box—lock-up, we mean—to Shelburne, Flesherton, Priceville or Markdale on big days. Otherwise, they might occasionally convert it into a hen-coop or mouse trap. Oh, it's just amazing the multitude of uses it could be put to by an enterprising Corporation such as the one in Dundalk! As it was growing quite dark at the time, our Artist could not sketch the background to advantage; so he just left it in the dark, as above and groped his way back to the sidewalk.

Mr. J. B. Watson, "orator and humorist," has twice addressed meagre audiences in Dundalk. The train by which we reached Dundalk conveyed Mr. Watson to Shelburne, where he was billed to lecture that evening. He will return again and give a free lecture, that is, no admission will be charged at the door, but a collection will be taken up afterwards.

The streets of Dundalk are not free from mud at this season of the year.

The ADVANCE representative had only time to take a peep at his old friend, Mr. James Deans, as he hurried toward the depot. He was busy selling the celebrated tea "grown for the Emporium of the North," or some other article from his splendidly stocked store. Not certain which. Mr. Dean is one of those straightforward, pushing business men, who reflect credit upon the community in which their lot is cast.

The most beautiful stock of Silverware ever seen in this country is to be seen at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

FLESHERTON STATION.

Items of Interest Gathered For The Advance.

ELEVATOR.

It is understood that an agitation is now in progress for the formation of a joint stock company, the object of which is the erection of a forty thousand bushel grain elevator at the Station. The matter is being energetically discussed and it seems probable that building material will be on the ground this winter and operations in connection with the erection of the elevator commenced early next spring.

MATRIMONIAL.

Scarce had the excitement and amusement in connection with the announcement of Postmaster Purdy's intention to contest the Reeveship of Artemesia subsided, when the community was thrown into quite a flutter by another and more important step taken by that gentleman. Early in the week Mr. Purdy led to the matrimonial altar Mrs. Sinclair, also of this place. On Wednesday the newly wedded pair "embarked" on the North-bound C.P.R. passenger train for Owen Sound, where a brief honeymoon was spent. Next evening the train bore bride and bridegroom Southwards. Arriving at Flesherton Station the happy couple perceived an enthusiastic assembly arrayed on the platform, and evidently inclined to accord them a hearty "welcome home." But the newly married couple proceeded farther South and returned on the evening train, thereby disappointing and dampening the ardor of their many friends. Prior to the happy event, it was noticed that the genial groom was even more genial and courteous than usual and wore a happy expression of countenance suggestive of approaching bliss.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Station now boasts of no less than three general stores, two hotels, a grocery in prospective, a butcher shop, a steam flour and shingle mill, two blacksmith shops and a shoemaker's shop.

The new schoolhouse is a very creditable structure indeed, and a monument to the indefatigable exertions of Mr. R. Cook, Mr. Wm. Hogg, Mr. Purdy and other residents.

Call and have a look at Russell's, (Flesherton) display of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. It will do you good to see their immense stock of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry.

Brief Bits.

The appointment of Rev. Dr. Burwash as Chancellor of Victoria University—to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Rev. Dr. Nelles—has given universal satisfaction.

The Rotterdam steamer, W. A. Scholten, collided with the steamer Rose Mary of Hartlepool, at 11 o'clock on Friday night last, ten miles off Dover, England, and sunk. A number of the passengers were saved, but one hundred and thirty-two are reported missing.

Hon. John Macdonald, the great Toronto merchant, has given $40,000 towards a new hospital, to be a memorial to his daughter, Amy, not long ago deceased.

Remember our Grand Offer of Fine Engagement and Wedding Rings. A beautiful plush box with each one worth $1.00. A grand assortment of Rings to select from at Russell's, Flesherton.

Having opened out a lot of

Fall & Winter Goods

Personally selected by myself, I can confidently recommend them. I have a large assortment of

Mens, Ladies, and Childrens

BOOTS AND SHOES!

Also a full supply of Mens and Ladies RUBBERS, and Mens FROST PROOF FELT BOOTS. I hope to receive a liberal share of the trade in this vicinity. I will endeavor to satisfy my customers in QUALITY and PRICES.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

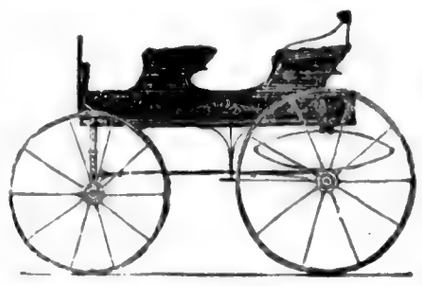
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.



MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith,

THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

Flesherton Station Mill.

The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. GEORGE MOOREHOUSE, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.

FLESHERTON ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 336. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

"NOVEMBER AD."

I am in a position to do BETTER BY THE PUBLIC,

CASH

—OR—

CREDIT!

Than any other jeweller on the C.P.R. between SHELBURNE and OWEN SOUND and as well as any jeweller in those places.

WHY IS IT SO?

1st. I have a first-class wholesale connection established with 4 of the best Firms in Canada, Jobbers and Manufacturers.

2nd. This connection enables me to keep a neat line of Watches, Clocks, Etc., to choose from at prices—"quality and warrant" considered—that are not equaled in this section.

3rd. I do no "catch" business, never taking from those not posted what I can't make off those who are. Four years in business just finished and an increasing patronage warrants me in assuming that my efforts to establish a reputation for reliability and square dealing in every transaction is fully appreciated by the public. I shall continue to keep a Fine Stock, Sell Close, do Satisfactory Work, and Fit Specks on optical principles at reasonable prices.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller.

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 11th CON., ARTEMESIA. 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

331-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Flesherton Cattle Fair next Monday.

Tobogganing and sleigh-riding are the rage now.

Consult our advertising columns every week. It will pay you.

Try THE ADVANCE Office for Job Printing of every description.

Money to lend at current rates of interest on farm security. Charges low. W. J. BELLAMY.

Artemesia Township Fathers meet in the Town Hall here next Monday for the transaction of business.

Mr. F. Bunt, of Markdale—formerly of Flesherton—was in town Wednesday, and gave ye Editor a pleasant call.

A number of farms for sale, numbers of Lots and Concessions will appear next week. W. J. BELLAMY.

Miss Maggie Hannah, who has been visiting friends in the States for some time returned home last week.

New subscribers pouring into THE ADVANCE office these times. Now is the time to renew your subscription for 1888.

Call at Russell's, Flesherton, and secure some of those bargains they are offering. They are doing the business of this County.

Mr. Matthewson, an octogenarian, died at the residence of his nephew, Mr. Henry Matthewson, of Artemesia, this week.

Wm. Clayton has received this week a fresh supply of Mens' Frost Proof Boots, Overshoes; Rubbers, &c. Selling cheap.

Two Bridges to be let, to build, on "The Valley Road," on Saturday first at one o'clock p.m., on the forks of the "Beaver River."—BOLAND & CAIRNS.

Mr. Irving E. Gaudin has been engaged as Head Master of the Kimberley Public Schools. We wish our young friend Gaudin all manner of success.

The genial Public School Inspector for South Grey, Mr. Campbell, visited our Schools on Friday. Mr. Campbell is an energetic and competent official.

A splendid rich toned New Organ and two famed New William's Sewing Machines for sale at a great reduction for cash or trade at C. Treadgold's residence, Flesherton. 4w.

Call and have a look at Russell's, (Flesherton) display of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. It will do you good to see their immense stock of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry.

Auction sale of farm stock and implements in Flesherton on Monday next, Dec. 5th, Cattle Fair Day. Without reserve. James Beecroft, proprietor: A. S. VanDusen, auctioneer.

T. Henderson, Esq., L.D.S., of Toronto, will be at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, to-day and to-morrow (Thursday and Friday) for the practice of his profession.

Dr. Sproule, M.P. for East Grey, gave us a call yesterday. The Doctor is probably one of the most popular representatives of the people in the House of Commons. A man who has raised himself from the ranks of the people to be their trusted representative in the councils of the nation, is surely deserving of the highest respect and confidence at the hands of the electors—especially when that confidence has never been abused. Such a gentleman is the M.P. for the banner riding of East Grey.

—BARGAINS!—

ENORMOUS BARGAINS!

Immense Bargains!

NOW GOING ON AT

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, FLESHERTON!

WHERE WILL BE FOUND THE LARGEST AND FINEST STOCK OF

Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Knives, Razors, &c.

EVER SHOWN IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY. OUR GOODS

TOOK FIRST PRIZE AT FLESHERTON FALL SHOW,

And in order to the parties who were not able to take advantage of our discount sale in October, we have decided to again make this Great Offer and give

TWENTY PER CENT. OFF

On all Cash Sales of $1 and over from 1st day of December, 1887, to 1st day of January, 1888.

Now, this is a grand chance to secure fine goods at about wholesale prices. All Watches we sell bear a written guarantee of from three to five years. We will still make another Grand Offer to anyone purchasing one of our LADIES' FINE GEM RINGS or 18 k. WEDDING RINGS which we have for the number of nearly one hundred, we will give a beautiful Plush Ring Box worth $1.00, any color. These bargains everyone should take advantage of. You will never have as good a chance again and remember the only place to get your Watch repaired properly is at

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON.

Mens' Felt Stockings, Gum Rubbers, also Ladies' and Mens Rubbers, Overshoes, &c., a full supply on hand suitable for the cold weather that the weather prophets say is coming, at WM CLAYTON'S.

The High School Entrance Examination will be held in Flesherton on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd of December next. Applications may be made to Wm. Irwin, Principal Flesherton P.S. No fees will be charged to attend.

HOLIDAYS.—The new stock of Will Richardson, of this town, is replete with the most varied and rare selection of the Rich and Useful, Fancy and Ornamental articles for holiday presents that has ever been placed before the public in this or any other town in this county. Children's Toys, Lover's Gifts, and Mamma's presents, are there in quantity, quality and originality of design, which requires a personal inspection to comprehend their beauty, and excellence of finish.

When you cannot rest from Asthmatic troubles, Southern Asthma Cure will at once relieve. Double treatment in each package.

Auction sale of farm stock and implements at Lot 7, Con. 13, Osprey, commencing at 1 o'clock p.m. sharp, on Tuesday, Dec. 6th. Wm. Dan, proprietor; John Speers & Co., auctioneers. See bills for particulars.

The question of more accomodation for the farmers and travelling public generally in Flesherton is still the principal topic of discussion in this town. It is to be hoped that something more than mere vapor will be the outcome. True, the erection of several sheds is in contemplation, but there seems to be a general feeling that that alone will scarcely "fill the long felt want," and an agitation is on foot for the establishment of a first-class Temporance Hotel, to be run by some person or persons of undoubted total abstinence principles. Such a house would pay well in a community like this—and the more especially as it is admitted on all hands that another house of accommodation is needed in Flesherton.

NASAL BALM.—The only medicine in the market that will immediately cure Cold in the Head, and permanantly cure Catarrh, Hay Fever, etc.

FARMERS

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding the price being cut to close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., OILING, ROLL-CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

SUNK AT SEA.

The Dutch Steamer W. A. Scholten Collides with Another Steamer.

NEARLY A HUNDRED AND FIFTY PERISH.

Passengers' Stories of the Calamity—The Saved.

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: The steamer W. A. Scholten, Capt. Taat, which left Rotterdam yesterday for New York, was sunk by a collision with the steamer Rosa Mary, of Hartlepool, at 11 o'clock last night, ten miles off Dover. The Scholten carried a complement of 230 passengers and crew. The steamer Ebro, of Sunderland, rescued ninety of the crew and passengers and landed them at the Sailors' Home, Dover. One hundred and forty of the passengers are missing. One passenger and a child of the party brought to Dover were found dead from exposure. It is hoped that passing vessels have rescued the missing ones. The W. A. Scholten's masts are visible from Dover pier. Boats have left Dover bound in all directions for the purpose of saving life and property, if possible. The Rosa Mary is anchored off Ramsgate, with her bows stove in.

RECOVERING THE BODIES.

5 p.m.—Up to this hour 22 bodies from the W. A. Scholten have been landed at Dover. The W. A. Scholten left Rotterdam Saturday morning. At the time of the accident a dense fog prevailed. The Scholten was struck on the port bow by the Rosa Mary. Immediately after the shock was felt the Scholten's passengers, all of whom had retired for the night, rushed on deck in their nightgowns. The boats were promptly ordered to be lowered, but it was found that only two were available. The three others were useless and were not lowered. The water rushed swiftly through the hole in the bow and a terrible scene ensued. The panic-stricken passengers uttered piercing shrieks, and many fell upon their knees and prayed aloud. Little children clung to their mothers, who themselves were shrieking with terror. The officers were cool and self-possessed, and remained on the bridge to the last. Several persons procured life-preservers and leaped into the sea. Within twenty minutes of the shock the Scholten was engulfed. All those who had put on life-belts floated and were rescued by the boats from the steamer Ebro, which cruised around until 4 o'clock in the morning. Many of the rescued lost wives, husbands, brothers and sisters. The survivors were supplied with clothes and everything possible was done to ensure their comfort.

CONFLICTING ACCOUNTS.

The passengers' accounts differ regarding the circumstances of the collision, and the reports of the officers of the Scholten clash with those of the officers of the Rosa Mary. Some of the passengers state that the evening's merriment had ceased, and most of the passengers had retired to their bunks, only a few remaining in the saloon, when a tremendous crash was heard on the port bow. They say it is impossible that the collision could have occurred by the Scholten striking an anchored vessel. The second mate of the Scholten reports that he was on deck, when he saw an unknown steamer coming through the fog. Before anything could be done the Scholten was struck in the fore rigging and port bow. The other vessel, which he now presumes was the Rosa Mary, backed off and disappeared. Within twenty minutes the Scholten sunk. The captain of the Rosa Mary states that his vessel was run into while anchored southeast of South Sandhead by an unknown steamer. Finding that his vessel was damaged he proceeded to Dover Road, where the vessel is now docked. The Rosa Mary was laden with coal for St. Nazaire.

LIST OF THE SAVED.

The following is a list of the persons saved and landed at Dover:

Passengers—Sarah Zuherman, Fred. Stepney, Sarah Gold, Maria Stelser, L. Robinson, Vandam Fogbrum, John Binkie, Reid Brownhof, Albert Hensler, Madelena Simiel, Anna Koney, C. F. Andeastie, Judi Levenses, H. Hastuor, S. Wilnie, E. Siosky, S. Alpser, I. Sibati, E. Suscarich, Charles Mills, A. F. Bergstein, G. Appleby, P. Schatmider, F. Wilma, Francois Reiter, J. Gerung, C. Teske, Mayer Schalsneider, L. Streick, Bara Sputz, Marie Hobeld, Bergen Klev.

Crew—Moutz, Aime, Hulsing, Kennekampf, Meikelbach, Link, Felling, Meyer, Devreis, Stom, Felbert, Wegendon, Chriske, Zetloven, Guber, Hallman, Barto, Flekvois, Konig, Bredius, Kabiengen, Mardevooye, Jacob Devreis, Dreizen, Reekers, Nielsen, Debi, Dohm, Springemaye, Lansperter, Danower, Kake.

According to the latest report there were 210 persons on board the steamer, leaving 132 drowned and missing. The first mate and fourth engineer have been recognized among the dead. The steamer lies four miles from the Admiralty pier. Her three masts are visible. She is in a position dangerous to navigation. A buoy and lights have been placed at the wreck.

PASSENGERS' STORIES.

One of those saved is Monte Collo, from the Tyrol. He states that the scenes on the sinking ship were terrible. The steerage passengers, stricken with terror, ran about the deck in wild confusion. The captain tried his utmost to restore order, but without effect. The passengers rushed for the boats, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the officers could keep them from jumping into and sinking them. Collo was in the water two hours when taken out. He was greatly exhausted, owing to the extreme cold and his efforts to keep afloat. After the vessel sank the cries of persons in the water could be heard for a long time in all directions.

George Moore, a passenger, states that when the crash occurred a general rush was made for the deck. "I was told that nothing serious had occurred," he says, "but I secured a life belt. There were six English passengers on board the vessel, and one of these, a girl, asked us to keep in a group that the English might go down together. I was in the water a long time before being picked up. When the Scholten sank the cries were heartrending. The captain of the Ebro, the rescuing vessel, behaved nobly. He had all his deckload of timber thrown overboard, and this judicious act saved many lives. Only two of the Scholten's boats were lowered. The others could not be got adrift. I do not know whether this was due to any fault on board. The vessel listed over so much that all the boats could not be dropped into the water. The people rushed about in the greatest state of excitement, all trying to get a place in the two boats which had been successfully launched. The scare and disorder prevented many persons being saved. The water was freezing cold. This hastened the death of many, rendering them powerless."

Charles Mills, of Redhill, Surrey, says: "The lifeboats appeared as they had not been used for a long time. They had to be chopped away with axes and with the assistance of the passengers. I called out to those on the bridge to fire rockets. It was a long time before they did. The greatest confusion prevailed. The ship was right over on her port side before they fired the rockets. I waited until the water touched the boilers, putting out the fires. Then I got hold of a belt, but a Dutch sailor snatched it away. We were all mixed together, foreigners and English, clinging to one another in the water. I saw several drowned in this way and had the greatest difficulty to keep clear of them. I gave a spar to a woman to hold on to. The Dutch sailors wanted to save themselves and even thrust women aside. I can swim well, and I swam about till I got to the Ebro, when a rope was thrown to me. After the collision I went down into the cabin and woke two Dutch ladies, but they were paralyzed with terror and wouldn't get up despite all entreaties. I heard other complaints about the conduct of the Dutch sailors. The confusion was extreme. Everybody seemed terror-stricken. This may account for the apparent want of discipline. The frantic passengers unnerved some of the crew, preventing them from acting as bravely as they might have done. The captain did his best to restore order. I believe a good outlook was kept. We had our lights up."

The officers of the Rosa Mary avow that they were lying at anchor and were run into. They say that they did not weigh anchor until morning. It is reported that the captain of the Rosa Mary denies the statement that his vessel was in collision with the W. A. Scholten. He avers that the Rosy Mary was injured by a collision with another vessel while lying at anchor.

A HOLE IN THE GROUND LEFT.

Awful Explosion in a Michigan Factory—Six Men Annihilated.

A Hancock (Mich.) despatch says: This town was greatly shaken shortly before noon yesterday by an earthquake. Houses rocked and the church spires swayed. This was followed by a report like distant thunder. Four miles from the town, on the shore of Portage Lake, and in an isolated spot, were situated the works of the Hancock Chemical Company. Among the other products of the works were dynamite and nitro-glycerine. These explosives were kept in the packing-house, a building 150 by 75 feet in size. It was known that the works had 1,500 pounds of dynamite on hand, and Hancock was shaken. The chemical works were at once thought to have blown up, and a delegation set out for the factory. Arriving there they found that not a vestige of the buildings remained. Where they had stood was a hole 100 feet in diameter, 30 feet in depth and conical in shape. The concussion had packed the sand around the side of the great cavity as hard as cement. The locality was searched for pieces of the works and in the faint hopes of finding the bodies, in part or whole, of the six men employed in the factory, but not even a button from their clothes has been or ever will be found. The monuments in a cemetery about half a mile away were shattered and knocked down. On the further shore of the lake was found a timber, thought to be part of the building—and this was all. Five of the six men were single. They all lived across the lake from the scene of the explosion. Their names are as follows: Willie Renaud, Charles Burkett, Thomas Thompson, Timothy Crowley, William King and William Lapp. The latter leaves a widow and one child.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Financial Embarrassment—Forty Thousand Lives Reported Sacrificed.

A New York despatch says: Private letters received in this city from Panama report as follows: No work of importance is being done on the canal. Two leading firms of contractors are said to be embarrassed financially. Another prominent contractor claims over $900,000 from the company. Several important judgments have been filed against the Canal Company, and several seizures and sales are advertised. The importation of the poor Liberian still continues. They are magnificent specimens of manhood, coal black. It was believed they could resist this death-dealing climate, but events have proved otherwise. Of the 282 who were the first to be brought here 36 died within four months. The statement of Mr. Blanchett, in his work on the Panama Canal, that the canal has already cost over 40,000 lives is believed by careful observers here to be no exaggeration.

Vomited a Snapping-Turtle.

A Chicago despatch says: Miss Rendau, 19 years old, was buried on Wednesday. Her death was unexpected, though the young lady had been subject to violent spasms and fits of vomiting for many days. No doctor was able to discover the cause of her death. On the day before her death she was seized with a more violent paroxysm than ever before. There was a choking sensation in her throat, and finally there was forced up from her stomach a live young snapping turtle with a shell as large as a silver half dollar. The physician in attendance said the patient became unconscious and almost immediately began to swell up in her limbs like one afflicted with dropsy. She never rallied. It is believed the turtle grew from a germ swallowed in water from Lake Michigan.

The Collector of Customs at Quebec has seized $10,000 worth of jewellery smuggled into the country by some Belgian immigrants.

Mrs. Barbara Kaudle, aged 60, was found murdered near her home at Unionville, N. J., on Friday. George Dunham, her son-in-law, who is supposed to be the murderer, has been jailed.

PROTECTION FOR FISH.

Proceedings of the National Fishery Association at New York.

A New York despatch says: The National Fishery Association met yesterday in this city, with President F. B. Babson, of Gloucester, Mass., in the chair. He made an address on American fishing interests, past and present. He claimed that the fisheries and their attendant industries had become a matter of strong national interest, and that it was of vital importance that the Government should at once take action to protect its interests. Reports from different parts of the country were presented, showing that the fishery interest was in need of legislation to save it from destruction. Secretary Wilcox reported that there were 221 firms in the association, and that a movement is on foot to send a fleet of Atlantic fishermen to the Pacific slope, where the trade has not been developed. The mackerel fishermen did fairly well off the New England coast this year, and the cod fishers off Labrador did better than ever before. The demand for fish has been greater than ever. Treasurer Pew spoke against Commercial Union with Canada, on the ground that it would destroy the fishing industry. Canada, he asserted, would never consent to a union that she did not have the best of. The policy of the United States should be to build up its own commerce, not that of another country. The Committee on Plan of Action presented a report recommending that the representatives of the association in each locality interested should be considered a committee to collect money for the support of the association and look after its interests, and that F. L. Babson be appointed as the agent to represent them at Washington. Resolutions were adopted demanding the recognition of the fishery industry as an important national affair, which should be placed on an equality with other industries by protection against the importation of foreign fish, and securing equal rights for fishermen in foreign ports to those accorded to foreign vessels in our harbors. The resolution disavows any desire of the right to fish in foreign waters.

WHOLESALE INTERVIEWING.

Mr. Chamberlain Talks to Newspaper Men and Favorably Impresses Them.

A Washington despatch says: Mr. Chamberlain gave audience last evening to about twenty newspaper men. It lasted nearly an hour and was chiefly remarkable for the affable and cordial manner in which the distinguished envoy declined to enlighten his visitors upon the subject of their more searching inquiries. He was understood to say at one point that the purpose of the commission was to make an entirely new treaty, the existing treaty having proved unsatisfactory, but upon further inquiry, especially as to whether an interpretation of the existing treaty might not be found which would meet the views of both sides, he became non-committal beyond the point of admitting that such might be the possible outcome of the conference. He said that though, as a matter of fact, he supposed that Minister West and himself being a majority of the British Commission, could decide any mooted point, he should consider any arrangement which did not have the full concurrence of Sir Charles Tupper a very lame and unsatisfactory one. He thought it unlikely that the subject of Commercial Union with Canada would come before the commission in any way. There was scarcely a shadow of doubt that any arrangement agreed to by the British Commission would be held binding by their Government. He did not think any sane man on the other side of the water ever thought of war as a remote possibility in connection with the fisheries dispute.

BURNED TO THE WATER'S EDGE.

The Steamer Arizona Cremated—The Crew's Escape.

A Marquette, Mich., despatch says: The steamer Arizona, of the Lake Superior Transit Line, was burned to the water's edge yesterday morning. She left this port at 9 o'clock on Thursday night, bound for Portage, and carrying a full cargo of merchandise. When out thirty miles a heavy sea was encountered, and the boat turned about to come back to Marquette. When she was still five miles out the boat commenced to roll heavily, and a tank of acid set her on fire. Nothing could be done to put out the flames, every man being driven from his post by the fumes of the acid, but the boat kept on moving. When flames were discovered a good fire was put under the boilers and the steamer swept on under full steam without the engineer at his post. Capt. Graser stood at the wheel, and, rounding the breakwater, ran the steamer up to it, while the crew jumped off. She then started up into a narrow slip, chasing the crew, who ran to escape the fumes of the acid. The boat just missed immense lumber piles on the docks. Tugs and the city fire department went to her assistance, but could do nothing and she burned to the water's edge. Ship and cargo are a total loss. The Arizona was a freight boat, valued at $40,000. She was on her last trip for the season.

Norman Lockyer's New Theory.

A London cable says: The scientific world is startled by what seems nothing less than a new theory of the constitution of the universe. This comes before the public with all the sanction derived from a paper read before the Royal Society, and with all the authority attached to the name of the distinguished astronomer, Mr. Norman Lockyer. The new theory, he declares, is the result, not of speculation, but of spectroscopic research. It is summed up in the statement that all the self-luminous bodies in the celestial spaces are composed of meteorites or masses of meteoric vapor produced by heat brought about by the condensation of meteor swarms due to gravity. This hypothesis, if accepted, may, as one eulogist remarks, weld all previous knowledge into one harmonious whole. At present it is received by men of science under all reserves.

—No estimate can be given of the great waste of fertilizing matter that is annually carried off by the water into the sea. But for the fish taken the sea would soon exhaust the land. The great cities are the mediums by which the heaviest loss occurs. The sewers conduct away more wealth than can be found over them.

THE GLENORA LOST.

The Schooner Wrecked and No Trace of the Crew.

A last (Friday) night's Kingston despatch says: The Glengarry, with the Gaskin and Glenora in tow, left Fort William some time ago with grain for Kingston. While on Lake Superior they encountered a gale which blew so hard that the Glenora's tow-line parted and she was left in the rear. She managed to follow up safely, however, and get into Jackfish Bay. After that everything went fairly well until off Presque Isle, in Lake Ontario, yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. A heavy gale came after them all the way down, and at the place named the Glenora's tow line again parted and once more she was left to look after herself. Those on board the Glengarry saw her jibs being carried away, a serious loss in the storm. They also saw her roll into the trough of the sea. She disappeared in the distance and has not been heard of since. A three-masted schooner is ashore at West Point, above Long Point, and it is thought that she is the Glenora. The sea was so high that on one occasion the Gaskin's crew were going to cut the tow line, thinking that because they had not seen the steamer for two minutes she had gone to the bottom. The missing schooner has the following crew: Matthew Patterson, captain; Wm. Patterson, the captain's nephew, mate; John Moreland, Picton; Harry Middleton, Kingston; John Murray, Kingston; Anthony Seabrooks, Seeley's Bay, and a man unknown, seaman; Mrs. Middleton, wife of Harry Middleton, and the cook. The Glenora was built in Kingston two years ago, and cost $18,000. She is schooner-rigged, and was built so that she could take care of herself in a gale. The tug Active, which went to look for the Glenora, has returned without finding any trace of her.

The crews of the Glengarry and Gaskin had a terrible experience. James Crozier, on the Glengarry, was nearly washed overboard on one occasion, and so also was D. O'Connor. The latter clung to a fender and was rescued.

THE FOLGER'S ADVENTURE.

The schooner B. W. Folger arrived from Oswego with coal. Between the Main Ducks and Oswego the schooner sprang aleak and lost one of her mastheads. The water rose above the forecastle. A heavy sea rolled all the while and threatened the destruction of the craft. Six men were kept at the pumps, and their exertions kept the boat from sinking.

BAKER PASHA DEAD.

His Death from Fever at Tel-el-Kebir—Brief Sketch of His Life.

A London cable says: Baker Pasha died at Tel el-Kebir yesterday from fever, contracted at Port Said while proceeding to Cairo.

Valentine Baker, son of Mr. Samuel Baker, and brother of Sir Samuel, was born in 1825. He entered the British Army in 1848, served through the Kaffir war of 1852-3, and in the Crimea during the campaign of 1855. In 1860 he took command of the 10th Hussars, which he resigned in 1873 by reason of seniority. After extensive travels through Persia and on the borders of Afghanistan, he returned to England and published "Clouds in the East." In 1874 he was appointed Assistant Quartermaster-General at Aldershot. In the August of the following year he was tried for assaulting Miss Dickenson in a railway carriage, for which he was fined £500 and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment and dismissed the service. In 1877 he began a new military career in the Turkish Empire. He was employed in organizing the gendarmerie, and held the position of Major-General in the Turkish army. In the August of that year he went to Shumla as Staff Military Adviser to the Turkish Commander, and was conspicuous throughout the campaign on the Lom, and shortly afterwards he was given the rank of Pasha. The Prince of Wales was a staunch friend of the banished colonel, and he and other friends made repeated but unsuccessful attempts to secure his reinstatement in the British army. He was considered one of the most brilliant cavalry officers in the service.

A MAGNET MADE OF CANNONS.

It Lifts a Cannon Ball as if it Were a Needle.

A Bridgeport, Conn., despatch says: One of our leading army engineers has brought before the engineer classes of late an experiment of so startling a nature in its inception as to promise wonderful results. It is a monster magnet made of two Rodman guns, which are connected at the breech. Around the magnet thus formed is wound about twenty miles of submarine cable. The cable is some that has been used in the torpedo service. It is wound and fastened in a substantial manner, making a permanent magnet. When electricity is applied some strange results take place. For instance, a bar of railroad iron thirty feet long, if placed in the open cannon's mouth, cannot be drawn out by as many men as can grasp it.

Another instance of the strength of this big magnet was illustrated Saturday with a 350-pound cannon ball. The shot was placed in the mouth of the cannon on the negative side. On reversing the electrical current it fell from its position, but was attracted to the opposite cannon and clung to its side. The positive current was then reversed alternately with the negative, and the heavy cannon ball played between the two cannon like a tack between the poles of a toy magnet.

The Grit of a Nine-Year-Old Boy.

A Kansas City despatch says: About 5 o'clock last evening as a Broadway car was crossing the cable railroad tracks at Ninth street, the 9-year-old son of John Tarsney, attorney for the system, who was riding on the front platform, lost his balance and fell from the car. His right leg went under the wheels and was frightfully mangled, but the little fellow did not lose his nerve in the least, and when carried to his home cautioned the persons with him to break the news gently to his mother, as she was nervous. While the surgeons were amputating the mangled limb the little fellow did not even so much as groan. It is feared that the shock and loss of blood will prove fatal. The father is one of the most prominent attorneys in the section and is a brother of Congressman Tarsney, of Michigan.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

The York County Council opened its fall session in Toronto yesterday, when a resolution in favor of Commercial Union was discussed, but no decision was arrived at.

It is reported from Ottawa that the matter of the Canadian Pacific crossing the Grand Trunk at its eastern entrance to Toronto will be left in abeyance till Parliament meets.

Charles Arlein, a boiler-maker in the M. C. R. shops at St. Thomas, had his right eye ruined for life on Monday evening by a rivet flying from a plate when struck and striking him directly in the eye.

Aggie Bell, a servant in the house of Mr. A. McCrimmon, barrister, St. Thomas, had her face burned into blisters and her eyebrows burned off yesterday morning by coal oil igniting while being used for kindling a fire.

At the regular meeting of the Fergus Board of Education on Monday evening it decided to introduce Dr. Richardson's text book on temperance in the High School, and also in the two highest departments of the Public School.

At the adjourned meeting of the shareholders of the Ontario Investment Association at London last night, a proposal to prosecute Mr. Taylor was carried by a show of hands, but a stock vote being demanded the matter was laid over.

A great number of cases of typhoid and malarial fever have appeared in Ottawa recently, and it is believed by many that the disease is due to the continued drouth and the low state of the Ottawa River, from which the city water supply is drawn.

At yesterday's meeting of the Oxford County Temperance Association, held at Woodstock, a full report was presented on the operations of the Scott Act since its coming into force in May, 1885. The report showed that during that period there have been 122 convictions and $7,000 imposed as fines in the county.

Messrs. Miller & Backhouse, of Aylmer, solicitors for Mrs. Mary Ann McKenney, a widow aged 40, living near Richmond, township of Bayham, claims $2,000 from Solomon Moore, a bachelor farmer about the same age, also a resident of Bayham, for breach of promise of marriage. The case will be tried at the spring Assizes.

The wife of John Stokes, a St. Thomas brakesman, narrowly escaped being poisoned on Monday evening. Feeling fatigued after washing she sat down and drank a cup of tea. Shortly afterwards she was attacked by vomiting and has been seriously ill since. Her child, it appears had unnoticed dropped a ball of blueing in the tea pot during the day.

Spain has seized the Island of Peetegil, near Ceuta, on which she intends to erect a lighthouse. The Moors are excited over the seizure.

Advices from Teheran state that the Shah in April will start on a tour of Europe. He will visit Russia, Germany, Austria, France, England, Italy and Turkey.

Private telegrams have been received stating that on October 7th Henry M. Stanley was 400 miles from Emin Pasha, and that he was making half his force on forced marches.

John Bright writes a long letter protesting against any Land-Purchase Act for Ireland. He contends that the Ashbourne Act, improved if necessary, will serve all purposes for a gradual transfer of land to tenants when such is needed.

The British barque Coronet, from Bull River, has arrived at Falmouth. She reports that she signalled on Nov. 5th, in lat. 43 deg. 43 m. north, long. 33 deg 22 m. west, the British steamer Naworth Castle, from New Orleans, Oct. 28th, for Reval. The steamer was leaking badly. Portions of her cargo had been jettisoned. She refused assistance other than to except some pump leather, of which she had none.

Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, referring to his secession from the Baptist Union, says that when he entered the conflict he made up his mind that even if he were left alone he would be none the less decided as to the propriety of his course. It is pleasing to find, however, he says, that many valued friends approve of his action. He urges that continual prayers be offered that some good may come out of the inquiry which has been aroused.

On Saturday afternoon a deaf and dumb man named David Parmenter, aged 32, while walking on the Grand Trunk Railway track a short distance east of Kingston, was struck by a freight train and injured to such an extent that he died shortly after. Papers on his person showed he was on the way to Toronto and that he was lately out from England.

As Wm. Ogilvie, clerk in the dry goods store of Robertson & Co., St. Thomas, was passing the Grand Central alley on Talbot street abou 11 o'clock on Saturday evening he was felled to the ground by a man who rushed from the passage. In falling on the stone pavement he knocked out several teeth. A deep cut on the left side of his head bled copiously along the pavement as he was carried to a surgery. There is no clue to the perpetrators of the deed.

The French Ministry were defeated in the Chamber of Deputies on Saturday, and immediately resigned, their resignation being accepted by the President.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that Russia is massing 300,000 soldiers near the German and Austrian frontiers. The Polish Jews are said to be keeping Germany and Austria well informed regarding the movements of the Russian troops.

The rumor that the Duke of Norfolk is to be married is untrue. His Grace starts for Rome in a fortnight as Queen's messenger. It is more than probable that he will enter a monastery, as his unnatural asceticism has increased since his young wife's death and the hopeless idiocy of his only son.

Mr. Froude, the historian, has written a letter, in which he says: "Any form of self-government which might be conceded to the Irish people, whether it be local councils or a Parliament, would be used to increase England's difficulty in keeping Ireland attached to the Kingdom. The Irish can be governed more easily than any other people in the world under military or quasi-military rule. The police are uniformly faithful and loyal. England has never yet succeeded in governing Ireland constitutionally and never will."

UNEXPECTED WEDDING.

It was a cold December twilight, but the room was cosy where Harry Cutter was seated in an easy-chair before the grate. Winnie was standing beside the chair, with one hand resting lightly upon brother's shoulder, the other hanging listlessly by her side.

"Come, Harry, why don't you speak? You have been silent at least ten minutes. What are you thinking about?" questioned Winnie, trying to rouse her brother from the reverie into which he had fallen.

"I was thinking, Winnie," he replied, "what you and Walter are going to do if you get married. He has only his clerkship."

"I know it, Harry," said Winnie, "but we intend to wait a year at least. You will consent to our union then, will you not?"

"Yes, Winnie, and I should not withhold my consent now if you wished to be married, for I know of no man more worthy of my precious sister than Walter Adams."

"I am happy to hear you speak so, Harry, for your manner toward Walter has always been so reserved that I did not know whether you liked him or not."

A silence ensued for a few moments, which was broken only by the monotonous ticking of the old clock on the mantel. At length Harry spoke.

"Would you and Walter like to be married now?"

"Yes, indeed," replied Winnie, the rose tint deepening upon her cheeks, while her brother smiled at her earnestness. "Walter said last night," she continued, "that he did not wish to wait a year, but we cannot do otherwise."

"Yes you can, Winnie. Half of the fortune our father left us is yours. Next Thursday will be Christmas. You can be married then and live here with your husband. What do you say to this arrangement?"

"Oh, happy we shall be!" murmured Winnie, almost audibly.

After a pause of a few moments she asked:

"How old are you, Harry—37?"

"Yes, Winnie," was the reply.

"Were you ever in love, Harry?" was the next question.

"Yes, Winnie, I loved once. But we will not talk of that now; some time I will tell you all about it."

"Please tell me now," said Winnie, coaxingly.

"Well, I will, since you desire it.

"When I was a young man I loved a woman named Lucy Alcott, and her parents had appointed a day for our marriage. She was 20 years of age, beautiful and accomplished, with a kind word and a smile for everybody. She was the only woman I have ever loved, and I think she reciprocated my love; but I am not sure. Once I was absent from home a week, attending to business in a distant city. While I was gone Lucy attended a party with a young man who did not bear a very good reputation. On my return I heard of it and immediately called to see her. She greeted me affectionately, as was her wont, but I was angry and upbraided her for her thoughtless conduct.

"'Why did you attend Mrs. Loring's party with Charles Baker?' I asked.

"'Because I wanted to. I did not think there was any harm in it,' she replied.

"'You knew it was against my wishes,' I said, sternly.

"'You might have delayed your business, for you knew I wished to attend that party,' she replied, a little wilfully.

"'My business was of importance and could not be delayed.'

"'Well, Mr. Cutter, I am not your wife, and am not bound to obey you,' she said, in a voice mingled with anger and pride.

"'Lucy Alcott, do you mean this?' I asked.

"'I do,' was the reply.

"'Very well, Miss Alcott. Henceforth you are free from all engagements with me,' I said, calmly, and rising, took up my hat and prepared to depart.

"She accompanied me to the door, and there was a perceptible tremor in her voice when she bade me 'good evening,' and I think she regretted the words she had uttered as badly as I did mine; but I was too proud to seek a reconciliation. Now you know, Winnie, why I never married."

"Have you ever seen Lucy Alcott since you parted with her that night?" asked Winnie, after her brother had concluded.

"No, Winnie, I have not; but I have heard she still continues to reside in this city, but in seclusion. Let us drop this subject now. Isn't it most time for your lover to be here?"

"Oh, Harry! I forgot to tell you about Walter's aunt—his mother's sister. He has lived with her ever since his mother's death, which occurred about ten years ago. Perhaps she will not like to be separated from him."

"She shall not, Winnie. You can tell one of the servants to prepare a chamber for her. How old is she? Do you know?

"Thirty-five, I believe," replied Winnie, and, with a happy face and a light heart, she left the room, while Harry relapsed into thoughtful silence.

It was clear, cold Christmas afternoon.

Harry Cutter was seated in his own room, deeply engaged in the contents of a book.

Everything had been arranged for the marriage of his sister, which was to take place in the evening.

The opening of the door of his room roused Harry, and Winnie came in exclaiming:

"Come down into the library and let me introduce you to Walter's aunt. She has been here nearly three hours, but you have kept yourself aloof as if you did not desire to see her."

"Well, I do not, to tell the truth, Winnie," replied Harry, reluctantly rising and closing his book.

"I think you will when you know who she is," said Winnie, while she vainly tried to repress the merry light that danced in her blue eyes.

"Winnie!"

The voice was grave, and Harry looked inquiringly at his sister.

"Oh, Harry! it is Lucy Alcott!"

"I cannot see her, Winnie," was the reply.

"You must, Harry! She loves you. Why do you wish to wreck two lives?"

For an hour Winnie reasoned with her brother, and at last she persuaded him to seek a reconciliation with Lucy Alcott.

Need I add more? Need I tell the reader there was a double marriage in this mansion that night?

And Harry Cutter often says he is glad his bachelor life is over, while his sister tells him if it had not been for her he would have been a bachelor to this day.

Bill Nye and His Servant Girl.

Personal—Will the young woman who edited the gravy department and corrected proof at our pie foundry for two days and then jumped the game on the evening that we were to have our clergyman to dine with us, please come back, or write to 32 Park Row, saying where she left the crackers and cheese?

Come back, Wilhelmina, and be our little sunbeam once more. Come back and cluster around our hearthstone at so much per cluster.

If you think best we will quit having company at the house, especially people who do not belong to your set.

We will also strive, O so hard, to make it pleasanter for you in every way. If we had known four or five years ago that children were offensive to you, it would have been different. But it is too late now. All we can do is to shut them up in a barn and feed them through a knot hole. If they shriek loud enough to give pain to your throbbing brow, let no one know, and we will overcome any false sentiment we may feel towards them and send them to the Tombs.

Since you went away we can see how wicked and selfish we were and how little we considered your comfort. We miss your glad smile, also your Tennessee marble cake and your slat pie. We have learned a valuable lesson since you went away, and it is that the blame should not have rested on one alone. It should have been divided equally, leaving me to bear half of it and my wife the other half.

Where we erred was in dividing up the blame on the basis of tenderloin steak or peach cobbler, compelling you to bear half of it yourself. That will not work, Wilhelmina. Blame and preserves do not divide on the same basis. We are now in favor of what may be called a sliding scale. We think you will like this better

We also made a grave mistake in the matter of nights out. While young I formed the wicked and pernicious habit of having nights out myself. I panted for the night air and would go a long distance and stay out a long time to get enough of it for a mess and then bring it home in a paper bag, but I can see now it is time for me to remain indoors and give young people like yourself a chance, Wilhelmina.

So if I can do anything evenings while you are out that will assist you, such as stoning raisins or neighboring windows, command me. I am no cook, of course, but I can peel apples or grind coffee, or hold your head for you when you need sympathy. I could also soon learn to do the plain cooking, I think, and friends who come to see us after this have agreed to bring their dinners.

There is no reason why harmony should not be restored among us and the old sunlight come back to our roof-tree.

Another thing I wish to write before I close this humiliating personal. I wish to take back my harsh and bitter words about your singing. I said that you sang like a shingle mill, but I was mad when I said it, and I wronged you. I was maddened by hunger, and you told me that mush and milk was the proper thing for a brain-worker, and you refused to give me any dope on my dumpling. Goaded to madness by this, I said that you sang like a shingle mill, but it was not my better, higher nature that spoke. It was my grosser and more gastric nature that asserted itself, and I now desire to take it back. You do not sing like a shingle mill—at least so much as to mislead a practiced ear.

Your voice has more volume, and when your upper register is closed is mellower than any shingle mill I ever heard.

Come back, Wilhelmina. We need you every hour.

After you went away we tried to set the bread as we had seen you do it, but it was not a success. The next day it came off the nest with a litter of small, sallow rolls which would easily resist the action of acids.

If you cannot come back, will you please write and tell me how you are getting along and how you contrive to insert air holes into home-made bread?—Bill Nye in N. Y. World.

A Curious Nurse.

In India, where the elephant is treated by his mahout almost as one of the family, the grateful animal makes a return for the kindness shown it by voluntarily taking care of the baby. It will patiently permit itself to be mauled by its little charge, and will show great solicitude when the child cries. Sometimes the elephant will become so attached to its baby friend as to insist upon its constant presence. Such a case is known where the elephant went so far as to refuse to eat except in the presence of its little friend. Its attachment was so genuine that the child's parents would not hesitate to leave the baby in the elephant's care, knowing that it could have no more faithful nurse. And the kindly monster never belied the trust reposed in it.—St. Nicholas for November.

A Romantic Engagement.

"Whom did you say he was going to marry?"

"Twenty millions."

"Oh, how perfectly sweet!" And then the car stopped.—Boston Herald.

A Mean Man.

He—"My dear wife, I love thee so fondly that when I am near thee I feel not the cold blast of winter." She—"Me, too." "Glad to hear it. Then you don't need any sealskin sacque this season."—Fliegende Blatter.

Here's a free advertisement for Miss Martha Cosgrove, of Chicago, and she deserves it. She found it hard work to make a living with the needle in the usual way, so she opened a mending establishment where she sews on buttons for 10 cents a dozen, darns stockings at 10 cents a pair, and does mending at the same low rates. She furnishes material for darning and mending and farms out the work, claiming one-half of the price paid.

Mr. Robert Kennedy, eldest surviving son of the late Mr. David Kennedy, the Scottish vocalist, is giving a series of entertainments of Scottish song in Australia. He is everywhere meeting with great success

BUGS THAT BURROW.

Parasites Said to Cause Many Mysterious Complaints.

A young peasant woman from a village near here has a new theory and cure for rheumatism, writes a Japanese correspondent to the St. Louis Globe. Many of those short-tempered people, who have had rheumatism in their knees and gout in their toes, have declared that the sensation was as if something were gnawing at their muscles, and this Japanese woman says that it is so in reality. Rheumatism, according to her, is a growth of small parasites under the skin, a small insect that gnaws and bites and causes the untold misery and all the twinges of that ailment. She has had for one of her patients here a grizzled and sceptical sea captain, and as sea captains may always be believed, except about the sea serpent, his case ought to settle it. The mariner was completely laid up with his ailing knees, and the Japanese woman was sent for. She claimed to see the movement of the parasites under the skin, ordered foot baths of bran and hot rice brandy, and came another day with a little steel hook and nipped small white insects out by the dozen. By the stories, it must be a large white flea, for one of them when brought out to the surface made a spring and was lost to sight. One of the bystanders felt a sting, and the next day had a sore place on his arm, and cutting into it, it was found that the rheumatism bug was there burrowing like a tick. The regular practitioners are sceptical about this new theory of rheumatism. They put one of the insects under a miscroscope and decided that, by its organism, it never could have lived under the surface of the skin away from the air, and that she must have carried it under her finger nail and introduced it at the proper moment. To this the sea captain enters a vigorous denial. She says that she has taken the insects from his knees and ankles by the hundreds now, and that all have been killed in his sight, and that he is growing better and can find relief after each treatment. A deaf man was persuaded to go to her after suffering pain in his ears, and she promptly took a dozen or more parasites from one ear. The idea was so repulsive to the man that he would not continue the treatment. Those who believe in the woman and her strange discovery are anxious to have her go to Tokio and be made famous and given a chance to operate upon the Mikado, who suffers grievously from kakke, a disease of the legs peculiar to Japan, and something akin to rheumatism in its excruciating pain. If this Nagasaki woman's idea is proved to be the right one, there will be a grand upsetting of medical theories and a closing of hot springs and other rheumatic resorts; and if they prove her to be an imposter, Japanese jugglers again come to the fore as the cleverest in the world.

Among the Clergymen.

Rev. A. M. Phillips, M. A., B. D., of St. Mary's, has accepted the unanimous invitation of St. Paul's Methodist Church, Avenue road, Toronto, to become their pastor for the ensuing year, subject to the action of the Transfer and Stationing Committees.

The Detroit Free Press says that the Rev. T. B. Reid, of St. Thomas' Church, Detroit, has received call from Trini y Church, Toledo, Ohio. The paper speaks very highly of Mr. Reid's labors in Detroit. Mr. Reid was not long ago a minister of the Mono Road circuit of the C. M. Church.

Rev. Dr. Rainsford, of New York, on one occasion said at the close of the service after the usual formula, "Let us pray for the whole state of Christ's Church militant." "When I say militant that doesn't mean only the Episcopal Church; remember we are praying now for Presbyterians and Catholics and every human being who calls on Christ's name." Two or three were a good deal shocked by his unconventionality, but the major part of his congregation liked him all the better for the reminder.

New Remedy for the Potato Bug.

A new remedy for the potato bug pest has been discovered by Major-General Laurie, of Nova Scotia. The General informs the Secretary of Agriculture of that Province that, on the farm of one of the most enterprising farmers of Newport, his attention was called to a milk-weed which grew among the root crop, and to which the potato beetle is much attracted. It lays its eggs on the under side of the leaf, and the larvæ, when hatched out, feed on the plant and die, being apparently poisoned by it. Where this plant grows the potatoes are apparently not touched by the beetle. The milk or juice is very powerful, giving a burning sensation down the throat and into the stomach, and the weed proves to be Euphorbia Helioscopia, a common weed of gardens and fields in England.

Senator Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut, was married yesterday in Philadelphia to Miss Edith Horner, of England, who has been for several years one of the head nurses at the Blockley Hospital in Philadelphia. There was a large and distinguished assemblage present.

The Arrow Steamship Company, of which Robert M. Fryer is the head, claims to be building a steamer of extraordinary strength and speed at Alexandria, Va. The New York Herald of yesterday says it is doing nothing of the kind, and accuses the company of fraud.

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Atkinson, a Dundas street (London) grocer, stepped out of his shop for a minute to assist a farmer's wife in packing her purchases into her waggon, when a sneak-thief got into the store and robbed the till of nearly $40 in cash.

—A magazine writer says: "Should fortunes be limited?" The trouble with most people's fortunes is that they are limited—very limited.

—"Six Hundred Medical Don'ts" is the title of a book recently published. One of its most striking omissions is expressed by the words: "Don't overcharge or overdose a patient."

—A bride may be robed in yellow and stand with her bridegroom in a bower of yellow flowers and all that, and even be married by a minister who has the jaundice, but no amount of decoration will prevent the discovery of the couple's greenness at the first hotel they put up at.

HOW THE SULTAN LIVES.

Lots of Wives, Concubines and Slavish Courtiers.

The Sultan makes his rigid fast of forty days at Ramazar, like any other good Turk, and at the end of the fast he receives every year a new young wife from his mother, according to the say of the prophet, or if his mother be not alive, the oldest woman in the harem presents the wife. This young girl is chosen six months before from among hundreds of candidates, who are chosen in infancy and educated expressly for that purpose, and then some ten or fifteen are chosen and put under a course of purification with baths of balm of Gilead and Sukys tea with milk and rice for the principal diet. The last day of the feast the bride is selected from among the others, and led to the Sultan's room and divested of clothing, and left standing there, with bowed head and folded arms, until the Sultan enters. Sometimes the Sultan never sees her again, and sometimes the new bride becomes prime favorite. It is not always the most perfect beauty which renders a wife the favorite, but generally the most intelligent one who gains the coveted position. No ceremony is considered necessary when the Sultan takes a wife. She is considered sufficiently honored by his choice. In the afternoon the Sultan receives his sons. They are brought into his august presence by their respective "dadas" or tutors, who each have entire charge over one boy, and each boy is made to believe that whatever he wants he must have. Murad Effendi, once when but 5 years old, declared that he would neither eat nor sleep until they had brought a man-of-war to fire a salute in front of the palace, and they had to send for one, gather a crew, buy and take on board powder and then get through the bridge and come down in front of the palace to fire the salute and scare Murad nearly to death. If during the day a new son arrives the news is announced to the Sultan, who, bored though he may be by the constant repetition of the news of new arrivals, must give order that a salute be fired at Tophane first, and then on every fortress in Turkey, seven guns for a girl and 21 for a boy. The slave who first reaches the Sultan with the news receives a handsome present, and then the monthly nurse, who is a power in a Turkish palace, as well as a poor American's home, brings the new born baby for the Sultan to look at. She also receives a valuable gift. The event means much to the mother, for it often lifts her from slavery to the position of legitimate wifehood. The Sultan shows little affection outwardly, at least, for he children, girls or boys, but they are taught to respect him as a superior being. The Sultan has over 6,000 souls attached in some manner or capacity to the palace and in his personal service, aside from the soldiers, and the amount of money the Sultan orders spent daily would bankrupt England in a month, only, as he is not very good at calculating, and his chief eunich, chamberlain and treasurer are, they put their heads together to cut down everybody's expenses but their own, and of late years an effort has been really made toward economy, though still volumes might be told of how money is lavished, for each wife must have her own separate establishment, and each as good as the other, and each new child its separate nurse and tutor, and all the caprices of the Sultan and his imperial family must be humored.

Latest from the Northwest.

Winnipeg's local grain market is increasing in volume of business. Over two thousand bushels of grain are now marketed daily by farmers from the districts around the city. Large quantities of oats are daily being shipped to points in Eastern Ontario and also to British Columbia.

James G. Dunlop, manager of the Cochrane Ranche, died yesterday, at McLeod, from the effects of exposure a few weeks ago, when he was thrown from his waggon and left on the prairie on a bitter night. He was one of the best cattlemen in the Northwest.

Rev. D. M. Gordon, late pastor of Knox Church, left with his family this evening for his new field of labor at Halifax.

Farmers are complaining that the Dominion standards for judging wheat, as applied to Manitoba, are altogether too high as compared with Duluth, and it is proposed bringing the matter before the next session of the Dominion Parliament, with a view to having the grading changed.

The flour mill at Dominion City, owned by James Spence, of Winnipeg, was totally destroyed by fire at 5 o'clock this morning. Loss, $7,000; uninsured.

There has been a slight fall of snow in the eastern portion of the Province, but in the west the prairies are still perfectly bare.

The local banks have advanced the rate of discount from 7 to 8 per cent.

The death is announced at Donald, from drink, of a man named Dean, formerly a Lieut.-Colonel in the British army, and richly gifted in many ways. Gen Middleton, during the Northwest campaign, recognized him as an old acquaintance.

That Bitter Rivalry.

"The Education Board of Minneapolis has excluded the Bible from the public schools."

"What for?"

"There was too much about St. Paul in it."—New Age.

—Beautiful autumn leaves have made gorgeous albums which have been sent abroad to give foreigners a correct idea of Canadian foliage. Leaf mosaics, columns of leaves and pictures of leaves fringed with pressed sedges are some of the arrangements made by artistic designers.

—The English sparrows which were allowed to come into this country on the distinct understanding that they would work for their board and clothes and free the land of caterpillars haven't done anything of the sort. This shows how little dependence can be placed on imported contract labor.

The anniversary of the battle of Slivitza was celebrated in Sofia on Saturday with religious and civic ceremonies.

—A physician says that the best breakfast to prepare for a day's work is that of "steak or chops, with good coffee, hot rolls and eggs." He declares that recent experiments have shown that to digest oatmeal properly hard out-door labor seems to be necessary, and he believes that the only nutritive value it has is found in the cream which is eaten with it.

ORIGIN OF PHRASES.

"Cut a Dido," "Gone to Pot," "Done to a Turn," and the Like."

There is probably more of the poetry of tradition than truth of history in the following paragraphs from the Christian Union:

Dido, Queen of Tyre, about seven centuries before Christ, after her husband had been put to death by her brother, fled from that city and established a colony on the north coast of Africa. Having bargained with the natives for as much land as could be surrounded with a bull's hide, she cut the hide into narrow strips, tied them together, and claimed the land that could be surrounded with the line thus made. She was allowed to have her way, and now, when one plays a sharp trick, he is said to "cut a dido."

A tailor of Samarcann, Asia, who lived on a street leading to the burying ground, kept near his shop an earthen pot, in which he was accustomed to deposit a pebble whenever a body was carried by to its final resting place. Finally the tailor died; and seeing the shop deserted, a person inquired what had become of its former occupant. "He has gone to pot himself," was the reply by one of the deceased's neighbors.

During a battle between the Russians and Tartars a private soldier of the former cried out: "Captain, I've caught a Tartar." "Bring him along," said the officer. "He won't let me," was the response. Investigation proved that the captive had the captor by the arm and would not allow him to move. So "catching a Tartar" is applicable to one who has found an antagonist too powerful for him.

While lying on the gridiron over a slow fire, St. Lawrence—in whose honor the Escurial was built by Philip II.—said to the Emperor, who was watching his sufferings: "Assatus est; jam versa et manduca," which one translator, not quite literally, but appreciatively of the grim humor characterizing the original, rendered:

> This side enough is toasted,
> Then turn me, tyrant, and eat;
> And see whether raw or roasted
> I am the better meat.

Hence, "Done to a turn."

Formerly in London, when a small dealer bought bread of the baker, for every dozen loaves purchased he was given an extra loaf as his profit, from which circumstance "a baker's dozen" signified thirteen. Various origns have been assigned the phrase, but the above is the only one that is based on a sure foundation.

In a work, "Essays from the Desk of Poor Robert the Scribe," published in 1815, the author, C. Miner, tells the story of a boy who, by the offer of liberal compensation, was induced to turn a grindstone for a man who desired to sharpen his axe. The promised compensation was never paid, and of one who disguises his own selfish aims under an appearance of generosity or disinterestedness it is remarked "He has an axe to grind."

Favors.

"It's nothin' but perliticle parties in my house, Sarah. There's Jimmy, he's a pro'bishunist; Eddy's a Hinry Georger; Patsy's a Jimmercrat—same as his father was, God bless him; Tommy, he's jined the Pergressive Labor Party; an' would you believe it, Clementina, my only gal Clementina, come last night an' axed if she might join the Pergressive Ewker party just formed in the neighborhood, an', as she said it was no end of favors she was to get, I let her jine."—Harper's Weekly.

A covered waggon drawn by a somewhat weary-looking pair of horses crossed the ferry at Detroit to Windsor on Saturday. Upon the side was a rudely painted legend: "In Dakoka we trusted. In Dakota we busted." Within were John Ainslie, an intelligent farmer, his wife and six children, who have been drawn from Douglas County, Dakota, a distance of over 1,000 miles, en route for Garfield, Essex County, Ont., their former home. In spite of their long journey all looked clean, comfortable and in good health.

Diphtheria is alarmingly prevalent in the neighborhood of Ottawa. At Lake Opinicon a number of cases are reported, and at Aylmer Dr. Woods, the local health officer, has ordered the closing of the convent schools in consequence of the prevalence of the disease. In that village three children of Mr. Granville died in three days. One was buried on Monday, a second on Tuesday and a third on Wednesday. Two others are in danger of death, while the dread disease has entered the families of Mr. Portelance and Mr. Rivals.

Vessels are leaving the Neva to avoid being closed in by ice.

—In the earlier editions of Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur" the dedication was "To the Wife of My Youth." He received so many letters of condolence on his supposed widowerhood and so many offers of adequate consolation that latterly he added the line: "Who still abides with me."

—A yellow wedding is one of the latest freaks. The bridesmaids are in yellow, the decorations yellow, the laces yellow, the flowers yellow—everything, in short, but the bride, who is of course all white, wears that jaundiced hue. The effect is somewhat trying and more suggestive of a rousing bilious attack than a gentle, amorous scene a fashionable marriage ceremony seeks to be.

An influential committee has been appointed by the citizens of Meaford to secure the establishment of a High School in the town.

LIFE IS SWEET.

> He sang with vigor,
> He sang it each day,
> "I would not live always,
> I ask not to stay."
> But when with a fever
> And chills taken down
> He quickly had in all
> The doctors in town.

—The pocket sewing machine, to introduce which a company has been formed in England, and shares sold for general investment under a very glowing prospectus, is now said to be a failure, and the manipulators of the company are charged with deliberately getting up the scheme to swindle investors.

If Rubinstein can be said to have a rival as a pianist it is Eugene d'Albert, who for about five years is the only one of the thousand and one virtuosi whom the critics have dared to compare with that master. At present, however, everybody is talking of a young man by the name of Stavenhagen, and d'Albert is beginning to feel a little uncomfortable.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau 10 Spruce St., where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Isabella Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON
THURSDAY, DEC. 1, 1887.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS—GREETING.

In looking over our list of subscribers, it is gratifying and highly satisfactory to notice the great improvement in two particulars:—(1) We never had such a splendid list of prompt paying subscribers since THE ADVANCE was first issued, six years and a half ago to-day, as we have now. (2) We never had as "clean" a subscription list as we have at this moment. To those subscribers, who have so promptly and generously responded to our appeal during the past few months, we return our most sincere and heartfelt thanks. We hope that the pleasant relations now existing between the Editor and his numerous readers may ever continue. For our own part—as outlined in our prospectus issued over six and a half years ago—we are determined to leave no stone unturned to merit a continuance of that generous and unstinted patronage accorded THE ADVANCE since its inception. As the years roll on, may the ties which unite Editor and Reader become stronger and stronger. Here and there along the way, a veteran or a cadet drop out of the ranks of ADVANCE readers and nevermore on earth are their friendly faces seen. Their places are filled with new faces and onward, still onward, we go—dropping, perchance, a tear here and a tear there; for dearer to the heart of the Editor than many people might imagine are the departed and departing readers. By and by the Editor himself will drop out of the ranks and be laid to rest in the quiet churchyard side by side, perhaps, with many of our readers, who have crossed the mysterious "Styx" before him. Then a new face will appear in the editorial position and the whirling of time will bring its changes as before—now sunshine, now darkness, now light, drifting, forever drifting, with the great rolling tide of human

People wonder at it, but still we give the Finest article for the least money in this section of country at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Priceville Pickings.

The excavation of the new Presbyterian church is completed and the stone is nearly all on the ground.

The Ladies Aid Society expect Miss Frame to give an entertainment here soon.

Lots of sleighs on the streets on Monday.

The Methodist church has had an addition built to it this fall, and several improvements have been added, a street lamp among the rest.

John Brown has lately added a lath mill to his saw mill.

Remember our Grand Offer of Fine Engagement and Wedding Rings. A beautiful plush box with each one worth $1.00. A grand assortment of Rings to select from at Russell's, Flesherton.

TAMARAC
ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS
THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

There has been quite an exodus from our very quiet village in a very short time. Mr. S. Tuck has moved his family to Markdale, Mrs. Woodruff has removed to Port Huron in Michigan, Miss E. Sterling has taken up her abode in Toronto where she expects to remain for two years, Wm. Long, T. Beamrose and W. Saigeon have gone to the lumber woods in Muskoka.

Quite a number congregated in the Presbyterian church on Saturday evening last, when Mr. John Madill, through Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Markdale, presented Mrs. W. E. D'Argent with a handsome piece of money as a token of esteem before leaving this place to visit her friends in Kingston.

On Sunday morning when Mr. W. H. Guy went to his barn he found his father's cow had by some means opened the door and got into the barn, and was enjoying a good feed of grain. When he picked up a short piece of board and struck the cow as she attempted to run out, she fell dead at his feet. Mr. Guy was of course much astonished as he says he did not strike very hard.

An agent was here a few days ago soliciting subscriptions for weigh scales for our village. The villagers concluded that there was not enough business here to encourage such an undertaking. The agent passed on.

Our school trustees are intending to have a well in connection with our school here.

Rev. W. Ferrier is conducting special services in the Methodist church here.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Markdale, preached a very interesting sermon in the Presbyterian church on Sunday last.

Dr. Kerr has been laid up for some time with a severe cold.

Fire at Eugenia.

Quite a conflagration has been going on at Eugenia lately, although not a single building has been destroyed. It was simply a splendid kiln of lime burned for Mrs. Louise Duckett, who keeps a fine supply of the very best lime constantly on hand.

Journalistic Discourtesy.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Mr. Editor.—Owing to a casual remark of a friend concerning a Marriage notice in last week's Standard, I was led to hunt up the paper (which is usually relegated to the back ground of fire lighting, etc.) to see what the worthy man had to say, but was not prepared for the impertinence and discrimination therein displayed. The distinguished Editor says of those contracting parties, they were married on Friday left on Tuesday, with other particulars also incorrect. Who was his informant or accomplice, or did he concoct it in his capacious noddle? He should not think it devolving upon him to be commentator for all the neighborhood, as that is only relished by a few, and I would counsel him for the future to refrain from further mention of either name or any transaction of the family in his reputable(?) paper as people of principle, (not puff) can't tolerate the effusions of his mighty brain. To soften the severity of this restriction, I would say, take courage friend Rutledge, there is always a little news floating round which the gossips will assist you in preparing. In the meantime, consult "Campbell Language Lessons," rudimentary spelling, study the best works on "common sense." Were I to consult my own feelings the matter would be treated with silent contempt. I would further add that said Editor would benefit by Burns' couplet:

"O, wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see ourseis as ithers see us."

FROM A HENRY.

N.B.—Will the editor of the Markdale Standard please copy as he may be short of news.

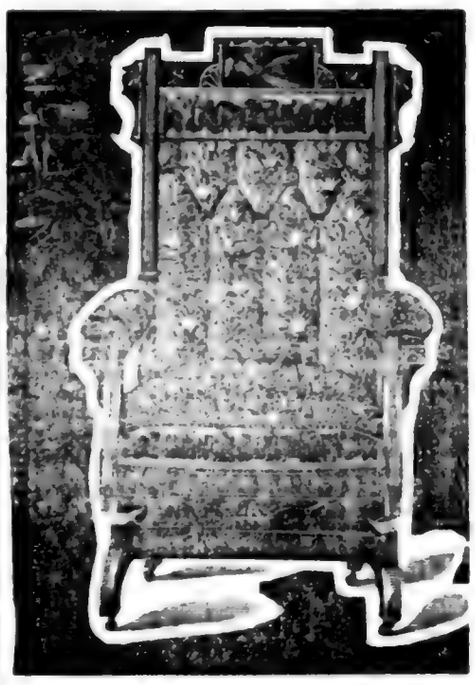
People wonder at it, but still we give the Finest article for the least money in this section of country at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

The most beautiful stock of Silverware ever seen in this country is to be seen at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Call and have a look at Russell's, (Flesherton) display of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. It will do you good to see their immense stock of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry.

Commercial Union

—— Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of——



FURNITURE!
AT
J. W. BATES'.

It is Good Goods at Low Prices that tells and has told for the last seven years. This season I am in a position to give both old and new Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Designs.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business:

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, Gents Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $30.00. A beauty for $14.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $5.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $1.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.85.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 85 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

The CHILDRENS
HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.
Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For?
Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to	4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 73 to	0 76
Spring Wheat	0 73	0 76
Barley	0 60	0 72
Oats	0 30	0 30
Peas	0 56	0 56
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 50	5 50
Hay, per ton	8 00	8 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

W. BOOTH,
The Boss Barber,
FLESHERTON,
(Late of Shelburne)

Next – door – to – Clayton's – Shoe – Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S
HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

DUNDALK
PUMP WORKS!
C. R. PHILLIP'S,
Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.
Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT,
FLESHERTON.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,
Photographer,
Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr S. J. Dixon—where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885

Flesherton
Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY— |—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-356

EUGENIA
Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

X-MAS IS COMING—LOOK OUT FOR SANTA CLAUS.

—TO BE—

GIVEN AWAY.

—AT THE—

FLESHERTON

Furniture Warerooms

SPECIAL

INDUCEMENTS!

DURING

X-MAS!

—AND—

Holiday Season.

We have bought especially for the Christmas trade, a lot of very handsome

Sofas & Lounges

Which will be sold at a

Small Advance on Cost.

Small Arm Rocking Chairs,

Perfect Little Beauties,

Gents Easy Stuffed Chairs,

Just the thing for father's X-mas box.

Childrens Chairs

In great variety.

BEDSTEADS,

A special line of low priced, very cheap,

SPRING BEDS LOWER THAN EVER.

MATTRESSES CHEAPER THAN HAVE EVER BEEN OFFERED.

We still take the lead in

Picture Framing.

A beautiful stock of MOULDINGS and FRAMES to select from.

☞ In order to meet the wish of our patrons we have arranged to deliver goods on the eve of Christmas day, in company with Santa Claus. Call and select your presents early.

Wishing you a very Merry Christmas.

J. E. MOORE.

COUNTY & DISTRICT NEWS.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Sneak thieves are at work in Keppel township.

Orangeville High School Teachers have all been re-engaged by the Board.

Mr. S. W. Squire has sold Parham House farm, Derby Township, for $10,000.

Always take your Repairs to Russell, Flesherton. It will pay you well to do so.

The new furnace in the Shelburne school buildings is not working satisfactorily.

Blount is the name of a new post-office to be opened at Lot 4, Con. 6, Mono township, shortly.

Mr. John Whitby, for many years Assessor of Artemesia township, has retired from farming.

Mt. Forest High School was formally opened on Friday week by the Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education.

Lesslie Jackson, of Chatsworth was fooling with a revolver the other day when he shot himself in the hand.

Diphtheria has broken out in Durham. Mr. A. Wherry, principal of the public school there, is down with it.

Dufferin Post: "King Alcohol is shrewd, seductive and imperious, but his Orangeville auxiliaries are a lot of brainless assess."

Call at Russell's, Flesherton, and secure some of those bargains they are offering. They are doing the business of this County.

Two Wiarton hotel-keepers and one druggist have been summoned before the magistrate to answer to a charge of selling liquor to Indians.

The Echo says: "It is understood that the prohibition ticket will be run in every municipality in the county (Bruce) at the January municipal election."

We cannot help giving the people bargains. We have the goods and are bound to sell at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Sneak thieves have been making themselves free recently with whips, etc. taken from vehicles in the Methodist church sheds, Mt. Forest, on Sunday evenings.

Sammy White, a Shelburne juvenile lacrosse player, got his arm broken on Thanksgiving day, while practicing with some other boys on the main street of that place.

Meaford council has decided to let the town remain in darkness yet awhile—in so far as lighting the streets is concerned. Collingwood town council is equally economical.

Remember our Grand Offer of Fine Engagement and Wedding Rings. A beautiful plush box with each one worth $1.00. A grand assortment of Rings to select from at Russell's, Flesherton.

Mr. J. Brown, shoemaker of Dunedin, Co. Simcoe, was out hunting one day recently, when his gun exploded. One piece of the weapon penetrated his ear near the head, but no serious wound was inflicted.

The new Methodist church at Epping (Euphrasia) is to be opened for divine service on Sunday, Dec. 11th. Rev. Dr. Potts, of Toronto, will preach morning and evening, at 11 and 6 o'clock respectively.

Dufferin Post: "The men who will descend to the use of dynamite would commit murder if they were not afraid of having their necks stretched."..... "There were no paid tools in the recent outrage; the head of the felon plot was also its arm."

Archie Nixon was digging a well for Phillip Sparling, of Goring, Euphrasia on Friday week, when the bucket became detached and fell a distance of 20 feet, striking Nixon on the head and fracturing his skull. Small hopes are entertained for his recovery.

A woman named Mrs. Chas. Whicher committed suicide on Sunday night by jumping off the wharf at Colpoy's village into the bay—near Wiarton. She was 34 years of age. It is thought she was insane, as no other reason could be assigned for the terrible act.

Hy. Manley, of Meaford, second son of Dr. Manley of this town; Thomas Young, an old resident living near Chatsworth; Clark, and another fisherman near Meaford, left about four weeks ago in an open boat, on a hunting trip up the peninsula, and have not been heard of since. They were known to have left Dyer's Bay all right and have not touched any of the places they set out to go. A thorough search has been made along the shore from Dyer's Bay to Tobermoray, but no trace of them has been found. They are almost given up as lost.—O. S. Times.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

There has been three new arrivals in this neighborhood lately. A boy at Mr. D. Johnston's, and two girls, one at Mr. L. Warling's and the other at Mr. J. Cooey's. All parties concerned happy and proud of their fresh arrivals.

Again we have to report the death of one of our citizens. Miss Margaret J. Foley who twelve months ago, bid as fair to long life as any of us, but that fell destroyer, consumption, marked her for its victim. This affliction is the more severe as she was the only child of her widowed mother.

Mr. John Warling's house had a narrow escape from fire last week. A spark from a stove pipe setting fire to the roof. It was seen and extinguished.

Wood bees are all the rage here just now.

Grip's Comic Almanac

For 1888 has been received, and is certainly a credit to the publishers. The six calendar pages are from designs by J. W. Bengough, and the whole series are about the best specimens of caricature drawing that we have ever seen from the pen of this clever artist. A. H. Howard, W. Bengough and other artists contribute sketches—a series of pictures illustrating the House that Hash Built being particularly good, while the reading matter throughout is even better than has appeared in previous years. The price is only 10 cents a copy, and you can get it at the bookstores or send direct to GRIP Office, Toronto.

The most beautiful stock of Silverware ever seen in this country is to be seen at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

They Came from Orangeville.

From the Dufferin Post.

The dynamite fiends little realize how much harm their Satanic work is doing the town. Towards the end of last week a young man from Orangeville applied for a situation in a Toronto shop. When he stated that he was from Orangeville he was told by the shop keeper that he would have nothing to do with him because he hailed from such a dynamite locality, and was ordered to leave the premises. We have the very best authority that this actually occurred. People at a distance think that Orangeville is a terrible place, whereas the people here are honest, industrious and law-abiding. It is the fiends who are disgracing and injuring the town. Two instances have come under our notice in which persons declined to purchase farms in this vicinity because of their proximity to Orangeville. When will the fiends either behave themselves, or fold their tents and leave? They are a disgrace to civilization.

Benighted Collingwood.

From the Collingwood Enterprise.

Orillia electric light would not obey the operator last Sabbath evening, and the churches had to go back to coal oil lamps. All the people grumbled because they had to exist at night without the electric light. If they lived in this town they would have to be satisfied all the year round with fifteen coal oil lamps, so far apart that a telescope is almost required to discover them. They remind one of the signal fires kindled in ancient days by the clans, on the hills of Scotland, to warn their distant friends of danger. One was placed on every hill top.

We cannot help giving the people bargains. We have the goods and are bound to sell at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

Miss Gertrude Thompson, who has been teaching music in Stayner for some time is now home.

Mis Baker of Stayner is visiting at J. M. Thurston's Temperance House.

Miss Myrtle Thurston left last week for Stayner where she is engaged for some months.

Mr. Geo. Thompson who has been in Bolton through the season is home again.

Mrs. Doharty, of Barrie, is visiting her brother Mr. W. Scott.

The people of "New England" are having a revival in the Methodist church with good success. Rev. Mr. Hosking, pastor, Rev. Mr. Wilson, Markdale, were present last Monday evening.

Mr. J. B. Watson, orator and humorist, gave two of his lectures here and the Kimberleyites are trying to get him back again.

Mr. Henry Hurlbert has rented a farm near Thornbury and will move this week.

W. C. T. U. Department.

Mrs. Campbell, of Owen Sound, lectures in Town Hall this (Thursday) evening. Admission Free.

Kimberley.

Mr. Editor, Sir.—Since the liquor license has been withheld from Kimberley, it seems as though a dark pall has been lifted from it, and the people have concluded to arise and build. There are six new buildings, stables and one shoe shop gone up. The old part of the Temperance house is getting a covering of new boards. The farmers near by are also building. Our saw mill is kept busy. The farmers have found that it pays to raise good hogs for live marketing. Mr. Bradbury, the shoemaker, has again come to work here.

Always take your Repairs to Russell, Flesherton. It will pay you well to do so.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOUND.

ON Flesherton Show Fair Day, a Pocket Book containing a sum of Money. Owner can have same by proving property and paying for this advertisement, on application at ADVANCE Office.

WANTED!

A quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery. JOS. McCORMICK, Flesherton.

STRAY STEER.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 13, Con. 13, Osprey, about 1st of October, one red and white yearling Steer. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.
WM. PAUL,
Lady Bank P.O.
Nov. 24th, 1887.

THE NEW PAPER

THE new Conservative Journal about to be started in Toronto, to be called

The Empire,

Will make its appearance on or about the 15th of December. No pains are being spared to make the paper worthy of Canada, and of the great party of whose views it will be the exponent. It will start with a

Staff of Brilliant Writers,

And able Journalists in every department. The public may expect

Full News from all quarters,
Able Editorials,
Accurate Reports,
Fair Comments,
Reliable Commercial News,
Interesting Sporting Intelligence.

And all other Departments well sustained. In short, THE EMPIRE will be a Bright, Readable, and Reliable Paper.

Everybody Looks for it. All should Read it.

DAILY EMPIRE, $5 per Annum. | WEEKLY EMPIRE, $1 per Annum.

Send in your Subscriptions now, accompanied by the cash, so as to commence with the first issue. Address, D. CREIGHTON, Manager EMPIRE, Toronto.

The Advance and Weekly Empire Till Jan., 1889, for $1.65!

FARM to RENT.

BEING Lot 35, Con. 4, Artemesia, containing 100 acres, 80 acres cleared—75 acres fit for running self-binding machine over—in first-class state of cultivation. Fair dwelling and out building. Two wells water. Easy terms. Good responsible man can have use of implements. Immediate possession given if required.
For full particulars apply at ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, or to A. DOWN,
Nov. 15th, 1887. on the premises.
334-7.

Stray Horse.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 29, Con. 7, Artemesia, on Sunday 6th, 1 Horse. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses. ISAAC SMITH, 334-6. Flesherton P.O.

Stray Ram.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 18, Con. 1st S.D.R., Artemesia, one aged Ram. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses. JOHN WHYTE.
Nov. 8th, 1887.—333-5.

FARM for SALE

BEING Lots 26 & 27, 1st S.D.R. Artemesia containing 100 acres more or less, 65 acres cleared and in a good state of cultivation. 35 acres in grass and hay. Good house and fair barn. Small young Orchard. Never-failing spring of water. The proprietor is determined to sell even at a sacrifice. For full particulars apply on premises, or to SILAS LESLIE,
Nov. 7th, 1887.—333-6. Priceville P.O.

New Div. Courts!

County of Grey.

NOTICE is hereby given that a meeting will be held at 2 of the Clock p.m. on Friday, the Ninth day of December, 1887, at Judges Chambers in Parkers Block, Poulett Street, Owen Sound, to take into consideration the formation of two new Division Courts in the County of Grey, one of which it is proposed to form of the West parts of the Townships of Bentinck and Normanby, and the other of parts of the Townships of Holland, Euphrasia, Artemesia, and Glenelg, in the said County.
Of which all persons interested are required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly. By Order of His Honor,
COUNTY JUDGE MACPHERSON.
WM. ARMSTRONG,
Clerk of the Peace, County of Grey.
Dated at Owen Sound, the 8th Nov., 1887.
334-7.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block, Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co., and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &c

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:-FROM-:—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS.

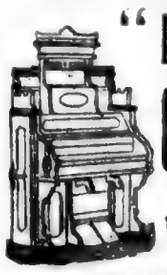
FLESHERTON!

☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 14a West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25
Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE MANSE AT ROWAN-GLEN.

Weary I am, and all so fair,
Longing to clasp a hand;
For thou art very far, sweet love,
From my mountain land.

Dear are the clouds yon giant bens
Fold o'er their rugged breasts,
Grandly their straggling skirts lift up
Over the snow-flecked crests.

Bear are the hill-side glooms and gleams,
Their varied purple hew,
This opal sky, with distant peak
Catching its tender blue.

Dear are the thousand streams that sing
Down to the sunny sea,
But dearer to my longing heart
Were one bright hour with thee.

Helen Marion Burnside.

It was towards evening, at the close of a lovely September day, that a rough equipage laden with luggage, with a black retriever gamboling joyously beside it crept rather slowly down the long lovely road by the Deeside leading to Rowan-Glen, one of those rare gems of Highland scenery that are set so ruggedly in the Cairngorm mountains.

Fay had just sheltered her sleeping baby from the rays of the setting sun; and sat wearily in the jolting carriage, trying to recall all the familiar landmarks that greeted her eyes.

There were the grounds and preserves of Moncrieff, with their lovely fringes of dark pine trees and silvery birches, and a little further on the wicket gate that led down to the falls or linn of Rowan-Glen.

By and by came a few low cottages built of grey stone, and thatched with heather fastened down with a rough net-work of ropes. One or two of them were covered with honeysuckle and clematis, and had tiny gardens filled with vegetables and flowers, pinks and roses mingling in friendly confusion with gooseberry bu es and cabbages.

A narrow planked passage ran through the cottages, with a door at the other end opening on to a small field, with the usual cow-house, peat and straw stacks, and a little shed inhabited by a few scraggy cocks and hens which with "taa coo" herself are the household property of all, even the poorest, of the Highland peasants.

Fay looked eagerly past them, and for a moment forgot her trouble and weariness; for there, in the distance, as they turned the corner, stretched the long irregular range of the Cairngorm mountains, with the dark shadow of the Forest of Mar at their base; while to the right, far above the lesser and more fertile hills, rose the snowy heads of those stately patriarchs—Ben-muich-dhui and Ben-na-bourd.

Oh, those glorious Highland mountains, with their rugged peaks, against which the fretted clouds "get wrecked and go to pieces." What a glory, what a miracle they are! On sunny mornings with their infinity of wondrous color so softly, so harmoniously blended; now changing like an opal with every cloud that sails over them, and now with deep violet shadows hunting their hollows, sunny breaks and flecks, and long glowing stretches of heather. Well has Jean Ingelow sung of them:

". . . . White raiment, the ghostly capes that screen them,
Of the storm winds that beat them, their thunder rents and scars,
And the paradise of purple, and the golden slopes atween them;"

for surely there could not be a grander or fairer scene on God's earth than this.

A moment later the vehicle stopped before a white gate set in a hedge of tall laurels and arbutus, and the driver got down and came round to the window "Yonder's t' manse. Will I carry in the boxes for the leddy?"

"No, no, wait a moment," replied Fay, hurriedly. "I must see if Mrs. Duncan be at home. Will you help me out?" for her limbs were trembling under her, and the weight of the baby was too much for her exhausted strength. She felt as though she could never get to the end of the steep little garden, or reach the stone porch. Yes; it was the same old grey house she remembered, with the small diamond-paned windows twinkling in the sunshine; and as she toiled up the narrow path, with Nero barking delightedly round her, the door opened, and a little old lady with a white head drawn over her white curls, and a gardening basket on her arm, stepped out into the porch.

Fay gave a little cry when she saw her. "Oh, Mrs. Duncan," she said; and she and the baby together seemed to totter and collapse in the little old lady's arms.

"Gracious heavens!" exclaimed the startled woman; then, as her basket and scissors rolled to the ground, "Jean, lass, where are you? here are two bairns, and one of them looks fit to faint—ay, why, it is never our dear little Miss Mordaunt? Why, my bairn——" But at this moment a red-haired, freckled woman, with a pleasant, weather-beaten face, quietly lifted the mother and child, and carried them into a dusky little parlor; and in another minute Fay found herself lying on a couch, and the baby crying lustily in Jean's arms, while the little old lady was bathing her face with some cold, fragrant water, with the tears rolling down her cheeks.

"Ay, my bonnie woman," she said, "you have given Jean and me a turn; and there's the big doggie, too, that would be after licking your face—and for all he knows you are better now—like a Christian. Run away, Jean, and warm a sup of milk for the bairn, and maybe his mother would like a cup of tea and a freshly-baked scone. There, give me the baby, and I'll hold him while you are gone."

"There's Andrew bringing in a heap of boxes," observed Jean, stolidly; "will he be setting them down in the porch? for we must not wake the minister."

"Ay, ay," returned Mrs Duncan, in a bewildered tone; but she hardly took in the sense of Jean's speech—she was rocking the baby in her old arms and looking at the pretty, white, sunken face that lay on the chintz cushion. Of course it was little Miss Mordaunt, but what did it mean—what could it all mean?

"Mrs. Duncan," whispered Fay, as she raised herself on her pillow, "I have come to you because I am so unhappy, and I have no other friend. I am married, and this is my baby; and my husband does not want me, and indeed it would have killed me to stop with him, and I have come to you, and he must not find me, and you must take care of baby and me," and here her tears burst out, and she clung round the old lady's neck, "I have money, and I can pay the minister; and I am so fond of you both—do let me stay."

"Whisht, whisht, my dearie," returned Mrs. Duncan, wiping her own eyes and Fay's. "Of course you shall bide with me; would either Donald or I turn out the shorn lamb to face the tempest? Married, my bairn; why you look only fit for a cot yourself; and with a bairn of your own, too. And to think that any man could ill-use a creature like that," half to herself; but Fay drooped her head as she heard her. Mrs. Duncan thought Hugh was cruel to her, and that she had fled from his ill-treatment, and she dare not contradict this notion.

"You must never speak to me of my husband," continued Fay, with an agitation that still further misled Mrs. Duncan. "I should have died if I had stopped with him; but I ran away, and I knew he would never find me here. I have money enough—ah, plenty—so you will not be put to expense. You may take care of my purse; and I have more—a great deal more;" and Fay held out to the dazzled eyes of the old lady a purse full of bank notes and glittering gold pieces, which seemed riches itself to her Highland simplicity.

"Ay, and just look at the diamonds and emeralds on your fingers, my dearie; your man must have plenty of this world's goods. What do they call him, my bairn, and where does he live?" But Fay skilfully fenced these questions. She called herself Mrs. St. Clair, she said, and her husband was a landed proprietor, and lived in one of the midland counties in England; and then she turned Mrs. Duncan's attention by asking her if she and baby might have the room her father slept in. Then Jean brought in the tea and buttered scones, and the milk for the baby; and while Mrs. Duncan fed him, she told Fay about her own trouble.

For the kind, white-headed minister, whom Fay remembered, was lying now in his last illness; and he had had two strokes of paralysis, and the third would carry him off, the doctor said.

"One blessing is, my Donald does not suffer," continued Mrs. Duncan, with a quiver of her lip; "he is quite helpless, poor man, and cannot stir himself, and Jean lifts him up as though he were a baby; but he sleeps most of his time, and when he is awake he never troubles—he just talks about the old time when he brought me first to the manse; and sometimes he fancies Robbie and Elsie are pulling flowers in the garden—and no doubt they are—the darlings, only it is in the garden of Paradise; and maybe there are plenty of roses and lilies there, such as Solomon talked about in the Canticles."

"And who takes the duty for Mr. Duncan?" asked Fay, who was much distressed to hear this account of her kind old friend.

"Well, our nephew, Fergus, rides over from Corrie to take the services for the Sabbath. He is to be wedded to Lilian Graham, down at the farm yonder, and sometimes he puts up at the manse and sometimes at the farm; and they do say, when my Donald has gone to the land of the leal, that Fergus will come to the Manse; for though he is young, he is a powerful preacher, and even St. Paul bids Timothy to 'let no one despise his youth;' but I am wearying you, my bairn, and Jean has kindled a fire in the pink room, for the nights are chilly, and you and me will be going up and leaving the big doggie to take care of himself."

But "the big doggie" was of a different opinion; he quite approved of his hostess, but it was against his principles to allow his mistress to go out of his sight. Things were on a different footing now; and ever since they had left Redmond Hall, Nero considered himself responsible for the safety of his two charges; so he quietly followed them into the pleasant low-ceilinged bedroom, with its window looking over the old-fashioned garden and orchard, and laid himself down with his nose between his paws, watching Jean fill the baby's bath, to the edification of the two women.

Jean helped Fay unpack a few necessary articles, and then went down to warm the porridge for her master's supper; but Mrs. Duncan pinned up her grey stuff gown and sat down by the fire to undress the baby, while Fay languidly got ready for bed.

It was well that the mother and child had fallen into the hands of these good Samaritans. In spite of her wretchedness and the strange weight that lay so heavy on her young heart, a sort of hazy comfort stole over Fay as she lay between the coarse lavender-scented sheets and listened to her baby's coos as he stretched his little limbs in the warm firelight.

"Ay, he is as fine and hearty as our Robbie was," observed Mrs. Duncan with a sigh; and so she prattled on, now praising the baby's beauty, and now commenting on the fineness of his cambric shirts, and the value of the lace that trimmed his night-dress, until Fay fell asleep, and thought she was listening to a little brook that had overflowed its banks, and was running down a stony hillside.

She hardly woke up when Mrs. Duncan placed the baby in her arms, and left them with a murmured benediction, and went down for a gossip with Jean. "And a lovelier sight my old eyes never saw," she said, "than that young creature, who looks only a child herself, with the bonnie boy in her arms, and her golden-brown hair covering them both. 'Deed, Jean, the man must have an evil spirit in him to ill-treat a little angel like that. But we will keep her safe, my woman, as sure as my name is Jeanie Duncan;" and to this Jean agreed. They were both innocent unsophisticated women who knew nothing of the world's ways, and, as Mrs. Duncan had said, "they would as soon have turned a shorn lamb away, and left it exposed to the tempest," as shut their door against Fay and her child.

Fay was not able to rise from the bed the next day; indeed for more than a week she was almost as helpless as a baby, and had to submit to a great deal of nursing.

Mrs. Duncan was quite in her element—petting her guest, and ordering Jean about; for she was a brisk, bustling little woman, and far more active than her three-score-and-ten years warranted.

It was a delight to her motherly nature to dress and undress Fay's bonnie boy. She would prose for hours about Robbie and Elsie as she sat beside the homely cradle that had once held her own children, while Fay listened languidly. It was all she could do to lie there and sleep and eat. Perhaps it was bodily exhaustion, but a sort of lull had come to her. She ceased to fret, and only wondered dreamily if Hugh were very pleased to get rid of her, and what he was doing, and who dusted and arranged his papers for him now she was no longer there. But of course Mrs. Heron would see to that.

Jean had plenty of work in her hands, but she never grumbled. There was the baby's washing and extra cooking, and the care of her old master. But in spite of her hard work, she often contrived to find her way to the pink room; for Jean worshipped babies, and it was a proud moment when she could get the boy in her arms and carry him out for a breath of air.

Mrs. Duncan told Fay that she had had great difficulty in making her husband understand the facts of the case. "His brain was just a wee bit clouded to every-day matters," she said; but he knew that he had guests at the Manse, and charged his wife to show every hospitality.

"There's a deal said about the virtue of hospitality in the Bible," he continued. "There was Abraham and the fatted calf; and the good widows in the apostles' time who washed the feet of strangers; and some have entertained angels unaware; and it shall never be said of us, Jeanie woman, that we turned anybody from the Manse."

Fay went to see the old man when she was strong enough to leave her room, which was not for a fortnight after her arrival.

She found him lying on one side of the big bed with brown moreen hangings that she remembered so well, with his head pillowed high, and his fine old face turned towards the setting sun.

He looked at her with a placid smile as she stood beside him—a small girlish figure, now sadly frail and drooping, with her boy in her arms—and held out his left hand—the right arm was helpless.

"Mother and child," he murmured; "it i always before our eyes, the Divine picture; and old and young, it touches the manhood within us. So you have come to bide a wee with Jeanie and me in the old Manse, my dear young lady; ay, and you are kindly welcome. And folks do say that there is no air so fine as ours, and no milk so pure as our brindled cow gives, and may be it will give you a little color into your cheeks."

"Don't you remember me, Mr. Duncan?" asked Fay, somewhat disappointed to find herself treated like an ordinary visitor. "Don't you remember Fay Mordaunt, the little girl who used to play with you in the orchard? but I am afraid I was older than I looked."

"Elsie used to play with me in the orchard," replied the old man, wistfully; "but Jeanie says she has gone to Heaven with wee Robbie. Nay, I never remember names, except Jeanie—and may be Jean comes handy. And there is one name I never forget—the name of Lord Jesus;" and he bowed his old head reverently.

"Come away, my bairn; Donald will have plenty to say to you another time," said Mrs. Duncan, kindly. "He is a bit drowsy now, and he is apt to wander at such times."

But the minister heard her and a sort of holy smile lit up his rugged face.

"Ay, but He'll no let me wander far; I have always got a grip of His hand, and if my old feet stumble a bit I am just lifted up. No, I could not forget His name, which is Love, and nothing else. But perhaps you are right, Jeanie, lass, and I am a bit sleepy. Take both the bairns away, and watch over them as though they were lambs of the fold—and so they are lambs of His fold," finished the old man. "And may be the Shepherd found them straying, poor bit creatures, and sent them here for you and me to mind, my woman."

CHAPTER XXXIV.

TRACKED AT LAST.

Thus it was granted
To know that he loved me to the depth and height
Of such large natures; ever competent,
With grand horizons by the sea or land,
To love's grand sunrise.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

It was at the close of a lovely September day that Raby Ferrers sat alone in the piazza of a large fashionable boarding-house in W——. This favorite American watering-place was, as usual, thronged by visitors, who came either to seek relief for various ailments from the far-famed hot springs, or to enjoy the salubrious air and splendid scenery that made W—— so notorious.

The piazza was always the favorite lounge at all hours of the day, but especially towards evening. A handsome striped awning, and the natural shade of the splendid tropical plants that twined round the slender pillars, gave a pleasant shade even at noonday. Broad low steps led to the gardens, and deck-chairs and cushioned rocking chairs were placed invitingly at intervals.

A gay bevy of girls had just taken possession of these coveted seats, and were chattering with the young men who had just followed them out of the hot dining-room; but no one invaded the quiet corner where the English clergyman had established himself, though many a pair of laughing eyes grew a little sad and wistful when they rested on the grave, abstracted face of the blind man.

"He looks so dull," observed one girl—a fair delicate blonde, who was evidently the belle, for she was surrounded by at least half a dozen young men. "I have half a mind to go and speak to him myself only you would all be watching me."

"Miss Bellagrove cannot fail to be the cynosure of all eyes," returned a beardless dapper young man with the unmistakable Yankee accent; but to this remark Miss Bellagrove merely turned a cold shoulder.

"His sister has been away most of the afternoon," she continued, addressing a good-looking young officer who held her fan. "It was so clever of you to find out that she was his sister, Captain Maudsley. I had quite made up my mind that they were married; yes, of course, every one must notice the likeness between them; but then they might have been cousins, and she does seem so devoted to him." But here a whispered admonition in her ear made Miss Bellagrove break off her sentence rather abruptly, as at that moment Miss Ferrers' tall figure, in the usual grey gown, was seen crossing one of the little lawns towards the piazza.

"She is wonderfully distinguished looking," was Miss Bellagrove's next remark. "Most English women are tall, I do believe; don't you think her face beautiful, Captain Maudsley;" but the reply to this made Miss Bellagrove change color very prettily.

Raby was profoundly oblivious of the interest he was exciting; he was wondering what had detained Margaret all these hours and if she would have any news to bring him.

As yet their journey had been fruitless. They had reached New York just as Miss Campion and her companion had quitted it; they had followed on their track—but had always arrived either a day or an hour too late. Now and then they had to wait until a letter from Fern gave them more decided particulars. Occasionally they made a mistake and found that Miss Campion had changed her plans. Once they were in the same train, and Margaret never found it out until she saw Crystal leave the carriage, and then there was no time to follow her. Margaret shed tears of disappointment, and blamed herself for her own blindness; but Raby never reproached her.

He was growing heart-sick and weary by this time. They had spent six weeks in this search, and were as far from success as ever—no wonder Raby's face looked grave and overcast as he sat alone in the piazza.

Even Margaret's protracted absence raised no sanguine expectations in his mind; on the contrary, as his practised ear recognized her footstep, he breathed a short prayer for patience.

"Dear Raby," she said, softly, as she took a seat beside him and unfastened the clasps of her long cloak; "I have been away a longer time than usual; have you been wanting me?"

"Oh, no," with a faint smile; "Ferguson took care of me at dinner, and I had a pleasant American widow on the other side who amused me very much—she told me some capital stories about the Canadian settlers; so, on the whole, I did very well. I begin to like Ferguson immensely; he is a little broad, but still very sensible in his views. He comes from Cumberland, he tells me, and has rather a large cure of souls."

"Yes, dear,"—but Margaret spoke absently—"but you do not ask me what I have been doing, Raby."

"No,"—very slowly; and then, a touch of sadness, "I begin to think it is better not to ask."

"Poor fellow,"—laying her hand on his arm caressingly. "Yes, I understand you are beginning to lose hope. What did I tell you last night—that it is always the darkest hour before the dawn. Do you remember how fond Crystal was of that song? Well, it is true, Raby; I have been stopping away for some purpose this afternoon. Crystal and Miss Campion are here."

"Here!" and at Raby's exclamation more than one head turned in the direction of brother and sister.

"Yes, in W——. Do not speak so loud, Raby; you are making people look at us. Take my arm, and we will go into the shrubberies; no one will disturb us there." And as she guided him down the steps, and then across a secluded lawn, Raby did not speak again until the scent of the flowering shrubs told him they had entered one of the quiet paths leading away from the house.

"Now, tell me, Maggie," he said, quickly; and Margaret obeyed at once.

"I was at the station, as we planned, and saw them arrive; so for once the information was correct. Crystal got out first, and went in search of the luggage. I concealed myself behind a bale of goods—wool-packs, I believe—and she passed me quite closely; I could have touched her with my hand. She looked very well, only thinner, and I think older; it struck me she had grown, too, for she certainly looked taller."

"It is possible; and you really saw her face, Margaret?"

"Yes; she was looking away. She is as beautiful as ever, Raby. No wonder people stare at her so. She is as much like your ideal Esther as she used to be, only there is a grander look about her altogether—less like the girl, and more of the woman."

"Ah, she has suffered so; we have all aged, Maggie. She will think us both changed."

Margaret suppressed a sigh—she was almost thankful that Raby's blind eyes could not see the difference in her. He was quite unconscious that her youthful bloom had faded, and that her fair face had a settled, matured look that seldom comes before middle age; and she was glad that this was so. Neither of them spoke now of the strange blight that had passed over her young life. Margaret had long since ceased to weep over it; it was her cross she said, and she had learnt its weight by this time.

"Well, Margaret?" for she had paused for a moment.

"I did not dare to leave my place of concealment until she had passed. I saw Miss Campion join her. She is a pleasant, brisk, looking woman with grey hair, and rather a young face. I followed them out of the station, and heard them order the driver to bring them here."

"Here! To this house, Margaret?"

"Yes—wait a moment—but of course I knew what Mrs. O'Brien would say—that there was no room; so I did not trouble to follow them very closely; in fact I knew it would be useless. When I did arrive I went straight to Mrs. O'Brien's parlor and asked if she had managed to accommodate the two ladies."

"'I did not know they were friends of yours, Miss Ferrers,' she said, regretfully. 'But what could I do? There is not a vacant bed in the house, and I knew the hotel would be just as full; so I sent them down to Mrs. Maddox at the corner house, down yonder—it is only a stone's throw from here. And, as I told the ladies, they can join us at luncheon and dinner, and make use of the drawing-room. I knew Mrs. Maddox had her two best bedrooms and the front parlor empty.' Of course I thanked Mrs. O'Brien, and said no doubt this would do excellently for our friends; and then I walked past the corner house and found they were carrying in the luggage, and Miss Campion was standing at the door talking to a colored servant."

"You actually passed the house? Oh, Margaret, how imprudent. Supposing Crystal had seen you from the window?"

"Oh, my cloak and veil disguised me; besides, there is a long strip of garden between the house and the road. I could hardly distinguish Crystal, though I could see there was some one in the parlor. And now, what are we to do, Raby? It will never do to risk a meeting at table d'hote; in a crowded room, Crystal might see us, and make her escape before I could manage to intercept her; and yet, how are we to intrude on Miss Campion? it will be dreadfully awkward for us all."

"I must think over it," he answered, quickly. "It is growing dark now, Margaret, is it not?"

"Yes, dear, do you feel chilly—shall we go in?"

"No, I want you to take me farther; there is a gate leading to the road, is there not? I should like to go past the house; it will make it seem more real, Maggie, and you shall describe exactly how it is situated."

Margaret complied at once—not for worlds would she have hinted that she was already nearly spent with fatigue and want of food. Cathy, the bright little Mulatto chambermaid, would get her a cup of tea and a sandwich presently. Raby's lover-like wish must be indulged; he wanted to pass the house that held his treasure.

It was bright moonlight by this time and the piazza had been long deserted. The shadows were dark under the avenue, or the road was thickly planted with trees. Just as they were nearing the corner house—a low white building with a verandah running round it—Margaret drew Raby somewhat hastily behind a tall maple, for her keen eyes had caught sight of two figures standing by the gate. As the moon emerged from behind a cloud, she saw Crystal plainly; Miss Campion was beside her with a black veil thrown over her grey hair.

Margaret's whispered "hush!" was a sufficient hint to Raby, and he stood motionless. The next moment the voice that was dearer to him than any other sounded close beside him—at least it seemed so in the clear resonant atmosphere.

"What a delicious night; how white that patch of moon-lighted road looks where the trees do not cast their shadows so heavily. I like this quiet road. I am quite glad the boarding-house was full I think the cottage is much cozier."

"Cozier, yes," laughed the other; "but that is a speech that ought to have come out of my middle-aged lips. What an odd girl you are, Crystal; you never seem to care for mixing with young people; and yet it is only natural at your age. You are a terrible misanthrope. I do believe you would rather not dine at the table d'hote only you are ashamed to say so."

"I have no right to inflict my misanthropy on you, Miss Campion; as it is, you are far too indulgent to my morose moods."

"Morose fiddlesticks," was the energetic reply. "But there, I do like young people to enjoy themselves like young people. Why, if I had your youth and good looks; well,"—with a change of tone sufficiently explicit—"it is no use trying to make you conceited; and yet that handsome young American—wasn't he a colonel?—tried to make himself as pleasant as he could."

"Did he?" was the somewhat indifferent answer; at which Miss Campion shook her head in an exasperated way.

"Oh, it is no use talking to you," with good-natured impatience. "English or American; old, ugly, or handsome; they are all the same to you; and of course, by the natural laws of contradiction, the absurd creatures are all bent on making you fall in love with them. Now that colonel, Crystal, I can't think what fault you could find with him; he was manly, gentlemanly, and as good looking as a man ought to be."

"I do not care for good looking men."

"Or for plain ones either, my dear. I expect you are romantic, Crystal, and have an ideal of your own."

"And if I answer, yes," returned the girl, quickly, "will you leave off teasing me about all those stupid men. If you knew how I hate it—how I despise them all."

"All but the ideal," observed Miss Campion, archly; but she took the girl's hand in hers, and the shrewd, clever face softened. "You must forgive an impertinent old maid, my dear. Perhaps she had her story too, who knows. And so you have your ideal, my poor, dear child; and the ideal has not made you a happy woman. It never does," in a low voice.

"Dear Miss Campion," returned Crystal, with a blush; "if I am unhappy, it is only through my own fault; no one else is to blame, and—and—it is not as you think. It is true I once knew a good man, who has made every other man seem puny and insignificant beside him; but that is because he was so good, and there was no other reason."

"No other reason, except your love for him," observed the elder woman, stroking her hand gently. "I have long suspected this, my dear."

"Oh, you must not talk so," answered Crystal, in a tone of poignant distress; "you do not know, you cannot understand. Oh, it is all so sad. I owe him everything. My ideal, oh yes; whom have I ever seen who could compare with him—so strong, so gentle, so forgiving? Oh, you must never let me talk of him; it breaks my heart."

"Come away, Margaret," whispered Raby, hoarsely, in her ear. "I have no right to hear this; it is betraying my darling's confidence. Take me away, for I cannot trust myself another moment; and it is late—too late to speak to her to-night."

(To be continued.)

Mrs. Geo. Harvey, Port Huron, wife of Grand Trunk Conductor Harvey, took an overdose of laudanum on Wednesday night and died on Friday. She was in the habit of taking the drug to make her sleep, and when discovered was beyond help.

The Farmer's Seventy Years.

Ah! there he is, lad, at the plough;
He beats the boys for work,
And whatsoe'er the task might be
None ever saw him shirk.
And he can laugh, too, till his eyes
Run o'er with mirthful tears,
And sing full many an old-time song,
In spite of seventy years.

"Good morning, friends! 'tis twelve o'clock;
Time for a half-hour's rest,"
And farmer John took out his lunch
And ate it with a zest.
"A harder task it is," said he,
"Than following up these steers,
Or mending fences, far, for me
To feel my seventy years.

"You ask me why I feel so young,
I'm sure, friends, I can't tell,
But think it is my good wife's fault,
Who kept me up so well;
For women such as she are scarce
In this poor vale of tears;
She's given me love and hope and strength
For more than forty years.

"And then my boys have all done well,
As far as they have gone,
And that thing warms an old man's blood
And helps him up and on;
My girls have never caused a pang,
Or raised up anxious fears;
Then wonder not that I feel young
And hale at seventy years.

"Why don't my good boys do my work
And let me sit and rest?
Ah! friends, that wouldn't do for me;
I like my own way best.
They have their duty; I have mine,
And till the end appears
I mean to smell the soil, my friends,"
Said the man of seventy years.

"John Bull and Jacques Bonhomme."

(Extracts from Max O'Rell's first lecture in the States.)

"The two words 'pauperism' and 'workhouse' are unknown in the French language."

"Glory and conquest Jacques has had enough of. It is peace, peace that he now calls for at the top of his voice."

"It takes a French peasant five minutes to open his purse."

"The wife of Jacques is the fortune of France. Hard working, always busy, she is the personification of the idea of industry."

"The proudest jewel in the crown of John Bull is the Indian Empire, an empire of two hundred and forty millions of people governed by princes arrayed in gold and precious stones who black his boots and are happy."

"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole earth and lose his own soul? John Bull has thought of that, and has consequently made of heaven an incontestably British possession. His favorite hymn runs:

Oh, paradise! oh, paradise!
I dearly long to see.

"I doubt that longing, however.

To see and know thy special place
My Lord prepares for me.

"The French fight for glory, the Germans for a living, and the Russians to divert the people's attention from home affairs. John Bull alone fights for trade and to benefit humanity. He fights to improve the condition of the vanquished in this world and secure their welfare in the next. He is a curious mixture of the lion, the mule and the octopus. If you are showing him about your country there is always danger that he will run the Union Jack to the top of your favorite tower when your back is turned."

"Everything he does—imperfect. When anything goes wrong he always knows where to lay the blame. He keeps Scotchmen, Irishmen and Welshmen for that purpose."

"Unfortunately (speaking of French officials) we made our country a Republic before we had made ourselves Republicans."

"Both the Liberals and the Conservatives want to go hand and hand with the Irish, but not in the same way. The Liberals like this. (Clasping his hands together.) The Conservatives like that." (Seizing his left wrist with his right hand.)

To illustrate the difference between French impulsiveness and English sang froid he told two anecdotes. An old French gentleman attending the opera heard the tenor in the "Huguenots" sing out of tune all the evening. In the course of the opera the tenor was shot dead. The old gentleman sprang to his feet exclaiming as he shook his fist at the theatrical corpse, "Serves you right, you donkey. You have sung false all the evening."

An English lady at a country house overturned a tea stand in rising and broke a $400 set of porcelain to fragments. Touching a bell she called a servant, pointed at the pieces and said quietly, "Bring some more tea."

Samples of False Economy.

It is false economy to do part of to-morrow's work to-day; living cheaply so that you can dress well; going to law about anything you can compromise; to employ a botch because he doesn't charge much; sitting in the twilight doing nothing in order to save oil; buying things you don't want because they are cheap; marrying your daughter to an adventurer so as to have her off your hands; to take your money out of the bank and invest it in a wildcat scheme; taking your boy from school and allowing him to grow up in ignorance for the sake of the $2 a week he can earn.

Life's Compensations.

Life is full of compensations. The man who is short usually has a long face.

The man who comes into the city green generally goes back blue.

The woman who loses her temper finds her tongue.

The man who has no opera glasses at the theatre is just as well off as the man who has one and is seated behind a row of women wearing high crowned hats.

The bald man never has his hair pulled. —Boston Courier.

The Serjeant and the Butler.

Serjeant Ballantine went to dine with an acquaintance of his whose position in society was not too long assured. The butler asked the learned Serjeant whom he should announce. "Serjeant Ballantine, please." Whereupon the door was flung open, and the servant announced "Captain Ballantine," informing the guest in an aside, "We never have sergeants here."—Vanity Fair.

A newly-arrived emigrant named Thos. Leahy was found drunk on the street at Montreal and taken to the police station, where he was a few hours afterwards found dead. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from alcoholic poisoning.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

A Story of Man's Weakness, and Woman's Cruelty, With Several Morals.

I.

"Did you notice that man?" asked a leading pawnbroker of a friend who chanced to be in his shop. "Poor fellow, my heart bleeds for him. He has just left his wedding ring with me—the last tie which bound him to happier days. His is a sad story."

"I did not observe him particularly," said the gentleman addressed. "Who is he?"

"He is the husband of a well known actress," replied the pawnbroker with some warmth, "and he is the victim of intolerable cruelty. Would you believe it, the woman who but a few short months ago swore to cherish and protect him now absolutely refuses to contribute more than $25 a week to his support. You seem incredulous, but I assure you it is true."

"Who is the man?"

"His name is Brockholst O'Flynn, and he is the husband of Miss St. Elmo, the burlesque actress."

A cry of horror escaped the gentleman's lips.

"My old friend O'Flynn!" he exclaimed. "Is it possible that he has come to this! Strange that I did not recognize him."

"Ah, sorrow and privation have altered him greatly."

"I must haste and overtake him; perhaps something may be done ere it is too late."

So saying, the gentleman hastened from the shop and in a few moments had overtaken the unfortunate man.

"Brockholst," he said gently, "what is all this I hear? You reduced to poverty; you, whose wife could gratify your every wish!"

"I know not how you have learned my sad story, dear boy," said O'Flynn, brokenly, "but it is true. I have borne all patiently, uncomplainingly, for her sake; for I shrank from the thought of exposing her to the censure of the world. This morning I pawned my last article of jewellery, our w-w-w-wedding ring," and the unfortunate man burst into bitter tears.

"Cheer up, cheer up!" cried his friend. "All will yet be well. I will see her and intercede for you."

"You—you do not think," asked O'Flynn in tremulous tones, "that she would have the heart to require me, who have been so delicately reared, to—to work?"

"No, no, not that," replied his companion, shuddering. "She is not capable of such baseness."

"You have given me new hope," exclaimed O'Flynn, "and now let us step into yonder sample room, and I will set 'em up."

"Good enough."

II.

"It is useless to say any more, Mr. Maginnis; $25 per week and his board are all I will allow my husband."

The woman who uttered these words in a cold, hard tone of voice was Miss St. Elmo, the actress; the person addressed, the friend of Brockholst O'Flynn, to whom the reader has already been introduced.

"Come with me, then," said Maginnis, sternly.

"Where?" demanded the woman.

"No matter; come. I would teach you a useful lesson."

In silence Miss St. Elmo followed him from the house. He led her to a narrow, dingy street in one of the lower wards of the city, and finally paused before a building upon which was painted in large letters, "THE NEW YORK WEEKLY HUSTLER."

"We have reached our destination," he said. "Be attentive and you will gain much by this morning's experience. Come."

She followed him up six flights of stairs and into a small, dingy room, where, at a desk, half buried in exchanges and MSS., sat a pale, haggard man. He did not observe their entrance, for he was writing at the rate of one hundred words per minute."

"Copy!" howled a phenomenally dirty boy, rushing into the room.

"Great Scott!" shrieked the editor, for, as the talented reader has already guessed, he was one of the fraternity. "I've got to have two columns ready in fifteen minutes, and I haven't got a stickful yet. Jim, get some ice and tie on my forehead, and then send out the growler. Quick!"

"Who is this wretched being, and what is he doing?" demanded Miss St. Elmo.

"He is a journalist, and he is working," replied Maginnis. "This is work, and this is what you will drive O'Flynn to!"

"No, no," shuddered the woman, "I did not know what I was doing. I was mad, mad!"

"Now you're shouting. You will give him an order for your entire salary every Monday in the future?"

"Yes, yes."

"Good enough. Now let us go out of this."

Miss St. Elmo never forgot that ten minutes' visit to the Hustler office; and to-day there is not a husband in New York who is supported in greater luxury than Brockholst O'Flynn.

Steam Generated Without Smoke.

A correspondent of the Manchester Examiner writes that an invention of the very highest importance to steam users has been patented by Messrs. Ashworth & Kneen, of Dalton-in-Furness, which, while bringing about an economy of something like 40 per cent. in the consumption of coal, also secures the total abolition of smoke. Careful tests have demonstrated that the new regenerative furnace will make more steam at about one half the quantity of coal required to be used at present. It can be fitted readily to any boiler, marine included. Further, the application of the new furnace to any boiler means the complete abatement of all smoke, a matter in which most of our large towns are deeply interested. Many scientific men, including some of the Naval Dockyard authorities, have inspected the furnace, and all speak of it in eulogistic terms.

Jack—Ethel, I am ashamed of you. I saw that Frenchman in the conservatory kissing you repeatedly. Why didn't you tell him to stop? Ethel—I couldn't, Jack. Jack—You couldn't? Why not? Ethel—I can't speak French.—Judge.

CURRENT TOPICS.

DR. BLACHE states in the Bulletin Therapeutique that in chronic and simple bronchitis petroleum in doses of a teaspoonful before meals produces satisfactory results. In phthisis the experiments have not yet been long enough continued to ascertain whether the results are permanently beneficial, but it diminishes the expectoration, which also loses its purulent character.

MISS PHŒBE COUZINS, who was appointed to succeed her father as United States Marshal for the Eastern District of Missouri, has been turned out by the President. The office has been given to a Democratic worker named John E. Emerson. And they do say that Phœbe made a good Marshal. She had performed all the duties of the office during her father's illness, and under the rules of Civil Service Reform was entitled to succeed him.

A PICTURE of Niagara Falls, which is to be taken to London for exhibition, is one of the largest ever painted, being 380 feet in length by 45 in breadth. The artist, Paul Philippoteaux, with a dozen assistants, has been engaged constantly on the work for the past six months, and some idea of its magnitude can be gained from the following list of materials consumed: White lead, 3,000 pounds; oil, 3,322 gallons; essence (turpentine), 3,240 gallons and a car load of colors.

EXPERTS say that curtains and fine laces can be made of malleable iron or steel. At the centennial exhibition a piece of steel rolled by a mill in Pittsburg was so thin that it weighed less than a book leaf and could be blown off the hand easier than paper the same size. The sheets for steel lace will be rolled down to a low gauge and the patterns pressed into them. The lace can be made light or heavy, and is suitable for ladies' and children's underwear, and perhaps for trimming hats, wraps and dresses.

THE word "dude" is about to receive official recognition from lexicographers Ex-President Porter, of Yale, who is in charge of the revision of Webster's Dictionary, says: "The word 'dude' I believe to convey a specific idea, expressed by no other word, and though it may be hard to give the meaning which the word conveys, I think it will be incorporated in the system." It will thus be seen that from President Porter's standpoint the word "dude" is much more energetic than the thing itself. Who ever heard of a dude conveying "a specific idea?" It would make him tired.

A VERY singular incident was noted in connection with a recent mill fire in Carlton, Mich. The building was burning fiercely; but the big engine which drove the machinery continued to run all through the blaze, and by that means was saved from destruction, though there was not a wall standing on either side of it when the fire had finished. The pumps were also running and had kept the boiler supplied, so there could be no explosion. It was a peculiar spectacle to see the engine driving away at a slashing speed in the midst of the flames, but the motion somehow saved it from fire. All the rest of the machinery was a total loss.

How to Break Up Baby's Cold.

When I find baby has taken cold, not so feverish and sick as to require packing, which one dreads to do because of the increasing danger resulting from any exposure afterwards, but a smart cold in its first stages, with red eyes and running nose and stuffed head, I take the little one in my lap several times through the day, and again at bed time, and, removing boots and stockings, rub the little feet—soles and tops and ankles—with sweet oil or goose oil, and then heat them long and well before an open fire till the skin will absorb no more oil. Then I bathe and rub the little bared back from neck to hips, especially along the spine, with oil also; shielding baby's back from cold draughts and letting the warm rays of fire light and heat it just right, chafing and thoroughly heating till skin will absorb no more oil. Wrapped in flannel and tucked away in her warm nest for the night, baby often wakes in the morning with but little trace of her cold. If there is hoarseness with other symptoms of an oncoming cold, for a simple remedy I like to give baby boiled molasses with a bit of butter or sweet oil or hen's oil in it, or a few teaspoonfuls of onion syrup made of sliced onions and brown sugar, which helps soothe the throat and clear the bowels, carrying away perhaps, the aggravating source of the cold.—Good Housekeeping.

The Whole World Learning English.

"I sat down to dinner one stormy night in a Swiss inn with sixteen people," said President Eliot, of Harvard. "Six different nationalities were represented by these sixteen people, and the only language that they could all speak was English. One may travel now, as I have just travelled, through southern Spain, through northern Africa, through Greece and Constantinople, and back by Vienna and the more usual routes, with nothing but English. I do not mean to say that you may not occasionally feel the need of some French words; but you can travel comfortably through all of these countries with no language but English. That, I am sure, could not have been said twenty-five years ago. The spread of the language within that time for purposes of commerce is most noticeable, as is also the increased knowledge of the language and literature among educated people on the continent of Europe."

Personal Points.

It is announced that Rev. Francis L. Patton will succeed Dr. McCosh as President of Princeton College.

Lieutenant Wangen, who was so seriously wounded recently on the Franco-German frontier, belongs to one of the oldest and at one time one of the most powerful families of Alsace.

Mr. Gladstone has in his library three desks. At one he transacts public business, at another he conducts his private correspondence, and at a third he communes with his "old friend Homer."

Sized Her Up.

Sharp-visaged female to grocer's boy—I've waited here so long, young man, that I forgit what I cum for.

Grocer's boy (meekly suggestive)—P'raps it's vinegar, mum.—Texas Siftings.

REALLY ROMANTIC.

The Manner in Which a Millionaire Long Lived a Dual Life.

Last Tuesday Samuel C. Tatum, of Cincinnati, died at the family mansion in Avondale, an aristocratic suburb. Tatum was but 30 years of age, but was reported as being worth a million at least. He was peculiar in many ways, and by his friends was considered a woman hater. Since his death a strange lady has been seen about the mansion, and it now leaks out that she first appeared there after Mr. Tatum's death and demanded to see her husband. She showed a marriage certificate that was issued by Samuel C. Tatum and Marie Frances Emonnin on July 5th, 1885, and was admitted as the wife of the deceased. Learning that the lady came from this city an investigation was made here, and a more romantic story than hers it would be hard to conceive. She is the daughter of poor but respectable parents. Four years ago she went to Cincinnati, where she entered a hospital to die, from the effects of a tumor. Here she first saw Samuel Tatum, and it was the old story of acquaintance, love and marriage, all of which was secretly accomplished. They were married in Cincinnati under the fictitious names of Herbert Linton and Fannie Thrasher. The young lady's parents never knew their son-in-law by any other name. However, the young wife induced him to remarry her by his and her right name, and to do this they went to Buffalo, N.Y., where, on July 5th, 1885, they were married under their proper names. They returned to Cincinnati, where they have since been living, but still under the name of Linton. The husband, of course, carried on the dual role of Herbert Linton and Samuel Tatum. The couple have visited the Emonnin family in this city, but they never knew their son-in-law by any other name than Linton, until after his death, when the mother of the young wife received a letter from her daughter explaining the above facts. The Tatums have received the wife into their family, and she is now with them in Avondale. The couple have had a child, which, however, lived but a few months. The affair has created a big sensation in the upper tendom circles in Cincinnati and here.—Dayton, O., Special in the Pittsburg Dispatch.

ITCHING PILES.

SYMPTOMS—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

A Masher Crushed.

Would-be masher, addressing a young lady coming out of the matinee—Would you like a carriage, miss?

Young Lady (pretending to mistake him for a coachman)—No, thank you, driver; my own coachman awaits me around the corner.

If all so-called remedies have failed, Dr Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures.

Effect of the Coal Famine.

Hotel Clerk—"No, sir, we can't accommodate you. You have neither baggage nor money."

"I know I haven't; but I came to town in a freight car, and there is considerable coal dust in my hair."

"Well, comb it out carefully, and that'll do."—Scranton Truth.

A Woman's Confession.

"Do you know, Mary, I once actually contemplated suicide?" "You horrify me, Mrs. B. Tell me about it." "I was suffering from chronic weakness. I believed myself the most unhappy woman in the world. I looked ten years older than I really was, and I felt twenty. Life seemed to have nothing in it worth living for." "I have experienced all those symptoms myself. Well?" "Well, I was saved at the eleventh hour from a commission of a deed which I shudder to think of. A friend advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I did so. In an incredibly short time I felt like a new being. The 'Prescription' cured me, and I owe Dr. Pierce a debt of gratitude which I can never repay."

Good Enough for the Price.

Tenant—Say, there's a million rats in that house of yours.

Landlord—Well?

Tenant—What are you going to do about it?

Landlord—Do about it? Nothing. You don't expect me to stock the place with white mice for $18 per month, do you?

A Pill in Time Saves Nine!

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are preventive as well as curative. A few of these "Little Giants" taken at the right time, with little expense and no inconvenience, will accomplish what many dollars and much sacrifice of time will fail to do after Disease once holds you with his iron grasp. Constipation relieved, the Liver regulated, the Blood purified, will fortify against fevers and all contagious diseases. Persons intending travel, changing diet, water and climate will find invaluable Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, In vials convenient to carry.

General Middleton's Retirement.

Sir Fred Middleton has received a private letter from His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, commanding Her Majesty's forces, complimenting him for his able direction of the Canadian militia, and expressing regret that owing to the compulsory retirement system the Imperial army should lose so valuable an officer.

What is Needed

By every man and woman if they desire to secure comfort in this world is a corn sheller. Putnam's Corn Extractor shells corns in two or three days and without discomfort or pain. A hundred imitations prove the merit of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, which is always sure, safe and painless. See signature of POLSON & Co. on each bottle. Sold by medicine dealers.

ALMA LADIES' COLLEGE.

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO.

☞ Nearly 200 students in 1886. 16 graduates and certificated teachers in the faculty. Total expenses from $40 to $60 per term or from $150 to $250 per year in advance, including Music and Fine Arts.

☞ Half the Music and Art graduates of this school are now employed as teachers in other Colleges. Address, B. F. Austin, Principal.

What Becomes of Bad Boys.

Old Lady—I'm sorry to hear a little boy use such shocking language. Do you know what becomes of little boys who swear?

Urchin—Yes'm. Dey gits ter be hoss car drivers.—Tid-Bits.

Max O'Rell, the well known French writer, arrived in New York from Liverpool on Saturday.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D O N L. 48 87.

Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THIS COLUMN TAKEN FOR

Gordon's

HARNESS SHOP.

FLESHERTON!

Look out next week for announcement of New Goods at LOWEST CASH PRICES!

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

If you want the Editor of this paper to attend and write up your entertainments, socials, concerts, lectures, &c. always send him a couple of complimentary tickets.

Mr. W, H. Elder has purchased Mr. Johnston's Livery here. which is a guarantee to the travelling public that the business will be continued in first-class style. Mr. Wm. Mitchell has been installed as Manager. Mitchell is a first-class man for the position.

A pleasant time was spent by those who attended the fruit social last Tuesday evening. It was held at the residence of Mr. J. H. Heard, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church here. There was a good attendance.

Members of Fountain Council, R. T. of T., participated in a very interesting debate recently in connection with the Scott Act. Affirmative and negative sides of the question were well sustained. It was a source of profit and pleasure to debaters and hearers.

Remember the grand Concert in Priceville, under the auspices of the Methodist church, to be given by the Flesherton Brass Band, in Watson's Hall, on the evening of Tuesday, Dec. 20th. Music will be interspersed by dialogues, readings, recitations, &c., by local and imported talent. Proceeds in aid of the organ fund.

Parties having money from the North of Scotland Mortgage Company, whose mortgages expire this year, will please remember that it will only cost $3.50 to have time for payment of principal extended, interest reduced to current rates, which is at present seven per cent. As money is likely to advance, it will pay parties to make application at once to W. J. Bellamy, Flesherton.

People who do not make it a practice to read advertisements, often lose money through their neglect in this respect. The newspaper is a business directory as well as a collector of news and general reading matter, and to overlook either department is like eating meat without salt. Notice the bargains advertised by pushing Flesherton business men in this week's ADVANCE. Rest assured it will pay you to consult our advertising columns every week.

The Bruce Herald, Bruce Telescope and Hanover Post, of the 17th Nov. reached THE ADVANCE office on Nov. 28th. Curious enough, copies of the above named papers, issued on the 24th Nov.—a week later—reached this office on 26th Nov., two days earlier than the previous week's issues of those journal. Possibly the issues of the 17th inst. were off rusticating in Muskoka in the interval. "More" possibly Postmaster Purdy can explain the cause of delay.

We are informed that two petitions are in circulation among the residents of the Station and neighborhood—one praying that Mr. Wm. Hogg be appointed Postmaster and the other praying that Mr. W. Wood be appointed to that position instead. Either of these gentlemen would be quite competent to fill the position. But is the report true, that Mr. Purdy has resigned the Postmastership? If not, why not? And if so, why so be it; and may the best man get right into his number nineteens.

SPOT THIS!—Most people are shrewd and keen enough to know when they get a good article, at a rock bottom price. D. Clayton, Harness Maker, Flesherton, has been selling goods very cheap but he proposes to give his customers the benefit of a greater reduction still, viz., he will throw TEN PER CENT. OFF on all goods purchased at his shop (opposite Munshaw's Hotel) between this date, Dec. 1st, and the 1st of January, 1888. Now's your time if you want bargains in downright earnest.

We have pleasure in announcing that the initial number of the long-looked for new Conservative Daily and weekly Newspaper, The Empire, will be issued about the middle of this month. Particulars in connection therewith will be found in our advertising columns to-day. We have made arrangement to club The Weekly Empire with THE ADVANCE, whereby we are enabled to offer both papers until Jan. 1889, for $1.65. Subscribe now and get the best local and metropolitan journals at less than cost.

FLESHERTON STATION.

Interesting Items Collected for The Advance.

POST OFFICE EMBROGLIO.

Considerable dissatisfaction exists in this neighborhood, as well as in Flesherton, in reference to the manner in which the Post Office here is conducted. Of late this feeling has been intensified by the extraordinary position taken by the Post-Master relative to the distribution and despatch of Her Majesty's mails. Complaints are of daily occurence. It seems Mr. Purdy has invited the Post Office Inspector to "come up and straighten things in connection with his office," and pending the arrival of that official, refuses to give some people their mail matter, hands it out to others—in fact allows the Post Office to take care of itself. Sometimes he suggests that people take their registered letters to Flesherton Post Office. Occasionally letters mailed here never reach their destination but are returned to the senders, for the simple reason that the Post Master declines or neglects to forward them. Only last week several money letters were forwarded from Flesherton to the Central Bank at Durham to pay off certain notes maturing in that concern. The mail bag containing these important letters was, by a most egregious and unpardonably stupid blunder, returned to Flesherton Post Office. Again they were sent and this time they did reach their destination, but a few hours too late. Result: several notes protested and considerable just indignation experienced on account of having to pay costs of protests—some $1.06 in each case!—besides the annoyance occasioned by having that commercial integrity and punctuality, so dear to every honorable business man, impugned, through the stupidity of an official who is unqualified for the position he now occupies. It is scarcely necessary to inform rational mortals that the Post Office Department is undoubtedly to blame—to a large extent, at least—for the condition of things obtaining here now and for years past.

A MATRIMONIAL FLUTTER.

The fair goddess, "Hymen," seems to have taken up her abode permanently here, to judge from the ceaseless activity in the matrimonial market of late. Thursday last a C.P.R. newsboy, aged some 16 or 17 years, married a Flesherton Station young lady of about the same age. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Mr. Edgelow, of the Church of England, at Dundalk. The juvenile couple went away on the orthodox honeymoon trip. The affair almost eclipsed Post-Master Purdy's matrimonial venture in point of interest, and has established quite a dangerous precedent for the young people of Artemesia.

MISCELLANEOUS.

$5,000 worth of cheese was shipped via C.P.R. last week—all from the far-famed Flesherton Cheese Factory.

The grain-buyers report great activity in the movement of all kinds of farm produce. The traffic on the C.P.R. is unprecedented in the history of this branch of their system The gentlemanly agent here, Mr. R. McGill, also reports the local traffic unusually brisk and healthy.

The new Temperance hotel here is highly spoken of and is largely patronized by the travelling public.

It is regretted, that Postmaster Purdy has been suffering of late with a violent attach of neuralgia' He visited Dr. Carter on Friday and requested that gentleman to cure him. The Dr. took him at his word and cured him forthwith.

Mortgage Sale!

—OF—

Valuable Farm Property

In the township of Osprey, in the County of Grey. Under the powers of sale contained in a certain mortgage to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and in payment of which default has been made, there will be sold by Public Auction at LINLEY'S HOTEL, in the

VILLAGE OF MAXWELL,

—in the County of Grey, on—

Wednesday, the 14th day of December, 1887,

at 1 p m., the following valuable property:—

Lot Number 23 in the 4th Concession of the said township of Osprey in the County of Grey, containing 100 acres more or less.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

The property will be offered for sale subject to a reserve bid. The purchaser must at the time of sale pay one-tenth of his purchase money to the Vendors their solicitors or agents and sufficient within 30 days thereafter with interest at 7 per cent. to reduce the balance of purchase money to $800 which amount may remain on mortgage to the vendors for 5 years with interest at 7 per cent. payable yearly. The mortgage to contain a covenant for insurance in the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company to the full insurable value of the buildings. The Vendors will not be bound to account for, produce or show or prove the contents of any deeds or evidence of title not in their possession or furnish copies of the same. The Purchaser must investigate the title at his own expense. The other conditions of sale will be made known at the time of sale or on application to the undersigned at Toronto.

For further particulars apply to

HOWLAND, ARNOLDI & MACKENZIE,
Vendors Solicitors.

Toronto, Nov. 14th, 1887. 535-t.

Having opened out a lot of

Fall & Winter Goods

Personally selected by myself, I can confidently recommend them. I have a large assortment of

Mens, Ladies, and Childrens

BOOTS AND SHOES!

Also a full supply of Mens and Ladies RUBBERS, and Mens FROST PROOF FELT BOOTS. I hope to receive a liberal share of the trade in this vicinity. I will endeavor to satisfy my customers in QUALITY and PRICES.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith,

THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

Flesherton Station Mill.

The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. GEORGE MOOREHOUSE, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 337. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

"DECEMBER AD."

$1,600

IN GOLD AND SILVER

WATCHES!

Walnut and Nickle Clocks, Roll Plate and Fine Gilt Chains, Gem and Wedding Rings, Jewelery and Fine Silverware for Holiday * Trade!

If I felt the public were fools enough to believe me and knew "myself" to be "knave" enough to beat the wholesale, I would talk big discount and wholesale prices for above goods. Wholesale prices in a retail store won't pay rent, light taxes, etc. Continuous discounts 5 times in 1 year, either pays by marking goods away up, or else by using deception as to quality of goods. There are Jewellers who have 14 k. wedding rings stamped 18 k. My Plain Rings are made by P. W. ELLIS & CO., and after this will have my initials, W.B. stamped on.

Goods as represented every time.

Prices at "whisper" mark. Discounts as usual, 5 per cent.

Warrants cover Breakages!

Don't accept any other kind. Everybody invited to call when in town and get my prices.

For 4 Years

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA, 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

os141.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent cases in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

He downs them all! Booth, the "Boss" Barber, of Flesherton.

Magnificent Fur Caps only $1.75 at Brander's, Priceville.

Mr. George Stewart, of this Township, lost a valuable horse last week.

Another immense stock of Mens' Felt Boots just arrived at R. TRIMBLE'S.

Always take your Repairs to Russell, Flesherton. It will pay you well to do so.

Do you want X-mas Toys? Then go to the Medical Hall, Flesherton

Do not purchase until you see Russell's grand display of Fancy Goods, Etc. It will eclipse everything in this country.

We had a pleasant call from our genial friend, Mr. Wm. Guy, of Maxwell, on Monday.

Mr. John Bellamy purchased the well-known Boyles property, on Church street, a short time ago. He moved into his new premises last week.

Call at Russell's, Flesherton, and secure some of those bargains they are offering. They are doing the business of this County.

Wm. Clayton has received this week a fresh supply of Mens' Frost Proof Boots, Overshoes; Rubbers, &c. Selling cheap.

What does B.B.B. stand for? Why Booth the Boss Barber, of course. Shop, opposite Leitch's tailoring establishment.

Do you want a choice from best assortment of X-mas Cards? Then go to the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

Don't forget the great Band Concert, evening 20th, and be sure to call at Brander's, Priceville, and get one of those nobby suits from $5 up.

Our young friend, Mr. David Meldrum, of Toronto, was in Flesherton on Monday and called at THE ADVANCE office in ye Editor's absence. Call again, friend David.

Mr. C. Treadgold, of Flesherton, has been engaged as Teacher of the Berkely Public School, and will enter upon his duties in January. We congratulate friend Treadgold.

FURS, FURS, FURS!—Having bo't a very large stock of Furs, such as Mens' Fur Caps, Ladies' Muffs, Boas, and Ladies' Caps, I have decided to clear out the entire stock regardless of cost.—R. TRIMBLE, Flesherton.

Members of Flesherton Division, Sons of Temperance, are requested to meet in their hall on Wednesday evening Dec. 21st, for Election of Officers and other important business. N. B—No meeting next week.

A Oyster social will be held in the basement of the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 14th, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid. A musical and literary program is being provided for the occasion. Popular prices of admission.

Mr. Watkins, of Detroit, is visiting his sister, Mrs. J. W. Shilton, at the Methodist parsonage here. This gentleman is manager of the champion Base Ball team of America, viz., the Detroits. We might also add, that he is a Canadian by birth and education. Flesherton extends a most cordial welcome to the distinguished visitor.

Call and have a look at Russell's (Flesherton) display of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. It will do you good to see their immense stock of Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry.

—BARGAINS!—

ENORMOUS BARGAINS!

Immense Bargains!

NOW GOING ON AT

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, FLESHERTON!

WHERE WILL BE FOUND THE LARGEST AND FINEST STOCK OF

Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Knives, Razors, &c.

EVER SHOWN IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY. OUR GOODS

TOOK FIRST PRIZE AT FLESHERTON FALL SHOW,

And in order to give parties who were not able to take advantage of our discount sale in October, we have decided to again make this Great Offer and give

TWENTY PER CENT. OFF

On all Cash Sels ofa $1 and over from 1st day of December, 1887, to 1st day of January, 1888.

Now, this is a grand chance to secure fine goods at about wholesale prices. All Watches we sell bear a written guarantee of from three to five years. We will still make another Grand Offer to anyone purchasing one of our LADIES' FINE GEM RINGS or 18 k. WEDDING RINGS which we have for the number of nearly one hundred, we will give a beautiful Plush Ring Box worth $1.00, any color. These bargains everyone should take advantage of. You will never have as good a chance again and remember the only place to get your Watch repaired properly is at

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON.

Difference Between George and the Bear.

"George, dear," said Emily to her shy lover, who had been sitting at the other end of the sofa for an hour, "George, what's the difference between you and a bear?"

"The bear climbs trees," said George absently.

"No, George. The bear hugs and you d—"

George's similarity to a bear the next moment was so touching that Emily's father, who chanced into the room, hunted the young man out of the house with his grandfather's revolutionary musket.

Knew the Meaning of Gibbous.

Education in the South—"Now, try and remember," said the teacher before dismissing the class in celestial geography, "that when the moon is nearly full it is called gibbous, and when less than half full it is crescent."

Twenty woolly heads nodded vigorous assent.

"What d'ye s'pose the moon am called dat way foh?" questioned one puzzled seeker after knowledge on the way home.

"Huh! dat's easy nuff," loftily replied another. "Doan yo' see dat wen de moon is mos' full it gibbus moah light, 'en wen its less 'en half full?" You nebber ken git nuffin fru yer fool head."

Do not purchase until you see Russell's grand display of Fancy Goods, Etc. It will eclipse everything in this country.

"Look Pleasant, You Villain."

Some philanthropists always make us think of a story that is told of Frederick, of Prussia. The king had a way of going around like a common mortal and holding brief conversation with his subjects, which were pretty sure to terminate in some decidedly unpleasant remark by the monarch. One day he paused to speak to a Jew, but the wary Hebrew took to his heels. The king pursued, and after a brisk chase overtook the flying subject. "Why did you run away from me, rascal?" "Because," frankly admitted the Hebrew, "I was afraid." "Fritz" hit him a tremendous whack with his cane. "Villain!" he roared, "I don't want to be feared; I want to be loved."

Call at Russell's, Flesherton, and secure some of those bargains they are offering. They are doing the business of this County.

FARMERS

WOOLEN FACTORY

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and guaranteed as represented. Prices being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to run the manufacturing part of it nearly every month, viz., ROLLING, ROLL CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHERTON

Flesherton, Nov. 1st, 1887.

BAPTEEZEMENT OF THE BAIRN.

A Royal Baby Christened into the Scotch Presbyterian Church—Simple but Interesting Ceremony—The Baby's Name.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: One year ago yesterday was born a son to the Princess Beatrice, and the first anniversary was selected by the Queen as christening day for the Princess' little girl. The ceremony throughout was simple and indeed democratic. Little about it suggested royalty. Doubtless as a special compliment to Scotland, the Queen chose the baptism formula of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, and selected to officiate at the font Dr. Lees, only three days home from his visit to New York. He is the minister of St. Giles', Edinburgh, a dean of the Thistle and principal Scottish chaplain to the Queen. Thus, for the first time—because the Stuarts were Catholics—a royal infant has been baptized into the Scotch Presbyterian Church.

One o'clock was the hour selected, the place being that drawing-room so often referred to in the Queen's books, with windows overlooking the picturesque valley of the River Dee, in the background of which rise the shadows of the historic Grampian Hills. It is a plainly furnished apartment such as a successful merchant might plan—a long room, rich in windows, light and views, with curtains of the Balmoral tartan dropping upon a carpet of the Stuart hunting tartan. There is not one very luxurious belonging about the room. Upon the walls hang proof engravings of Landseer's famous deer scenes of his suggestions of hunts over heather and hills.

At one extremity of the drawing-room stood groups of Balmoral tenants, keepers and attendants—good, sturdy Highlanders—with their families, all in picturesque and variegated costumes. At the other extremity was ranged an aristocratic group of guests—the Princess Frederica of Hanover, the Dowager Duchess of Roxburgh and the Marchioness of Ely, Court ladies-in-waiting; the Countess of Erroll, the Earl of Hopetoun, who is the Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland; the Right Hon. C. Ritchie, Cabinet Minister in waiting; Sir Henry Ponsonby, the Queen's confidential secretary; Prof. and Mrs. Profei, the Queen's particular neighbors and her family friends, together with many other favorite guests. Several deer looked in from the lawn and seemed startled when the exercises opened with the singing of a Scotch hymn by a selected Aberdeen choir.

In the centre of the room stood the Royal grandmother, surrounded by her Indian servants—dark Orientals blazing in red and gold. It did not seem that a Queen and Empress stood there, but rather a woman and a mother, wearing a smile which suggested youthful tenderness. She wore a dress of black silk, trimmed with black lace. Across her breast she wore a narrow scarf of the Balmoral plaid. Beside her stood the father, mother and nurse, who held the cooing cause of the assemblage, all fronting the chaplain, who in dress suggested the well-known picture of John Knox. Not far away was another nurse holding the year old prince, who looked around with dawning wonderment. There was nothing royal or pretentious in the dresses of either baby, although the christening robe, with its wealth of bottom embroidery and adornments of lace crossed with a Scotch ribbon, was the object of much admiration.

Curiosity was visible upon all faces as the minister approached the naming, because as yet the name was a secret. He finally announced it as "Victoria Eugenie Julia Ena." Eugenie, after the ex-Empress; Julia, after the Princess Battenberg, the German grandmother, and Ena as a Scotch name.

The water used was from the River Jordan. After the baptism was sung the new hymn by Sir Arthur Sullivan, and the service concluded with the singing of a chorale known as the "German Hallelujah."

What followed? What follows at any well regulated christening? The whole affair passed off in a thoroughly domestic way, and next came luncheon for the "classes" and afternoon jollity for the masses.

ANARCHISM IN THE PULPIT.

The Chicago Execution Compared by a Clergyman to the Crucifixion.

A Hartford (Conn.) despatch says: An excited meeting of the Society of Unity Church (Unitarian) was held to-night, having been called to dismiss Rev. John C. Kimball because of his anarchistic sympathies. His sermon on the Sunday following the hanging of the Chicago anarchists compared the affair to the crucifixion of Christ and gave great offence to many of his congregation. After a sharp debate of two hours this evening Mr. Kimball secured the floor, and said the sermon was inspired by "a strange power." He said also that the principles of the anarchists were destined to triumph, and that he could not take back a single sentiment he had uttered, however unpopular or whatever the result might be to him personally. The vote to dismiss him was lost—yeas, 38; nays, 49. The lady members of the society, who compose nearly half of it, voted almost solidly for Kimball and secured this result.

THE OCEAN STEAMSHIP CALAMITY.

Another Sad Case of the Loss of Nearly a Whole Family.

A Cleveland (Ohio) despatch says: A German workingman named Friedel, who came to this city a few years ago with a young son, having managed to lay up some money, recently sent for his wife and his five other children, who had remained in the Fatherland. Mrs. Friedel and her little ones sailed for America on the steamer Scholten, and they were all among the lost. The unfortunate man learned of his loss to-day through friends and is crazed with grief.

An Elephant as a National Bank.

A Bridgeport, Conn., telegram says: Prof. Seguin and Dr. Godfrey have dissected the carcass of the elephant Alice, burned in Sunday's fire at the Barnum & Bailey winter quarters. In the stomach were found over 300 pennies, part of a pocket knife, four cane ferules, a piece of lead pipe and some pebbles.

—If all the Presidents elected in the United States could be placed in a row they would reach from Washington to Cleveland.

THE GERMAN REICHSTAG.

The Speech from the Throne—Germany Strong and Ready, but Anxious for Peace—Sorrow for the Crown Prince.

A last (Thursday) night's Berlin cable says: The Reichstag was opened to-day. Minister Von Boetticher read the Speech from the Throne. The speech was substantially as follows: "Germany in her foreign policy has successfully endeavored to strengthen the peace of Europe by the cultivation of friendly relations with all of the Powers, by treaties and alliances aiming to avert the dangers of war and to jointly oppose any unjust attacks. Germany has no aggressive tendencies. She has no wants to be satisfied through victorious wars. An unchristian disposition to surprise neighboring peoples is foreign to the German nature and to the constitution of the Empire. The military organization of the country is not calculated to disturb the peace of her neighbors by arbitrary attacks. Germany is strong in parrying surprises and in defending her independence. She wishes to become so strong that she can face with composure every danger. The resumption of the Reichstag comes at a serious time. The grave complaint with which the Crown Prince has been visited fills the mind not only of the Emperor, but also of his august allies and the whole of Germany, with anxious care. Nothing that human service, knowledge and careful tending can do will be left undone. Our eyes and prayers, however, are directed toward God, whose decrees rule the destinies of nations as well as the life of the individual man. Firm confidence in God and the faithful fulfilment of duty have been in all especially grave moments the tried support of our people, and they now also enable us to do justice to the labors awaiting the Legislatures. There has been a gratifying improvement in the condition of the country, and it is expected that next year will show a surplus of nearly fifty million marks. Bills will be introduced, abolishing compulsory contributions on the part of officers and Imperial officials to the widows' and orphans' funds, increasing the corn duties, modifying the Landwehr and Landsturm system so that it will be considerably strengthened, relating to the insurance of artisans in cases of old age and sickness, modifying the friendly societies law with regard to the sale of wine, temporarily prolonging the Austro-German treaty and ratifying treaties of commerce with some American States."

One hundred and fifty deputies were present. The places reserved for members of the court were not occupied. In the diplomatic gallery there were only a few military attaches, but the public galleries were crowded. At noon the members of the Bundesrath entered the White Hall, which was illuminated, and took positions on the left of the throne. During the reading of the speech the Minister was often interrupted by applause and enthusiastic cheers. At the close he declared the Reichstag open, and Herr Wedell Piesdorff, the President of the body, called for cheers for the Emperor, which were given with enthusiasm. The President, in his opening address, alluded to the serious nature of the illness of the Crown Prince, and the grief of the country over his fate. Anxiety concerning his condition relegated all other thoughts to the background. The members would join, the President said, in expressing their sorrow and declaring that they placed their confidence in God's grace and mercy. He asked authority to convey these sentiments to the Emperor and send the following telegram to the Crown Prince: "The Reichstag, in profound reverence and cordial love, thinks of Your Imperial Highness. May God protect your precious life and preserve it for the salvation of the Fatherland." The Deputies listened to the address standing, and unanimously approved the President's suggestions.

TANNING A BOY'S HIDE.

Private Justice Overtakes a Young Georgian with Legal Consent.

An Atlanta (Ga.) despatch says: Macon officials have adopted a novel but cruel method of inflicting punishment on juvenile criminals. A young negro named Parker was arrested yesterday on the charge of abstracting a sack of corn from the barn of a farmer by the name of Davis. The latter withdrew his complaint with the consent of the authorities, the boy's father agreeing to flog him if leniency was shown. At noon the parent appeared at the barracks with a long, ugly strap that had done service as a buggy trace. The boy was not apprised of what was coming, and when it was announced that his father had come the youthful offender was about to jump with joy, but when the door of the cell opened and the strap was noticed he "wilted." The father was not disposed to stand upon ceremony, and at once commanded the lad to relieve himself of his coat and shirt. This was done, but with great reluctance. As soon as the body was bare the strap swung high in the air, quivered for a second and then came down with a swish and a swack that caused the black skin on the boy's body to turn white in stripes. Thirty-nine times did the strap come down with swishes and swacks. The son was exhausted by this time, and his bare back had a sickening appearance. The bystanders interfered at this point, fearing that the exciting father would kill his offspring. When the last lash fell the fainting boy was forced to assume his shirt and coat and was led home. He will probably not steal any more corn, for a while at least.

A Terrible Bereavement.

A Syracuse, N. Y., despatch says: The wife and eight children of John P. Frost, a laborer in the salt mills in this city, were lost with the steamer Scholten. Frost came from West Prussia about nine months ago and saved all his money to pay for the passage of his wife and children. It took all his savings, $153, to buy the tickets. His wife was about 45 years old, and the children ranged from 8 months up to 22 years of age.

A prisoner in the Franklin (Pa.) jail named Joseph Reed, is but 7 years old. He was arrested for "maliciously trespassing."

It is denied on authority that the widow of Henry Ward Beecher is showing signs of mental decadence.

FLAYED HIS BOY ALIVE.

Inhuman Crime of a Chicago Stepfather—Ending in Murder.

A Chicago despatch says: A neighbor who had wanted to adopt little Max Gillman, the 11-year-old stepson of August Hatzka, sat by his corpse on Lincoln street to-day and sobbed as if her heart would break. The child had been beaten to death by Hatzka. His poor, frail little body was literally flayed. The boy was the son of Hatzka's first wife, whom he married in Germany and who died there about five years ago. He married again within three months after her death, and his second wife died June 15th last in Chicago. Since then it appears the poor little waif of a step-son has received more kicks than crusts and was half-starved all the time. The neighbors say the boy was a nice little fellow. He could not stay at home to be beaten and starved, but last night he returned when Hatzka was out. Hatzka went up to the boy's bed when he returned, and, taking a leather strap to which was attached a buckle, simply flayed the helpless boy alive. This was about 10 o'clock last night. The neighbors heard the screams of the boy then, and later, about midnight, they were awakened by a fresh attack of the insensate brute. Nothing further was heard until this morning, when the sound of blows and groaning could be heard once more.

About 9 o'clock this morning Hatzka told one of the neighbors that the boy had died suddenly, and they sent word to the Coroner and notified the police. Detectives found the body of the boy, yet warm, at 10 o'clock, showing that he had died this morning, after what was at least the third beating. The body of the little victim is a mass of lacerations where the sharp buckle ploughed up the quivering flesh. On the back of the head are frequent imprints of the buckle, and it is supposed that concussion of the brain from the blows there caused the boy's death. Examination of the premises showed that Hatzka had wiped the blood off the bleeding body of the boy and burned the rags with which he did it. The shirt the boy wore when he was whipped was found hidden away in a shed back of the house. It was all caked with dry blood, and the clean shirt which Hatzka put on the poor little fellow is almost as bloody.

Hatzka is 38 years old, and was employed in a furniture factory. He has two little sons of his own, aged 4 and 3 years respectively. Hatzka obtained an unenviable reputation in the neighborhood some time last summer by his treatment of a young woman whom he engaged as housekeeper. He made proposals of marriage to her after she had been working for him four days, and was very much enraged at her because she was already betrothed to another man and declined the honor of being his wife. It is related that he charged her with stealing half a shawl of his late wife and some pieces of table linen, but she not only proved her innocence, but showed that he had cut the shawl himself and hidden away the linen.

When officers arrived at Hatzka's house they found him seated in the kitchen smoking. He was promptly arrested. The man had evidently been drinking, but whether before or after the tragedy was not apparent. He was very reticent, and pretended not to understand English.

KING OF HIS CASTLE.

An Amusing Sketch of Mr. Pyne, M.P., in Lisfinny Keep.

A London cable says: A correspondent now in Ireland sends a whimsical account of a visit he paid the other day to a castle near the Blackwater, in which Mr. Douglas Pyne, M.P., now resists the service of a writ. Lisfinny Castle consists of a single tower or keep, about ninety feet high, dating from Sir Walter Raleigh's time, and surrounded by a large farmyard. It has only one narrow door at the bottom and a small window near the top on the same side. The other openings are tiny slits or loopholes too small to admit a man's head. The lower half of the castle has been completely separated from the upper part by logs and masonry, and the staircase is said by Pyne to be so undermined that many lives will be lost if an attempt is made to force it. My friend hailed Pyne from a haystack outside. Pyne was too shortsighted to recognize him, but he knew his voice and let himself down on a rope inside to a loophole some thirty feet above the ground, whence he conversed for a long time. He is in high animal spirits, and says the exercise he gets in going up and down the rope keeps him in splendid health. The only difficulty was the cold, but he had stuffed the loopholes with hay, and when a stove was lighted he was quite comfortable, barring the fact that the stovepipe was too short and filled the top of the chamber with smoke. He had plenty of whiskey and tobacco and cannes meats enough to last till spring. When deputations come to visit him he lowers himself down to the outside in an armchair, suspended from a windlass, to about fifteen feet from the ground, where he listens to their speeches and replies. He confided to my friend that it was impossible he could be captured, because, even if the police effected an entrance, he had secret means of exit. The interview was ended by Pyne lowering a bottle and a tumbler by a long chord, and his visitor pledged him health and success in good Irish whiskey. Nothing could show better the saddened seriousness of the situation in latter day Ireland than the fact that this comical episode awakens no smile anywhere.

A Wild Goose Experiment.

An Ottawa despatch says: Six wild geese caught near Grosse Island, river St. Lawrence, arrived by Dominion Express for the Central Experimental Farm. They will be added to the live poultry collection, and efforts will be made to see if they can be domesticated. Specimens of all the wild birds, including many aquatic birds, will also be obtained.

A Texas candidate for Congress wrote his compaign speech on sheets of paper and pasted them together. He carried the roll of manuscript to a meeting, and in the excitement of the occasion allowed the unread part of the roll to become unwound upon the floor. When he came to the railroad issue he discovered that some of his impatient hearers had cut off that part. For a moment he stood amazed, and then he thundered: "Who the —— has stolen my railroad?"

NOT A WORD TO HIS WIFE FOR YEARS.

The Couple Then Quarrelled and the Woman Was Fatally Shot.

A Chicago despatch says: William Myers, who shot his wife and child, ran away and afterwards gave himself up to the police, has made a statement of the causes leading to his crime.

"I don't know how I came to do the shooting," he said. "I don't mean to say that I was not aware of what I was doing, but rather that I had not premeditated it. The trouble has been brewing for two years. I have been married for about twenty-four years, but for the past two years I had not, up to Sunday last, spoken a word to my wife. In fact, I had not even seen her more than three or four times. We lived in the same house, but whenever she would hear me enter she would shut herself in her room and remain there until I left. About three years ago she began to treat me with a sort of silent contempt, which began finally to be so unbearable that I couldn't stand it, and I left her comparatively to herself. I furnished the means of support, however.

"Well, everything went along in that way until Sunday afternoon, when I went home, and, going upstairs, went to a storeroom to get something. I found the door locked, and was about to go for a key when my daughter, seeing me, told me I should not go into that room. I asked her why, for inasmuch as it was my house I supposed I had a right to go where I would in it. Just then my wife appeared on the scene with a poker in her hand and declared I should not enter. I then went out and bought a revolver, intending it for self-defence only, for I feared there might be a man in the house who would create a disturbance, for which I wished to be prepared.

"I returned home about 8 o'clock, and, going into the parlor, saw a number of strangers there. I said good evening and sat down. Some time after my wife turned to me and asked if I had not been there long enough, at the same time slapping me. I left the room, and after the company had gone I went to where my wife was and shot her. Not knowing what the result of my work would be I left the house."

There is very little hope of saving Mrs. Myers' life.

Personal Points.

Governor Ames, of Massachusetts, carries life insurance to the amount of $125,000.

Mrs. Celia Thaxter, the artist and poet has become a convert to esoteric Buddhism.

The young English woman who figured in the Valentine-Baker affair is still alive and unmarried.

Robert Manchester is perhaps the oldest song-and-dance man on the American stage. He is worth more than $50,000.

English newspapers announce the death of Hon. Captain Byng, the popular A.D.C. of Lord Lansdowne at Ottawa a year or two ago. He had only been recently married.

Mrs. Scott-Siddons told a friend in Kingston that her husband was in a lunatic asylum in Australia, and that she has not heard about him for some time.

Dr. Horatius Bonar, in a recent letter to a friend, says: My writing days are done. The public must be contented with what I have written in prose and verse.

Mr. John Greig, M.A., of Edinburgh, is the first Scotsman who has achieved the distinction of passing the examinations for the degree of doctor of music at Oxford.

The documents and plans for the chapel built in Bury street for Dr. Watts, the father of modern hymnology, lately came into the hands of Dr. John Stoughton, who mentions that the total cost of the building was only $3,560. That no doubt looked a large sum to be expended for such a purpose in the days of Queen Anne.

The new Canon of Wells, England, who adds to his other distinctions that of being father of the accomplished editor of the London Times, is a ripe scholar, and obtained his fellowship more than forty years ago. It is understood that Canon Buckle leans to moderate broad Church views, but he has never been in any sense a party man.

Killed Two Men at One Shot.

A painful sensation was caused yesterday in Rangoon by the news that two corporals of the Royal Scots Fusiliers had been shot by Private Mulligan, of the same regiment. Some trifling quarrel had occurred on the previous day between Corporal Thomas and Mulligan. While Thomas was seated on Corporal Crisp's bed Mulligan, without warning, fired his rifle at a distance of a few feet. The bullet passed through Thomas' head and entered Crisp's chest above the heart. Death was instantaneous in both cases. The murderer narrowly escaped being lynched by the soldiers. The murdered men were buried yesterday with full military honors. Gen. Gordon and his staff, with the entire regiment of the Royal Scots Fusiliers were present.—London Times.

Irreverent Quakers.

Apropos of Quaker bonnets, I was told last year that some antiquarian, wishing to obtain a complete dress belonging to this sect, asked the younger members of an old Friend family for some of their grandparents' garments. One can hardly imagine the horror inspired by the answer: "Oh, you can have all the broad-brimmed hats, but there are no bonnets left, as we took off the silk and used them as footlight shades in our theatricals last holidays. I am so sorry, but they did capitally!" Oh, that the descendants of the old Quaker stock should have so little reverence left for the memory of their ancestors!—Cassell's Family Magazine.

A reverend canon of the church relates that on one occasion it fell to his lot to marry his footman to his cook. The footman would persist throughout the service in putting his finger to his forehead every time his master addressed him, in accordance with custom. The rev. gentleman remonstrated in an undertone: "Don't touch your forehead, John, but say the words after me." Then aloud: "Wilt thou take this woman?" etc. John, bearing in mind the vicar's hint, replied: "After you, sir," and the assembled friends burst into laughter.

Members of the Vegetarian Society assert that fruit is a perfect food, the apple alone being able to sustain life and health for a long time.

Walt Whitman's Thanks.

A New York despatch says the papers yesterday published the following Thanksgiving poem:

Thanks in old age—thanks ere I go,
For health, the midday sun, the impalpable air—for life, mere life,
For precious ever-lingering memories (of you, my mother, dear—you, father—you, brothers, sisters, friends),
For all my days—not those of peace alone—the days of war the same,
For gentle words, caresses, gifts from foreign lands,
For shelter, wine and meat—for sweet appreciation,
(You distant, dim unknown—or young, or old—countless, unspecified, beloved,
We never met, and never shall meet—and yet our souls embrace, long, close and long),
For being, groups, love, deeds, words, books—for colors, forms,
For all the brave, strong men—devoted, hardy men—who've forward sprang in freedom's help, all years, all lands,
For braver, stronger, more devoted men—(a special laurel ere I go to life's war's chosen ones,
The cannoneers of song and thought—the great artillerymen—the foremost leaders, captains of the soul),
As soldier from an ended war return'd—as traveller out of myriads, to the long procession retrospective,
Thanks—joyful thanks!—a soldier's, traveller's thanks.

WALT WHITMAN.

A ROMANTIC MARRIAGE.

Five Families of Children Brought Together Under One Roof.

A marriage ceremony was performed Tuesday at the Ohio House, on Carter street, says the Chattanooga Times, that attracted a great deal of attention. The bride was a mother and the groom had already lost two wives. The marriage was the outcome of an inquiry which the lady made several months ago for a correspondent through a Cincinnati paper. The lady was Mrs. Mamie C. Doyle, of Cincinnati. The man who saw the inquiry and replied to it with success was John R. Wandell, of Scottsboro', Ala. They made love by letter, she accepted by letter, he proposed to her by letter, she accepted by letter, and they made arrangements by letter to meet and be married at Chattanooga. Mr. Wandell arrived in the city yesterday and procured the license and made all the arrangements to have the ceremony performed by Squire Snyder at the Ohio House as soon as his intended should arrive. Mrs. Doyle arrived here in company with her 14-year-old son on the Cincinnati Southern train. Mr. Wandell had exchanged photographs with Mrs. Doyle, and he was at the depot ready to recognize his bride. And he did. It was the first time they had met, but they were fast friends at once and quite anxious that the brief ceremony that was to make them twain should be performed at once. At 1 o'clock in the afternoon Squire Snyder tied the nuptial knot and a little later the couple, in company with Mrs. Doyle's son, left for Scottsboro'. She is about 35 years of age. Mr. Wandell is a business man at Scottsboro' and is 40 years of age. She has been married once and has one child. He has been married twice. Each time he married widows with children, and he had children by each wife. His present marriage therefore brings together five sets of children, who are brothers, sisters, stepbrothers and stepsisters, and some of them although brothers and sisters by the marriage of their parents are after all not related to each other at all.

A Lesson in Chemistry.

This is the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the sand used in making the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the soda that, melted with sand, compounded the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the salt, a molecule new, that furnished the soda that, melted with sand, compounded the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the chlorine of yellowish hue, contained in the salt, a molecule new, that furnished the soda that, melted with sand, compounded the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the sodium, light and free, that united with chlorine of yellowish hue to form common salt, a molecule new, that furnished the soda that, melted with sand, compounded the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the atom that weighs twenty-three, consisting of sodium so light and free, that united with chlorine of yellowish hue to form common salt, a molecule new, that furnished the soda that, melted with sand, compounded the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

This is the science of chemistry, that teaches of atoms weighing twenty-and-three, and of sodium metal so light and free, that united with chlorine of yellowish hue to form common salt, as a molecule new, that furnished the soda that, melted with sand, compounded the glass that lighted the window in the laboratory that Jack built.

A Story of Three Ladies.

Two ladies in Dover, Me., saw a man lying drunk in the ditch one hot summer day, while his wife sat by his side knitting. She had been walking home with him, and when he succumbed and fell she had coolly taken out her knitting kneedles and gone to work, so as to lose no time. One of the ladies anxiously said to the knitter: "What would become of him if he should die in this condition?" "I declare," said the wife, as she was toeing off the stocking, "I don't know what his destiny would be in the future, but he seems to be having a good time now."

That's So.

On the deck of the Dutch steamer Scholten, as with a horrible hole in her bow she rapidly filled with the waters of the English Channel, an English girl stood composed and said to her countrymen about her, "Let us stand side by side and go down together." The spirit of that girl is the spirit that forms the hollow square in the last desperate rally on the bloody field. It is the spirit that makes the loneliest trader or missionary in the isles of the sea look up to the flag and fear not in his hardship. It is the spirit that brings the Victoria Cross to the breast of an obscure miner and nerves a Gladstone to await a new day for all of Britain.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Man in the Moon.

O the Man in the Moon has a crick in his back
Whee!
Whimm!
Ain't you sorry for him?
And a mole on his nose that is purple and black;
And his eyes are so weak that they water and run,
If he dares to dream even he looks at the sun;
So he just dreams of stars, as the doctors advise;
My!
Eyes!
But isn't he wise
To just dream of the stars as the doctors advise?

And the Man in the Moon has a boil on his ear,
Whee!
Whing!
What a singular thing!
I know! but these facts are authentic, my dear—
There's a boil on his ear, and a c rn on his chin—
He calls it a dimple, but dimples stick in;
Yet it might be a dimple turned over, you know;
Whang!
Ho!
Why, certainly so!
It might be a dimple turned over, you know!

And the Man in the Moon has a rheumatic knee
Gee!
Whizz!
What a pity that is!
And his toes have worked round where his heels ought to be;
So whenever he wants to go north he goes south,
And comes back with the porridge crumbs all 'round his mouth,
And he brushes them off with a Japanese fan;
Whing!
Whann!
What a marvellous man!
What a very remarkable marvellous man!

—J. W. Riley, in Indianapolis Journal.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Latest Fashion and Other Domestic Gossip.

Corsets Fastened by Machinery—Buying Wedding Presents—The Bustle About to Collapse.

(Cousin Kate's Weekly Budget.)

Economy in Bridal Presents.

"It is scarcely the right thing," said a young bride, "to look a gift horse in the mouth, and yet it's hard not to speak one's mind on a matter of this kind. It does seem to me that people might think awhile before buying wedding presents. I am sure if they had done so I would never have received seven pickle castors. What in the world am I to do with them all? I can only use one at a time, or, at the most, two. Now what is to become of the other five? It's just too perplexing for anything. If I could only show them it wouldn't be so bad, but I can't even do that." "Dear me, I don't know why you want to worry over such a little thing as that," observed her sister, who had been married nine years. "Those extra pickle castors will come in handy by and by. Select the one you want to keep and then put the others carefully away. Whenever any of your friends marry let a pickle castor be your gift. It'll save you lots of money. When I was married I received four fish knives among my presents. I was cross until some one gave me the hint that I have just given you, and then I was happy. It wasn't long before I had made good use of three fish knives."

What Will the Bustle Be?

Ladies who are having new winter suits seem perplexed concerning the bustle arrangements in their efforts to ascertain whether it is to be large or not. Whenever these unavoidable discussions are overheard in dressmakers' rooms it is always a matter of surprise that any woman can hesitate an instant as to the advisability of wearing such a hideous, uncomfortable appendage on her back, even when it is considered the fashion. Often this order has been given to the dressmaker: "Put in a bustle large enough to sway back and forth as I walk; it's an awfully stylish effect." The effect is certainly "awful," and if any one of those women who gave these directions fully realized the ungraceful, vulgar spectacle they make of themselves by a huge bobbing bustle, and the uncomplimentary criticisms they call forth, they would discard these abominations so detrimental to comfort and artistic outline. However, violent extremes of fashion never last. A reaction always sets in. Thanks to the law of universal change the collapse of the bustle has already arrived. Mrs. Sherwood writes from Paris that "tight lacing, large bustles and the high hat are doomed," and "Madge" writes from London that "the hump at the back of dresses is fast diminishing, and that the protuberances are only worn by the sort of women who love exaggeration in dress, and always cling fondly to absurdities and eccentricities, seeing in them their only chance to be what they call stylish."—Hartford Times.

A Little Illogical, But Not Less Lovely.

A woman jumps on a chair, holds her petticoats round her legs and yells like a small cyclone at the sight of a mouse. But she runs up three flights of stairs in a burning building to rescue another woman's baby. She's afraid of a book agent in broad daylight, yet pistol in hand follows up a burglar at midnight. She cowers when the furniture creaks, and is a lioness if a drunken man assaults the front door. She tells tales out of school, yet is the first to do a kindness to the woman she's talked about. She steals a car ride with a crystal conscience, if the conductor forgets her fare, and then opens her purse to its widest to help a man out of a tight corner. She haggles at the remnant counter for herself, and then tribles the money on flannels for her washerwoman's sick boy.—San Francisco Report.

Fastening Corsets by Machinery.

An interesting fact was educed in the course of a lecture on tight-lacing delivered by Miss Heffler-Arnim. The lecturer said "she had heard of instances where ladies were so determined not to exceed the fashionable measurement that they had actually held on to a crossbar while their maids had fastened the fifteen-inch corset. A combined body-stretcher and waist-compresser would supply a decided want. Indeed, it ought to have been invented before fashion decreed the fifteen-inch corset. It is surely very thoughtless to order people to make themselves measure fifteen inches around the waist without providing them with the necessary machinery.

A Little Longer Month by Month.

The evolution of the ladies' pocket-books is wonderful. One year ago the ladies were satisfied with a diminutive affair they could hide in the palms of their hands. In 365 days the pocket-book has grown to the length of a good-sized healthy ear of corn. Here are illustrations showing the length the pocket-book has grown every three months:

January 1st, 1887.

April 1st, 1887.

July 1st, 1887.

October 1st, 1887.

January 1st, 1888.

If this thing keeps on the pocket-book will grow in another year long enough to be used as a walking-stick.—Albany Argus.

What the Women Will Wear.

Soft woollen goods will be the prevailing fall material for street wear. Not only will plain materials be used, but fancy goods in stripes and large plaids. The latter are very popular, being used in combination with plain material. The basque is made of some soft twill, with fancy cuffs and collars, in combination with a skirt of plaid, with full heavy draperies of the same. Among some of the latest French importations are many woollens, with fancy stripes of velvet. The Jacquard looms are furnishing the market with this class of goods, with elaborately flowered stripes of velvet. The Princess of Wales has set the style of using watered silk basques, with skirt and draperies of plain cashmere—a combination which is very taking. Many importations for fall wear are of plain ladies' cloth and serge in an almost endless variety of colors. The navy-blues have more purple in them than formerly, the porcelain-greens more blue, and reds are as dark as the Jacqueminot rose. For stylish costumes striking combinations are used, as red and green, brown and blue, and gray and blue The prevailing color, and that which seems to be most fitting for the autumn season, is brown, and this will be used in all shades; wood, bronze and tawny being most in favor.—Wade's Fibre and Fabric.

Suggestions to Housewives.

The color of the jelly is spoiled by boiling too long.

Put very little lard in your bread if you wish it to be white.

Do not fill the soup plate. A half-ladleful is generally enough.

If you moisten your broom in warm water every time you sweep you will find the dust will not fly so badly.

To remove grease from garments, dissolve a teaspoonful of salt in four tablespoonfuls of alcohol, shake well and apply with a sponge.

A good wash for the hair, to prevent it from falling out, is made by mixing one teaspoonful of salt, 30 grains of quinine and a pint of common whiskey or bay rum. Rub the hair thoroughly every night.

Another good wash for the hair is: One cupful of salt, one quart soft water. After it stands for twelve hours commence to use. Take a cupful of the brine and a cupful of hot water, wash well with that, rinse once and rub dry as possible with towel.

When the feet are swollen from walking or long standing, the soreness may be relieved by soaking them in the following: Take some wood ashes and cover with water; let it stand for two or three hours; strain off the water and place the feet in it. The soreness will disappear almost immediately.

Latest Fashion Notes.

Pretty blankets, with a thick fleece and striped in dull blue or pink on cream or gray ground, are used for making dressing wrappers, and are very warm and inexpensive.

The latest novelties in slippers consist of an open-work pattern stamped out in patent leather over a white or tan-colored ground. These slippers come quite high up on the instep and have a big bow set across them in the Louis XIV. fashion.

Stripes are favorites in every fabric. Pretty pearl-colored moires have fine wrinkled stripes, which are set four inches apart, and are in electric blue, Charles X. pink, or a dull apple green. They resemble the fabrics of thirty years ago and are exquisitely pretty.

The old-fashioned watered silk is coming back into style, and is much richer in effect than the modern moire. It is shown in the shops in black, with the broad, delicate effects of the old watering, which is interspersed with fine, wavy lines, and forms the foundation of dresses draped with velvet or camel's hair, being made plainly, with little draping and less trimming.

For a walking-dress, and useful in all weather, nothing is better than dark blue smooth-faced lady's cloth, made with a plain round skirt, a panel braided in black on the left side, and simple drapery. The basque is braided in black, and is quite round, without pleats in the back. A plain braided jacket of the same material forms the outer wrap.

The jersey in its re-formed state grows constantly in popularity. It comes in all shades and divers shapes. Pretty gray ones have a yoke, heavily embroidered with narrow, flat braid set on edge, and the same is repeated on the sleeves. Red ones have the yokes made in multitudinous tiny tucks, and a bunch of tucks slightly wider immediately back and front in the tunic. These are confined about the waist with broad silk belts, fastened with a long, narrow buckle either of metal or smoked pearl. Still another fashion is to have a plain yoke and a tunic laid in broad box-pleats, and very expensive ones have cuffs, collars and vests of velvet braided with tinsel.

Plush is made into beautiful tea gowns of gris de perle, with tiny touches of very pale crepe de chine to relieve the gray. These are very plain in design, with demi-trains and a little pleating of gray satin set underneath the edge, lined with a deep lace balayeuse. The front has a vest of heavy gray satin, forming a sharp point and giving the effect of long-waistedness, which all French gowns show. The pleats of the vest are lined with pink, making thus many very fine lines of the color, and the tight plush sleeves come half way below the elbow, the flare being filled in with the crepe, which faces the high, half-open collar at the throat.

Boulanger hats are seen occasionally, but it is far too flamboyant a style to be worn by well-dressed women. It is made of dark brown, blue, gray and black felt, and much resembles in shape the head-gear of the Knights Templar. On the front is a rosette made of many loops of velvet ribbon, under which is set the stem of a long ostrich plume, sometimes two of them, which wave backward over the top of the hat and are held to it with a stitch or two in the back. They are handsome, but fast looking, and in Paris are worn only by that class of women whose principal desire is to attract attention.

Among the Churches.

The Spurgeon family, in London, is represented by three clergymen. The membership under their care, it is said, constitute more than one-sixth of the membership in the London Baptist Association, Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, son of Charles H., is pastor of one-fourth of all the Baptists in New Zealand.

Principal Tulloch was, after the death of the late Dr. Norman McLeod, the man in the Scottish Church whom Queen Victoria most trusted. His son has been allowed to write for boys and girls a life of herself and a life of the Prince Consort. By command of the Queen a marble bust of the late principal has been placed in the hall at Balmoral Castle.

Mr. Spurgeon is not to be left alone in the position he has assumed toward the Baptist Union. The Rev. Archibald Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, an institution on a scale of similar magnitude to that of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, has also withdrawn from the Union, and among many others who have taken the same course is the Rev. T. Ballimore, of the Gildencroft Baptist Church, St. Martin's Lane.

Principal Fairbairn, of Mansfield Cottage, Oxford, has commenced a course of lectures on subjects of general interest to university men. The latest lecture was on "Pessimism and Life," and was largely attended, the dons being present in considerable strength, some of them contented with seats on the floor of the lecture room. The lecture treated of the pessimism of East and West, of Schopenhauer and of Buddha. The conclusion reached was that if life itself was bad, then pessimism was justifiable; but that if the goodness of God was admitted, then all theories of pessimism fell to the ground.

A sad tragedy has occurred near Birmingham. Rev. Lindsay Taplin, a Unitarian pastor at Kingswood, committed suicide by drowning himself in a pond near his residence. Before going to Kingswood the reverend gentleman had been for a quarter of a century in charge of the Unitarian church at Tolsmordon. He was a highly accomplished scholar. Latterly his health had not been good and he was depressed in spirits. He was a little over 60 years of age. The manner of his death has caused much local excitement and regret.

Cremation and Religion.

Once, when the late Lord Shaftesbury was told that a certain High Church bishop had opposed the burning of the dead on the ground of religious principle, and had declared that the practice would militate against the idea of the resurrection, he exclaimed, "What an audacious limitation of the power of the Almighty! What has become of the blessed martyrs who were burned at the stake?" Of all the objections raised against this method of disposing of the dead, perhaps there is none so foolish as that which says that the act would be an irreligious one. Everyone has a perfect right to think what he likes with regard to such a subject, but whatever arguments may be introduced, sensible religious people have a right to ask that religion shall not be dragged in to the contest to support either side. Considering how many of the early Christians were destroyed by fire, and how many noble Protestant heroes in later days sealed their testimony to the faith at the stake, it is impossible for any sober-minded believer in the grand truths for which these martyrs died to reject cremation on the grounds associated with religion.—Rock (Episcopal Church paper).

A Warning to "Dunners."

A curious case, showing to what extent a debtor may and may not be dunned, has been decided by the Recorder of Montreal. A collector who had several times called on one George Baillie, was at last told by the debtor not to return. Not heeding this injunction, he did return, and was ejected. Baillie was arrested, presumably for assault, and the Recorder dismissed the case with costs against the too industrious collector. And the Recorder laid down the law in these words: "No collector has the right to come to a house for the purpose of collecting, if the one from whom he wants to collect has once told him not to come again. He may seek redress in the court, but not otherwise."

Not Altogether Friendless.

The small child is to the front again. He had been naughty. The naughtiness of youth and the naughtiness of age are widely different.

"If you do that, nobody will love you," the tender mother told him.

"'Tain't so. I know one who'll like me," he answered.

"Who?"

"Satan. He likes the bad ones."

The Genuine Article.

At a restaurant. A customer in a disgusted tone of voice:

"Why, this milk is turned."

"Well, sir!" returned the delighted vendor of comestibles, "and what does that prove, sir? Why, sir, it proves that the article served to you was, like everything else sold in this restaurant, genuine, and not a deceiving combination of chalk and water, sir."

He Was No Puppy.

He—Do you want a little puppy, Miss Edith?

She—Am I to consider that as a proposal?

He—Not at all; good-bye.—The Earth.

Mrs. Breesy (to daughter)—Did you tell young Mr. Waldo, dear, that you would correspond with him on his return to Boston? Miss Breezy—Yes, mamma, he has been so polite to me while in Chicago, you know, and seemed so seriously in earnest when he asked me if he might not hear from me occasionally that what could, I say, mamma, but "Let her go Gallagher."

—The young lady in the glove store always says, "Put up your hands," yet nobody imagines her to be a footpad.

A NERVE REST.

Going to Bed to Get a Sufficient Holiday.

There is no better preventive of nervous exhaustion than regular, unhurried, muscular exercise, says a writer in the Nineteenth Century for November. If we could moderate our hurry, lessen our worry and increase our open air exercise, a large proportion of nervous diseases would be abolished. For those who cannot get a sufficient holiday, the best substitute is an occasional day in bed. Many whose nerves are constantly strained in their daily vocation have discovered this for themselves. A Spanish merchant in Barcelona told his medical man that he always went to bed for two or three days whenever he could be spared from his business, and he laughed at those who spent their holidays on toilsome mountains. One of the hardest worked women in England, who has for many years conducted a large wholesale business, retains excellent nerves at an advanced age, owing, it is believed, to her habit of taking one day a week in bed. If we cannot avoid frequent agitation, we ought, if possible, to give the nervous system time to recover itself between the shocks. Even an hour's seclusion after a good lunch will deprive a hurried, anxious day of much of its injury. The nerves can often be overcome by stratagem when they refuse to be controlled by strength of will.

National Anthems.

There never was a more rousing composition than "La Marseillaise." "The sound of it," says Carlyle, "will make the blood tingle in men's veins, and whole armies and assemblages will sing it with eyes weeping and burning, with hearts defiant of death and despot." It had a great share in the first French revolution, for in a few months after it was first made known every one was singing it, and the words "To arms! March!" were resounding in all parts of France. At every season of disorder since its strains have excited the passions of the people, and if immortality can be predicted for any tune known to man this is, beyond a question, the one. And yet, as the story goes, both words and music were the production of one night. They were composed in 1792 by a person whom Carlyle calls "an inspired Tyrtæn colonel," Rouget de Lisle, who was still living when Carlyle's "French Revolution" was first published. The scene of its birth was Strasburg, and not Marseilles, but it was a force of Marseillaise which first marched to it, and hence the title.

The origin of the British national anthem has proved a source of uninterrupted vexation for many years past. There is almost as much mystery regarding it as there used to be about the source of the Nile. The common account attributes it to Dr. Bull, King James I.'s organist, but it has also been claimed for Henry Carey, the author of "Sally in Our Alley." Between these two the authorship and composition almost certainly rest, but it has been found impossible to decide definitely for the one or the other. The music of "God Save the Queen" is comparatively tame and uninteresting, but it agrees well with the comparatively peaceful, regular course of events which has marked public affairs in England for over two hundred years past.

The Russian national anthem, "God Protect the Czar," was first performed at the Grand Theatre, Moscow, in December, 1833. Previous to this there had been no national hymn in Russia, and the Czars usually contented themselves with "God Save the King." The composer was Col. M. Lwoff, and in return for the composition the Czar Nicholas presented him with a gold snuff-box, set with diamonds. The music is distinctly national, but the words, as every one knows, are anything but the actual prayer of the Russian people: "God Save the Czar! Mighty autocrat! Reign for our glory," etc. It is, properly speaking, an official hymn, and is unknown to the vast majority of Russians.

The Austrian national anthem is well known in England from its use as a hymn tune. It was composed by Haydn and performed for the first time at the celebration at the birthday of the Emperor Franz at Vienna in 1797. The lovely air is thoroughly German, and found therefore a ready acceptance in the hearts of the people. Haydn himself was very fond of it. He used it in the variations in one of his quartets, and when he was dying he insisted on being taken from bed to the piano, when he played the air three times over very solemnly in the presence of his weeping servants.

The Danish national anthem is not unlike the "Rule Britannia." It was composed by a German named Hartmann, about the year 1770. The "Sicilian Mariner's Hymn," though it can hardly be called a national anthem, is a favorite air with the gondoliers of Venice, who sing it frequently.

A Jail for a Family Residence.

A Mrs. Fitzsimmons has a new lot in the new town of Delano, Kern county, adjoining one owned by the county. The county ordered a jail built on its land, but by mistake it was erected on Mrs. Fitzsimmons' lot. The lady immediately moved into what she naturally claims as "improvements" on her land, and was holding the fort at last accounts.—Nevada City (Cal.) Transcript.

Fashionable Charity.

Aunt Minerva (to fashionable niece)—Do you expect to do anything in the direction of charity this winter, Clara?

Miss Clara (brightly)—Oh, yes, aunty, I am already planning my costume for the charity ball.

—Even if a boy is always whistling "I want to be an angel," it is just as well to kepp the preserved pears on the top shelf.

—One of the things which strikes the average man who receives a circular from a Wall street shark telling him of a new and improved plan for getting rich, is that he does not utilize it himself.

—Keeps still—the moonlight whiskey manufacturer.

—Angelina seeks for a definition of volubility. "Volubility, Angelina dear, is the distinguishing feature of a horse-car driver when he is ten minutes behind time on his supper trip and an overloaded coal team breaks down in front of him on the rail."

WITH THE CHILDREN.

Bright Fancies and Odd Speeches of the Little Ones.

BOBBY PLAYS A TRUMP.

Father—Come, Bobby, you are all tired out; so hurry off to bed.

Bobby (with a slow and reluctant movement)—Pa, you oughtn't to tell a boy to hurry up when he's all tired out.—Philadelphia North American.

THE LINE DRAWN.

It is the father of a precocious 2½-year-old who tells that the child was once watching an old lady making her toilet. The old lady had removed her false hair and her teeth, when the astonished small boy said:

"Bet yeh can't take yez neck off!"—San Francisco Chronicle.

WHEN THE ANGELS SMILED.

Passing down Sixteenth street yesterday we noticed a little incident worth recording. A little crippled boy, 10 years old, a poor chappie from the river bottoms, was being hauled along in a little waggon by two other ragged urchins.

"What's the matter with him?" said a little fellow, stopping as he went along.

"He's paralyzed and can't walk a step and we're helping him home," they answered.

Instead of running on the little fellow went into a store and soon caught up with them, handing the cripple a paper bag.

"I got a nickel for blackin' my father's shoes this morning and was going to buy some candy, but you can have it, and here's some ginger-snaps," and the little "Good Samaritan" was around the corner and out of hearing, with tears in his eyes, before the cripple could thank him—Omaha Herald.

SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN.

Lady (recently moved into the neighborhood)—I am very anxious to rent a pew in the church, Deacon Jones. My children are large enough to attend. Absent-minded deacon (who is also a landlord)—I am very sorry, madame, but we don't take children.—New York Sun.

CLOSE OF THE INQUISITION.

In New Jersey there had been some illness in a family, and an inquisitive neighbor asked little Johnny, the youngest son of the family, who had been sick, and he answered: "Oh, it's my brother, that's all." "What was the matter with him?" "Nuffin', only he was just sick." "I know; but what ailed him?" "Oh, I dunno." "What did he have?" "He had the doctor."—Troy Times.

Floating Gardens of the Aztecs.

During all their wanderings, wherever they stopped the Aztecs cultivated the earth and lived upon what nature gave them. Surrounded by enemies in the midst of a lake where there were but few fish, necessity and industry compelled them to form floating gardens on the bosom of the waters. They wove together the roots of aquatic plants intertwined with twigs and branches until they formed a foundation sufficiently strong to support a soil they drew from the bottom of the lake, and on it they sowed their needed maize and chilo. These floating gardens were about a foot above the water and of various forms, the most effective being long and narrow, called cintas, or ribbons. With their natural taste for flowers, they added the ornamental to the useful, and these small gardens, multiplying, were covered with flowers and aromatic herbs, which were used in the worship of their gods or sent to decorate the palace of the Emperor.

What a picture of delightful independence!

The peaceful Indian could anchor his flowery home where he willed, float beyond social cares or political burdens, and from prying neighbors and poll-parrot gossips he could quietly paddle away! In these secure retreats the spendthrift could elude his creditors, the bank defaulter hide from the minions of the law.—Outing.

Choked to Death With a Peanut.

A very sad death took place in Galt on Thursday morning about half-past 11 o'clock, the victim being a young son of Mr. John Flynn, living on South Water street. The poor little fellow had been playing about the house during the morning, and while doing so had been eating some peanuts. Suddenly the boy started to cough as if choking; and those present seized the child and endeavored to relieve it. Medical aid was also obtained, but by that time it was evident that the child was dying. The doctor as a last resort opened the windpipe, but this endeavor to save its life failed, and in a few moments the heart ceased to beat. The little fellow was about 4 years of age, and was a bright and interesting child.—Galt Reporter.

An Interesting Village Under Water.

A gentleman arriving from Tarboro yesterday reported that Princeville, a colored settlement just across Tar River from Tarboro, is under water. The water is higher there than it his been since 1842. The water is standing around the houses halfway to the top of most of them, and the state of affairs is generally very unpleasant. Princeville is strictly a negro settlement, having a colored Mayor, colored police and colored town council.—Raleigh News and Courier.

Brown to the Rescue.

Wife—My dear, I don't know what I am going to do; the company is only half served and the refreshments are giving out. Hubby—Well, if Browne is here we are perfectly safe. Wife—But I don't see how it is going to remedy the difficulty. Hubby—Why, get him to read that theory of his on "Coming Man," and you will see the guests disappear like smoke.

—It is said that H. Rider Haggard contemplates writing a sequel to "She." As he totally annihilated the old lady at the end of his former novel, a sequel seems to be an impossibility. But Haggard's ingenuity is equal to almost any feat. He could doubtless revive "She" with a few chemicals.

—Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, is within two years of the age of our century. Yet he is still so vigorous, in body as in mind, that, on a recent Sunday, when assisting Mr. Wells, of Pollokshields, at the communion, he was able to deliver three powerful discourses. He also preached on Saturday evening the preparatory sermon.

—Should pigs that run at large in the streets be considered public pen-shunners?

THIS PAPER may be found on file at P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance $1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, DEC. 8, 1887.

THE GAME OF POLITICS.

The thoughtful and "unbiased" student of politics must be immensely amused in conning over the pages of party newspapers, which are always accusing their political opponents of being actuated by impure motives and an unholy desire to get their individual and collective fingers into the public money bags. He will find those journals—especially if they claim allegiance to a party which has been relegated to the cold shades of opposition (and they usually do)—referring in sarcastic and self-righteous terms to "Government pap," and violently declaiming against the extravagance of a government which thus "squanders the people's money."

We need not go outside the County of Grey for examples. The Grey Review has been particularly zealous in this respect. Occasionally the spirit moves it, and then the gods are constrained to pause in wonder, while Sir John and his satellites tremble in their high positions at Ottawa, as the Review hurls the thunders of its invective "against the powers that be!" Not long since the Review bitterly assailed the Government for its extravagance in giving out occasional advertising contracts to country newspapers. But the Review evidently wants its contemporaries to do as it says and not as it does: for it has never yet shown an inclination to refuse accepting government advertisements on the score of extravagance. Good Mr. Mowat's contracts are accepted without a murmur, and even the work allotted to it in connection with that terrible Franchise Act—work given out through the medium of the corrupt Tories, too—was done and pay accepted therefor. Was it refused on the score of extravagance? We trow not. Here was a chance for the Review to have immortalized itself by refusing to take money from the people's pockets! Did it do it? Bless your dear heart—no! It could have gulped down fifty times as much Tory "pap" without a solitary protest! Yes, and it would gladly do so at this moment if it had the chance.

Then there is the Owen Sound Advertiser. It has always preached political purity, and denounced the system of doling out "pap" to country papers. But what the Advertiser preaches is quite different to that which it practices—in this connection at least. It swallows every chunk of this same "pap" which comes in its way as gracefully as it is possible under the circumstances. One would naturally suppose the operation would require some effort on the part of the 'Tixer, which is wont to preach such an entirely different doctrine. But not so; the "fleshpots of Egypt" possess a wonderful charm—even if the pottage is supplied by that rascally Sir John. Let us just quote the following figures from the Blue Book, entitled,—"Statement of Expenditure in connection with the Dominion Election, 1887. Printed by Order of Parliament." We will then see whether the "non-corruptible" journals referred to refused to accept any of the people's money, which, as they allege, was "squandered" in connection with that "outrageous" Franchise Act. We quote the full amounts paid out to the different newspaper offices in Grey in this connection, from pages 10 and 11 of the Blue Book above designated:—

John Rutherford, Owen Sound,	$2,755.62
Meaford Mirror, (Conservative)	633.09
OWEN SOUND ADVERTISER, (Reform)	21.08
Owen Sound Times, (Conservative)	30.42
MEAFORD MONITOR, (Reform)	10.76
Chatsworth News, (Ind.)	14.00
Durham Chronicle, (Conservative)	13.50
DURHAM REVIEW, (Reform)	13.30
HANOVER POST, (Reform)	13.00
Dundalk Herald, (Ind.)	9.60
Thornbury Standard, (Ind.)	6.50
Shelburne Free Press, (Conservative)	5.50
Thornbury News, (Conservative)	5.00
Flesherton Advance, (Conservative)	4.40
Ayton Fama, (Ind.)	4.16

Mr. Rutherford's "pap" is large, because he did the bulk of the job printing in connection with the voter's lists; although why the patronage was not more evenly divided in this respect, is a profound mystery locked up in the breasts of "their Worships," Judge Macpherson and Judge Lane. The Meaford Mirror got a share of the job printing, which accounts for its large lump of "pap." The other newspaper accounts were for inserting the very same advertisement which appeared in THE ADVANCE, and for which we received $4.40, while the "simon pure" Advertiser was paid $21.08, the goody-good Review $13.30, the sanctimonious Monitor $15.76, and the "newly-fledged" Post $13.00!!! While preaching vigorously against "squandering the people's money in this way," these self-styled political purists did not hesitate to delve down deeply into the public money bags themselves! Which teaches us, that the men who cry loudest, "Wolf! wolf!" are often wolves themselves, clothed in the garb of hypocritical self-righteousness.

It is extremely interesting to watch this "game of politics," but, alas! the great jewel, consistency, seldom takes up its abode for any length of time in the sanctums of its most ardent and loud-mouthed devotees. And without that jewel, the smooth sentence, the elegant language, and the well-rounded periods become stale and nauseating.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The following is clipped from the Dundalk Herald. We are at a loss to divine the writer's meaning, as no formal opening of our new school "in the town hall" ever reached our editorial ears. But we give the paragraph for what it is worth:—

"The new school house at Flesherton still remains unopened. We hear that the trustees proposed having a formal opening in the town hall last Thanksgiving day, but owing to the architect being some miles away, his presence could not be secured to give the necessary certificate of its being satisfactorily finished. The ADVANCE man may smile at the idiosycrasies of what he likes to term "our village fathers." But are the Flesherton fathers free from comment themselves. The idea of opening a school house in the town hall is too utterly utter for anything. We should like to see them carry it there to open, and if there should be any room for us in the spacious hall to witness the event of opening after it has been taken there, we should feel most thankful for a complimentary ticket."

We are afraid the writer was an inmate of his imposing penetentiary when he penned the above!

Municipal matters are unusually quiet in this Township—notwithstanding the ripple caused by Postmaster Purdy a short time ago. The Fathers have evidently given a good account of their stewardship, and satisfied the ratepayers that it would be unwise to make any changes. This, we say, appears to be the feeling prevailing just now. But we cannot tell what a week may bring forth! In the meanwhile, where is Mr. Purdy?—Has he been unhorsed so early in the battle?

We cannot help giving the people bargains. We have the goods and are bound to sell at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Remember our Grand Offer of Fine Engagement and Wedding Rings. A beautiful plush box with each one, worth $1. A grand assortment of Rings to select from at Russell's, Flesherton.

Always take your Repairs to Russell, Flesherton. It will pay you well to do so.

Commercial Union

—— Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of——

FURNITURE!

AT

J. W. BATES'.

It is Good Goods at Low Price that tells and has told for the last seven years. This season I am in a position to give both old and new Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Design.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business:

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, Gents Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $30.00. A beauty for $14.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $5.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $4.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.35.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 35 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For?

Where?

To W. S CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of W. S. CHRISTOE, Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to	4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 73 to	0 78
Spring Wheat	0 73	0 78
Barley	0 55	0 73
Oats	0 30	0 31
Peas	0 56	0 56
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 80	6 00
Hay, per ton	8 00	8 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 40	0 56
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

W. BOOTH,

The Boss Barber,

FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction Guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,

Tin-Smith, AGENT,

FLESHERTON

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer Mr S. J Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on Land for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—, —OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

EUGENIA

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,

AGENT.

OUR TOWNSHIP FATHERS.

Last Meeting in 1887 of the Assembled Wisdom of Artemesia.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Communications.—From Geo. Moorehouse, Flesherton Station, asking rebate of taxes on grist mill: Wm. Wright asking rebate of taxes on house in Flesherton: J. H. Heard, acct. $5, for lumber for bridge.

Petition from John Armstrong and others, re closing deviation between 9th and 10th consessions, was placed on the table and considered by Council.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp—That Wm. Meade be refunded the sum of $4 for statute labor performed on Lot. 28, Con. 1st N.D.R., and Thomas Rawson be refunded six dollars, being an over-charge of statute labor against Lots 3 Harvey street south and Lot 3, Elgin street north in the village of Priceville for the years 1884-85.—Carried.

Boland, McArthur—That Benjamin Coleman be paid $8 for repairing bridge on townline Artemesia and Glenelg, being Artemesia portion.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp—That the Clerk be and is hereby instructed to erase the taxes against Lot No. 7, Kincardine street South in the village of Priceville, amounting to $4.08, the same being church property.—Carried.

Report of Committee—appointed at last session of Council to examine road, A. D. Smith's, Lot 31, Con. 10, and road between 9 and 10 concessions—was presented and read.

McArthur, Sharp—That the Committee's report re deviation on Lot 31 on the 10th con. be adopted.—Carried.

Messrs. Hawkins, Gilliland and Pedlar appeared before Council Board re deviation between 9th & 10th concessions.

Cairns, McArthur—That Mr. Gilliland be remitted $14 being rebate of statute labor for 1884.—Carried.

McArthur, Boland—That the petition of Geo. Moorehouse, re rebate of taxes, be not entertained.—Carried.

Boland, McArthur—That the petition of John Armstrong and others, regarding a road between 9th and 10th con. of Artemesia, cannot be granted for the following reasons:—(1) Because the petition itself, from its wording and composition, denotes insincerity and lack of candor. (2) Because this council cannot exceed the statute in the case, which prevents the shutting up of any ingress or egress to the parties using its. (3) Because, independent of the Council, any one requiring a repeal by-law tested can do so by applicant paying reasonable expenses therefor to the Clerk of the Municipality. See sub sec. 4, sec. 506, of Municipal Institution Act. (4) Because the present Council was not a party to confirming said deviation and therefore deem it inexpedient for them to interfere in the matter. (5) Because we believe that if the bulk of the petitioners had known the true position of this road, they would never have affixed their names thereto. (6) Because a Report from a Committee, comprised of members of this Council, find any other outlet impracticable without an unreasonable expense to parties requiring this road, seeing that he holds the present road legally.—Carried.

McArthur, Cairns—That the communication re rebate of taxes against the property of William Wright be not entertained, as this Council lost part of the taxes on the same property last year.—Carried.

By-Laws 416, 417 and 418 were carried through the various stages and passed.

Messrs. Alex. Brown, Thos. Boland, W. J. Bellamy and Henry Meldrum were appointed Deputy Returning officers for Wards 1, 2, 3 and 4 for the year 1888.

McArthur, Christoe—That the following bills be paid, John Boland, $4; Henry Cairns, $1.50; Wm. Sharp, $1: for letting and inspecting jobs.—Carried.

McArthur, Boland—That the thanks of this Council are due and are hereby rendered to the Reeve, Dr. Christoe, for the fair and impartial manner in which he has presided over the Council during the year 1887 and for the able and impartial manner in which he has in all cases discharged the onerous duties of the Reeve of this Municipality.—Carried unanimously.

Dr. Christoe replied briefly to the vote of thanks, in which he expressed himself pleased with the confidence placed in him by his confreres, and assuring them that he had always aimed at rendering strict justice to every ratepayer without distinction, and to keep down the rate of taxation as much as was consistent with the proper care of our highways and the interests of the ratepayers as a whole.

McArthur, Sharp—That W. T. McKee, Thos. Gamey, and Will. Wilcox, arbitrators in the matter of the Valley Road, re-Lever, be paid $4 each; also A. Hislop, witness, $1; Geo. Latimer, witness $1; also drawing gravel, McKee for notices, &c., $2; Geo. Latimer, for attendance, $1; re Valley Road $1.—Carried.

McArthur, Boland—That the Reeve endeavor to find out the necessary amount requisite to finish job partly done by Messrs. Allen & Pedier and if bonds be not given for its completion in a reasonable time, to adopt such means as may appear expedient to compel them to fulfil their agreement.—Carried.

Council adjourned.

For The Advance.]

"Look on This Picture and Then on That."

BY S. L. M. LUKE.

There was a time, not long distant, when the Toronto Globe could lay undisputed claim to the championship of Canada in the art of tergiversation and false issues; but, a rival has arisen which bids fair to endanger the questionable laurels of the Globe. The Toronto Mail has shewn itself an apt scholar, and "ring the changes" with a hypocritical sincerity that would do credit to any of the old masters in the Globe school of scandal. Take '57 of the Globe, and '87 of the Mail, and we find both papers riding the high Protestant horse; hence it would appear the Mail is about to parody the Globe in its absurdly inconsistent career; and if so, the year '88-'89 will find the Mail motto, as was that of its mentor in '58-59, "Down with King William, and up with the Pope." Our readers may recollect the utterances attributed to Mr. Chamberlain, relative to Commercial Union between Canada and Yankeedom, that "unless the desire for such Union was universal on the part of Canada, such action would be disallowed by the Home Government," meaning thereby that the interests of the minority would be protected when it came to a national, or de-nationalizing, issue. "The "Rights of Minorities" is a recognized principle in British political ethics; and it is a gratifying assurance that we have the all-powerful arm of the Empire to shield the industrious portion of Canada from the machinations of enemies abroad, with ignorant dupes and purchasable tricksters at home. Speaking of our brethren in the British Isles, the Mail asks: "Are we to impute to them, then, a determination to injure us, by retarding our prosperity, for the sake of the relatively paltry profits they derive from their trade with Canada." The foregoing is a base fabrication. No sentiment has been expressed either publicly or privately in Britain as would justify the language used by the Mail in the foregoing quotation. Its aim and object is to create ill-will against the Mother Country, that being the initiatory step to cultivate treason, and then rebellion. The seditious language of the Globe fall harmlessly upon the public ear: but the Mail has hitherto been a trusted exponent of the better class of Canadian sentiment, but, when it sells its British birthright for a mess of Yankee pottage, it may reasonably expect to find itself, in the near future, another Esau. Again it says: "Mr. Chamberlain is for compelling (1) us to choose between being loyal to the British exporter (2) and retaining British connection." (1) The word compelling, or compulsion, or any word bearing its equivalent signification, was not expressed by Mr. Chamberlain. Converts are generally zealous, and in this instance the Mail has succeeded in beating the Globe record in falsification. (2) "British exporter."—Let the reader turn back to his fyles of three weeks ago—even the Mail—and he will there see in the report of Mr. Chamberlain's words on the occasion alluded to that no word or expression of his bore the slightest allusion either to the British exporter or British trade, other than that if we shut our ports against British commerce we could not consistently expect British protection.

Commercial Union means that we will close our ports against the Mother Country; adopt the Yankee Tariff: all revenue to be funded at Washington, and get back such share as the Yankees deem us entitled to; in short, place ourselves in the unenviable position the Mail occupies today.

Remember our grand offer of Fine Engagement and Wedding Rings. A beautiful plush box with each one, worth $1. A grand assortment of Rings to select from at Russell's, Flesherton.

COUNTY & DISTRICT NEWS.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

The Standard Bank commenced business in Durham last week.

Mrs. Scott-Siddon's recitals in Owen Sound attracted a large and fashionable audience.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Johnston, of Honeywood, have gone to England on a two months pleasure trip.

The Herald man suggests that the Dundalk Village Fathers sell their famous lock-up to him for a wood-shed.

74 candidates will write at the High School entrance examinations in Thornbury, of whom 19 are from Clarksburg and 19 from Thornbury.

People wonder at it, but still we give the finest article for the least money in this section of country at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

The hunting party from Meaford about whom there was so much anxiety felt and expressed last week have turned up all right.—Meaford Mirror.

Messrs. Carroll & Pedwell, of Thornbury, have purchased 1,250 acres of timbered land in the township of Keppel, within three miles of the bay.

Mr. David Fleming, of Collingwood—brother of Sir Sanford Fleming, the celebrated Civil Engineer—died suddenly of heart disease on the 24th ult., aged 63 years.

Ward Beecher Smith has struck Meaford, and, as the Mirror puts it, he "made Rome howl." He usually does: but if "Rome" was any good it would transfer the "howl" to W.B.

Mr. Nathaniel Jamieson, of Mono township, died on the 28th ult., aged 90 years. He was a native of County Leitrim, Ireland, and emigrated to Canada in 1850. His wife died 23 years ago. He leaves two daughters and three sons.

Mrs. W. C. Myers, of Thornbury, died on the 28th ult., under sad and melancholy circumstances. She was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. A. Bull, of that town, and passed away at the early age of 22 years. She had not been married a year.

On Saturday afternoon last, Mr. Geo. Nahrgang, employed in the cabinet factory, met with a most painful accident. The job at which he had been working during the day, it is said, run out and he thought the buzz planer wouldn't be a bad machine to handle and he went at it. In a few minutes Geo. was minus a little finger and a portion of the side of his hand.—Hanover Post.

Early on Friday morning last a colt belonging to Mr. Wm. McMannus jumped out of the field, and then leisurely walked over the cattle guards on to the railway track. Shortly after the morning express came along, the engine striking the colt, which it knocked a distance of fully six rods. Strange, to say, that although the colt was killed, no external marks were visible.—Chesley Enterprise.

A Bad Cut.—A few days ago a young man, son of Mr. Robt. Carr, one of the old pioneers of Shelburne, had a very narrow escape. He was returning from the woods with his axe over his shoulder, and in getting over the fence the top rail rolled with him, and in trying to save himself the axe slipped and inflicted an ugly gash on the side of his neck. It required several stitches to close the wound. He is now getting along pretty well.—Shelburne Free Press.

Rowe.—A most distressing event occurred on Sunday evening last, when little Ernest Rowe was choked to death. The boy who was not quite seven years old was at tea with the family, and after finishing was playing with a small collar button. Suddenly Capt. Rowe heard the child gasping, and on examination found he had swallowed the collar button. Drs. Stephen and Aylsworth were immediately summoned, and found that nothing but an operation would save the boy's life as the button had lodged in the windpipe. But before the proper instruments could be obtained the child was dead, the whole sad affair not occupying more than twenty minutes. The afflicted parents have the sympathy of all in their very severe trouble. The funeral took place on Tuesday.—Collingwood Enterprise.

People wonder at it, but still we give the finest article for the least money in this section of country at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Tamarac Elixir is not advertised to cure consumption, but is has made some remarkable cures of persons supposed to be in the first stages of that disease.

CLUBBING OFFERS.

The Advance and Tororto Daily World until Jan. 1st, 1889, for $2.50. This is the best offer we have ever made, as the Daily World is one of the spiciest papers published on the continent.

The Advance and Weekly Empire until Jan. 1st, 1889, for $1.65. The Empire is the new Conservative paper about to be published in Toronto, with D. Creighton, Esq., M.P.P.—a popular and highly esteemed Co. Grey journalist—as manager. The first number will be issued next week and now is the time to hand in your subscriptions.

The Advance and Weekly Hamilton Spectator until Jan. 1st, 1889, for $1.65. The Spectator is a splendid paper in every respect.

The Advance and Grip until Jan. 1st, 1889, for $2.60.

The most beautiful stock of Silverware ever seen in this country is to be seen at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Mr. W. E. Carter, Advertising Agent for the Toronto News, says—I was induced to try Nasal Balm for a severe and troublesome cold in the head. Once using it literally washed out the clogged secretions, and left my head clear as a bell.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GRIP

CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.

J. W. BENGOUGH, Artist and Editor.

$2 a Year; $1 for 6 Months.

GRIP is increasing in popularity every year. It is a supreme household favorite, while every Professional and Business man finds every issue. Subscribe now!

See our Premium and Clubbing List. Circulars giving full particulars sent on application.

Look out for Grip's Comic Almanac for 1888. Price 10 cents.

Address,

GRIP PUBLISHING CO.

TORONTO, ONT.

FOUND.

On Flesherton Show Fair Day a Pocket Book containing a sum of Money. Owner can have same by proving property and paying for this advertisement. Apply at this Office.

WANTED!

A quantity of White Ash for Butter Tubs for which CASH will be paid on delivery. JOS. MCCORMICK, Flesherton.

STRAY STEER.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 3, Con. 13, Osprey, about 1st of October one red and white yearling Steer. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

WM. PAUL,
Lake Bank P.O.

Nov. 24th, 1887.

THE NEW PAPER.

THE new Conservative Journal about to be started in Toronto, to be called

The Empire,

Will make its appearance on or about the 15th of December. No pains are being spared to make the paper worthy of Canada, and of the great party of whose views it will be the exponent. It will start with a

Staff of Brilliant Writers,

And able Journalists in every department. The public may expect

Full News from all quarters.
Able Editorials.
Accurate Reports.
Fair Comments.
Reliable Commercial News.
Interesting Sporting Intelligence.

And all other Departments well sustained. In short, The Empire will be a Bright, Readable, and Reliable Paper.

Everybody Looks for it. All should Read it.

DAILY EMPIRE, $5 per Annum. | WEEKLY EMPIRE, $1 per Annum.

Send in your Subscriptions now, accompanied by the cash, so as to commence with the first issue. Address,

D. CREIGHTON,
Manager Empire, Toronto.

The Advance and Weekly Empire Till Jan., 1889, for $1.65!

New Div. Courts!

County of Grey.

NOTICE is hereby given that a meeting will be held at 2 of the Clock p.m. on Friday, the Ninth day of December, 1887, at Judges Chambers in Parkers Block, Poulett Street, Owen Sound, to take into consideration the formation of two new Division Courts in the County of Grey, one of which it is proposed to form of the West parts of the Townships of Bentinck and Normanby, and the other of parts of the Townships of Holland, Euphrasia, Artemesia, and Glenelg, in the said County.

Of which all persons interested are required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly. By Order of His Honor.

COUNTY JUDGE MACPHERSON.
WM. ARMSTRONG,
Clerk of the Peace, County of Grey.

Dated at Owen Sound, the 8th Nov., 1887.

334-7.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., Ont.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, Mitchell's Hotel, 1 and 30 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 261 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vickers' Block, Poulett St., Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday of each week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

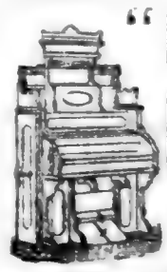
John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B.R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Appraiser for C.L.C. Co. and F.P.B. & S. Society. Money to Loan at the most reasonable terms. Insurance effected in LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &c.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c. prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend on mortgage.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NOTICE.
GRAY CHAMPION!
A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. Terms, $4 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $5.
Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVELL.



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

The Old Woman of Peterhead.

BY DAINTY DAVIE.

There was an old woman of Peterhead,
Who blundered in almost all she said;
In talk at morn and talk at night
She used long words with great delight,
But seldom could get her syllables right,
That woman of Peterhead.

When notes on the stars were being read
This quaint old woman would shake her head,
And say, "No gas-tro-nomy for me,
I never could bear those commas to see,
And I don't believe there ought to be Such ferments overhead."

When told a King or Queen was dead,
This quaint old woman of Peterhead
Would sigh, and say with plaintive air,
"A sovereign gone I do declare,
I fear that gold is growing rare
Down here in Peterhead."

When her hens and ducklings must be fed,
This quaint old woman of Peterhead
Would cry as she thinly spread the wheat—
"Now, don't voraciously grab your meat,
And mind you castigate what you eat,
Or else you'll soon be dead."

When her boys declined their meat or bread,
She would say, "Now, don't vibrate your head,
But speak out clearly what you mean;
Boys should be heard and not be seen,
And should keep their physiology clean,
So my preceptor said."

She cried, ere mingling with the dead,
That quaint old woman of Peterhead,
"I'm stepping off life's mortal stage,
I'm writing 'finis' on the page;
Don't let my death your grief assuage,
Nor fill your hearts with dread."

The earth no longer feels her tread,
That quaint old woman of Peterhead;
But from her life there comes to hand
A lesson all may understand—
Don't favor words too big and grand;
Be clear in all tha 's said.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"Hush! they are going in; we must wait a moment. Crystal is crying, and that kind creature is comforting her. We did not mean to listen, Raby; but it was not safe to move away from the trees."

"You heard what she said, Margaret—her ideal. Heaven bless her sweet innocence; she is as much a child as ever. Do I look like any woman's ideal now Margaret. I always think of those lines in Aurora Leigh, when I imagine myself

> A mere bare blind stone in the blaze of day,
> A man, upon the outside of the earth,
> As dark as ten feet under, in the grave—
> Why that seemed hard.

And yet, she really said it; her ideal. Ah, well! A woman's pity sometimes makes her mad. What do you say, Maggie?"

"That you are, that you ever have been, Crystal's ideal." And after that they walked back in silence.

"You and I will go again to-morrow morning," Raby said to her as they parted for the night; and Margaret assented.

Raby had a wakeful night, and slept a little heavily towards morning.

Margaret had already finished her breakfast when he entered the long dining room, and one of the black waiters guided him to his place. Raby wondered that she did not join him as usual to read his letters to him, and make plans for their visit; but a few minutes later she joined him in walking dress, and sat down beside him.

"Have you finished your breakfast, Raby?" and as he answered in the affirmative, she continued, with a little thrill of excitement in her sweet voice—"Miss Campion has gone down to the springs—I saw her pass alone. Crystal is writing letters in the parlor—I saw her. Shall we come, my dear brother."

Need she have put the question. Even Charles, the head waiter, looked at Mr. Ferrers as he walked down the long room with his head erect. A grand-looking Englishman, he thought, and who would have imagined he was blind. Margaret could hardly keep up with the long strides that brought them so quickly to the corner house; at the gate she checked him gently.

"We must be quiet, Raby—very quiet—or she will hear our footsteps. She is sitting with her back to the parlor door—I can see her plainly. Tread on this grassy border." And as Raby followed her directions implicitly, restraining his impatience with difficulty, they were soon standing in the porch. The door stood open for coolness, and the little square hall, with its Indian matting and rocking-chairs, looked very inviting. Margaret whispered that the parlor door was open too, and that they must not startle her too much; and then, still guiding him, she led him into the parlor and quietly called Crystal.

"We are here, dear Crystal." And as Crystal turned her head and saw Margaret's sweet, loving face, and Raby standing a little behind her, she sprung from her chair with a half-stifled scream. But before she could speak, or Margaret either, Raby was beside her; and in another moment his arms were round her, and his sightless face bent over her. "Hush, darling, I have you safely now; I will never let you go again," Margaret heard him say as she left the room, quietly closing the door behind her. Her turn would come presently, she said to herself; but now she must leave them together.

CHAPTER XXXV.

RABY'S WIFE.

> Yet, in one respect,
> Just one, beloved, I am in no wise changed;
> I love you, loved you, loved you first and last,
> And love you on for ever, now I know
> I loved you always.
>
> E. B. Browning.

Crystal never moved as she heard the sound of the closing door. Only once she tried to cower away from him, but he would not release his hold; and as his strength and purpose made themselves felt, she stood there dumb and cold, until, suddenly overcome by his tenderness, she laid her head on his breast with a sob that seemed to shake her girlish frame.

"Raby, Raby! oh, I cannot bear this." Then in a tone of anguish, "I do not deserve it."

"No," he said, calmly, and tried to soothe her with grave kisses; "you have been a faithless child, and deserve to be punished. How do you propose to make amends for all the sorrow you have caused me?"

"Oh, if I could only die," she answered bitterly; "if my death could only do you good. Raby, the trouble of it has nearly killed me; you must not, you must not speak so kindly to me."

"Must I not, my darling; how does a man generally speak to his future wife?" and as she trembled and shrank from him, he went on in the same quiet voice, "if you are so ready to die for me, you will not surely refuse to live for me. Do you think you owe me nothing for all these years of desertion, Crystal; was there any reason that, because of that unhappy accident—a momentary childish passion—you should break my heart by your desertion?"

"I could not stay," she answered, weeping bitterly; "I could not stay to see the ruin I had made. Oh, Raby, let me go, do not forgive me; I have been your curse, and Margaret's too!"

"Then come back and be our blessing; come back in your beauty and youth to be eyes to the blind man, and to be his darling and delight. Crystal, I am wiser now—I shall make no more mistakes; indeed, I always loved you, dear; poor Mona was no more to me than any other woman."

"You loved me, Raby?"

"Yes, most truly and deeply; but you were so young, my sweet; and I did not think it right to fetter your inexperienced youth—you were so unconscious of your own rare beauty; you had seen so few men. 'Let her go out into the world,' I said, 'and test her power and influence. I will not ask her to be my wife yet.' How could I know that you would never change, Crystal—that your heart was really mine."

"It has always been yours," she murmured; but, alas! those sweet blushes were lost on her blind lover.

"Yes, I know it now; Margaret has helped me to understand things. I know now, you poor child, that you looked upon Mona as your rival; that you thought I was false to you; that in my ignorance I made you endure tortures. It is I who ought to ask your pardon, love, for all I made you suffer."

"No, no."

"We must both be wiser for the future. Now put your hand in mine, Crystal, and tell me that you are content to take the blind man for your husband, that the thought of a long life beside him does not frighten you; that you really love me well enough to be my wife;" and, as he turned his sightless face towards her, Crystal raised herself and kissed his blind eyes softly.

"'She loved much,'" she whispered, "'because much had been forgiven her.' Oh, how true that is; I deserve only to be hated and you follow me across the world to ask me to be your wife. Your love has conquered, Raby; from this day your will shall be mine."

* * * * *

Miss Campion had passed a long morning at the springs, wandering about the grounds with an American friend. Crystal would have finished her letter to Fern Trafford long ago, she thought, as she walked quickly down the hot road, and would be waiting for luncheon. She was not a little surprised then when, on reaching the cottage, she heard the sound of voices, and found herself confronting a very tall man in clerical dress, whose head seemed almost to touch the low ceiling, while a sweet-looking woman, in a long grey cloak and Quakerish bonnet, was standing holding Crystal's hand.

"Dear Miss Campion," exclaimed Crystal, with a vivid blush that seemed to give her new beauty, "some English friends of mine have just arrived. Mr. Ferrers and his sister." But Raby's deep voice interrupted her.

"Crystal is not introducing us properly; she does not mention the fact that she is engaged to me, and that my sister is her cousin; so it is necessary for me to explain matters."

"Is this true, child?" asked Miss Campion in a startled voice; and, as though Crystal's face were a sufficient answer, she continued archly, "do you mean that this is 'he,' Crystal—the ideal we were talking about last night in the moonlight."

"Oh, hush!" returned Crystal, much confused at this, for she knew by this time that there had been silent auditors to that girlish outburst. But Raby's hand pressed hers meaningly.

"I am afraid that I must plead guilty to being that 'he,' Miss Campion. I believe, if the truth must be told, that Crystal has been engaged to me from a child. I know she was only nine years old when she made me an offer—at least she informed me in the presence of my father and sister that she meant to belong to me."

"Oh, Margaret, do ask him to be quiet," whispered Crystal; but her glowing, happy face showed no displeasure. Something like tears glistened in Miss Campion's shrewd eyes as she kissed her and shook hands with Mr. Ferrers.

"It is not often the ideal turns up at the right moment," she said, bluntly; "but I am very glad you have come to make Crystal look like other girls. Now, Mr. Ferrers, as only lovers can feed on air, I propose that we go in search of luncheon, for the gong has sounded long ago;" and as even Raby allowed that this was sensible advice, they all adjourned to the boarding-house.

The occupants of the piazza were sorely puzzled that evening and Miss Bellagrove was a trifle cross. Captain Maudsley had been raving about the beauty of the wonderful brunette who was sitting opposite to him at dinner. "She must be an Italian," he said to Miss Bellagrove, who received his confidence somewhat sulkily; "one never sees those wonderful eyes and that tint of hair out of Italy or Spain. Tanqueville, who is an artist, is wild about her, because he says he has never seen a face with a purer oval. He wants to paint her for his Rebecca at the Well. It is rather hard lines she should be engaged to a blind clergyman," finished Captain Maudsley, rather incautiously. Miss Bellagrove's fair face wore an uneasy expression. "How do you know they are engaged?" she said, impatiently; "I do not believe they are. Miss Ferrers does not wear any ring."

"Nevertheless, I should not mind betting a few dozens of gloves that they are," replied Captain Maudsley, with a keen, mischievous glance that rather disconcerted Miss Bellagrove. He was quite aware that he was teasing the poor little girl; but then she deserved punishment for flirting with that ass Rodgers all last evening. Jack Maudsley was honestly in love with the fair-haired beauty, but he had plenty of pluck and spirit, and would not be fooled if he could help it. Perhaps Miss Bellagrove, in common with the rest of her sex, liked a lover to be a little masterful. It was certain that she was on her best behavior during the rest of the evening, and snubbed Mr. Rogers most decidedly when he invited her to take a turn in the shrubberies.

Crystal attracted a great deal of notice in the boarding-house, but she gave no one any opportunity of addressing her. Raby was always beside her, and she seemed completely engrossed with his attentions. As Miss Campion observed to Margaret, she might as well look for another companion for all the good Crystal was to her.

But one evening Margaret found Crystal sitting alone in a corner of the large drawing-room. Most of the company had gone into the tea-room, but one or two, Raby among them were lingering in the garden. Raby was talking rather earnestly to Miss Campion.

"Alone, Crystal!" sitting down beside her with a smile. "Do you mean that Raby has actually left you." But Crystal's face wore no answering smile—she looked a little disturbed.

"I asked him to go and let me think it over. I cannot make up my mind, Margaret. Raby wants me to marry him at once, before we go back to England; he will have it that it will be better for me to go back to the Grange as his wife."

"Yes, darling, I know Raby wishes this, and I hope you mean to consent."

"I—I do not know what to say—the idea somehow frightens me. It is all so quick and sudden—next week; will not people think it strange. A quiet little wedding in Sandycliffe church seems to me so much nicer. But Raby seems to dread the waiting so, Margaret," and here her eyes filled with tears. "I think he does not trust me—that he is afraid I may leave him again; and the idea pains me."

"No, dearest," returned Margaret, soothingly; "I am sure such a thought never entered Raby's head; but he has suffered so, and I think all the trouble, and his blindness have made him nervous; he was saying so last night, and accusing himself of selfishness, but he owned that he could not control a nervous dread that something might happen to separate you both, Crystal," looking at her wistfully. "Is the idea of an imediate marriage so repugnant; if not, I wish you would give way in this."

Crystal looked up, startled by her earnestness, and then she said with sweet humility, "It is only that I feel so unworthy of all this happiness; but if you and Raby think it best, I will be guided by you. Will you tell him so? but no, there he is alone; I will go to him myself."

Raby heard her coming, and held out his hand with a smile.

"You see I never mistake your footsteps," he said, in the tone he kept for her ear; "I should distinguish them in a crowd. Well, darling?" waiting for the word he knew would follow.

"Margaret has been talking to me, and I see she approves—it shall be next week if you wish it, Raby; that is, if Miss Campion can spare me."

"She will gladly do so, especially as Margaret has offered to keep her company for a fortnight; after that we will all go back on the same steamer. Thanks, my darling, for consenting; you have made me very happy. I knew you would not refuse," lifting the little hand to his lips.

"I feel as though I have no power to refuse you anything," was her loving answer; "but I know it is all your thought for me, Raby," pressing closer to him in the empty dusk, for there were no curious eyes upon them—only night-moths wheeling round them. "Are you never afraid of what you are doing; do you not fear that I may disappoint you?"

"No," he answered, calmly, "I fear nothing."

"Not my unhappy temper?" she whispered and he could feel the slight figure trembling as she put the question.

"No," in the same quiet tones that always soothed her agitation, "for I believe the evil spirit is exorcised by much prayer and fasting; and, darling, even if it should not be so, I should not be afraid then, for I know better how to deal with it and you; no angry spirit could live in my arms, and I would exorcise it thus"—touching her lips. "No, have faith in me, as I have faith in you, and all will be well." And so he comforted her.

There was a great sensation in the boarding-house at W—— when news of the approaching wedding was made known. Captain Maudsley triumphed over Miss Bellagrove. "I told you the Italian beauty was engaged to the blind Englishman," he said to her; "but after all she is only half an Italian—her mother was a Florentine, and her father was English. Fergusson told me all about it—he is to marry them; and old Dr. Egan is to give her away. There is some romantic story belonging to them. I think he has been in love with her from a child. Well, Heaven gives nuts to those who have no teeth," grumbled the young officer, thinking of the bridegroom's blindness.

Crystal remained very quietly in the corner house during the rest of the week. Raby spent most of his time with her. On the eve of her wedding she wrote a little note to Fern, telling of her intended marriage.

"I am very happy," she wrote; "but there are some kinds of happiness too deep for utterance. When I think of the new life that awaits me to-morrow, an overwhelming sense of unworthiness seems to crush me to the ground; to think that I shall be Raby's wife—that I shall be permitted to dedicate my whole life to his dear service. I have told you a little about him, but you will never know what he is really; I sometimes pray that my love may not be idolatry. When he brings me to the Grange—that dear home of my childhood, you must come to me, and your mother also. Raby says he loves you both for your goodness to me; he has promised that you shall be our first guests.

"Do you know our dear Margaret will not be long with us? She intends to join a community in the East End of London, and to devote herself for the remainder of her life to the service of the poor. I could not help crying a little when she told me this; but she only smiled and said that she was not unhappy. And yet she loved Hugh Redmond. I talked to Raby afterwards, and he comforted me a little. He said that though Hugh loved her with the whole strength of his nature, that he could never really have satisfied a woman like Margaret—that in time she must have found out that he was no true mate for her. 'A woman should never be superior to her husband,' he said. 'Margaret's grand intellect and powers of influence would have been wasted if she had become Hugh Redmond's wife. Oh, yes, he would have been good to her—probably he would have worshipped her; but one side of her nature would have been a mystery to him. You must not grieve for her, my child, for she has ceased to grieve for herself; the Divine Providence has withheld from her a woman's natural joys of wifehood and maternity, but a noble work is to be given to her; our Margaret, please God, will be a mother in Israel.' And, indeed, I feel Raby is right, and that Margaret is one of God's dear saints."

It was on a golden September day that Crystal became Raby Ferrers' wife; the company that had grouped themselves in the long drawing-room of the boarding-house owned that they had never seen a grander bride.

The creamy Indian silk fell in graceful folds on the tall supple figure; the beautiful head, with its coils of dark glossy hair, was bent in girlish timidity. Margaret had clasped round her white throat the pearl necklace and diamond cross that had belonged to her mother, and which she was to have worn at her own bridal. "I shall not need it; it is for Raby's wife," she said, as Crystal protested with tears in her eyes; "it must be your only ornament. Oh, if Raby could only see how lovely you look."

But the calm tranquil content on the sightless face silenced even this wish. Crystal ceased to tremble when the deep vibrating voice, vowing to love and cherish her to her life's end, sounded in her ears; but Raby felt the coldness of the hand he held.

When they had received the congratulations of their friends, and Margaret had tenderly embraced her new sister, and they were left alone for a little, Raby drew his young bride closer to him.

"You are not afraid now, my darling?"

"No," she answered, unsteadily; "but it is all so like a dream. A fortnight ago—only a fortnight—I was the most desolate creature in God's earth; and now——"

"And now," echoing her words with a kiss, "you are my wife. Ah, do you remember your childish speech—it used to ring in my ears; 'I am going to belong to Raby all my life long; I will never leave him, never.' Well it has come true, love; you are mine now."

"Yes," she whispered, leaning her forehead against him, "you will never be able to get rid of me; and oh,"—her voice trembling—"the rest of knowing that it will never be my duty to leave you."

He laughed at that, but something glistened in his eyes too. "No, my wild bird; no more flights for you—I have you safely now; you are bound to me by this"—touching the little circlet of gold upon the slender finger. "Now, my darling—my wife of an hour, I want you to make me a promise; I ask it of your love, Crystal. If a shadow—even the very faintest shadow, cross your spirit; if one accusing thought seems to stand between your soul and mine; one doubt or fear that, like the cloud no bigger than a man's hand, might rise and spread into the blackness of tempest, will you come and tell it to me?"

"Oh, Raby, do not ask me."

"But I do ask it, love, and I ask it in my two-fold character of priest and husband, and it is the first request your husband makes you. Come, do not hesitate. You have given me yourself; now, with sweet generosity, promise me this, that you will share with me every doubt and fear that disturbs you."

"Will you not let me try to conquer the feeling alone first, and then come to you?"

"No, I would not undertake the responsibility; I know you to well, darling. Come, I thought you promised something that sounded like obedience just now."

"Ah, you are laughing at me. But this is no light matter, Raby; it means that I am to burthen you with all my foolish doubts and fancies—that I am never to keep my wrong feelings to myself."

"Promise!" was his only answer, in a very persuasive voice.

"Yes, I will promise," hiding her face on his shoulder; "but it will be your own fault if I am ever a trouble to you. Oh, Raby, may I always tell you everything; will you help me to be good, and to fight against myself?"

"We will help each other," he answered, stroking her soft hair; "there shall never be a shadow on the one that the other will not share—half the shadow and half the sunshine; and always the Divine goodness over us. That shall be our married life, Crystal."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

SIR HUGH'S REPENTANCE.

> And by comparison I see
> The majesty of matron grace,
> And learn how pure, how fair can be
> My own wife's face;
>
> Pure with all faithful passion, fair
> With tender smiles that come and go,
> And comforting as April air
> After the snow.
>
> Jean Ingelow.

Sir Hugh began to wish that he had never gone to Egypt, or that he had gone with any one but Fitzclarence—he was growing weary of his vagaries and unpunctuality. They had deviated already four times from the proposed route, and the consequence was, he had missed all his letters; and the absence of home news was making him seriously uneasy. He was the only married man; the rest of the party consisted of gay, young bachelors—good enough fellows in their way, but utterly careless. They laughed at Sir Hugh's anxious scruples, and secretly voted that a married man was rather a bore in this kind of thing. What was the use of bothering about letters, they said, so long as the remittances came to hand safely?

Sir Hugh thought of Fay's loving little letters lying neglected at the different postal towns, and sighed; either he was not so indifferent to her as he supposed himself to be, or absence was making his heart tender; but he had never been so full of care and thought for his Wee Wife as he was then. He wished he had bidden her good-bye. He remembered the last time he had seen her, when he had gone into his study with the telegram in his hand; and then recalled the strange wistful look she had given him. He could not tell why the fancy should haunt him, but he wished so much that he had seen her again and taken a kinder leave of her. It had not been his fault, he told himself a hundred times over; but still one never knew what might happen. He wished now that he had taken her in his arms and had said God bless her; she was such a child, and he was leaving her for a long time.

Sir Hugh was becoming a wiser man, and was beginning to acknowledge his faults, and, what was better still, to try and make amends for them.

It was too late to undo the effects of Fitzclarence's reckless mode of travelling, but he would do all he could; so in his leisure moments, when the other men were smoking and chatting in their tent, he sat down in a quiet corner and wrote several letters, full of descriptions of their journey, to amuse Fay in her solitude; and one Sunday, when the others had started on an expedition to see some ruin, he wrote the explanation that he had deferred so long. Hugh was an honest, well-meaning man, in spite of his moral weakness; if that letter had only reached the young wife's eyes it would have healed her sore heart and kept her beside him.

For he told her everything; and he told it in such a frank, manly way, that no woman could have lost confidence in him, though she read what Fay was to have read in the first few lines—that he had not married her for love. Hugh owned his unhappy passion for Margaret, and pleaded his great trouble as the excuse for his restlessness. He had gone away, he said, that he might fight a battle with himself, and return home a better man; it would all be different when he came back, for he meant to be a good husband to her, and to live for her and the boy, and to make her happy, and by and by he would be happy too. And he ended his letter as he never ended one yet, by assuring her that he was her loving husband. But, alas, when that tardy explanation reached the cottage at Daintree, Aunt Griselda only wrung her thin white hands and cried, for no one knew what had become of Fay, and Erle was rushing about and sending telegrams in all directions, and Fay, with the shadow always on her sweet face, was sitting in the orchard of the Manse, under the shade of the mossy old apple-trees, and baby Hugh lay on her lap, gurgling to the birds and the white clouds that sailed over their heads. When Sir Hugh had written that letter, he felt as though a very heavy weight were off his mind, and he began to enjoy himself. Not for long, however, for presently they reached Cairo, and there he found a budget awaiting him. Every one seemed to have written to him but Fay; and when he saw that, he began to tear open the letters rather wildly, for he feared she must be ill. But by and by he came to her letter.

He read Erle Huntingdon's first—an indignant letter, evidently written under strong excitement—"Why had he not come home when they had sent for him? He must know that their search had been useless; they had no news of either Fay or the child. Miss Mordaunt was very ill with worry, and her old servant was much alarmed about her. They had written to him over and over again, and directed their letters to every possible place he could not have missed. If he had any affection for his wife and child, and cared to know what had become of them, he had better leave Fitzclarence and the other fellows and return at once," and so on.

Hugh dropped the letter—he was pale to the lips with apprehension—and turned to the others.

They were from Miss Mordaunt, and Mrs Heron, and Ellerton, and the lawyer, but they only reiterated the same thing—that all efforts had been in vain, and that they could hear nothing of either Lady Redmond or the boy; and then they urged him to come home at once. Lastly directed by Mrs. Heron, as though by an afterthought, was the letter Fay had left him upon the study table; but, in reality, it had been forwarded before the alarm had been given, for the seal was still unbroken. Mrs. Heron, on learning from the messenger that Sir Hugh had started for Egypt, had redirected it, and it had only just been posted when the distracted nurse made her appearance at the Hall and told her story. When Hugh read that poor little letter, his first feeling was intense anger—all his Redmond blood was at fever heat. She had sinned beyond all mercy; she had compromised his name and his reputation, and he would never forgive her.

He had confided his honor to a child, and she had played with it and cast it aside; she had dared to leave him and her home, and with his child, too, and to bring the voice of scandal about them; she—Lady Redmond, his wife—wandering like a vagabond at the world's mercy! His feelings were intolerable. He must get back to England; he must find her and hush it up, or his life would be worth nothing to him. Ah, it was well for Fay that she was safely hidden in the old Manse, for, if he had found her while this mood was on him, his anger would have killed her.

When his passion had cooled a little, he went to Fitzclarence, and told him rather abruptly that he must return home at once—affairs of the utmost importance recalled him.

Fitzclarence thought he looked very strange, but something in his manner forebade all questioning. Two hours afterwards he was on his way to England.

There is an old proverb, often lightly quoted, and yet full of a wise and solemn meaning, "L'homme propose, Dieu dispose." Poor, angry Hugh, travelling night and day, and cursing the tardy railways and steamers, was soon to test the truth of the saying.

He had reached Marseilles, and was hurrying to the post-office to telegraph some order to Mrs. Heron, when he suddenly missed his footing, and found himself at the bottom of a steep, dark cellar, with his leg doubled up under him; and when two passers-by who saw the accident tried to move him, they discovered that his leg was broken; and when he heard that he fainted.

And so fate, or rather Providence, took the reins from the weak, passionate hands that were so unfit to hold them, and threw him back, helpless and baffled on his bed of pain; there to learn, week by week, through weary sickness and still more weary convalescence, the lesson that only suffering could teach him—that it were well to forgive others their sins, even as he hoped his might be forgiven.

(To be continued.)

—The English language sounds funny to a foreigner. "I will come by by-and-by and buy," said a Canadian, and the shopkeeper had an attack of brain fever trying to make out what he meant.

CURRENT TOPICS.

FRENCH statistics of 1886, which have just been published, are, to use the words of a contemporary religious journal, "truly alarming." Year by year the number of births goes on decreasing, while the death rate increases. In 1886 there were 74,532 illegitimate births, as against 70,079 in 1881. The total increase of population was in 1886 52,560, in 1885 it was 85,464, and in 1881 it was 108,229.

PROFESSOR MAX MULLER has been requested by His Highness the Maharajah of Vizianagram to publish a new edition of the sacred book of the Brahmans, the Rig Veda, with the commentary of Sayanacharya. The Maharajah will bear the whole expense, and the book is to be printed at Oxford University press. The first edition has been out of print for some time. It consisted of six quarto volumes.

MR. EDISON has completed his phonograph, and unless he talks at random it is the most marvellous of his inventions. The phonograph will be about the size of a typewriter and will work automatically by a small electric motor, which is noiseless, and stops at the touch of a spring. These wonderful instruments can be manufactured so that they may be sold for $60, and 500 will be on the market within two months.

A SINGULAR petition has been addressed by a group of Vienna citizens to the municipal council. They propose that in order to procure permanent relief for pauper school children there should be a tax on bachelors. This tax would only be applied to unmarried men in a position to keep a family. The petition says: "If all those who are exempted from military service on account of physical infirmity are obliged to pay a tax why should those be spared who voluntarily shirk other obligations to the State?"

LADY vocalists and others will be glad to know that tea, coffee and cocoa are three admissible drinks, but none in excess. For the voice cocoa is the most beneficial. Those cocoas are best that have been deprived of their oil. A cup of thin cocoa, just warm, is more to be recommended between the exertions of singing than any alcoholic beverage. Tea must not be taken too strong. It has a bad influence upon the mucous membrane. There is always a dry sensation after taking a cup of tea that has been allowed to stand too long. A vocalist had better do without sugar in tea and only take milk with it.

OTTAWA Free Press: When the Liberals redeemed Ottawa County by an overwhelming majority a few weeks ago the Tory organs grew very philosophical over the result. One of them sagely remarked: "What is an election lost or won; merely a drop of water in the vast ocean of human events." But judging from the way they are yelling over Dr. Montague's majority of sixteen votes in Haldimand the subsidized organs have abandoned the philosophy of a few weeks ago. Still they should keep it in stock as they will want again before long."

DR. MORELL MACKENZIE has a high opinion of Unser Fritz's courage. He personally broke the news to the unfortunate Prince that his throat trouble was the result of malignant cancer. "It was received with the most perfect calmness," says Mackenzie. "The Prince, after an instant of silence, put up his hand with his usual winning smile and, grasping mine, said: 'I have been lately fearing something of this sort. I thank you, Sir Morell, for being so frank with me.' At dinner that evening he was the most cheerful of the party. In all my long experience I have never seen a man bear himself under similar circumstances with such unaffected heroism.

SIR WILLIAM MACARTHUR, who died last week in a carriage of the London Underground Railway, was once a business partner of William Wilkinson, formerly a well-known merchant in Troy, N. Y., and now a resident of California. MacArthur and Wilkinson were in the linen business at Belfast, Ireland. When they dissolved partnership Wilkinson came to the States and MacArthur went to London. The latter had great success, became many times a millionaire, was made Lord Mayor of London and finally created a baron by Queen Victoria. He belonged to the same family in the north of Ireland from which the late President Arthur was descended, and he was a prominent member of the Methodist Church.

THERE are wonderful phosphate beds in the neighborhood of Charleston, S.C. It has occurred to an ingenious advertiser of this desirable natural wealth that such prodigious deposits of fertilizing material indicate conclusively that Charleston and its vicinity are the original site of the Garden of Eden, out of the ground of which the Lord made to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food. In further verification of this new geographical theory is the fact that the bones of the behemoth, and of all the other extinct saurians and lesser pachyderms which Adam found names for, can be dug from the Charleston alluvium, where they have lain since the floods covered them. Those who are not convinced by the phosphates are respectfully asked to account for the bones.

THE compartment car continues to develop undesirable possibilities for the traveller to offset the luxury of "privacy" for which Europeans still cling to it. Thus, recently, a wealthy traveller on a Russian railway formed the acquaintance of a lady with whom he chanced to be journeying alone in a first-class compartment. He became very favorably impressed with his companion and finally accepted a cigarette which she offered, the fair traveller also lighting one herself, according to a common custom with Russian ladies. Soon after commencing his smoke the traveller fell into a deep slumber, and when he was aroused his charming fellow-traveller had disappeared, as had also his pocket-book containing $2,500. Now if this wealthy Russian gentleman had been travelling in a Pullman car in this country the porter would never have been mean enough to make him pay as much as that.

Modern readers have become familiar with three great revolutions—the English revolution, the American revolution and the French revolution. Next year it will be two hundred years since James the Second was compelled to flee for refuge to a foreign land, abandoning the throne of his ancestors, and since William of Orange and his Queen mounted the vacant throne. It is called "the glorious revolution of 1688." It has been glorified by many writers, but chiefly by Sir James Mackintosh and by Lord Macaulay. It is called the Protestant Revolution, because it established and confirmed the Protestant succession. Arrangements have been made by the Protestant Alliance of Great Britain to suitably celebrate the event. The bicentenary of the Revolution happens to be the tercentenary of the defeat of the Spanish Armada. An effort will be made to make 1888 a jubilant year throughout Great Britain.

PH. DELAHAYE, in the Revue Industrielle, describes some experiments recently made in Germany, on the action of cold on hydraulic cements. The stones used were 2¾-inch cubes. Some of the stones were joined with the cement mixed with pure water, others with cement mixed with water which contained two per cent. of salt, and others again with cement mixed with water containing eight per cent. of salt. While the cement was still fresh the stones were placed out of doors, and left exposed twenty-one days in a cold of 20° to 32° Fah., after which the stones were kept in a warm room for a period of seven days. At the end of this time it was found that the cement mixed with pure water was completely disintegrated and had no holding power. The cement containing two per cent. of salt was in a better condition, but not good. Whereas the cement the water of which had had eight per cent. of salt had not suffered in the least.

RECENT telegrams from Russia show that the Government of that country is still pursuing the policy of arbitrary and despotic repression which is described by Mr. Kennan in a paper entitled "The Last Appeal of the Russian Liberals" in the November "Century." A number of young army and navy officers in St. Petersburg have just been sentenced to penal servitude in the Siberian mines for merely setting forth in the course of a debate the advantages which another governmental system would have over the present one. There is said to be much excitement and indignation among the friends of the young officers in military circles, and the circumstance furnishes another illustration of the way in which the Russian Government, by punishing with excessive severity natural and peaceful discussion, excites and keeps alive the revolutionary spirit. As the Liberals of Moscow say in the interesting appeal to the Tsar, quoted in Mr. Kennan's article, "The principal reason for the morbid form which the contest with the Government has taken is the absence in Russia of any opportunity for the free development of public opinion and the free exercise of public activity."

IT may not be generally known, writes the Edinburgh correspondent of the Scottish American, how many of the best and most successful literati of the day hail from "the richt side o' the Border." Perhaps foremost amongst them stand R. Louis Stevenson, William Black and W. S. Gilbert, of operatic fame. The first-mentioned, who is certainly the most original writer alive, was born in Edinburgh, his father having been the head of the celebrated Stevenson firm of lighthouse engineers. Mr. Stevenson, who is as capable at poetry as at prose, as his recent volume "Underwoods" show, is at present in the United States. Andrew Lang is also a Scotsman and a graduate of St. Andrew's. Then there are George Macdonald and Mrs. and Lawrence Oliphant, the latter of whom spends most of his time on Mount Carmel, where he has built a residence. It is, of course, unnecessary to mention that Archibald Forbes, the prince of war correspondents, belongs to Auld Scotia; and quite as unnecessary to give the same news regarding Robt. Buchanan, the novelist, poet and playwright, and Charles Gibbon. Grant Allen, the scientist and novelist, though born in Canada, is of good Scotch stock. David Christie Murray, another rising man who is a native of Scotland, was for a time war correspondent to the Scotsman, but has now settled down to fiction. Last of all may be mentioned Wm. Sharp, a Paisley man, who is making his mark as a poet, biographer and art-critic, and who, notwithstanding that he is one of the busiest literary men in London, has lately taken to novel writing.

English Car Heaters.

A returned tourist said last evening: "So Charles Dickens doesn't like the way we heat our railway cars. We really must adopt the English way. And what is that? Why, a rather large flattened tomato-can is filled with hot water and put on the floor of the carriage and you're supposed to keep warm on it. The only way to get any warmth out of it at all is to hold it on your lap and then your back freezes. One of these hot-water cans is expected to keep you warm for twelve hours. It gets stone cold within two, and ice-cream may be kept from melting on it. If our English friends don't admire our way of heating cars let them go home."

Lord Fife's Idea of Temperance.

The Earl of Fife is not only the boon companion of the heir apparent, but is also a great favorite with Her Majesty. The father of the present Earl was a curious specimen of the kilted race. He was one day dining with the Queen, and attracted her attention and surprise by saying: "Your Majesty will be glad to hear that I have left off drinking soda and brandy." The Queen, smiling, said: "I am glad to hear it, Lord Fife." His Lordship thereupon made the further remark: "Your Majesty will also be pleased to learn that I have taken to soda and whiskey instead."—London Modern Society.

Bill Nye's Introduction.

Probably Mr. E. W. Nye will never forget the time he lectured in Indianapolis. That is the home of Riley, the humorist and poet, and it had been arranged that Riley was to introduce the lecturer. Well, Riley did introduce him. He made an introductory address of one hour and a half, during which time E. W. Nye sat and perspired and got ready to get up and cracked his fingers and smiled outside and cried inside. The only thing that E. W. Nye got a chance to deliver that night was his peroration.—Omaha World.

THE DEAD ANARCHIST'S SWEETHEART.

Nina Van Zandt's Father Tells What He Knows About Her Infatuation.

James K. Van Zandt, the father of the wretched Nina, tells a reporter of the Chicago Tribune that he is a hard working chemist, who has no sympathy with the visionary dreams of either Socialists or Anarchists. He became convinced that his daughter was in love with Spies with her mother's support and sanction. He knew that to oppose the girl's folly would drive her from his house, and he would thus lose entirely his influence over her. He argued with both mother and daughter until convinced that it did no good. Then he decided to do nothing, refusing to talk with newspaper men and trying to induce his wife and daughter to adopt the same course. He did, however, join to some extent in the effort to save Spies, not because he sympathized with him, but to avert an overwhelming grief from his daughter. But, as if the state of things in his household was not bad enough, the newspapers, he says, have persistently printed false reports about it. The girl is not contemplating suicide and is not starving herself to death. She is perfectly sane, and time and rest will cure her of the prostration under excitement and grief from which she suffers. A reporter recently got into the house under false pretences and worked upon the feelings of the women until they talked unreservedly, not dreaming that he was a newspaper man. Even what they did say he grossly exaggerated, representing the girl as crying for blood and vengeance. Her father says that both she and her mother were as much shocked as himself at seeing such sentiments attributed to her. On the contrary, it was her tenderness of heart that got her into all this trouble. He does not think that she really has any sympathy with the doctrines of the executed men, but she saw so much of Spies that under the excitement she has caught up their jargon and talks it in spite of herself.

Blessed Forgetfulness.

Do we ever pause to think as we hurry through our daily tasks—nearly all of us have some duties to perform each day—how, if we were to pass out of existence, some one else would take up our work, and in a very short time we would scarcely be missed, even by those who love us and whom we love? Some other hand would wind the skein, sometimes sadly tangled, which we have labored over so long. Some other voice would advise, chide and encourage. Some other feet would take the many steps, tread the path we have trod so long. Ah! 'tis a blessed thing to forget. A life all tears, all regret for the past, all sighs for the ones we have lost, would be a sad life indeed. 'Tis a soft touch of an angel's wing that soothes us—the angel of forgetfulness. Mother, our mother; she sleeps very soundly now in God's acre, very calmly, very peacefully; yet we can remember when she was all in all—leader, toiler, adviser, all in one. She passed away one day; what a great blank place there was in heart and home. But time wove his web of forgetfulness, so slowly, so gently, that the great black void filled imperceptibly, and we scarce missed the dear soul, who once was the motive power of our home. Ah, yes, the world goes on just the same. The new made grave, the bitter tears; healing time, smiles again. Yet those who sleep beneath the green sod, the dazzling snow, sleep no less soundly for our forgetfulness.

F. H. HOLLAND.

National Flowers.

I think I am correct in saying that the larger proportion of those blossoms selected as national or political symbols have been taken from the "hardy brigade." Of such are the rose, the thistle, shamrock and leek, the broom (planta-genista), the white iris of Florence, the fleur-de-lis of France, the lily alluded to by Chaucer. This last is supposed to have been the white or Madonna's lily, but in the north of Ireland the Orange lily is not unfrequently degraded on July 12th as a symbol of party feeling. The violet of the Napoleon dynasty is even yet worn in France, and at Fontainebleau the apartments of the ex-Empress Josephine are redolent with an exquisite ordor. In China and Japan the chrysanthemum has taken the place of honor as the national flower, but one of the latest and strongest of party badges is the "pale primrose" of Shakspeare, now the ensign of the "Primrose League," an order of Conservatives founded in honor of the late Lord Beaconsfield, who gave us the sweet picture of Lady Corisande's garden in "Lothair." This league now numbers four hundred thousand members.—F. W. BURBIDGE, in Harper's Weekly for December.

The Meaning of "Mugwump."

I find the word "mugwump" is not in Encyclopedia Britannica, but is in the American supplement, third volume, page 783. I send you an extract giving the derivation and use of the word:

"The word belongs to the Algonquin dialect of the Indian language of North America, and is used by John Elliot in his translation of the Bible (Cambridge, Mass., 1661) to translate the Hebrew word alluph, a leader. Elliot used it in a sense of 'big chief,' a term more comprehensive to the Indian mind than that which appears in the King James' version, 'duke.' The word was spelled 'mugquomp' in the singular, and 'mugquampoag' in the plural. It appears in many places throughout the Algonquin translation of the Old Testament, a notable place being in I. Chron. i, 51, 53; also Gen. xxxvi. 15, given herewith:

"'Young mugquampoag wunnaumonuh Esau; wunnaumonuh Eliphaz; montomegheunche Esau; Mugquomp Teman; Mugquomp Omar; Mugquomp Zepho; Mugquomp Kenaz.'

"'These were dukes of the sons of Esau; the sons of Eliphaz; the first born son of Esau; Duke Teman, Duke Oman, Duke Zepho, Duke Kenaz.'"—Fulton Republican.

Now You Know It All.

A bibliopegist is a bibliophile with a special regard for bookbindings. A bibliotaph is a book miser. A bibliophole is a bookseller for bibliophiles. A biblioklept is a stealer of valuable books. Mr. Lenox, who would not let Prescott see his Mexican manuscripts, was a bibliotaph, and Sam Pepys was a biblioklept. Bibliolatry is the worship of books.—Art Review.

IRISH WOOLLENS.

Enthusiastic Testimony to Their Merits.

Sincerely do I hope that the proposal to have an Irish section at the Glasgow exhibition will be carried out, says the editor of London Truth. What the Irish woollens want most—in fact, the only thing they want—is advertisement. If the English lower middle class—the people who have ten children, and expect each boy to wear his elder brother's knickerbockers in succession until nothing remains but the buttons and braces—knew the indestructible quality of the Blarney tweeds and friezes, there would be such a run on Blarney as would double the population of the place in a fortnight. Unfortunately, the Blarney people don't advertise in the way that many English manufacturers do. The Irish manufacturers deal only "with the trade," and they take no steps to bring the excellence of their wares home to the individual. They do not seem to have realized the immence opening which the parcel post has made for them. The excellence of their goods is only known in this country to tailors and haberdashers. We buy the Irish goods without knowing them to be Irish, wonder why they wear so well, but don't know what to ask for the next time we order a suit. I have—not, indeed, in my actual possession, but within reach and easily accessible, if wanted for exhibition or other (honest) purposes—a specimen of Irish woollen manufacture which was woven at the Marquis of Waterford's mills, Kilmacthomas, some time prior to the year 1877, in which year it was confectioned into a garment (the nature signifies not) in which, for a considerable time, I took, I trust, a modest, but very sensible pride. It then, some years ago, passed into the hands of a humble (but most respectable) friend, whose Sunday best it still continues to be. I see it constantly, and, although I should be exaggerating if I were to describe it as still smart, yet, so far as I can observe, there are no holes in it. Now, Kilmacthomas, though it does things pretty decently, can't hold a candle to Blarney in the matter of frizzes and tweeds. Why, then, don't the Blarney people wake up to a knowledge of their own excellence, and post an announcement thereof, with prices and specimens, direct to the British householder?

A Needle in Her Knee.

The Mount Forest Representative said in a recent issue: Miss Bertie Donnelly, eldest daughter of the C. P. R. agent of this town, who recently returned from Bowmanville, where she has held a position as telegraph operator for several months, has undergone a singular experience. She had been troubled for some time with a lame knee, which kept gradually getting more painful. The cause of her lameness could not be accounted for until a few days ago, when a needle came through the flesh at the knee joint. How the needle came to be in her leg is a mystery to herself and parent

Inventions of the 19th Century.

The steamboat, the reaper, the sewing machine
Cars running by night and by day,
Houses lighted by gas and heated by steam,
And bright electricity's ray.

The telegraph's click speeds like lightning released.
Then the telephone comes to excel it,
And, to put on the finish, the last but not the least
Is the famed little Purgative Pellet.

Last but not the least is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, because it relieves human suffering, adds to the sum of human comfort, and enables the relieved sufferer to enjoy all the blessings and luxuries of the age we live in.

A New York correspondent claims to have investigated and ascertained that all this talk about fashionable girls working in gymnasia, fencing, boxing and taking long walks is pure nonsense. She says that there are not forty women learning to fence in the city, and most of them are actresses; that the average woman's clothes won't let her walk, and as to boxing there is absolutely none of it done.

Yes, he loves you now, 'tis true,
Lass with eyes of violet blue,
Lips as sweet as honey-dew,
Bonny little bride!
Will he love you as to-day,
When your bloom has fled away,
When your golden locks are grey,—
Will his love abide?

Yes, if it is the true kind it will survive all the inevitable wastes and changes of life. But, it is every woman's desire and duty to retain, as long as she can, the attractions that made her charming and be loved in youth. No one can keep her youthful bloom or equable temper if weighed down and suffering from female weakness and disorders. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a remedy for these troubles. Sold by druggists.

He Would do His Part.

George—Blanche, I think I will get married.

Blanche—Yes, George, and does your heart beat responsively to some one's?

"Well, no, not exactly, but I can almost support myself, and I think it's a pretty mean girl that won't help a little bit."

Nerve Pain Cure.

Polson's Nervilire cures flatulence, chills and spasms. Nerviline cures vomiting, diarrhœa, cholera and dysentery. Nerviline cures headache, sea sickness and summer complaint. Nerviline cures neuralgia, toothache, lumbago and sciatica. Nerviline cures sprains, bruises, cuts, etc. Polson's Nerviline is the best remedy in the world, and only costs 10 and 25 cents to try it. Sample and large bottles at any drug store. Try Polson's Nerviline.

Where the Rawhide Was.

"Did she have a rawhide when she assaulted you?" asked His Honor of a meek gentleman who accused his wife of assault with intent to kill. "No, Your Honor," said the poor man, feeling of himself tenderly, "I'm the one that had the rawhide; in fact, Your Honor, I have it still."—Buffalo Courier.

—A lease of 999 years, made in the days of King Alfred, has just expired in England. The land was leased by the Church to the Crown, and reverts now to the Church of England.

—Mrs. Partington says of her new cook book: "Now, a book like this will come into a house like an oasis in the great desert of Sarah and be a quarantine of perpetual peace."

ALMA LADIES' COLLEGE,

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO,

Has students from British Columbia, Texas, Arkansas, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Chicago, Duluth, New York and other distant points. Its low rates, excellent staff of teachers and fine accommodation have so filled its halls that a new building to cost $20,000 will be erected next year. Students can enter any time. 65 pp. calendar free.

Address, Principal Austin, B. D.

Cold Comfort.

Customer (in restaurant)—Waiter, these are very small oysters for the price.

Waiter—Yes, sah.

Customer—And they don't look very nice, either.

Waiter—Den dey is all de betah, sah, for bein' small.

An Offensive Breath

is most distressing, not only to the person afflicted if he have any pride, but to those with whom he comes in contact. It is a delicate matter to speak of, but it has parted not only friends but lovers. Bad breath and catarrh are inseparable. DR. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases as thousands can testify.

—The Northwest doesn't care what the wide world says so long as nobody hits it below the wheat belt.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,

663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DON L. 49 87.

I CURE FITS!

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

GORDON'S

OLD RELIABLE HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON!

Is still open and Old Customers will find it Stocked with

Carriage & Team

HARNESS!

Which has become celebrated throughout this vicinity for superior quality, finish and durability. All guaranteed as heretofore. At

Reduced Prices for Cash,

Also a large stock of Winter Goods in the line of

HORSE COVERS!

of superior quality, at the lowest prices ever offered in Flesherton. A fine selection of

Sleigh ❋ Bells!

at a slight advance on cost for the next 30 days. If you want a first-class

WHIP!

It is to be found at Gordon's. Also

TRUNKS,
VALISES,
RUGS,
HORSE BRUSHES,
CURRY COMBS,
SWEAT PADS

and all other Horse Furnishings found in a first-class Harness Shop.

The Celebrated Harness Oil!

Kept constantly on hand. But the Crowning Specialty is the perfect fitting

Scotch ❋ Collar!

Warranted not to gall your horses and for which this establishment has become so well known throughout this County. Repairing attended to promptly, carefully and cheaply.

A Call is Respectfully Invited at

GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Come right along at once and secure the big Bargains in Fur goods at R Trimble's, Flesherton.

When in town get Booth, the "Boss" Barber, to cut your hair, shampoo you, or shave you.

The Ladies say the sweetest thing on earth, except a new bonnet is the Scotch Granulated Sugar, they get at Brander's, Priceville.

The most beautiful stock of Silverware ever seen in this country is to be seen at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Mens' Felt Stockings, Gum Rubbers, also Ladies' and Mens Rubbers, Overshoes, &c., a full supply on hand suitable for the cold weather that the weather prophets say is coming, at Wm Clayton's.

Oor thanks are due to Mr. Will Richardson for handsome Graphic supplement picture. Richardson's Drug Store is well stocked with Xmas numbers of the Graphic and Illustrated News, and all kinds of pretty things for the holidays.

Mr. Wm. M. Clark, of Toronto, and family, have moved back to Flesherton again. We welcome our esteemed old friend right heartily to our town. Socially, intellectually and spiritually he is a great addition to our society.

Do you want a choice lot of Confectionaries? Then go to the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

Mr. A. Down, of Artemesia, advertised a farm to rent in The Advance a short time ago. The advertisement caught the eye of Mr. Thos. Meadler Guy, son of our respected Maxwell friend, Mr. Wm. Guy, and he proceeded to answer the same. Result: Mr. Guy rented the farm on Monday last for a term of years. Advertising always pays, when the article, or whatever it may be, advertised is marketable.

A grand stock of Fancy Goods just arriving at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton.

An immense number of cattle have been shipped by buyers from Artemesia during the past season.—There was, therefore, few marketable animals offered on fair day to what there usually is. This is one of the best stock-raising districts in Canada, and if our farmers would turn their attention still more in that direction it would pay them infinitely better than by confining their operations so closely and exclusively to growing grain.

Splendid value in Grey, Navy Blue Factory and Canton Flannels, at R. Trimble's, Flesherton.

Mrs. Campbell, of Owen Sound, delivered a most eloquent and sensible lecture in the basement of the Methodist church, Flesherton, last Thursday evening, in connection with the W.C.T.U. of this town. The lady lecturer evidently does not believe in dropping into the well worn ruts when discussing the Temperance question. What she said was decidedly practical and fresh to the majority of her hearers, and should she again favor Flesherton with a visit, she will be greeted by a crowded house.

The Medical Hall, Flesherton, is full of variety and every thing cheap for cash.

READ THIS.—The undersigned wishes his friends a "Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year," and takes this opportunity to thank them most sincerely for the hearty patronage accorded him in the past. He would also respectfully suggest to those owing him, that he is in need of money and that prompt payment of all outstanding accounts within the next two or three weeks will help him to commence the new year with a clean sheet. Bring along your money and I will gladly receipt your bills.—JAMES SULLIVAN.

We cannot help giving the people bargains. We have the goods and are bound to sell at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

A splendid rich toned New Organ and two famed New William's Sewing Machines for sale at a great reduction for cash or trade at C. Treadgold's residence, Flesherton. 4w.

Call and have a look at Russell's (Flesherton) display of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. It will do you good to see their immense stock of Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry.

The best place to buy your Raisins, Currants, Spices, &c., for Christmas is at R. Trimble's.

Booth, the "Boss" Barber, of Flesherton, does first-class work. Shop opposite Leitch's Tailoring establishment.

Do not purchase until you see Russell's grand display of Fancy Goods, Etc. It will eclipse everything in this country.

A resident of Artemesia—whose nimble-fingured propensities have rendered him notorious—recently visited a farmer's barn in the silent watches of the night and abstracted therefrom a bag of grain. Coming out of the building he chanced to stumble into an old well, some ten or twelve feet in depth. Much against his will, the thief was obliged to remain all night and until the following day in the well—a prisoner!—when the people of the farm chanced to hear his cries and rescued him. No doubt he disgorged and promised never to do the like again, for the matter has not come before a Magistrates Court. The old well ought to get a medal.

A grand stock of Fancy Goods just arriving at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton.

Flesherton, Dec. 2nd, 1887.

At the last regular meeting of Flesherton L.O.L., No. 429, the following officers were duly elected for the year 1888:—

W. P. Crossley, W.M.
R. McGruther, W.D.M.
J. W. Bates, W. Chaplain.
D. Clayton, W. Secy.
W. E. White, Fin. Secy.
J. A. Heard, W.T.
H. C. LeGard, D. of C.
W. D. Varty, Lecturer.

Committee men—(1) Thos. McArthur, (2) Robt. Clark, sr., (3) William Clark, (4) J. E. Moore, (5) R. J. Sproule.

The above Lodge meets every Friday evening preceding every full moon in each month, in Strain's Block at 8 o'clock sharp. All visiting brethren made welcome.—D. Clayton, Rec. Secy.

A grand stock of Fancy Goods just arriving at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton.

Died.

Rutledge.—In Markdale, on Wednesday, 30th Nov., 1887, after six months illness of consumption, Mrs. C. W. Rutledge, wife of the Editor and Proprietor of the Standard, aged 42 years, 3 days.

[Our esteemed friend and brother journalist, Mr. Rutledge, has the deep sympathy of a very large circle in his sad bereavement. Deceased was a loving wife and tender-hearted mother, and her married life was a very happy one. Her early death—although, perhaps, not unexpected—was a terrible shock to her respected husband and the community in which she lived. She died a true Christian. We tender our respectful sympathy to our dear friend Rutledge, in this the darkest and most solemn hour of his life.—Ed. Advance.]

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

Mortgage Sale!

—OF—

Valuable Farm Property

In the township of Osprey, in the County of Grey. Under the powers of sale contained in a certain mortgage to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and in payment of which default has been made, there will be sold by Public Auction at LINLEY'S HOTEL, in the

VILLAGE OF MAXWELL,

—in the County of Grey, on—

Wednesday, the 14th day of December, 1887,

at 1 p.m., the following valuable property:—

Lot Number 23 in the 4th Concession of the said township of Osprey in the County of Grey, containing 100 acres more or less.

Terms and Conditions of Sale.

The property will be offered for sale subject to a reserve bid. The purchaser must at the time of sale pay one-tenth of his purchase money to the Vendors their solicitors or agents and sufficient within 30 days thereafter with interest at 7 per cent. to reduce the balance of purchase money to $500 which amount may remain on mortgage to the vendors for 5 years with interest at 7 per cent. payable yearly. The mortgage to contain a covenant for insurance in the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company to the full insurable value of the buildings. The Vendors will not be bound to account for, produce or show or prove the contents of any deeds or evidence of title not in their possession or furnish copies of the same. The Purchaser must investigate the title at his own expense. The other conditions of sale will be made known at the time of sale or on application to the undersigned at Toronto.

For further particulars apply to
HOWLAND, ARNOLDI & MACKENZIE,
Vendors Solicitors.

Toronto, Nov. 14th, 1887. 335-7.

Having opened out a lot of

Fall & Winter Goods

Personally selected by myself, I can confidently recommend them. I have a large assortment of

Mens, Ladies, and Childrens

BOOTS AND SHOES!

Also a full supply of Mens and Ladies RUBBERS, and Mens FROST PROOF FELT BOOTS. I hope to receive a liberal share of the trade in this vicinity. I will endeavor to satisfy my customers in QUALITY and PRICES.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

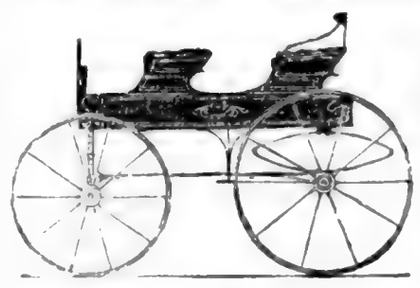
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.



MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

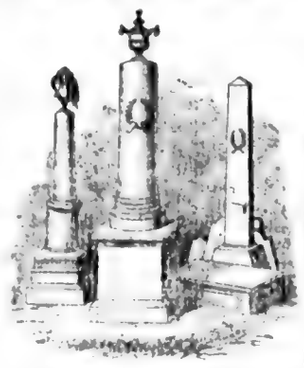
Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor Holloway's Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

Flesherton Station Mill.

The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. George Moorehouse, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 338. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

"DECEMBER AD."

$1,600

IN GOLD AND SILVER

WATCHES!

Wainut and Nickle Clocks, Roll Plate and Fine Gilt Chains, Gem and Wedding Rings, Jewelery and Fine Silverware for Holiday Trade!

If I felt the public were fools enough to believe me and take "myself" to be "knave" enough to beat the wholesale, I would talk big discount and wholesale prices for above goods. Wholesale prices in a retail store won't pay rent, light taxes, etc. Continuous discounts 5 times in 1 year, either pays by marking goods away up, or else by using deception as to quality of goods. There are Jewellers who have 14 k. wedding rings stamped 18 k. My Plain Rings are made by P. W. ELLIS & CO., and after this will have my initials, W.B. stamped on.

Goods as represented every time.

Prices at "whisper" mark. Discounts as usual, 5 per cent.

Warrants cover Breakages!

Don't accept any other kind. Everybody invited to call when in town and get my prices.

For 4 Years

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 13th CON., ARTEMESIA, 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

361-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE,

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Judgement was given on Monday unseating Dr. Willoughby, M.P.P. for East Northumberland.

The Reeve and Deputy Reeves of Artemesia, are attending County Council in Owen Sound this week.

A beautiful stock of Xmas Cards at Russell's, Flesherton, at very low prices, don't fail to see them.

The post office safe at Norwood, Ont., was blown open with dynamite on Saturday morning last and $11,000 stolen.

Rev. Mr. Shilton is conducting special meetings in Wesley Church, Meaford Road. The services commenced last week.

Call and see Russell's immense display of fancy Plush Wall Pockets, Dusters, Whisk Holders, &c., they are beautiful and cheap.

On dit: That the Flesherton Station hotel is about to change hands, with Mr. Jennings, of Shelburne, as the "coming man."

Mr. Albert Purdy now has charge of the Station Post-Office and a better order of things obtain. Mr. Purdy, sr., is confined to his room through sickness.

Don't fail to call and inspect our immense stock of Fancy Plush Goods, Xmas Cards, &c., at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday the High School Entrance Examinations will be held in Flesherton. It seems strange that this fact has not been advertised in any of the local papers.

Don't forget to attend the grand concert in Watson's Hall, Priceville, on Tuesday evening next, 20th inst. Should the roads be in good condition, quite a number of our citizens purpose going over.

Call and see Russell's immense display of fancy Plush Wall Pockets, Dusters, Whisk Holders, &c., they are beautiful and cheap.

Don't forget the Concert in Watson's Hall, Priceville, on Tuesday evening next, 20th inst. Flesherton Brass Band will be there. A good program throughout. Admission 20 cents; children half price.

The C.P.R. Co. is about to furnish Flesherton with another Telegraph Office. The posts are to be put down between here and the railway station this week. Their office in this place will be located in the Post Office.

Special attention is directed to M. Richardson & Co's mammoth announcement on page five, this issue of THE ADVANCE. This firm has a county reputation at stake and what is advertised by them in the public press may always be safely relied upon.

Don't fail to call and inspect our immense stock of Fancy Plush Goods, Xmas Cards, &c., at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton.

A splendid rich toned New Organ and two famed New William's Sewing Machines for sale at a great reduction for cash or trade at C. Treadgold's residence Flesherton. 4w.

If you want any Book-binding done, try THE ADVANCE office. All work in this line, as well as in our Book and Job Department, executed on the very shortest notice, and satisfaction guaranteed. Farmers can get their auction sale or stock bills printed at THE ADVANCE office while they wait. We have every facility for the rapid execution of all kinds of work. Prices right.

—BARGAINS!—

ENORMOUS BARGAINS!

Immense Bargains!

NOW GOING ON AT

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, FLESHERTON!

WHERE WILL BE FOUND THE LARGEST AND FINEST STOCK OF

Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Knives, Razors, &c.

EVER SHOWN IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY. OUR GOODS

TOOK FIRST PRIZE AT FLESHERTON FALL SHOW,

And in order to give parties who were not able to take advantage of our discount sale in October, we have decided to again make this Great Offer and give

TWENTY PER CENT. OFF

On all Cash Sales of $1 and over from 1st day of December, 1887, to 1st day of January, 1888.

Now, this is a grand chance to secure fine goods at about wholesale prices. All Watches we sell bear a written guarantee of from three to five years. We will still make another Grand Offer to anyone purchasing one of our LADIES' FINE GEM RINGS or 18 k. WEDDING RINGS which we have for the number of nearly one hundred, we will give a beautiful Plush Ring Box worth $1.00, any color. These bargains everyone should take advantage of. You will never have as good a chance again and remember the only place to get your Watch repaired properly is at

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON.

Not Much on Education, But—

One evening when in the neighborhood of Sydney, Neb., we went over to make a friendly call on a farmer near whose house we were camped, says Fred Carruth. Something was said about a new schoolhouse which was being built a half-mile away, and the agriculturist said:

"Yes, the old one got kinder shackelly an' we sold it to old man White for a calf barn, an' are puttin' up a new one. It's my private opinion that it'll furnish schoolin' jes' 'bout good enough for the rest o' my young 'uns."

"Don't believe in higher education, then?"

"Naw, I been filled up on higher edication once, an' I know when I got enough."

"How did it happen?"

"You see, I sent my oldest son, Mifflin—named after the county we lived in back in Pennsylvania—to school down at Sidney. He hadn't been there mor'n a month when he came home one Friday evenin' an' says I to him: 'Miff, we'll butcher them six shotes to-morrow.'

"'Pap,' says he, 'better let it go till to-morrow a week—mebby be colder weather then.'

"'It won't do,' says I, 'the moon is full next Wednesday, an' we want to butcher them shotes when the moon is growin' so the pork will swell when we fry it—got an idee we want to wait until after the moon changes an' have that pork all shrink up when its fried?'

"'Hah, pap,' says Miff, 'you mean all right, but you're away off—it's been proved the moon don't have no influence on terrestrial things. You're antequaked, pap; this influence of the moon is a miff—the idee is exploded long ago.'

"'Young man,' says I, "mebby it is, but your old pap, didn't hear the explosion! Mebby I'm some antequaked on the moon, but I'm right up to the times on swingin' a coal-oil bar'l stave, an' if you'll jes' follow me out to the woodshed I'll finish up the other three years an' six months o' your edication in 'bout three minutes?'

"That settled it for him, an' the next day we hung up them six shotes by the hind legs, an' when the old lady put a piece of the pork into the fryin'-pan it jes' swelled right up every time! You can run down the moon all you want to but I tell you it's good enough for me to go by!"

Don't fail to call and inspect our immense stock of fancy Plush goods, Xmas Cards, &c., at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

FARMERS

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., OILING, SCOURING, WEAVING, CARDING, SPINNING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 20th, 1887.

THE QUEBEC MOB.

The Frenchmen Disperse Without Doing Any Mischief.

A Quebec despatch says: The expected riot last night ended in a complete fiasco. From 7 o'clock crowds could be seen wending their way towards Dufferin Terrace, undoubtedly bent upon mischief. Probably three-quarters of an hour had elapsed before the local "bouters" made their appearance upon the band stand. At about 8 o'clock a few juniors presented themselves in front of the platform and harangued the crowd. Their chief aim was that the crowd should disperse and not trouble further, because the local authorities intended making a thorough test case of the Salvation Army parades. Notwithstanding the most vehement appeals upon the part of the haranguers, about one thousand persons assembled and proceeded towards St. Rochs. In passing the Army barracks en route a number of thoughtless youths in the procession emptied the chambers of their revolvers in the air, hoping to frighten the inmates of the barracks. The police made no endeavors to arrest the criminals. From this point to St. Rochs the crowd was momentarily augmented until its numbers reached fully six thousand, when all together proceeded through the various streets of St. Rochs singing national songs and then headed towards Upper Town, vowing vengeance on the Salvation Army and with the full intention of wrecking their barracks. The crowd in their procession were completely disorganized. One feature which was principally noticed was the absence of the English-speaking classes. After leaving St. Rochs the mob wended their way up one of the by streets until they reached St. John street, when, as though a thunder-clap had fallen, almost the whole crowd broke up. Not more than 200 proceeded further.

SLOWLY ROASTED TO DEATH.

A Prisoner Burned Alive in the Presence of a Crowd of People.

A Webberville, Mich., despatch says: The cry of "Fire!" aroused the people shortly before midnight last night, and they rushed from their homes to find the town lockup in flames. It was a one-story wooden structure standing alone in an open square. Above the crackling of the flames cries were heard from an inmate of one of the cells. When the citizens arrived the doomed man was seen frantically beating the bars of his cell and crying for help. The people were powerless to rescue him and in the presence of the crowd he slowly roasted to death. Some of the crowd made ineffectual attempts to rescue him, but were driven away by the heat. The pale face and glaring eyes of the miserable wretch were framed by the black, unyielding bars of his cell door. Little by little he was forced back, but only when the bars became red hot did he abandon all hope of escape. The horror of the situation proved such a frightful mental strain on the prisoner that he became insane, tearing his scorched clothing off. He dashed himself against the bars and grabbed the red-hot irons in the vain effort to escape. An odor of burned flesh pervaded the air and made many of the people sick. Frantically cursing the crowd for not helping him, the roasting man rushed madly around the narrow inclosure while the spectators stood rooted by horror to the spot. Gradually his cries grew weaker and he was seen to sink to the floor and soon all was over. The prisoner was Newhall Tyler, 38 years old. He had been jailed for striking a boy on the head. Tyler had been on a spree, and the boy had annoyed him. He fired the prison, hoping that he would be released thereby.

SAVED BY RUNNING A MILE A MINUTE.

An Engineer's Race Down a Steep Grade to Escape a Runaway Train.

A Youngstown, O., despatch says: Allan Cowden, a well-known locomotive engineer, has just had a thrilling experience. While coming down a steep four-mile grade into Marquette the train broke in two. Realizing the danger of a collision, Engineer Cowden endeavored to pull away with the cars that remained with the engine, but the rear section steadily gained, until the pace of the flying trains became fearful. A mile out of Marquette he thought of the many men at work in the yard who might be killed by the runaway train and devised a plan to save them. Ordering the fireman to cut loose from the train he crowded on every pound of steam. As the locomotive shot forward he sounded three long blasts of the whistle, indicating that he wanted to keep the main track and for the switchman to send the train on the siding. The switchman on duty responded, and as the engine passed over the frog at a mile a minute, he turned the lever and the two sections of the train dashed into the siding and piled the cars up in an indescribable mass. Cowden had saved his life and that of his fireman, besides twenty employees in the yard, but the train was a total wreck, which, however, it would have been in any case.

An A. O. U. W. Insurance Case.

A London despatch says: Susan Drury, formerly of this city, now the wife of Mr. O'Connor, also formerly of this city, was at one time engaged to be married to Geo. W. Child, of Detroit, who, at the time of their engagement, became a member of the A. O. U. W., and had named his fiancee as his beneficiary. Child afterwards married another woman, and made an attempt to change the policy, so that his wife would receive the benefit of it at his death. Mrs. O'Connor protested against any such change being made, and the officers refused to make any alteration unless the original policy was produced, and as it was in Mrs. O'Connor's hands she refused to give it up. Child now granted power of attorney to one Galloway in the hope that he would be able to get the policy from Mrs. O'Connor, but before the attempt was made Child died. The Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. filed a bill in Wayne Circuit Court to determine to whom the benefit was to be paid. Judge Look decided in favor of Mrs. O'Connor.

It is no longer fashionable for girls to kiss each other. This will naturally enlarge the sphere of man's duties in this respect, but we guess the men can stand it.

H. Rider Haggard denies that he is coming to America immediately. He may come over next fall.

HOT SHOT FROM POWDERLY.

Grumblers in the Knights of Labor Get a Severe Drubbing in Print—The General Master Workman Says the Men who Talk so Much About Forming a New Order are Just the Men who Would Destroy it if Formed.

A Philadelphia despatch says: Powderly's second letter to the Knights, published here in the Journal of United Labor to-day, is considered a "corker." He gives the growlers and so-called secessionists a sound drubbing. Mr. Powderly seldom indulges in talk of this kind, but when he does hit a blow it comes straight from the shoulder.

"When I hear men talk of seceding from the organization, with the threat of starting an improved Order," he says, "I fancy that they know but little of the trials, the dangers, the odds against which they will have to contend, and I feel that the amount of energy necessary to build up a new Order, if properly applied in the old one, would make it invincible.

Powderly pitches into the "assassinators of character" with much vigor, and asks that slander shall cease and honest criticism take its place. "Let me ask a question of the member who now and then publishes a column or half column of abuse of the general officers, charging them with all sorts of shortcomings. What are you doing in your own locality to make the lot of the toiler easier? Can you expect of me to give my whole, undivided and cheerful attention to my work while those who should be my lieutenants are furnishing the enemy with the ammunition with which to attack me?

"Attack if you will, criticise if you please, abuse if you choose, but do not forget that right where you live, in your own town or city, within sound of your own voice, you will find the degradation of the workshop or factory. You will find the curse of poverty in the tenement house. You will find the evils of child labor; yes, if you listen, you will hear the moan of starvation, and the wail of men and women urged to sin because of hunger and cold.

"From an organization numbering less than 10,000 members when the first General Assembly was held, we have seen the Knights of Labor grow until over 700,000 men and women claim membership at one time. While that vast and industrial army was being gathered together, while the seed was being sown, men who were pioneers were making sacrifices that the Order might live in history as a power for good. They never found fault with the Order because of their misfortunes, for the reason that they felt that it was theirs to do or to die. They were not working for self nor the present, they worked for posterity and the future."

WICKEDNESS IN HIGH PLACES.

How a British M. P. Got Into Difficulties With His Creditors and His Mistress.

A London cable says: The examination of Mr. Borlase, ex-Under-Secretary of the Local Government Board, was continued in the Bankruptcy Court yesterday. He admitted having borrowed £1,000 from Madame de Quiros, who was formerly his mistress, but he said the money was his own, and she had simply restored it to him. He had never promised to settle £1,500 upon her. She asked him, he said, for £500 down and £1,500 a year, saying that she was going to get the same amount out of another man. He dined at her house after borrowing the £1,000, when she tried to murder him. After getting the sum mentioned he borrowed £2,700 from her, giving his acceptance for that amount. He heard afterward that this money had been given to her by another man. Mr. Borlase said that his average income was £2,000, and that his money had been largely expended in political life for elections, dinner parties, etc. Ever since he entered Parliament he had been involved in financial troubles. The further hearing of the case was adjourned.

REMARKABLE RELIGIOUS TRIAL.

Men and Women Who Lived in a Nude Condition—Good Subjects for Hypnotization.

A London cablegram says: The Chronicle gives a strange account of a trial in Tolax, a village in Malaga, Spain, of some religious fanatics of strange practices. They originally went naked like Adam and Eve before their fall, but the authorities interposed. Since then they have inflicted wounds upon themselves in imitation of the crucifixion, and burnt all their goods, believing a higher power would provide food. When put on trial they were hypnotized in court by medics, specialists like Irving in "The Bells," and proved good subjects. It is even alleged that, on being ordered to perspire, they broke out into a profuse perspiration. Others, pricked with pins, gave no sign of pain. This is the first time such a scene has happened in a court of justice in Spain. The probable result of the trial will be a nominal punishment.

Somewhat Discouraging.

A city gentleman imagines that he has a great talent for painting. He has painted for many years, but with very little success. An old friend called at the would-be artist's studio, not long since, and said candidly:

"Why don't you stop spoiling canvas and wasting good paint?"

"I'm not discouraged," was the reply; "in a few years more I may eclipse even Raphael."

"Eclipse Raphael," sneered the candid old friend; "Why, you are 40 years old at least, and nobody has bought one of your pictures yet. Don't you know that at your age Raphael had been dead five years?"

A Sensational Death in Monck.

Very sensational rumors are afloat concerning the death of Mr. C. J. Cook, a merchant of North Pelham, which occurred a week ago. The cause of his sudden death was variously attributed to blood-poisoning, the bursting of a blood-vessel and a convulsive fit. It is now stated there are strong suspicions that he was poisoned. The rumors have not yet taken definite shape, but there is a prospect of some sensational developments within the next few days.

"How deliciously clean he looks," said a Washington (D. C.) belle of Joseph Chamberlain.

LOVE MADE HIM A WANDERER.

The Romantic Story of a Ragged Old Nobleman in Evansville, Ind.

An Evansville, Ind., despatch says: A few nights ago the police found Henry Gabling unconscious in the gutter. Gabling has long been an inmate of the almshouse, and often, when away from the institution, has been seen tapping kegs in front of the saloons in an effort to wring out a drink of stale beer. When taken to the station-house the officer found an ugly wound on his head. They told the poor wretch when he came to consciousness that his days of life were few and sent for a preacher to visit him. To the clergyman Gabling told a romantic story. He is an Austrian by birth, a Count in rank, was carefully educated and had a wife picked out for him. But he didn't marry her. All unknown to his aristocratic relatives, the scion of an old nobility had quietly fallen in love with a peasant girl. Have her he would, and his parents, finding all other methods unavailing, secretly had the girl gotten out of the way. One morning the young Count left home without saying aught to any one of where he was going. The hour grew late and [illegible] hope of the household did not return. Messengers were sent in all directions but returned without tidings of the missing one. The fleeting days, months and years brought no word of him. Gabling had discovered the trick played on him and had started out into the wide world, hunting for his girl and hoping to find her. For years he went to and fro among the capitals of Europe, but he didn't find her. He roamed over country roads in all quarters of the continent and the isles of the sea, but the fair face of which he was in quest lived only in hope and memory. Then he came to America, where he went to work as a book-keeper. From Cincinnati he went to Louisville and then came here, where for years he held responsible positions. In despondency he took to drink and it has wrecked him. He is 80 years old. Of his childhood's friends he knows nothing and of his lost love he hasn't found a trace.

VITRIOLIC VENGEANCE.

A Young Man's Face Disfigured by His Discarded Sweetheart.

A Reading, Pa., despatch says: Miss Maggie Lloyd until a short time ago was the pretty cashier in the largest dry goods house in this city. She resides with her aunt, the wife of Dr. Frank Rieser. Miss Lloyd is well connected and highly respected. In the same establishment was Mr. Howard Potter, nephew of the leading member of the firm. He held a responsible position also. The young people became lovers, and finally their friends were told they were engaged to be married. Recently it was noticed that Mr. Potter's attentions to Miss Lloyd were falling off, and finally he informed the young lady that their engagement must be cancelled. This happened last Sunday night. He called on Miss Lloyd at Dr. Rieser's and said he would not marry her. This was in the parlor. The young lady was laboring under a high state of excitement, and she handed Potter a glass filled with dark liquid and asked him to take a drink of wine. He refused in alarm. He refused a second time. She then pulled his handkerchief from his pocket and with her left hand [illegible] it over his eyes, and dashed the glass, which was full of vitriol, into Potter's face. Frenzied with pain he rushed into the kitchen, washed his face and hurried out toward his home. He got no further than a neighboring restaurant, when a doctor was called. Since then he has been confined to his room. The doctor was with him three hours this day. Potter will probably be disfigured. Miss Lloyd is quite melancholy and does not know the extent of Potter's injuries. Dr. Rieser says he found the lady afterward entirely out of her mind in the parlor, wondering where she was.

STOOD ON A HOT STOVE.

Inhuman Punishment of a Child Who Went Skating Without Leave.

A Boston, Mass., despatch says: Little Willie Van Houtrie, a colored boy, 6 years old, hobbled into the Municipal Court on Friday and told Judge Curtis how John Williams, of No. 40 Grove street, had punished him for going skating. The child's mother is a domestic in a family at the Back Bay, and pays the boy's board and lodging at Williams'. The child went out skating on Thursday, and when he returned Williams took off his shoes and stockings and stood him on a hot stove until both feet were blistered. Williams confessed the deed and said he must do something to keep the child at home.

The Bones of John Knox.

Although a Scotchman, I am free to confess that my countrymen do not deserve to be held up as examples of how people should reverence great men and the places with which they have been associated, as the case of Knox will show. The place of his birth is disputed, and the house in which he lived and died was wantonly razed to the ground. The precise spot in which his bones repose is unknown, although it is said to be somewhere in Parliament Square, and under the uplifted hoof of the leaden horse of which Charles II. sits in the guise of a Roman Emperor. No monument marks the grave of the great reformer, and lawyers and their clients, as they bustle out of and into the Court of Session probably trample every day on his unhonored head.—Edinburgh Letter in London Standard.

To Give a Better Grip.

A Boston inventor named Swinterton has brought into successful use a new form of locomotive driving wheel. The tire is not turned round, but is polygonal, the facets being from one to two inches long. A new and powerful locomotive has just been constructed in Boston, with but one driving wheel on a side; the wheels are 210½ inches in circumference having 105 flat facets two inches long. The theory is that the bearing of two inches on the rail gives increased grip in starting or stopping a train. It is estimated that one driving wheel with the facets is more powerful than the two or more which are usually employed, and the parallel rods are dispensed with.—Rochester Democrat.

Henry August von Bulow, a nephew of Herr von Bulow, the famous German pianist, is soon to marry Miss Annie Snyder, of Philadelphia.

RAN AWAY WITH A BARMAID.

A Romantic Elopement of an Aristocratic Youth and a Poulterer's Daughter.

(From the Birmingham Post.)

A romantic elopement has just occurred in connection with one of the oldest aristocratic families in the kingdom. The chief actor is a high-spirited youth, whose age is given as not more than 17, and who is the only son and heir of one of the county families of East Worcestershire, and whose name occurs in Domesday Book. The father of the youth is a retired captain of dragoons and his mother is of a distinguished Scotch family, a member of which, for his services in the Indian mutiny, was raised to the House of Peers. Three months ago the young heir was introduced at the close of a boating excursion by the private secretary of his father to a barmaid aged between 21 and 22, at a wine and spirit vault in Stourbridge, whom the secretary pronounced "the prettiest girl in England." It was an affair of "love at first sight," and the young fellow declared he would never marry any one else. A friendship sprang up, and family entreaties and threats were alike in vain. The young man declared that if his wishes were thwarted he would end his life with a revolver. At this time he was on a vacation from his college at Cirencester. The family communicated with the detective police of Birmingham, and for weeks past private detectives have watched the barmaid's movements night and day. She is the daughter of a poulterer living in Wolverhampton. Detectives, solicitors, and clergymen have also visited the girl's home on behalf of the family to try to obtain information of the heir's whereabouts, for it was discovered that he had run away from college. Very little information was, however, forthcoming, and, though one interview was secured at the hotel between the young man and his mother, the only result was his declaration that if he were taken by force he would be taken home on a stretcher. Authentic news was received on Sunday that the couple had eloped and had been married at, it is believed, a country church near Liverpool. The bride has herself communicated this information and has asked for forgiveness. The young heir's family are naturally greatly concerned. The young fellow has, during the latter part of the proceedings, backed up his independence by putting forward "his solicitor" when it has been threatened by his family. An attempt to secure a special license only a few days before the successful elopement was frustrated by the registrar happening to possess private information of how the matter stood. In his second attempt, however, he seems to have been more fortunate.

In connection with the announcement of the romantic elopement the following advertisements, taken from local papers, will be read with interest, as supplying the needed key: "Foster-Devitt—On the 26th inst., at St. Mark's, Winshall, Derbyshire, by Rev. G. Clarke, Percy Reginald, only son of Capt. Foster, Stourton Court, Stourbridge, to Alice Dora, youngest daughter of John F. Devitt, Wolverhampton." "Notice—Capt. Foster, of Stourton Court, near Stourbridge, hereby gives notice that he will not be responsible for any debts his son, Percival Reginald Foster, may contract."

Some Christmas Novelties.

Large fans in the stiff coque feathers are made to resemble tulips in different colors.

A high lamp to stand on the floor is shaped like a helmet, and rests on a tripod of three battle axes.

A turkey's claw in brass clutches a glass inkstand that has an owl's head in oxidized silver as cover.

For a smoking set, a brass tray holds three brass cuffs of different sizes, and a collar, in imitation of linen.

A fan in pale blue gauze is a mass of loops of narrow, pale blue satin ribbon. The sticks are of wood inlaid with silver.

A silver lamp suspended from a standard has a design in perforated holes and jewels, through which a candle shines.

A low silver candlestick has an attached screen of copper. It is studded with jewels, through which the light shines.

An oxidized silver paper-cutter has a handle formed of two monkeys, one upholding another who holds the blade.

A novel holder for a whisk brush is half of an ornamental drum fastened to a brass shield. A chain hangs it on the wall.

A small ornamental mirror is upheld by two oxidized silver kittens, while a third climbs up behind and looks over the top.

A clock about a foot in diameter has a wheel on the face. The figures are between the spokes. The hands are fastened on the hub.

A large silver disk has a small clock in the centre; above is an oxidized silver star, and on the edge of the disk, the crescent moon and face.

Small snowshoes have satin bags stuffed with horsehair fastened to them, in which to stick hairpins, and are to be hung beside a lady's dressing table.

In silk purses, gray with steel beads is the newest style. A gold ring is fastened securely in the middle of the purse, and is intended to be hung on a chatelaine.

Finishing His Education.

"You are quite a linguist, I believe?"

"Yes, I am familiar with four or five languages."

"What are they?"

"I speak French, German, English and Greek, and I can read and write in several languages that I cannot speak fluently."

"Do you write Russian?"

"No, but I do the next thing to it."

"What's that?"

"I'm practising on a typewriter."—Lincoln Journal.

Mrs. Dinah Mulock-Craik was unique among authors as regards her habits of work. She never began a work for publication which she did not finish before beginning another. It is thought that she did not at her death leave a line of unfinished manuscript.

In a forthcoming novel Walter Besant, the popular English writer, gives a description of the millennium. It is interesting as offering a striking contrast to affairs in England at present.

A frightened deer dashed through the main street of Salina, Pa., the other day, and although all the sportsmen in town turned out as soon as they saw it, the deer escaped.

SUED BY A CLAIRVOYANT.

He Prescribed While in a Trance, but the Patient Died.

Judge Courtney, of Brooklyn, had a very peculiar case before him yesterday. It was brought by Geo. W. Parrett, a clairvoyant and manipulator, who holds forth at No. 17 Willoughby street, against Joseph Mann, who has a boot-blacking establishment on Washington street, near the bridge. Parrett wanted to collect the sum of $22.50 for clairvoyancing Mann's young son, and being unable to collect the same, brought suit to recover it.

When the case was called Parrett testified in his own behalf. He said that he was called to treat the child, and after going into a trance prescribed for it. When asked, however, by Mann's lawyer to go into a trance and show the Court its effects, he declined, saying that there were too many influences present. Judge Courtney suggested that perhaps it would be better to adjourn the case until some time when the "influence" would be numbered among the absent, but as neither side desired this, the case proceeded. Mann testified that his child was taken sick and upon the advice of his friend, George W. Brooks, he called in Clairvoyant Parrett. Then, to the amusement of the Court and spectators, he told how the "doctor" sat in a chair and, after shaking and shivering for some time, went to sleep and then began to talk. The witness said that he had paid Parrett $5 for some medicine furnished for the child, but which had not done him any good. The child, who was about 11 months old, died soon after.

George W. Brooks testified that when Mr. Mann's child was taken sick he advised calling in Mr. Parrett. He was present and Parrett's actions during the trance frightened them all.

Judge Courtney dismissed the case.—N. Y. World.

Hang This Up.

Farm animals are hurt more by medicine than by the lack of it. When an animal needs medicine it needs a competent physician.

Pure water and a variety of wholesome food regularly given, with comfortable shelter and kind treatment, are the best preventives of disease.

A mortgage on the home makes the fireside gloomy, for it shuts out the sunshine of prosperity and freeheartedness.

Some men look at the sky only to forecast the weather, see more beauty in a dollar than in a bed of flowers, and will hear the crow in a cornfield quicker than the lark in the air.

Better is it to have one pair of trousers with money in the pockets than two pairs with empty pockets.

The horse knows all that the colt learned, and boys tormenting the colt are not teaching it what it should know.

System worked ten hours a day and was done. Hap-hazard got up at 4 in the morning, hurried all day and was doing the chores at half-past 9 at night.

Job had much patience, yet it was fortunate for him that he did not join fences with a neighbor who kept breachy stock.

The man who fills his ice-house provides himself with a conservator of health and a servant of pleasure.

The man who is too poor to take the TIMES or to buy his wife a new dress without grumbling is rich enough to afford fine picking for Bohemian oat swindlers and patent gimcrack frauds.

What "America" Means.

The meaning of the name Amerigo has been often discussed, the only thing certain being that it is one of those names of Teutonic origin, like Humberto, Alfonzo, Grimaldi or Garibaldi, so common in northern Italy, which testify to the Gothic or Lombard conquest. Americ, which occurs as early as 744 A.D., is probably a contracted form of the name Amalaric, borne by a king of the Visigoths, who died in 531. A Bishop Emrich was present at the council of Salisbury in 807, and Americus Balistaurius is mentioned in the Close Rolls (thirteenth century). It has been conjectured that the stem is am, from which we get the name of Emma. The meaning of this is not known with certainty, though Ferguson thinks it may denote "strife" or "noise." Since, however, the name is probably of Gothic origin, and since the Amalungs were the royal race of the Ostrogoths, it is more likely that the stem is amal, which was formerly thought to mean "without spot," but is now more plausibly connected with the old Norse amal, labor, work. The suffix ric, cognate with rex, reich and rick, means "rich" or "powerful," and, therefore, the most probable signification of Amerigo is "strong for labor."—Isaac Taylor, in Notes and Queries.

A Profound Reflection.

"Grandpa," inquired Johnny Bliss, "must everybody die?"

"Yes, my child. Everyone in this world must die when his time comes."

"Well"—long pause—"what I'd like to know is, who'll bury the last man?"

A Frivolous Question.

A.—"How is it that you seem to be always in such good health?"

B.—"I make it a rule never to go to bed with a full stomach."

"Well, if your stomach is full, do you sit up all night with it?"

Two of Boston's Greatest Men.

Miss Wabash (from Chicago, to Boston friend whom she is visiting)—"I do want so much to see Mr. Lowell before I return."

Mrs. Culture (of Boston)—"How unfortunate that both Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Lowell are in Europe at this time."

It may interest the superstitious to note that both Gladstone and Bismarck were born on Friday. Of noted men of the past who came into the world on that day of the week may be mentioned Luther, Sir Isaac Newton George Washington and Winfield Scott.

—The man who says "I will" will succeed nine times, while the fellow who says "I'll try" fails once.

—General Booth, of the Salvation Army, has decided to send squads of his soldiers to Zululand and South America. Some of his forces have already reached Jerusalem, and the streets of the holy city resound with their "amens" and the jingle of their tambourines.

CURRENT TOPICS.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND sent back the deed for a corner lot presented him by his admirers in St. Paul, and it has taken two-thirds of the time of the good wives of Minneapolis to keep buttons sewed on the vests of tickled Minneapolitans.

WONG CHIN FOO, the naturalized Chinaman who was recently taxed $50 on the Canadian border by the Dominion Government, is in receipt of a letter from Secretary Bayard saying that he has forwarded Wong Chin's formal complaint to Minister Phelps in London, who will lay it before the British Government for explanations.

NATURAL gas has been known and extensively used in Asia and China for a long time. History tells us of a well in France in the time of Julius Cæsar. The first in the United States was in Charleston. The Taylor House, in Fredonia, N. Y., was illuminated in 1824 in honor of Lafayette. A few years ago a gas well was discovered in Ocean Spray, near Boston. The nature and efficiency of natural gas is but partly understood.

JOAQUIN MILLER has had a vast amount of trouble in his domestic affairs. Not long ago his favorite daughter married an actor against her father's will, and now "Hal" Miller, a son of the famous poet, is in jail in Nevada City for horse stealing. "Hal" is a young fellow not yet 18 years of age. He offers another illustration of the fact that his father's life has been one of verses and reverses.

THE first statue of Longfellow to be erected will be set up in Portland, Me., the poet's birthplace, and will be the work of Franklin Simmons, a Maine sculptor. The clay model has just been finished in Rome, and represents the poet in a sitting attitude, the right arm resting in an easy position on the back of a richly carved and ornamental chair, while the other is thrown carelessly forward on his lap and loosely holds a mass of manuscript.

M. PASTEUR, of France, has perfected a scheme which he thinks will result in the extermination of the pestiferous rabbits of Australia and New Zealand. He proposes to introduce chicken cholera among the animals by means of microbes. But who can establish the fact that the microbes will not be a greater nuisance than the rabbits? Chicken cholera microbes do not bear a very good general reputation. They might kill all the rabbits in Australia, but would they stop there?

IF the condensed breath collected on the cool window-panes of a room where a number of persons have been assembled be burned, a smell as of a singed hair will show the presence of organic matter; and, if the condensed breath be allowed to remain on the windows for a few days it will be found, on examination by microscope, that it is alive with animalculæ. The inhalation of air containing such putrescent matter causes untold complaints, which might be avoided by a circulation of fresh air.

THE Compulsory Education law in New York State is a failure. The Superintendent of Public Instruction gives two conclusive reasons for it. He says: "School trustees elected to supervise the schools, and serving without compensation, naturally object to being turned into constables and police officers for the purpose of apprehending delinquent children or the children of delinquent parents. Moreover, the schools are full." The number of children who attend the schools in New York as compared with the number entitled to attend has been decreasing since 1870.

MEN have often been driven to crime by hunger. Dr. Charles Bradley, formerly of Chicago, became a forger and thief through his passion for cocaine. A victim of the use of the drug, he reduced himself to poverty, lost a good practice, went to New York, and was the other morning placed in the hands of the police. His practice was to write letters from doctor to another, asking the loan of a hypodermic syringe and some cocaine for immediate use. His condition induced his committal to the penitentiary. The saddest part of the story is the fact that he made his wife and six children also victims of the drug.

NORTH CAROLINA takes the palm for negro mechanics. Within her border are to be found wholesale merchants, wholesale manufacturers and dealers in tobacco, architects, silversmiths, locksmiths, boot and shoe dealers and auctioneers. Stewart Ellis, of Raleigh, has filled a Government contract for carpentering on a building worth $300,000. W. C. Coleman, wholesale and retail merchant at Concord, owns several of the finest breed of horses in the State. Miss Drake, an Africo-American, of Nash, took the prize at all the State fairs for the best production of cotton. There are twenty individuals in the State worth from $10,000 to $30,000 each.

ACCORDING to recent experiments of MM. Haurlot and Richet, of which an account has been given to the French Academy of Sciences, the ventilation of the lungs is increased by muscular labor. In moderate work the ventilation is more than sufficient for the excretion of the carbonic acid produced, and above all for the absorption of the necessary oxygen. In hard work the proportions of carbonic acid produced and oxygen absorbed rise slightly the harder the work; but it is chiefly the proportion of carbonic acid which increases. During muscular exertion the ratio of carbonic acid produced to oxygen absorbed tends to become unity, although normally it is less than unity.

A NEW magazine rifle is to be adopted by the Italian army which seems in some respects quite as effective as the French arm. It is called the Freddi rifle, after its inventor, Capt. Freddi, who has just made known his invention. The rifle weighs but seven pounds four ounces; the bore is .315 calibre or a trifle larger than an ordinary lead-pencil; the bullet weighs but 225 grains, or half the weight of the Springfield bullet; the charge of powder is eighty-three grains, which is heavier than the Springfield, and the muzzle velocity is 1,640 feet a second, 300 feet greater than that of the Springfield. A soldier can carry 200 cartridges, which weigh but eleven pounds four ounces, and he can fire twenty-four rounds in a minute.

CARTER H. HARRISON, ex-Mayor of Chicago, writes from Japan that he is sorry that the women of that country have adopted the European style of dress. He says they might much better have chosen the costume worn by the ladies of China. I would like to build a wall around China," he says, "out of which no almond-eyed Celestial could escape, but I would be delighted if the costume of their ladies could be introduced among Western nations. We would then have our better halves dressed to please an artistic eye, without the present waste of female health and strength." Mr. Harrison does not mention "feet," but doubtless he does not wish the ladies of Chicago to follow the example of the Chinese belles in keeping down the size of their pedal extremities.

A TOPIC of no small importance from the standpoint of public health has been exercising the wits of the leading medical men of New York. The discussion began in an article in the Medical Record, which maintained that cholera was stopped by cold weather and that an epidemic at this time of the year would be impossible. Dr. Reginald H. Sayre, of New York, holds, on the contrary, that cholera is a scourge of which the march cannot be stayed by either cold or heat, dry or damp, and, in support of his views, he gives the dates of the various visitations from 1830 onwards. In that year it appeared at Moscow in October, and in 1831 in Great Britain in the same month, being most fatal in December. In March, 1832, it was at its worst in Paris, 861 persons dying in ten days. From these and other statistics Dr. Sayre argues that it is madness to trust to any notion of the cold season being less susceptible of its ravages. In matters of sanitation, indeed, there is only one safe principle, that is being always prepared, so far as human precautions can avail.

THE other day, Field-Marshal von Moltke delivered himself of the following opinion concerning the French and German armies. At a military gathering at Berlin, held in honor of the veteran's 87th birthday, he said: "The next war will be above all a war in which strategic science and the art of commanding will play the greatest part. Our campaigns and our victories have taught our enemies, who, like us, have numbers, armament and courage. Our strength will lie in the handling, in the commandment—in a word, in the head-quarter's staff, to which I have devoted the last days of my life. Our enemies may envy us this force, but they do not possess it." This speech, which is not over-modest, does not seem to have given any offence in France: at least one of our Paris contemporaries, after quoting it, simply observes: "If the opinion of M. de Moltke is correct, let us try to acquire the only quality in which, according to him, we are still wanting." Previous to the war of 1870-71 the French military attache at Berlin, Baron Stoffel, frequently warned his Government to beware of the Prussian staff. His warnings were disregarded. Will those of the old Field-Marshal meet with more serious consideration?

THE transmission from the cow to man of scarlet fever and tuberculosis was the subject of the opening address of Professor Hamilton at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in which the lecturer gave an excellent account of the investigations conducted by Mr. Power and Dr. Klein into the relation of a cow malady to scarlet fever in man. He referred also to the observations of Copland, who believed that both the dog and the horse could suffer from the latter affection, and stated that a febrile condition of some kind can be communicated to animals by inoculating them with the blood of persons who are the subjects of scarlet fever. He further expressed the opinion that tubercle could be conveyed to man by means of milk from tuberculous cows. While the possibility of such occurrence cannot be denied, it must be borne in mind that Klein has pointed out that there are certain important differences between bovine and human tuberculosis; and again, Creighton has shown that man occasionally suffers from a form of this disease which resembles the bovine malady, making it probable that by far the greater number of cases are not of bovine origin. Nevertheless, the subject deserves much greater investigation, and certainly every effort should be made to prevent the distribution of milk from turberculous cows.

A Lady's Outfit for Manitoba.

"Felix" in London Queen writes: The warmest of clothing will be requisite, the cold being intense the greater part of the year. Every article of dress should be made as simply as possible, dresses in thick woollen materials, and bodices sufficiently loose to enable plenty of wraps to be worn underneath, such as a knitted bodice; those in pine wool are warmest. Shetland veils, boots and shoes should be large enough also to allow of thick stockings, and woollen leggings even over these; nightdresses in flannel, and knitted night-socks; an indiarubber hot-water bag, and a good-sized square of mackintosh; some yards of flannel, thick-lined gloves, strong calico sheets, blankets and pillows—the latter are a comfort to have amongst the wraps on the long railway journeys. The midges are a real plague, and mosquito netting is useful to have. Do not forget to take a good supply of cottons, pins, hair-pins, tapes, stationery and all such etceteras—daily articles one is so accustomed to have at hand at home, and become a considerable inconvenience when unprocurable. Warm weather must also be considered, though of short duration. Some print dresses. Norfolk jacket bodices; as a better dress, black in alpaca, a washing silk or cashmere. A few pieces of unmade prints will be useful, a folding deck chair, plenty of wraps and some light literature.

An Oft-Worked Dodge.

Ex-millionaire—My son, you have ruined me.

Son—Have I?

"My whole fortune has been squandered in paying your debts."

"Haven't you any real estate you can mortgage?"

"Nothing. We must move next week to a rented house. I can no longer support you. You must go to work."

"Well, I'll go into politics."

"Papers which know your record will oppose you."

"That's all right. I'll claim they are opposing me because I am poor."

Ex-Senator Tabor, of Colorado, is said to have struck another gold bonanza near the Matchless mine at Leadville. The Matchless has already yielded $1,250,000, and the new mine gives promise of equaling its record.

CUTTING OUT CANCERS.

Cases of Especial Interest in View of the Crown Prince's Malady.

In the amphitheatre at the New York hospital the other day Professor R. F. Weir wore a long white operating gown, which reached almost to his feet, says the New York Sun. A square table, set on wheels, and having a shelf half way from the floor, bore a glass tray filled with a solution of carbolic. In this liquid lay the professor's instruments. "The case for operation to-day," said the professor to the 100 medical students and 25 doctors present, "are of peculiar interest, both being cases of epithelioma, which first attracted such general attention in the case of General Grant, and is at present creating great interest in the case of the Crown Prince of Germany. I have not studied the case of the prince so as to be able to criticise the diagnosis made in it, but one thing is certain, his case proves that we must not trust too much to microscopic tests. In his case several sections of the growth were examined, which, according to the microscopist, were non-malignant. Later sections were undoubtedly cancerous. We must judge for ourselves as to the advisability of operating, even when the microscopist pronounces it non-malignant." The professor signalled to his assistants, and they wheeled in a stretcher on which lay the patient. He was under the influence of ether. On his right cheek was the growth. It was about the size and shape of a big egg and looked like an ulcer. "Eighteen months ago," said the professor "a small pimple appeared on this man's cheek. It enlarged and he consulted a physician, who burned the growth with caustic. This treatment, according to modern authorities, is not good practice, as it irritates the tumor and promotes its growth. Within the last year it has grown to its present size." The patient's face had been carefully cleansed by the professor's assistants with a diluted solution of bichloride of mercury. "Give me a scalpel," said Prof. Weir, "a sharp one." Taking the knife handed him, he carefully cut out the tumor, removing about one quarter of an inch of healthy tissue on all sides of the growth, in order to thoroughly extirpate it. Each artery as it was severed was seized by a pair of self-clamping artery forceps, until six or eight pair were hanging to the wound. The big tumor was removed, together with a small section of the masseter muscle and a portion of the parotid gland, with which the tumor seemed to be incorporated. Some exfolliations on the molar bone were removed with a pair of forceps, and the cutting was dressed as an open wound, to bring the edges together would distort the mouth. Gauze or cheese cloth, impregnated with iodoform and covered with a mass of cotton retained by a bandage, completed the dressing, after which the patient was removed. Professor Weir retired to don a clean white gown, and then his second patient was brought in. He, too, was under the influence of ether. He had an epitheliomatous growth on the left side of his tongue. "This man," began the professor, "has confessed to the immoderate use of tobacco, but I do not believe that caused his trouble. Epithelioma seems to be contagious. Houses appear to become affected with it, as cases occur which can be explained in no other way. We know two or more members of the same family become victims to this disease, when there is no previous history of the malady in the family, and the only reasonable explanation of the theory is contagion. Two years ago this patient bit his tongue, and this cancer seems to have developed from the wound." A stout silk ligature was passed through each side of the tongue by means of curved needles. Then the tongue was pulled forward by the silk threads by an assistant. The professor made a small incision down the middle of the tongue. He then tore the tongue with his fingers down nearly to the base, as if it were a piece of cloth. He cut off the half which contained the tumor. As quickly as possible the severed arteries were seized and tied up with strong silk ligatures. After passing a stout silk cord through the stump so as to enable him to control it in case of secondary hemorrhages, the professor skilfully cut off the other half of the tongue and also tied up the arteries. This patient, he said, would have had the same lingering death as General Grant if the cancer had not been removed, as it was increasing in size, and would in time have eaten away the tongue and throat.

A Vexatious Tax in Paris.

One of the greatest impositions in Paris is the octroi or duty on eatables and drinkables collected at the various barriers or gates. As each market-cart passes through the fortifications in the morning it is stopped and a small tax charged on each and every article brought into Paris. The same system is vigorously practiced for all articles going out of Paris. The suburbs are now composed of some dozen townships lying outside of the fortifications, and numerous straggling villages which extend for miles around Paris. Each of these places has its barrier and custom house. An English friend of mine, recently settled here, had a dreadful experience with this system yesterday. He lives at Connelles, a suburb some three miles out of the city proper, and to reach which he is obliged to pass through six different townships. He had purchased at an English butcher's, on Rue Sainte Honore, a leg of Southdown mutton as a treat for his wife. He was stopped at each of the six custom houses on his way home, and was obliged to pay a sum equivalent to 10 cents every time on the unfortunate leg of mutton.—New York World.

Mme. Grevy thinks that her husband and son-in-law are the victims of a political conspiracy.

A lady in Milton, Pa., who was accosted by a rascal just at dusk the other evening, defended herself in a novel way. She was returning from marketing and had in her basket a piece of bologna sausage, which she pointed at the fellow, crying out, "You scoundrel, if you touch me I'll shoot you." Supposing it was a pistol she had, the man took to his heels.

Professor Wiggins has returned to the prophetic business. He is of opinion that there will not be a recurrence in North America of the disastrous earthquakes of the Southern States and Central America before the year 1900. He cannot say the same of Europe and the Far East.

A WASTED LIFE.

The Old Man Who Heard a Song in the Night and Thought of Mother.

In the quiet waiting room of the Grand Trunk depot in Lewiston sat a gray whiskered old fellow in a broad-brimmed hat. He had been studying a time-table with some perplexity and had just laid it aside. A question from him relative to the starting of the trains for Oxford county was introduction enough. His voice was hoarse, but not unpleasant. His inflection was odd. Being a Down Easter, it was safe for the writer to guess that the stranger was from the West.

"From the West?"

"You bet," was the reply.

"Going to Oxford County?"

"That's where I'm going."

Conversation was desultory until the Westerner opened up.

Said he, "It's thirty-two years since I see the hills of Maine. I was raised up in old Oxford County. I reckon I ain't thought o' these hills since I were a boy in copper-toed boots with a good old daddy—too good, God bless him, for nary such a youngster as I were, I left home when I was 16 and went out West, then I came back and went to sea. I coasted eight years and in '55 went on a deep-sea voyage and brought up in California. I've been there ever since. Have come back now."

"Alone?"

"Alone? Yes, alone! That's the bother of it, my boy. Nary a darned soul there nor here as I know of that cares whether I get here or not—a lonesome old man. Don't you do it. Take my word for it, it's awful. For thirty-five years nothing to think of but work and dig and dive. No wife. Never had none. No friends, except boys in the diggings when I first went there, and in town where I've been runnin' a little business of my own for the past eight years. Nothing ahead of me for the past twenty years but getting rich. No letters from anybody as I knows of. Nothing in my dreams but money. Nothing else in the visions of the mountain peaks, nothing else in the changin' surface of the Pacific whenever I've caught a glimpse of it. I've been a sordid, mean, low-lived skinflint part o' the time, and a roisterin', tearin' fellow rest of it. Lookin' back it makes a lump in my throat, boy, it do honest, and I agree that a wasted life is the awfullest thing beneath the canopy of blue. It makes me sick. I don't like to think of it, I like to talk, ye see, to keep away from thinking of it.

"Goin' back to the old place?"

"The old place?" Eh! Yes, the old place. Leastwise that's what I reckon on. What do you suppose made me? Hadn't thought o' home for forty-five years. Hadn't been to church any to speak of. It were only just a song as did it. A little old fashioned song that I heard in the evening, three months ago 'bout a mother who wanted to know where her wanderin' boy was. It came up out o' the night way off there beyond the mountains and I thought of my old mother. God bless her, and of the old place. I couldn't sleep for a cent that night. I turned and twisted and sweat great drops. I kept thinkin' about home and about all I'd ever read or heard about it. Seems as though I could see the old lady's face looking into mine, with eyes full of love, as good as she did when I was a kid. I thought it over for a day or two. Life didn't look half so rosy out there. Fact is I wanted to go home, just home, nowhere else, and you bet I started when I made up my mind. I think I only kind o' want to see the grave of my mother and fix up the family lot, you know, and, do you know, my boy, I been sort o' holdin' on to have a good cry (somethin' I ain't known for thirty years), and when I'm done with that, and when I've shied around and seen all I want to of the old place, I'm goin' to Boston and see a brother of mine, and go back again beyond the Rockies and die there with my face toward the East. I could afford to do it and I ain't the sort to be ashamed of it. Le' me tell you one thing, though—all of life and all its gold ain't worth the loss of your mother's love. Put that down to keep; for if you was me you would be able to prove it, and wouldn't run any risk of being lured away from it by any of the other things of earth. It's the best thing the Lord gives us, and the last thing, I'm thinkin', He ought to take away."—Lewiston Journal.

How the Sparrows Keep Warm.

How do the sparrows keep warm these nights? From the way they chatter in the trees and about the leaves, it may be supposed that they have comfortable nights somewhere. But sometimes they make a bold and desperate shift. A citizen says that one evening while passing a pole upon which a number of fowls roosted, he was surprised to see several sparrows fly away from the roost. Not fully satisfied with his conclusion—that the birds were roosting under shelter of the fowls—he stepped behind a board fence to watch for a verification. Presently the birds began to return and alight within a few feet of the roost; then one, with more courage than any of the others, flew over and alighted squarely on the back of a large rooster, and a moment later disappeared between the feathers of the rooster and a hen at his side. Soon the other sparrows began to settle between the fowls, and in a short time all had found a warm shelter from the storm, and protection from noxious animals beneath the soft feathers of the good-natured fowls. —London Free Press.

Lord Dufferin's Gift to the Shah.

From Teheran comes the news of the arrival of an elephant from India as a present from Lord Dufferin to the Shah of Persia. The animal is described as a very fine one, handsomely caparisoned and attended by some thirty Hindoos. This, insinuates a Tiflis newspaper, is not the only English gift and attempt to curry favor with the Persian Court which has lately been made by the English. In view of the Shah's recall of his late Minister and another functionary from exile, into which they were sent for conniving at the escape of Ayoub Khan, and the bestowal of honors upon them on their return to Teheran, these English presents do not seem to have much effect.—London Times.

P. T. Barnum says that his favorite novel is "Ivanhoe." He is, of course, especially interested in the scene which describes the burning of Front-de-Bœuf's castle.

CHINESE MASONS.

A Curious Lodge of them in New York City.

(New York World.)

Old Masons were, until late, of the opinion that no such a thing as a Chinese Mason existed. One gentleman said he had seen Arabs and Turks who were good Masons, but to the best of his knowledge, no Chinaman was in the Order. Nevertheless, there are not only Chinese Masons, but right here in New York there is a Chinese Masonic lodge in full blast with a membership of over three hundred. It is a native organization, not allied directly to the Free and Accepted Masons, but said to be founded on principles very nearly akin. The lodge-room is at No. 18 Mott street, second floor, front, and has recently been remodelled and refitted in very good shape, all newly painted and cleaned. The lodge furniture is of Chinese design, and imported from China expressly for the society at a great expense. A tall flagstaff with a rope for running up colors is on top of the building. Above the door as one enters the lodge-room is a red sign in native characters signifying "Chinese Masonic Society," and down the sides are two long slips of red paper bearing mottoes. One of these is "Do good to one another," and the other relates to the business of the Order. The interior is like most Chinese quarters, only lighter, and not full of odd turns and unsuspected corners. Immediately on entering one is led into a sort of ante-room and thence into the main or lodge-room. At the lower end of this room is the altar, and a very valuable one it is, costing in China $1,500. Above it is an alcove in which a colored drawing is suspended. It is not the least curious thing in the place, the design being three figures, one seated and two others bending over his shoulder. The seated figure represents the venerable father of Chinese Masonry. The face is heavy, placid and adorned with a long black beard. The other two are respectively the spirits of light and darkness, who are supposed to be giving him counsel. In front of the altar a lamp is hung. It is never extinguished, and burns in commemoration of the dead of the Order. Another emblem is two sticks of sandal-wood punk thrust into a box of sand. They keep smouldering away and fill the air with a faint but sweet perfume. On the wall is a long board, and on this are pasted a great number of sheets of paper covered with Chinese hieroglyphics. These are the lists of members voted on in the New York lodge. Near the roster hang two books. One of these is sent out from the Supreme Lodge at San Francisco, and gives a detailed account of a number of cases of those in distress and sickness, and the whereabouts of each one who needs help. The other is a subscription book in which the various amounts subscribed are entered. At intervals these two books and the amount raised are transmitted to the Supreme Lodge, from which the dependent members are relieved. Meetings are not held upon regular nights, but at intervals decided upon by the dignitaries of the Order, as the necessities of business may demand. The members are notified of meetings, held generally on Sunday nights, by the appearance of a triangular flag at the top of the pole on top of the house. This flag is white and bears the picture of a huge red dragon with its tail towards the point. There are grips, signs and passwords exactly as in an American lodge. "The travelling card" of this society is quite a curiosity in itself. It is a square of red silk inscribed with Chinese characters, and is a document highly prized by all its possessors.

Perilous Work on Great Bridges.

"In a lecture given at Dundee, Scotland, Mr. Baker, one of the Forth Bridge engineers, tells a fine story of modern heroism," says the St. James' Gazette: "Six men were one day working at the bridge, standing on a plank 140 feet above the sea level. One of the hooks supporting the plank gave way. With great presence of mind three of the men sprang at the steel works of the bridge and held on; a fourth dived, was rescued, and, it may be added incidentally, almost immediately resumed work. Of the three hanging to the steel work by the arms, two were in particular danger; yet when the rescue party reached the first of them, all he said was, 'I can hold on; go to the other man; he is dazed.' In all, thirty-five men lost their lives during the five years the bridge has been building, and 2,300 is the average number of workmen employed at a time. Mr. Baker says that though many superior workmen were needed, there was no lack of them. As for the magnitude of the undertaking, 'as a grenadier guardsman is to a new-born infant, so is the Forth Bridge to the largest bridge yet built in Great Britain.'"

Some Natural Differences.

Between France and England there is as much difference as between a man and a woman—both capital in their own way, and neither understanding the other. Frenchmen imitate Englishmen; Englishwomen copy Frenchwomen. Frenchmen drink coffee and eat veal; Englishmen drink tea and eat beef. France has but one religion; Frenchmen are prepared to die for it, but refuse to live up to it. In England we have 365 different religions—and practise them all—on Sundays. French newspapers fill their columns with romances; English newspapers fill theirs with facts. Frenchmen marry their daughters by contract; we marry ours by auction—to the highest bidder. These are but a few and the less important of the contradictory characteristics that exist between the two nations. It is not, therefore, surprising that constant petty disagreements should occur, any one of which might, if not treated with straightforwardness and tact, lead to deplorable results. Like lovers' quarrels, what begins in a pout may end in a bout.—Vanity Fair (London).

Rev. F. W. Warne, of the late Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Church of Canada, now of Austin, Ill., Conference, and son-in-law of the Rev. T. M. Jefferis, Niagara Conference, has been appointed by the Board of Foreign Missions of the M. E. Church, U. S., to Calcutta, India.

Prof. Bell has constructed a machine on the general principles of the typewriter, for facilitating conversation with deaf mutes.

Premier and Madame Mercier have returned to Montreal from Quebec. The Premier is still very ill, and it is expected that he will have to take a trip south.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance $1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, DEC. 15, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Thornbury Standard calls J.B. Watson the "Henry Ward Beecher of Canada." If there is such a marked similarity between the great Brooklyn preacher and Mr. Watson, as the Standard intimates, then all THE ADVANCE has got to say about it is, that its opinion of the late Mr. Beecher has undergone a mighty big change.

The Forestry Report for 1886, compiled at the instance of the Ontario Government, by Mr. R. W. Phipps, of Toronto, has been received. It is a very interesting pamphlet and contains a great amount of practical information. Next week we will give a synopsis of contents. In the meantime, those desiring to secure a copy free of charge, can do so by simply sending their name and Post Office address to Mr. R. W. Phipps, 283 Richmond street, Toronto.

There was heaps of excitement in Dundalk last week. A drunk was run into the famous lock-up there. The lock-up has two cells and a front room where the stove is kept. It is possible that the drunk thought his last day had come when he was thrust into one of those cells: it reminded him of a coffin, no doubt, and this was possibly the reason he didn't attempt to make his escape by means of the stove-pipe hole. Then a poor Italian, who couldn't speak a dozen words of intelligible English, was immured in one of the dungeons. Here the philanthropic Artist of the Herald found the drunk and attempted to carry on a conversation with him. He succeeded. The Italian occupied his cell only a short time. He didn't have time enough to cut a little out of the wall with a jacknife and thereby effect his escape. The drunk remained some time in durance vile. When meal time arrived the Chief Constable unlocked the outer door, squeezed past the stove, opened the door of the cell, dragged forth the inmate and escorted him to the hotel, where the prisoner fared sumptuously and was afterwards brought back to his cell. This operation was repeated as often as the "drunk got hungry or wanted to "go out and see a man."

A number of blackboard sketches appeared in last week's Dundalk Herald, in connection with a batch of dog tax "Court Notes." No. 1 was composed of a series of hieroglyphics, supposed to represent the Chief Constable in the act of slaughtering a tagless dog. The dog looked sick, and the man had an unearthly looking grin on his face. No. 2 looked, at first sight, like an overgrown cabbage. A closer inspection—aided by the capital letters underneath—revealed the fact that this was supposed to be a good picture of John Hagan's dog. John ought to club the artist and then shoot his dog—that is, if the picture is anything like his dog—or, rather, if his dog resembles the picture. No. 3 looks like a full grown John Thomas cat in the act of serenading his Mariar. But the reading matter below informs us that it is a big Newfoundland dog! Thus are the idle phantasies of the brain disillusioned. No. 4 represented a dog in the act of walking off with a building attached to his neck—probably the lock-up! This is designated, "Harry Ball's Pup." It is decidedly wrong to insinuate anything or harbor suspicions in one's mind. But it does occur to us that our friend of the Herald wanted to get that lock-up for a wood-shed. Did he hire "Harry Ball's Pup" and hitch him to the—but no! we won't insinuate and we will crush those suspicions under our heel!

"Miss Mythology" applies "Styx" to to editorial back this week with considerable effect. It shows that she is an observant young lady, who does not hesitate to haul forth the encyclopaedia on extraordinary occasions, and proceed to make the unfortunate commentator feel like crawling into a key-hole and drawing the hole in after him. We admire Miss Mythology's letter. It is cleverly written and seemingly puts the Editor in a hot corner of the world—so to speak. We did not want our readers to think that we intended becoming an angel of darkness some day. Quite the contrary. But along comes Miss Mythology with her 'cyclopaedia and the climate becomes too sulphurous for us altogether. We retreat. We think. Happy thought! It suddenly occurs to us to haul forth our 80-ton encyclopaedia and go on a "Styx" hunting pedition. We did so, and found that there was actually a waterfall and cataract of that name in ancient Greece; it still exists but is known by another name. It was regarded with superstitious awe by the Greeks. Then we find in mythology that the "Styx" was a river of Hades, over which Charon conveyed the shades of the departed. Miss "Mythology" substitutes "Hell" for "Hades," which is wrong, as Hades, in Greek mythology, "was the god of the lower world, more commonly spoken of as Pluto." Of course the name was also given to his kingdom, but "devil" or "hell" is not even hinted at. Nevertheless our fair correspondent has taught us the necessity for exercising more care in this particular department of THE ADVANCE, or we'll get scorched sure. Verily we are singed as it is!

L.C.A. OF EAST GREY.

The annual meeting of the Conservative Association for East Grey was held in Markdale on Friday last, 9th inst., when the following were elected officers for the current year, viz., Wm. McLaughry, President; Dr. Oldham, Vice President; Adam Turner, Recording Secretary; James Brodie, Treasurer; James Lamon, Corresponding Secretary for Southern Division, and Alex. Erskine, Corresponding Secretary for Northern Division; Nicholas Reid, Vice-President of St. Vincent; James Patterson, Vice-President of Meaford; S. Hislop, Vice-President of Collingwood; Thos. Lowe, Vice President of Thornbury; Wm. Norton, Vice President of Holland; A. B. Fawcett, Vice President of Artemesia; John Sparrow, Vice President of Sullivan; Wm. Brady, Vice President of Euphrasia; John Clinton Vice President of Osprey; Dr. Barr, Vice President of Melancthon; Samuel Edgerton, Vice President of Proton; R. Cornell, Vice President of Dundalk; C. W. Rutledge and J. Foster, Auditors.

Votes of confidence in Dr. Sproule, M.P. for East Grey and Major Rorke, M.P.P. for Centre Grey were carried unanimously. The former was absent attending the New Division Court meeting in Owen Sound, but Major Rorke made a brief and very happy speech on behalf of the Dr. and himself by way of reply. A hearty and unanimous vote of thanks was then tendered the retiring officers of the Association, to which Mr. Kells and Mr. Lyons very gracefully replied. The meeting passed off harmoniously, after which all adjourned to the spacious dining-room of the Marsh hotel and did ample justice to a bountiful spread of good things, provided through the hospitable instrumentality of Dr. Sproule, M.P.

The Cheapest Morning Paper in Canada.

The Toronto World is now the leading paper of that city. It is a bright and newsy sheet and should have widespread patronage. It gives all the news of the day in concise form, free from bias. Write to them for their Special Terms. Address, The World, Toronto.

Why You Feel

So weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As well expect the sanitary condition of a city to be perfect with defiled water and defective sewerage, as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest veins. Do you know that every drop of your two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a [illegible] minutes, and that, on its way, it [illegible]s bone and muscle, brain and nerve and all other solids and fluids of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the Bible terms it,

"The Life of the Body."

Is it any wonder, then, that if the blood be not pure and perfect in its constituents, you suffer so many indescribable symptoms?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands "head and shoulders" above every other Alterative and Blood Medicine. As proof, read these reliable testimonies:

G. C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: "For the past 25 years I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In my opinion, the best remedial agencies for the cure of all the diseases arising from impurities of the blood are contained in this medicine."

Eugene I. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: "As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It gives perfect satisfaction."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally efficacious in all forms of Scrofula, Boils, Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c.; and is, therefore, the very best

Spring and Family Medicine

in use. "It beats all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

does sell." Prepared by

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

A beautiful stock of Xmas Cards at Russell's, Flesherton, at very low prices, don't fail to see them.

He Had Bad Luck.

"Hello, Jack. Back from Florida, I see."

"Yes, and I had plenty of sport shooting alligators.

"Did you shoot any sharks?"

"Not quite. I shot at a real estate agent and crippled a lawyer, but I didn't kill either of them."

A beautiful stock of Xmas Cards at Russell's, Flesherton, at very low prices, don't fail to see them.

NASAL BALM.—Deafness caused by Catarrh is quickly relieved by Nasal Balm. Headache caused by Catarrh is quickly cured by Nasal Balm.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOUND.

ON Flesherton Show Fair Day, a Pocket Book containing a sum of Money. Owner can have same by proving property and paying for this advertisement, on application at ADVANCE Office.

WANTED!

A quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery. JOS. McCORMICK, Flesherton.

STRAY STEER.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 3, Con. 13, Osprey, about 1st of October, one red and white yearling Steer. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

WM. PAUL,
Lady Bank P.O.

Nov. 24th, 1887.

GRIP

CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.

J. W. BENGOUGH, Artist and Editor.

ISSUED WEEKLY.

$2 a Year; $1 for 6 Months.

GRIP is increasing in influence and popularity every year! It is a supreme household favorite, while every Politician and Professional and Business Man enjoys the clever hits which appear in every issue. Subscribe now!

See our Premium and Clubbing List. Circulars giving full particulars sent free.

Look out for Grip's Comic Almanac for 1888. Price 10 cents.

ADDRESS,

GRIP PUBLISHING CO.

TORONTO, ONT.

Commercial Union

—— Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of——

FURNITURE! —AT— J. W. BATES'.

It is Good Goods at Low Prices that tells and has told for the last seven years. This season I am in a position to give both old and new Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Designs.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business:

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, Gents Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $80.00. A beauty for $14.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $5.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $1.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.35.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 35 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

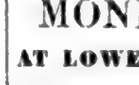
M.C.P. & S., Ont.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AG'T, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

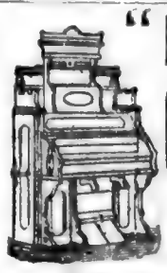
GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

Flesherton Station Mill.

The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. GEORGE MOOREHOUSE, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.

FLESHERTON ONT.

CHRISTMAS '87

Christmas comes but once a year, and when it comes it brings good cheer,

And in order that their numerous customers may realize this

M. RICHARDSON & CO.

Will offer their Immense stock, consisting of every requisite for the Christmas and Holiday Trade at Prices which will challenge competition. They therefore adrise their patrons to anticipate their wants by losing no time in paying them a visit.

Rare Bargains in

FLANNELS,

QUILTS,

BLANKETS,

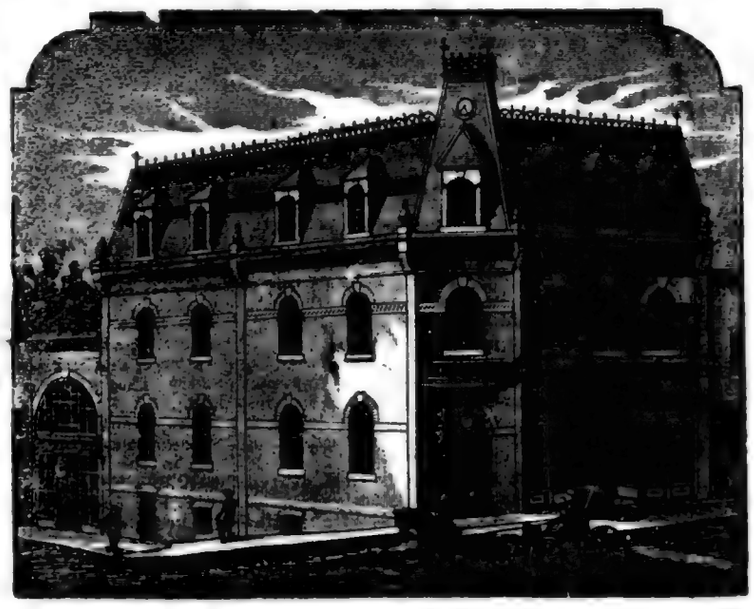
COMFORTERS,

AND CRETONNES!

SPECIAL DRIVES IN

GREY AND WHITE COTTONS!

Call at once and see we are alive to the necessity of meeting the wishes of the public.



A Complete Range of

SILK SQUARES & HANDKERCHIEFS,

COLLARS & CUFFS,

SCARFS & GLOVES,

SHIRTS & BRACES,

GENTS HOSIERY.

LADIES' HOSIERY,

AND UNDERWEAR

Dress Goods & Dress Trimmings.

A WONDERFUL STOCK OF DRESS GOODS

Consisting of Costume Cloths, Serges, Cashmeres in blacks and colors, Meltons and Combinations Goods, and Dress Trimmings in Buttons, Braids, Silk Plushes, plain, striped and checked to match. As regards amount of stock, extent of variety and lowness of price, ocular demonstration is needed.

MANTLE DEPARTMENT.

Mantles, Shawls, Costumes, Capes, Ladies' Fur Caps, Fur Mantles, Water Proofs, and Misses Skating, Tobogganing and Winter Costumes. Our stock is large and should be inspected by economical buyers.

OUR TWEED & CLOTH DEPARTMENT

Is most extensive, comprising Canadian, Scotch and English Tweeds, Worsted Suitings, Broads, and Overcoatings, Suits to order guaranteed to give every satisfaction to the wearer. Hundreds of patterns to select from. Our Low Price Canadian Cloths, Heavy, Plain and Checked Etoffes, and Full Cloths are in great demand the price being as Low as the Lowest.

READY-MADE CLOTHING DEPARTMENT.

Suits ready-made for Men and Boys in Tweeds and Worsteds from the Best Makers. We feel confident to be such as will meet with the entire approval of the purchaser. Beyond question we have the cheapest and best selected stock of ready-made goods we have ever shewn. OVERCOATS, OVERCOATS, for Men and Boys, Buy Cheap and Save Money. See our stock.

HATS AND CAPS.

Dress Hats, Felt Hats, Tweed Hats in the latest styles. Mens and Boys Fur, Knit and Cloth Caps of every description, very cheap. Mens Astrachan and Persian Lamb Caps, and Mens Fur Coats (Corsican Lamb, beautiful curl) at the most moderate prices.

MILLINERY

Stock now replete with all the Novelties and Newest Goods of the Season. Hats in great variety, Ribbons, Laces, Feathers, Ornaments, &c., a superb collection. Jerseys a specialty. Fancy Facinators. Knitted Wool Shawls & Hoods in all the best colors. Come and inspect. MISS MAUD RICHARDSON thinks no trouble to show goods.

BOOTS & SHOES.

Our stock is large and well assorted. Mens and Boys Felt Boots, Felt Sox and Rubbers and Overshoes in all sizes. Also a fine range of Womens, Misses and Childrens Overshoes—See our very comfortable and neat-fitting Cardigan Overshoes in Womens, Misses & Childrens sizes—just the thing for deep snow and inclement weather.

GROCERIES! GROCERIES!

Teas! TEAS! TEAS!—Just to hand another large consignment of our famous Nagesagu Japan, New Season and Better Value than ever. For Cheap Sugars and Christmas Fruits and Spices, visit our Grocery Counter.

HARDWARE.

Stock well assorted to meet the requirements of the public. AXES AND CROSSCUT SAWS in the various makes and at Lowest Prices. Special quotations given for Builder's Hardware and particular attention paid to everything in this line.

COAL OIL and fine Wingham Salt—Wholesale and Retail.

CHINA HALL. CHINA HALL

Last but not least—Our China Hall is more attractive than ever. The fixtures & tables are loaded with Christmas, New Years, and Wedding Presents, consisting of Electro-Plate Ivory-Handled Knives and Forks, Carvers, Silver Tea, Desert and Table Spoons and Forks Glassware in all the newest and prettiest designs. Lamps and Lamp Goods, in great variety Tea and Dinner sets in plain and printed Stoneware, and Fancy Chinaware—choice patterns at low prices. China Statuettes, Hand Painted Satin Glass Vases, Moss setts, Amber and Ruby setts, Opal setts, Berry sets, Ruby Rosina Water sets, and hundreds of Fancy Articles which we cannot here enumerate

"MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL."

M. RICHARDSON & CO.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

And he learnt yet another thing, as his anger slowly burnt itself out and only profound wretchedness and intolerable suspense remained as to his wife's fate—something that startled him with a sense of sweetness, and yet stung him with infinite pain; when the haunting presence of his lost wife seemed ever with him and would not let him rest; when his remorse was terrible; and when he would have given up all he had in the world just to hear her say in her low fond voice that she forgave him all.

For he knew now that he had wronged her and that his neglect and coldness had driven her from her home.

The uncertainty of her fate sometimes nearly drove him wild. How could she have laid her plans so accurately that no traces of her and the child could be found? Could evil have befallen them? God help him if a hair of those innocent heads had been touched. In his weakness he could not always control the horrible imaginations that beset him. Often he would wake from some ghastly dream and lie till dawn, unable to shake off his deadly terror. Then all of a sudden he would remember that hasty postscript, "Do not be anxious about me. I am going to some kind people who will be good to me and the boy;" and he would fall asleep again while vainly trying to recall if he had ever heard Fay speak of any friends of her childhood. But though Erle and Miss Mordaunt tried to help him, no name occurred to any of them.

It was an added burden to him that Erle could not come to him; but there was trouble in Belgrave House, and the shadows were closing round it. Erle could not leave his uncle, but wrote very kindly to poor conscience-stricken Hugh, and said all he could to comfort him.

It was in those hours of dreary helplessness that Hugh learnt to miss his Wee Wifie. In those long summer afternoons, while his foreign nurse nodded drowsily beside him, and the hot air crept sluggishly in at the open window, how he longed for the small cool hand that used to be laid so softly on his temples, or put the drink to his parched lips before they could frame their want. He remembered the hours she had sat beside him, fanning the flies from his pillow or bathing his aching head. She had never left him—never seemed tired or impatient, though her face had grown so pale with watching. Others would have spared her; others told him that she was spent and weary, but he had never noticed it. "And, brute that I was," he thought, "I left her alone in her trouble with only strangers and hirelings about her, to fight her way through the very Valley of the Shadow of Death." He took out her letter and smoothed it out—it was a trick of his when he thought no one would see him. He had read it over until he knew it off by heart. Ah! if Heaven would but spare him this once and give him back the strength he had misused, that he might find her, poor child, and bring her home, and comfort her as only he could comfort her. He would love her now, he thought; yes, if she would only bear with him and give him time, he knew from the deep pity and tenderness which he felt that he would love her yet, for the merciful Providence that had laid the erring man low was teaching him lessons that no other discipline could have inculcated.

The cold December wind was whirling through the bare branches of the oaks and beeches in the Redmond avenue when Sir Hugh came home, a changed and saddened man.

Yes, changed outwardly as well as inwardly. Good Mrs. Heron cried when she saw him enter the hall on Saville's arm, looking so thin and worn and leaning on his stick.

His youth seemed to have passed away; his smooth forehead was already furrowed like that of a middle-aged man, and his fair hair had worn off it slightly, making him look ten years older; and yet there was that in Hugh Redmond's face, if Margaret could have seen it, that would have filled her pure heart with exceeding thankfulness.

For though the pallor caused by suffering was still there, and those who saw him said that Sir Hugh was a broken man, yet there was a nobler expression than it had ever worn in happier days. The old fretful lines around the mouth were gone; and, though the eyes looked sadly round at the old familiar faces, as though missing the truest and best, still, there was a chastened gravity about his whole mien that spoke of a new and earnest purpose; of a heart so humbled at last that it had fled to its best refuge, and had found strength in the time of need.

Many years afterwards he owned, to one who was ever his closest friend, that a whole lifetime of suffering had been compressed into those few short years that had followed his father's death. The whole plan and purpose of his youth had been marred; his heart wasted by a passion that was denied satisfaction; and lastly, just as he was beginning to turn to his neglected wife with a sympathy and interest that promised well for her future happiness, suddenly he found his name outraged and his home forsaken, and the load and terror of an unbearable remorse laid heavily upon him.

That was a strange winter to Hugh Redmond—the strangest and saddest he had ever passed; when he spent long, solitary days in the old Hall; and only Erle—generous, kind-hearted Erle—came now and then to break his solitude.

Ah! he missed her then.

Sometimes, as he wandered disconsolately through the empty rooms, or sat by his lonely fireside in the twilight, the fancy would haunt him that she would come back to him yet—that the door would open, and a little figure come stealing through the darkness and run into his arms with a low, glad cry. And sometimes, when he stood in her room and saw the empty cot over which she used to hang so fondly, a longing would seize him for the boy whom he had never held in his arms.

By and by when the spring returned, some of his old strength and vigor came back, and he was able to join personally in the search, when a new zest and excitement seemed added to his life; and in the ardor of the chase he learnt to forget Margaret and the shadows of a too sorrowful past.

When the sweet face of his Wee Wifie seemed to lure him on, with the sad Undine eyes that he remembered so well; when, with the contrariety of man ever eager for the unattainable, he began to long more and more to see her; when his anger revived and impatience with it. And, though hardly owned it to himself, both anger and impatience were born of love.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

VANITAS VANITATIS.

And is there in God's world so drear a place,
Where the loud bitter cry is raised in vain;
Where tears of penance come too late for grace,
As on the uprooted flower the genial rain
Keble.

St Luke's little summer was over, the ripe golden days that October binds in her sheaf, the richest and rarest of the year's harvest, had been followed by chill fogs—dull sullen days—during which flaring gaslights burnt in Mrs. Watkins' shop even at noonday, and Fern's busy fingers, never willingly idle, worked by the light of a lamp long before the muffin boy and milkman made their afternoon rounds in Elysian Fields.

Anything farther removed from the typical idea of the Elysian Fields could scarcely be imagined than on such an afternoon. It was difficult, even for a light-hearted person, to maintain a uniform cheerfulness where damp exuded everywhere, and the moist thick air seemed to close round one in vaporous folds. Somewhere, no doubt, the sun was shining, and might possibly shine again; but it was hard to realize it—hard to maintain outward or inward geniality under such depressing circumstances.

Fern had turned from the window with an involuntary shudder. Then she lighted her lamp, stirred the fire, and sat down to her embroidery. As her needle flew through the canvas her lips seemed to close with an expression of patient sadness. There were sorrowful curves that no one ever saw, for Fern kept all her thoughts to herself.

Never since the night when she had sobbed out her grief on her mother's bosom, when the utterance of her girlish despair and longing had filled that mother's heart with dismay, never since then had Fern spoken of her trouble. "We will never talk of it again," she had said, when the outburst was over; "it will do no good;" and her mother had sorrowfully acquiesced.

Mrs. Trafford knew that only time, that beneficent healer, could deaden her child's pain. Fern's gentle nature was capable of quiet but intense feeling. Nea's faithful and ardent affections were reproduced in her child. It was not only the loss of her girlish dreams over which Fern mourned. Her woman's love had unconsciously rooted itself, and could not be torn up without suffering. An unerring instinct told her that Erle had not always been indifferent to her; that once, not so very long ago, his friendship had been true and deep. Well, she had forgiven his fickleness. No bitterness rankled in his heart against him. He had been very kind to her; he would not wish her to be unhappy.

But she was very brave. She would not look at the future. The cold blankness, the narrow groove, would have chilled her heart. She only took each day as it came, and tried to do her best with it.

With her usual unselfishness she determined that no one else should suffer through her unhappiness. Her mother's brief hours of rest should be unshadowed. It was a pale little sunbeam whose smiles greeted her of an evening; but it was still a sunbeam. The sweet looks and words and loving attention were still always ready. As Nea watched her child her heart would swell with pride and reverence. She recognised the innate strength and power of self-sacrifice that Maurice had left her as his legacy. "Of all my children, Fern is most like her father," Mrs Trafford would say; "she is stronger than she looks—she would rather die than tell me again that she is unhappy."

But Fern would not have owned that her life was unhappy as long as she had her mother to love her. She was taking herself to task this afternoon as she sat alone—for Fluff had escaped as usual to Mrs. Watkins'—and was blaming herself for her discontent; and then she sang very softly a verse of her favorite hymn—

He that thou blessest is our good,
And unblest good is ill,
And all is right that seems most wrong
If it be Thy sweet will.

but almost before she had finished the last line, she was startled by her brother's abrupt entrance.

"Percy! oh, I did not hear you," she faltered, and she turned a little pale, and her heart began to beat more quickly. It was foolish of her, but she never heard Percy's step without listening involuntarily for the quick light tread that used to follow it, but that never came now.

"You are alone," he said quickly, with a keen glance round the room. "Well, it is best, because I wanted to speak to you. Have you heard from Miss Davenport lately, Fern?"

"Yes," she stammered, raising her soft eyes to his face with a pitying expression; "I had a letter the other day."

"Well," impatiently, "does she say when they are coming back?"

"In another fortnight—at least they mean to start then;" and there she stopped, and looked at him very piteously. "How I wish mother would come; she will not be very long, and—and I would rather that you heard it from her."

"Do you mean that you have anything special to tell me?" he asked, struck by her manner.

"Oh, I wish you had not asked me," she returned, clasping her hands; "you are so fond of Crystal, and it will make you terribly unhappy; but mother said we ought to tell you, Percy, dear. There was never any hope for you—you know she always told you so; and now Crystal is married."

"Married!" he almost shouted, and his handsome young face seemed to grow sharp and pale. "Married! Pshaw! you are jesting, Fern."

"Dear Percy," she answered, gently, "do you think I would jest with you on such a subject. Indeed—indeed it is true. She was married some ten days ago to Mr. Ferrers, the blind clergyman, who was staying at Belgrave House. He had come there to look for her. He had known her from a child, and they had long loved each other."

"Married!" he repeated, in the same dull, hard voice, and there was something in his face that made Fern throw her arms round his neck.

"Oh, it is hard," she sobbed; "I know how hard it is for you to hear me say this, but it has to be faced. She never deceived you, dear—she never let you hope for a single moment; she was always true to herself and you. Try to bear it, Percy; try to be glad that her unhappiness is over, and that she is married to the man she loves. It is the only thing that will help you."

"Nothing will help me," he returned, in the same muffled voice; but she would not be repulsed. She swept back the dark hair from his forehead and kissed him. Did she not share his sufferings? "Oh, if mother were only here," she sighed, feeling her inability to comfort him. "Mother is so sorry for you, she cried about it the other night."

"Yes," he answered, "mothers are like that;" and then was silent again. What was there he could say—he was in no mood for sympathy. The touch of Fern's soft arms were torture to him. His idol was gone in another man's possession. He should never see again the dark southern loveliness that had so enthralled his imagination; and the idea was maddening to him.

In a little while he rose, but no speech seemed possible to him. A wall of ice seemed to be built up across his path, and he could see no outlet. "I cannot stay now," he said, and his voice sounded strange in his own ears. "Will you give my love to my mother, Fern?"

"Oh, do not go," she pleaded, and now the tears were running down her face. "Do stay with me, Percy."

"Not now; I will come again," he answered, releasing himself impatiently; but as he mounted his horse, some impulse made him look up and wave his hands. And then he rode out into the gloom.

It was too early to go home; besides, he did not wish to face people. The fog seemed lifting a little. His mare was fresh, and she might take her own road, and follow her own pace—a few miles more or less would not matter to him in this mood.

Black care was sitting behind him on the saddle, and had taken the reins from his hands; and a worse gloom than the murky atmosphere was closing round him.

She had told him that his life was before him—that he could carve out his own future; but as he looked back on his past life—on the short tale of his four-and-twenty years—his heart was sick within him.

What a pitiable part he had played. Was it possible that such a woman as Crystal could ever have loved him? Had not his cowardly desertion of his mother only won her silent contempt? And now it was too late to redeem himself in her eyes.

His fate was frowning on him. His position at Belgrave House had long been irksome to him. His grandfather loved him, but not as he loved Erle; and in his heart he was secretly jealous of Erle—if it had been possible he would have supplanted him. Only he himself knew how he had tempted him, and the subterfuges to which he had stooped. He had encouraged Erle's visits to Beulah Place from motives of self-interest, and had been foiled by Erle's engagement to Evelyn Selby.

How he loathed himself as he thought of it all. Oh, if he could only undo the past. Young as he was, ruin seemed staring him in the face. He had squandered his handsome allowance; his debts were heavy. He had heard his grandfather say that of all things he abhorred gambling; and yet he knew he was a gambler. Only the preceding night he had staked a large sum and had lost; and that very morning he had appealed to Erle to save him from the consequence of his own rashness.

As he rode on, his thoughts seemed to grow tangled and confused. His life was a failure; how was he to go on living? All these years he had fed on husks, and the taste was bitter in his mouth. Oh! if he could make a clean breast of it all. And then he repeated drearily that it was too late.

His reins were hanging loosely on his horse's neck. His high-spirited little mare had been following her own will for more than an hour now, and had relapsed into a walk, as Percy roused himself to see where he was. He found himself on a bridge with the river on either side of him. He was miles away from Belgrave House; and for the moment he was perplexed, and drew up to ask a boy who was loitering on the footpath what bridge it was.

There was a steamer passing; and a little lad had clambered on the parapet to see it go by. Either he overbalanced himself or grew giddy, but, to Percy's horror, there was a sharp scream, and the next moment the child had disappeared.

In an instant Percy was off his horse, and, with the agility of a practised athlete, had swung himself on the parapet. Yes, he could see the eddy where the child had sank; and in another moment he had dived into the dark water.

"It was a plucky thing to do, sir," observed a navvy who had seen the proceeding, and who afterwards detailed it to Erle Huntingdon; "I don't know as ever I saw a pluckier thing in my whole life. Ay, and the poor young gentleman would have done it too, for any one could see he knew what he was about; for he dived in straight after the child; and then, that dratted steamer—you will excuse me, sir, but one's feelings are strong—what must it do but back to pick up the child; and the poor fellow, he must have struk his head against it, for he went down again. Oh yes! the child was all right, and the young gentleman would have been all right too, but for that nasty blow, it stunned him you see."

Yes, it had stunned him; the young ill-spent life was over. Did he call upon his God for succor as he went down into his watery grave? Who knows what cry went up to heaven? The old epitaph that was engraved on the tomb of a notorious ill-liver speaks quaintly of hope in such cases,

Betwixt the saddle and the ground
He mercy sought and mercy found, and Raby quoted them softly to Crystal as she wept over the fate of her unhappy lover.

"His last act was to try and save another; God only knows how far this would go to redeem a faulty past—God only knows. Do not cry so bitterly, darling. Let us trust him to the All Merciful; and, as the good bishop said to the mother of St. Augustine, 'the child of so many prayers cannot be lost.'"

Erle Huntingdon had passed an anxious, uncomfortable day. Percy's confession of his gambling debts had made him seriously uneasy. It was in his power to help him this once, he had said, with unusual sternness, but he would soon be a married man, and then Percy must look to himself; and Percy, nettled at his tone, had answered somewhat shortly, and in spite of Erle's generosity they had not parted friends.

But this was not all. After luncheon Mr. Huntingdon had called Erle into his study, and had shown him a letter that he had just received from some anonymous correspondent. Some unknown friend and well-wisher had thought it advisable to warn Mr. Huntingdon of his grandson's reckless doings. Erle looked deadfully shocked as he read it; and the expression of concentrated anger on Mr. Huntingdon's face frightened him still more.

"Perhaps it is not true," he stammered, and then the remembrance of his conversation with Percy silenced him.

"True," returned Mr. Huntingdon, in his hard rasping voice; "do you not see that the writer says he can prove every word? And this is my grandson, whom I have taken out of poverty. Well, well, I might have known the son of Maurice Trafford would never be worth anything." Strangely unjust words to be spoken of Nea's idolized Maurice, whose pure soul would have revolted against his boy's sins. Erle felt the cruelty of the speech; but he dare not contradict his uncle. What were the Traffords to him now?

There was to be a large gentlemen's dinner-party at Belgrave House that evening. Some East Indian director was to be feted, and several city magnates were to honor it by their presence. Erle wondered that Percy did not make his appearance, for he was always punctual on such occasions; but Mr. Huntingdon did not seem to notice his absence. The guests thought their host looked greyer and more bowed than usual, and that his step was feebler. He was getting an old man now, they said to themselves; and it would not be long before there would be a new master at Belgrave House. Any one could see he was breaking fast, and would not last long. Well, he had done well for himself; and his heir was to be envied, for he would be a rich man, and scarcely needed the splendid dowry that Evelyn Selby would bring him.

The banquet was just drawing to its close when there were signs of some disturbance in the household. The butler whispered to Erle, who immediately left the room, and a few minutes later a message was brought to Mr. Huntingdon.

Something had happened—something dreadful had happened, they told him, and he must come with them at once; and he had shuddered and turned pale.

He was growing old, and his nerves were not as strong as they used to be, and he supported himself with some difficulty as he bowed to his guests with old-fashioned politeness, and excusing himself, begged his old friend Sir Frederick Drummond to take his place. But as the door closed behind him, and he found himself surrounded by frightened servants, he tottered and his face grew grey.

"You will kill me among you," he muttered. "Where is my nephew? Will none of you fools tell me what is the matter."

"He's in there," returned the butler, who was looking very scared, and pointing to the library; and the next moment Erle came out with a face as white as death.

"Oh! uncle, uncle, don't go in till they have told you. Percy is there, and——" but Mr. Huntingdon only motioned him aside with his old peremptoriness, and then closed the door upon them.

He knew what he should find there—he knew it when they whispered into his ear that something had happened; and then he walked feebly across the room to the couch, where something lay with strange rigid lines under a satin coverlid that had been flung over it; and as he drew it down and looked at the face of his dead grandson, he knew that the hand of death had struck him also, that he would never get over this—never!

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

NEA AND HER FATHER MEET AGAIN.

Whence art thou sent from us?
Whither thy goal?
How art thou rent from us
Thou that were whole?
As with severing of eyelids and eyes, as with sundering of body and soul.
Who shall raise thee
From the house of the dead?
Or what man shall praise thee
That thy praise may be said?
Alas thy beauty! alas thy body! alas thy head!
What wilt thou leave me
Now this thing is done?
A man wilt thou give me,
A son for my son,
For the light of my eyes, the desire of my life, the desirable one
Algernon C. Swinburne.

Erle had followed him into the room, but Mr. Huntingdon took no notice of him. If he could, he would have spoken to him and implored him to leave him, but his tongue seemed to cling to the roof of his mouth. He wished to be alone with his grandson, to hide from every one, if he could, that he was stricken down at last.

He had loved him, but not as he had loved Erle—the Benjamin of his old age; his son of consolation. He had been stern with him, and had never sought to win his confidence; and now the blood of the unhappy boy seemed crying to him from the ground. And it was for this that he had taken him from his mother, that he should lie there in the prime of his youth with all the measure of his sins full to the brim. How had he died—but he dared not ask, and no one told him. Erle had indeed said something about a child; but he had not understood any more than he understood that they had sent to tell the mother. Erle's voice, broken with emotion, had certainly vibrated in his ears, but no sense of the words had reached him. If he had known that that mother was already on her way to claim the dead body of her son, he would have hidden himself and his gray hairs.

What a beautiful face it was, he thought; all that had marred it in life was softened now; the sneers, the hard bitter lines, were smoothed away, and something like a smile rested on the young lips. Ah, surely he was at rest now! Some stray hairs clung damply to his temples, and Mr. Huntingdon stooped over him and put them aside with almost a woman's tenderness, and then he sat down on the chair beside him and bowed his grey head in his hands.

He was struck down at last! If his idolized Erle had lain there in Percy's place he could have borne it better. But Nea's boy! What if she should come and require him at his hands! "Come home with your own Nea, father" had he ever ceased to hear those words?

Had he ever forgotten her standing there in the snow with her baby hidden under her shawl, and her sweet thin face raised to his? Had he ever ceased to love her and yearn for her when his anger was most bitter against her? Surely the demons must have leagued together to keep possession of his soul, or he would never have so hardened himself against her! He had taken her boy from her; he had tempted his youthful weakness with the sight of wealth, and then he had left him to his own devices. He had not taught him to "wash his hands in innocency, or to take heed to the things that were right." Day and night that boy's dead face, with its likeness to his mother, would haunt his memory. Oh, Heaven! that he were indeed childless, that none of these things might have come upon him.

"Uncle Rolf, will you not come away with me?" implored Erle; "the house is quite quiet now, and all the people have gone;" but Mr. Huntingdon only shook his head—he had no strength to rise from his chair, and he could not tell Erle this. The poor boy was terribly alarmed at his uncle's looks; he did not seem to understand anything he said; and what if Mrs. Trafford should take it in her head to come—if only he could get his uncle away.

But even as he framed the wish the door opened noiselessly, and Mr. Huntingdon raised his eyes. A tall woman with grey hair like his, and a pale, beautiful face with an expression that almost froze his blood, looked at him for a moment, then silently passed up the room, and with her dress brushing him as he sat there motionless, paused beside the couch. And it was thus that Nea and her father met again. But she did not notice him; there was only one object for her eyes—the still mute figure of her boy. Silently, and still with that awful look of woe on her face, she drew the dark head into her arms, and laid the dead cheek against her breast; and as she felt the irresponsive weight, the chilled touch, her dried-up misery gave way, and the tears streamed from her eyes,

She was calling him her darling—her only boy.

She had forgotten his cowardly desertion of her; the faults and follies of his youth. Living, he had been little to her, but she claimed the dead as her own. She had forgotten all; she was the young mother again, as she smoothed the dark hair with her thin fingers and pressed the cold face to her bosom, as though she could warm the deadly chill of death.

"Nea," exclaimed a feeble voice in her ear. "Nea, he was my boy too." And looking up she saw the tall bowed figure of her father, and two wrinkled hands stretched out to her. Ah, she was back in the present again. She laid her boy down on the pillow, and drew the quilt tenderly over him; but all the beauty and softness seemed to die out of her face, as she turned to her father.

"My boy," she answered, "not yours; for you never loved him as I did. You tempted him from me, and made him despise his mother; but he is mine now; God took him from you who were ruining him soul and body, to give him back to me."

"Nea," returned the old man with a groan; "I have sinned—I know it now. I have blighted your life; I have been a hard cruel father; but in the presence of the dead there should be peace."

"My life," she moaned; "my life. Ah, if that were all I could have forgiven it long ago; but it was Maurice—Maurice whom you left to die of a broken heart, though I prayed you to come with me. It was my husband whom you killed; and now, but for you my boy would be living."

"Nea, Nea," he wailed again; "my only child, Nea;" but as she turned, moved by the concentrated agony of his voice, he fell with his face downward on the couch, across the feet of his dead grandson.

* * * * *

The doctors who were summoned said that a paralytic seizure had long been impending; he might linger for a few weeks, but it was impossible to say whether he would ever recover full consciousness again.

Erle heard them sadly; he had been very fond of the old man in spite of the tyrannical sway that had ruled him from boyhood. His uncle had been his generous benefactor, and he could not hear of his danger without emotion.

Mrs. Trafford had not left the house from the moment of her father's alarming seizure; she had taken quiet possession of the sick-room, and only left it to follow her boy to the grave. Fern was there too, but Erle did not speak to her; the crape veil hid her face, and he could only see the gleam of her fair hair shining in the wintry sunlight. The two women had stood together, Fern holding her mother's hand; and when the service was over, Mrs. Trafford had gone back to Belgrave House, and some kindly neighbor had taken the girl home. Erle would gladly have spoken some word of sympathy, but Mrs. Trafford gave him no opportunity. Neither of them knew how sadly and wistfully the poor girl looked after them. Erle's changed looks, his paleness and depression made Fern's heart still heavier; she had not known that he had loved Percy so. She had no idea that it was the sight of her own slim young figure moving between the graves that made Erle look so sad. She was dearer to him than ever, he told himself, as they drove away from the cemetery; and he hated himself as he said it.

He had not seen Evelyn since Percy's death. She was staying at some country house with her aunt, Lady Maltravers, where he was to have joined them; but of course this was impossible under the circumstances; and though he did not like to own to himself that her absence was a relief, he took the opportunity of telling her not to hurry back to London on his account, as his time was so fully occupied with necessary business and watching his poor uncle that he would not be free to come to her.

(To be continued.)

The Man in the Case.

Since a woman was created there has been an awful stir
About the part she plays on earth—all blame is laid on her.
Let any wickedness be done, at any time or place,
And saints and sinners do declare, "A woman in the case!"

Some fool to suicide inclined blows out his little brain,
"Now, mark my words—a woman!" every prophet will exclaim,
Or if some fool another fool despatches from this life,
It's significantly mentioned, "He has a pretty wife."

If a man, a thief my nature, steals his employer blind,
And goes alone to Canada, the girl was "left behind,"
Or "he's been a-talking with a woman on the way
The woman in the case goes, too," the daily papers say.

Now this thing makes us women all too miserably feel,
But for our dire existence, men would never kill nor steal;
In fact if Eve to Adam the Lord had never given,
This earth had so continued a suburban sort of heaven.

It occurs to me, however, from another point of view,
Had we ne'er been given Adam, we could have a heaven, too.
If this world were only women, we could keep it free from crime,
For doesn't the "old Adam" work the mischief every time?

It was Eve who gave the apple that has brought us all our woe;
But with no one there to take it, she could never have done so.
Though men will kill and steal for us, because we are so dear,
You should mind they fix our value by their own existence here.

When you come to think it over, one conclusion's very sure,
Had they never been created we would ne'er have sought to lure
Their poor souls from paths of virtue; they from blame are not exempt—
Do we lead them to temptation, they have tempted us to temp..

With this new light on the subject, rather singular it seems;
But instead it's plainly plural, in reality it means,
When the blame for any action to its fountain head you trace,
You will ever find a woman and a man are in the case.

—Flora McDonald.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Cousin Kate's Weekly Budget of Domestic Gossip.

CHRYSANTHEMUM DRESSES

Miraculous Court Costumes to be Worn by Japanese Ladies.

Some Remarkable Dresses.

Mrs. Crawford's first November letter from Paris to London Truth contained the pleasing paragraph that follows:

I have been seeing some miraculous court dresses for the Empress of Japan and her ladies, which are to be sent out next week to Yeddo. They are to be worn at the flower fetes which will come off in 1888. Each flower that gives in spring, summer and autumn the prevailing flush of bloom to the Japanese groves and gardens has its day. Instead of Easter, Whitsun Monday, Michaelmas, etc., the Japs have Lilac day, Maybloom day, Laburnum day, Rose day and the culminating festa is Chrysanthemum day. The dresses had worked into the ribbons, tabliers, and so on, the flowers of the day on which they were to be worn. The Empress and the ladies of honor, in point of floral motifs, are to be in the same livery. The differences showing the gradations of rank will be in the quality and quantity of the trimming. The laburnum toilets must be miracles of gorgeousness and beauty when their wearers are to appear in them in the throne-room. Chrysanthemums are disposed of in separate colors for the several dresses or groups of dresses. There will be a group of yellow, another of white, another of violet, another of ruby and another of rose. The rosy ones are to belong to maids of honor of the lowest grade, and her Imperial Majesty, as representing all ranks, will be gorgeous in chrysanthemums of all colors. The flowers are "grown" in Paris workshops. The taste with which they are brought into fioriture of ribbons, lace and hand embroidery is inconceivable. Japanese ladies abhor the tailor-made style of dress. They like bright fancies to be expressed in raiment, and are fond of what is in keeping with mirthful conversation.

Women Too Tired to Dress Well.

If a woman works for her living or toils at home all day to help her husband earn one, she is likely, at the present rate of pressure and struggle, to be too weary to pay more than a fitful and careless attention to dress, and the careful consideration of harmony and of the suitableness of one garment to another is often pressed out of her mind by matters of more importance. Perhaps it ought not to be so, but it is. The small refinements and thoughtfulnesses of dress, which give it, as it were, its grace and wit, maybe cost little money, but much thought and care; and so a woman, who is keenly sensitive to beauty or raiment, often shows little sign of the instinct, and is dreary, even if neat, in her attire; she has so many other things of which to think that dress gets "crowded out." And yet it is a pity, for to most women dress is a pleasure, and a right one; and when the feminine instinct is crushed or lacking in a woman, so that she does not care how she looks, it shows a want in her nature. I am not speaking of slovenly women; they are rightly an abomination in all eyes, but of the women who, from economy or carelessness, or want of time or taste, or from religious opinion, may be and most likely are neat—painfully neat, but whose gowns are dreary, dull, unfitted to the wearer, or possessed of no individualities whatsoever.

Wash the Dishcloth.

Now that diseases are known to be caused by germs, one is on the lookout for death in almost anything. Even a dishcloth may generate the germs that cause sickness and death. If it is black and stiff and sour, throw it into the fire. Keep your dishcloth clean. If you have to eat without a tablecloth, do without curtains to your windows and cake for your tea, and have to let your face dry after washing it. Let the weeds grow in your garden, let the holes in the heels of your husband's or children's hose go undarned, let the shoes go, but do not neglect to wash the dishcloth.

A tidy housekeeper writes: "I have smelled a whole house full of typhoid fever in one dishcloth. I had some neighbors once—clever, good sort of folks. One autumn four of them were taken sick with the typhoid fever. The doctor ordered the vinegar barrels whitewashed, and threw about 40 cents' worth of carbolic acid into the swill pail department. I went into the kitchen and made gruel, I needed a dishcloth, looked around for one and found several. And such rags! I burned them all and called the daughter to get me a dishcloth. She looked around on the table. 'Why,' said she, 'there was about a dozen here this morning.' She looked in the woodbox, on the mantelpiece, and felt in the cupboard. 'Well,' I said, 'I saw some old, black, rotten rags lying around and I burned them, for there is death in such dishcloths, and you must never use such again.' I took turns in nursing that family for weeks, and I believe those dirty dishcloths were the cause of all that hard work."—Good Housekeeping.

To Train the Girls to Work.

Girls instilled with habits of industry are more safely provided for than if they had had a fortune given them, for there is no art or science too difficult for industry to attain. "Sloth makes all things difficult, but industry all easy." Industry qualifies us in all our various classes for the highest and lowest employment; it inspires us with fresh vigor in the performance of social and religious duties, and it gives a wider scope for the display of our talents. The habit of constant useful occupation is as essential for the happiness and well being of woman as of man.

Two Imported Recipes.

A delicious way to warm up cold beef or mutton is to mince it carefully in the machine, excluding all bits of sinew or gristle, lay it in the bottom of a pie-dish, scatter pepper and salt over it to taste; cover the meat with a layer of peeled tomatoes; add more salt and roof in the whole with mashed potatoes. Only a very little stock is needed, as the tomatoes make excellent gravy. Bake in a not too quick oven for three-quarters of an hour. Brown the pie before the fire for another quarter of an hour.

Try the next pair of fowls stuffed with real forcemeat, chopped ham and button mushrooms. — Cousin Madge in London Truth.

Fashion Notes.

A variation on the plush wraps so popular just now is to have the outside of cashmere edged with fur and the lining of plush of a contrasting shade. A pretty one is of pale brown, edged with brown fur and lined with emerald green plush.

A novelty in cloth for long coats is called "shadow cloth." It is soft and furry on the reversible side, but smooth, in dark brown, green and Gobelin blue shades, covered with figures in shadow or only seen in certain lights. A fichu collar of light, long fur and a muff to match are the fashionable accompaniments to these cloaks.

An economical use can be made of the lace dresses made up last summer over black silk which have lost their freshness by putting them over a cheap silk of some evening shade, either rich red, bright blue or yellow. They make charming toilets for unceremonious occasions, and the lace being over a color does not show its loss of freshness.

Curled lamb's wool is something like Astrakhan, but is much softer and finer and more expensive. It is much used in its natural white tint for trimming evening and opera cloaks, and is shown in brown, black and gray for street wear. Several of the imported London tailor gowns are of Lincoln green, trimmed with black lamb's wool. These have usually a muff to match made entirely of the fur, while the little, low English toque of green velvet is trimmed with it.

"Mufflom" and "Labrador" are the new names for fur. The Labrador is a rich brown fur, with a deep pile, not glossy, and very suitable for trimming brown cloth or velvet. A brown costume has a plain skirt of velvet, on which a band of Labrador fur a foot and a half wide is set on about two inches from the edge. The short brown drapery and bodice are of smooth-faced cloth, and a velvet wrap is trimmed with the fur. Both muff and velvet toque also have a fur border.

In evening dress it has become very much the fashion to veil the neck and arms with tulle. A single thickness does not conceal them at all, but adds much to the appearance of whiteness and smoothness and greatly to be desired. The sleeves are of one thickness, made perfectly plain and edged where they finish slightly below the elbows with a bit of lace laid on flat. The shoulders are veiled with it by tucking two narrow breadths of the tulle into the corsage behind and crossing and tucking the ends in front.

A new use for camel's hair shawls is to cut them into long dolmans. These are wadded with a layer of gray cotton wadding and lined with heavy silk. They are most effective when the shawl is made entirely of mosaic without the plain centre, but a very handsome evening wrap is composed of one whose centre is a creamy white from age, with much red in the border. It was lined with white silk and so cut that the scarlet border and fringe formed the edge of the cloak, which also had a long fichu collar of the same.

Miss Nettie Hooper, daughter of the well-known Paris correspondent, Lucy Hooper, wore at a reception lately an ideal jeune fille costume. The white silk skirt was of dancing length and frilled at the edge with a little plaiting. The long tablier overdress was of white crape drawn high on the hips. The low-pointed silk bodice was covered with a little kerchief of the crape that crossed on the bosom, and wreaths of the palest pink roses completed the costume. She wore long primrose gloves, white slippers and pale pink silk stockings.

A pretty evening gown is composed of ecru silk mull made over the same shade of China silk. The skirt was trimmed with a deep double box plait of the mull, on which was set six rows of narrow scarlet ribbon. The drapery was of ecru China silk, which had a little red figure of the same shade of the ribbon. The low-neck bodice was of plain ecru silk and with bretelles of the mull barred with the red ribbon. The stockings were scarlet with black patent-leather slippers, and long red loves and an ecru gauze fan finished his pretty dress worn by a still prettier brunette.

Famous Unmarried Men.

Bacon says that "certainly the best works and those of greatest merit for the public have proceeded from unmarried or childless men."

Schopenhauer, the German philosopher, appears to be of the same opinion: "For men of higher intellectual avocation, for poets, philosophers, for all those in general who devote themselves to science and art, celibacy is preferable to the married life, because the conjugal yoke prevents them from creating great works."

Moore has expressed the same belief, asserting that in looking back through the lives of the most illustrious poets it is evident that they have been, with scarcely an exception, "restless and solitary spirits, with minds wrapped up, like silkworms, in their own tasks, either strangers or rebels to the domestic tie."

Dante, Milton, Shakspeare and Dryden are instances of the saddening effect of married life upon poets. Dante went through life away from his wife and children, nursing in his mind the immortal dream of Beatrice. There is that oft-told jest of Dryden, which sufficiently exhibits his view of the subject; when his wife told him that she wished she were a book in order that she might have more of her husband's companionship, he said: "Be an almanac, my love, so that I can change you every year."

Scott's remark about Dryden was that "on no occasion when a sarcasm against matrimony would be introduced has he failed to season it with such bitterness as spoke of an inward consciousness of domestic misery."

But the same is true of other artists as well—of musicians and painters as well as poets. Wagner, when a young man, married an actress, "pretty as a picture," but she appears to have had but little sympathy with his aims, and he lived apart from her. He afterwards married a daughter of Liszt, who did appreciate his genius, and with her he was very happy.

The girl whom Haydn married turned out a shrew. Berlioz wrote: "O, that I could find her, the Juliet, the Ophelia that my heart call to, that I could drink in the intoxication of mingled joy and sadness that only true love knows! Could I but rest in her arms one autumn evening, rocked by the north wind on some wild heath and sleeping my last sad sleep!"

We are told that a few years after these effusions were written he arranged an amicable separation from his wife, his former divinity, and he left her to die in misery and solitude.

Handel was never in love, and had an aversion to marriage. In 1707 he went to Lubeck to compete for a position as organist, but, finding that one of the conditions for obtaining the place was that he should marry the daughter of his predecessor, he fled precipitately.—Brooklyn Eagle

He Mistook His Man.

Two men were standing on the corner, talking. Both were well dressed and seemed to be gentlemen. One was a quiet, undemonstrative man, while the other was a very enthusiastic personage.

A man passed by, saluting the enthusiastic individual, who failed to recognize the courtesy, but continued talking to the quiet gentleman.

"I beg your pardon, sir, for interrupting you, but a gentleman spoke to you just now."

"Yes, I noticed it. He is a carpenter, who did some work for me recently. Those fellows are such a nuisance; if they happen to do a little job for you they presume to speak wherever they meet you. I don't like it, eh?"

"If he is a gentleman, I would not hesitate to speak to him, no matter where I met him," mildly observed the other.

"Oh! You wouldn't, eh?"

"No, I wouldn't; but pardon me again if I am presumptuous, but I would like to know if you paid that carpenter for the little job he did for you?"

"I don't see how that can interest you, or why I should make you my confident."

"Perhaps not; men who talk as you do don't generally see very far."

"Will you explain yourself, sir?".

"Cheerfully! You see I know you; you didn't think so, but I do. You want to be so much better than that carpenter, and I know you are not half as good or near so deserving of the title of gentleman as he is."

"You know this, eh?"

"Yes, and I know more. I know your history from away back, and I can assure you that my opinion of it would not be at all complimentary. When I worked at the bench I was just as much a gentleman as I am now; and if I had known it was for you that my workman, who just passed, did the work, he wouldn't have done it until you had paid for it. Do you want to know why? No? I thought so."

Vagaries of the Law.

"City of Muskegon vs. a red heifer," is the title of a civil suit in a Muskegon (Mich.) Court.

Sam Thomas, of Benton county, Tennessee, was arrested and taken to the Federal Court for holding a funnel for another man to pour whiskey into a bottle.

Dogs are dogs in Texas. A jury in that State recently gave a verdict of $19.75 to a man whose favorite hound had been run over and killed by a railroad train.

Three months' imprisonment was the sentence given an Englishman who attempted, but failed, to steal a hot plum pudding, but found it too hot to carry and dropped it on the floor.

FEMININE RHYMES.

And all afresh each morning,
Her braided locks adorning,
My prudent counsel scorning,
The precious time she's pawning.

But ever through her dreaming,
She has been deftly scheming,
How, in this idle seeming,
The hours she'd be redeeming.

For thus she says and sigheth:
"Ah, me, who these locks spieth,
He straightway hither hieth
And yields him here or dieth."

—A man in this city calls his wife Ann Archy, because she is always blowing him up.

"ROMEO AND JULIET" MODERNIZED.

What Was Revealed in a Recent London Tragedy.

The Pall Mall Gazette says that many people have thought that Shakspeare strained probability a little too far in the incidents which close the tragedy of "Romeo and Juliet." A case investigated before the coroner for Central Middlesex on Wednesday shows that similar incidents actually occur in real life. An elderly Frenchman, separated from his wife, took a young French lady vocalist into his house at Euston Square as his mistress. On Tuesday morning early the man swallowed poison, and seemed to be dying. His mistress, terrified at being left alone in the world in a discredited position, seized the poison bottle and drank a deadly draught. She died. The man recovered, and discovered to his horror that his Juliet was dead. After trying in vain to resuscitate her he seized a revolver and shot himself through the heart. This occurred, not in the tombs of the Capulets in the ancient city of Verona in the middle ages, but in 12 Euston Square last Tuesday morning. Romeo's name was Ernest Carlin and Juliet's Jane Hures.

In Love's Harness.

Most women naturally look forward to matrimony as their proper sphere in life, but they should constantly bear in mind that fair, rosy face, bright eyes, and a healthy, well-developed form, are the best passports to a happy marriage. All those wasting disorders, weaknesses, "dragging-down" sensations, and functional irregularities peculiar to their sex, have an unfailing specific in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years.

Mrs. Cleveland's Able Move.

Mrs. Cleveland has been making all of her bonnets this fall, thus setting an example which will alienate the support of every milliner in the land. But it makes all the husbands solid, and, mind you, it's the husbands that have the votes, not the milliners.—Chicago Herald.

Yon sturdy oak whose branches wide
Do dly the storms and winds defy,
Not long ago an acorn, small,
Lay dormant 'neath the summer sky.

Not unlike the thrifty oak in its germ, development and growth, is consumption. But even this mighty foe of mankind, positively yields to the wonderful curative properties of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if taken early. Don't be blind to your own interests and think yours a hopeless case. This remarkable remedy has rescued thousands. Of druggists.

In Maine.

Mrs. Brailer—Here's Deacon Cudds right in front of us, Tom. See what he's reading, and when the train-boy comes in buy the book for me. It's sure to be interesting and instructive.

Mr. Brailer (looking over the deacon's shoulder)—Larry Donahue's "Bar-Keeper's Guide."—Puck

Suit Yourself,

but there is no other remedy for sick headache, dizziness, constipation, biliousness, or to restore a regular, healthy action to the liver, stomach and bowels, equal to those reliable little "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" prepared by Dr. Pierce. Of druggists.

They Leave Nothing.

First Burglar—"Wot'll I do with this burglar alarm, Bill—take it along?"

Second Burglar—"Yes, slip it in the bag. We can get something for it."

ITCHING PILES.

Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. Swayne's Ointment can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

He Knew His Business.

Lady (in a bric-a-brac store)—"Let me see something handsome but cheap."

Clerk—"Yes'm; something for a wedding present?"—Lowell Citizen.

The Far Reaching

Perfume of a good name heralds the claim that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is a sure, certain and painless remedy for corns. Fifty imitations prove it to be the best. At druggists.

Considerate Grocer.

Pretty Servant Girl—You don't give full weight.

Grocer (sighing)—I know it, but you alone are to blame for that.

Servant Girl—How's that.

Grocer (beaming on her)—I want to make your burden as light as possible, my dear.

Our lady friends will be interested in knowing that by sending 20c. to pay postage, and 15 top covers of Warner's Safe Yeast (showing that they have used at least 15 packages) to H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y., they can get a 500 page, finely illustrated Cook Book, free. Such a book, bound in cloth, could not be bought for less than a dollar. It is a wonderfully good chance to get a fine book for the mere postage and the ladies should act promptly.

Postmaster English, of New Haven, Conn., recently received a letter addressed "To the most beautiful and intelligent lady in New Haven of from 18 to 24 years of age." Not feeling competent to make the decision Mr. English consulted the postal authorities at Washington, and has just been directed to send the epistle to the Dead Letter Office. How little romance there is about a Government bureau!

Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, the President's sister, will spend Christmas with brother Grover.

ALMA LADIES' COLLEGE,

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO.

This institution which had last year the largest enrolment of all the Canadian Colleges for women is offering superior advantages to young women in Literary Course, Fine Arts, Commercial Science and Music at the very lowest rates.

Address, Principal Austin, B. D.

Prima Facie Evidence.

"Mamma," said a young lady just home from school and gazing upon Alexander Harrison's "Open Sea," "is this an oil painting or a water color?"

"Sh," answered her mother, with a look of surprise and chagrin. "It's a water color. Don't you see the water?"—Chicago Tribune.

—Mr. Seth Cohoe, foreman of the oatmeal department of Mr. H. S. Moore's roller flour mills at Norwich, is about to leave for Rockton, where he will start in business for himself.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2908 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

DUNN. 50 ct.

Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

GORDON'S

OLD RELIABLE HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON!

Is still open and Old Customers will find it Stocked with

Carriage & Team

HARNESS!

Which has become celebrated throughout this vicinity for superior quality, finish and durability. All guaranteed as heretofore. At

Reduced Prices for Cash,

Also a large stock of Winter Goods in the line of

HORSE COVERS!

of superior quality, at the lowest prices ever offered in Flesherton. A fine selection of

Sleigh Bells!

at a slight advance on cost for the next 30 days. If you want a first-class

WHIP!

It is to be found at Gordon's. Also

TRUNKS,
VALISES,
RUGS,
HORSE BRUSHES,
CURRY COMBS,
SWEAT PADS

and all other Horse Furnishings found in a first-class Harness Shop.

The Celebrated Harness Oil!

Kept constantly on hand. But the Crowning Specialty is the perfect fitting

Scotch Collar!

Warranted not to gall your horses and for which this establishment has become so well known throughout this County. Repairing attended to promptly, carefully and cheaply.

A Call is Respectfully Invited at

GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Call and see Russell's immense display of fancy Plush Wall Pockets, Dusters, Whisk Holders, &c., they are beautiful and cheap.

Auction sale farm stock and implements at Lot 34, Con. 9, Artemesia, commencing at 12 o'clock, noon, on Wednesday next, Dec. 21st. Scott Jamison, Proprietor; A. S. VanDusen, auctioneer. See bills for particulars.

We see by the Sault Ste Marie News that Mr. Thos. Bates—formerly of this town—is connected with a Mining Association, which has been organized in that place with the view of working a rich gold and silver mine located on the Canadian side of the river.

The Flesherton Skating Rink is being flooded by Lieut. Field, and, it is expected, will be in good running order by Christmas. We hope to see the rink well patronized by our young people—indeed it is good healthy exercise for the more adult population, when not indulged in to excess.

An announcement has been received from Mr. A. Dinsmore, Markdale. It came too late for this week's ADVANCE, but will appear in our next. It is headed:—"Grand Gift Sale for the Christmas Holidays at the Markdale Book Store." He offers great reductions in Books, Toys, Fancy Goods, and Wall papers.

Credit Auction sale of farm stock, implements, &c., at Lot 20, Con. 10, Meaford Road, Artemesia, on Tuesday, Dec. 20th., commencing at 1 o'clock p. m. sharp. 10 months credit on all sums over $5. See bills for particulars. David Thompson, proprietor; J. W. Morrow, auctioneer.

On account of the big rush of holiday advertising this week we are obliged to issue an extra page. We furnish our readers with their regular quota of reading matter all the same. Everybody patronizing THE ADVANCE—whether reader or advertiser—get good value for their money.

Temperance people will read with interest "Deacon Snuke's" lengthy but stirring letter, entitled—"The Good Time Coming"—which will be published shortly in the ADVANCE. We welcome our esteemed and talented friend, "Snukes," to the ranks of the great Temperance Army, which is making its influence for good felt in every portion of the civilized world.

The patrons of Flesherton Cheese Factory ought to be happy. On Thursday last Messrs. M. Richardson & Co. paid out $4,546.12 to them, being the proceeds of last sale of cheese for the season just closed. A large sum of money is thus put in circulation, which will have a tendency to relieve the financial stringency caused by the suspension of the Central bank.

D. G. Meldrum, having completed his apprenticeship with F. T. Burgess, druggist, and successfully passed his examination, left this morning for a week's visit to his home at Flesherton. He started away a bachelor, but it is reported he will return a benedict and take the management of Burgess' Wilton avenue branch drug store.—Toronto News. David denies the soft impeachment contained in the foregoing, to the effect that "he will return a benedict."

Dundalk, Dec. 8.—Some person unknown about ten o'clock last night fired three rifle shots through the upper storey of Graham & Co's store here. The shots penetrated through the inner portions of the building and narrowly missed Mr. C. Graham who was sitting reading in one of the apartments. No steps have been taken to find the perpetrators. Magistrate McGregor to-day committed Edward Bemish to the Central Prison for threatening to shoot his mother. Bemish is a hard citizen and has frequently been arrested for drunkenness.

We visited Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, this week and found Mr. J. G. Russell and his two smart assistants busily engaged selling goods, repairing watches, clocks, jewelry, &c., and opening out a vast quantity of beautiful new holiday goods, consisting of elegant designs in plush, jewelry, paper mache, etc.—both ornamental and useful. The store is literally packed with pretty things. In silverware, the display is unusually large and magnificent in every particular. The display throughout is the largest and best ever seen in a jewelry store in Flesherton.

There was a man once who approached a lovely maiden and asked her hand in marriage. His shaggy head of hair and disreputable looking beard of a week's growth had a chilling effect upon the lovely maiden and she coldly repulsed his advances. The man felt bad, but if he had placed himself in the hands of Booth, the Boss Barber, of Flesherton, and got his hair cut and his beard shaved before "popping the question," no lady could have resisted his charms.

Now is the time to renew your subscriptions to the ADVANCE for 1888. Most of our subscribers can show a clean sheet. Will all of our readers kindly commence the New Year in the same way? It is only a small amount and will cause you no inconvenience; at the same time you will have the consciousness that you are aiding your Editor to meet large payments now maturing in connection with recent building operations. If every subscriber on our list would only pay in advance before the 15th January, we would feel like sending THE ADVANCE free to them for six months during the year 1889!

Prepare for the holidays by getting a first-class hair cut, shave, and shampoo at Booth, the "Boss" Barber's, Flesherton. It is worth the money to sit in his magnificent easy chair, without counting in the hair cut, shave or shampoo. Ladies can get their hair trimmed in the latest styles of the tonsorial art. Gentlemen with long and unkempt beards will scarcely recognise themselves in the looking glass after having subjected the said beards to the dexterous manipulations of Booth, who will trim them in the most elegant manner and in any style they may require. Remember his shop is next to Clayton's boot and shoe emporium and just opposite Leitch's tailoring establishment.

A most absurd mistake crept into our "Tit-Bits" columns last week, in which it was announced that Mr. Watkins, brother of Mrs. Shilton, was visiting at the Methodist parsonage. The mistake was the Editor's this time, and not "that terrible compositor's," We noticed a gentleman walking up street with the esteemed Methodist clergyman here, just before going to press on Wednesday, and having understood a week or two previous, that Mr. Watkins was expected to visit Canada shortly, fell into the blunder quite readily—and the more especially as a certain young gentleman confirmed our impression; and, besides, we had no time for making enquiries before printing the papers. A fellow can be too previous sometimes in his endeavors to furnish his readers with live news.

A large and pleasant gathering of members and others assembled at the Baptist parsonage, Flesherton, on Friday evening. The pastor, Rev. T. Watson, is a very sociable gentleman, and he was pleased with the friendly visit, although unable to divine the cause. At length Mr. R. Knight and Mr. J. E. Moore approached him—the former bearing a splendid fur coat on his arm—and in the most informal and graceful manner, the coat was transferred to the popular Baptist pastor, accompanied by a few pleasant and appropriate words by each of the gentlemen, on behalf of members of the congregation. Mrs. Watson was also made the recipient of a nice present in an equally informal manner. Later in the evening, Rev. Mr. Watson made one of his happiest speeches in alluding to the presentation. Those present spent a pleasent evening.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

DIED.

ELLIS.—In this village, on Tuesday, 6th Dec., 1887, after a short sickness, Mrs. W. Ellis, aged 21 years, 1 month and 15 days.

Our young and esteemed friend, Mr. Ellis, has the deep sympathy of many friends, in his sad bereavement. Deceased was a loving wife, and though her married life was very short, still it was a very happy one. She lived a christian, and passed away trusting in Jesus.

Scarcely had we greeted the twinkling of the sleigh-bells, when the rumbling of the wheels was heard.

Mr. F. Thurston, of Toronto, is coming home in a few weeks to spend his Xmas holidays.

Come one, come all, but don't forget to bring the "fleecy mantle" with you.

Our friend, Mr. J. B. Watson, intended to give us another of his much "appreciated lectures," on the evening of the 6th inst. However, he was not able to do so on account of sickness. No doubt, under the fostering care of a Griersville inn-keeper, he will soon be able to resume his daily vocation; and at some early date again visit our cosy little village, when we shall, as on former occasions, give him an audience and if neccessary, passed around the "toast," but we cannot say that it will be of a stronger nature than the pure juice of the grape.

LEADING! LEADING!!

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store in Flesherton Still Leading the Trade in this County!

The people ask, how is it that OTHER JEWELERS GET MAD and say naughty things about us? The reason is very simple, namely, WE ARE A TERROR TO HIGH PRICES—selling finer goods at lower prices than they can and of course the public appreciate our efforts to give them first prize goods at prices away down. OTHER FELLOWS will get mad when they cannot gull the people into buying goods 26 per cent. higher than ours. We would suggest to them to buy from us as it would enable them to sell at a small living profit. Another IMMENSE STOCK just received of gold and silver ladies' and gents' Watches, fine rolled gold ladies' and gents' Chains and Guards, Gold Lockets, &c. A-1 solid 18 K. wedding Rings, the finest stock of ladies' diamond and gem Rings, fine Silverware, gents' fine heavy Waltham, Elgin, Illinois, Springfield and Columbus Watches from $10 to $20, sold elsewhere from $15 to $25, 18 k. Wedding Rings from $3.99 to $5, sold elsewhere from $4.50 to $6. All watches bear written warrents from 3 to 5 years, WARRANTS COVERING ALL BREAKAGES. We have done great business in the past and we intend to do even more in the future by giving the people genuine bargains and we take this opportunity to thank our friend for advertising us so well. We are well pleased, it saves us money and increases our business every time. A few more of those famous 8 day Walnut Clocks still going at $4.80; other dealers ask $6 for the same clock.

A fine stock of FANCY GOODS and XMAS CARDS to hand now. Be sure you see them.

And always take your Watches, &c., to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, to be repaired. IT WILL PAY YOU. 2t.

No one can describe the suffering caused by Astpma except those troubled with the complaint. One package of Southern Asthma Cure will relieve any case. Double treatment in each package.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Practice is going on lively here for the Methodist S. S. anniversary which comes off shortly.

Mr. T. Maquay met with an accident in his saw-mill last week while he was handling a lever. It threw him against a wheel while in motion which hurt him severely, but we are glad to learn that he will soon be around again.

The Rev. G. B. Howie will give a lecture here on the 23rd inst., on the eastern modes of "courtship and marriage." wonder if it will be as instructive as the last one he gave here?

Mr. W. Hames has rented his farm here and has purchased the Victoria cheese factory.

Hon. C. Edwards Lester,

Late U. S. Consul to Italy, author of "The Glory and Shame of England," "America's Advancement," etc., etc., etc., writes as follows:—

New York, August 1, 1886.
122 E. 27th st.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.,

Gentlemen:—A sense of gratitude and the desire to render a service to the public impel me to make the following statements:

My college career, at New Haven, was interrupted by a severe cold which so enfeebled me that, for ten years, I had a hard struggle for life. Hemorrhage from the bronchial passages was the result of almost every fresh exposure. For years I was under treatment of the ablest practitioners without avail. At last I learned of which I used (moderately and in small doses) at the first recurrence of a cold or any chest difficulty, and from which I invariably found relief. This was over 25 years ago. With all sorts of exposure, in all sorts of climates, I have never, to this day, had any cold nor any affection of the throat or lungs which did not yield to AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL within 24 hours.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Of course I have never allowed myself to be without this remedy in all my voyages and travels. Under my own observation, it has given relief to vast numbers of persons; while in acute cases of pulmonary inflammation, such as croup and diphtheria in children, life has been preserved through its effects. I recommend its use in light but frequent doses. Properly administered, in accordance with your directions, it is in any house. I speak earnestly because I feel earnestly. I have known many cases of apparently confirmed bronchitis and cough, with loss of voice, particularly among clergymen and other public speakers, perfectly cured by this medicine. Faithfully yours,

A Priceless Blessing

C. EDWARDS LESTER.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

—TO BE—

GIVEN AWAY.

—AT THE—

FLESHERTON

Furniture Warerooms

SPECIAL

INDUCEMENTS!

DURING

X-MAS!

—AND—

Holiday Season.

We have bought especially for the Christmas trade, a lot of very handsome

Sofas & Lounges

Which will be sold at a

Small Advance on Cost.

Small Arm Rocking Chairs,

Perfect Little Beauties,

Gents Easy Stuffed Chairs,

Just the thing for father's X-mas box.

Childrens Chairs

In great variety.

BEDSTEADS,

A special line of low priced, very cheap

SPRING BEDS LOWER THAN EVER.

MATTRESSES CHEAPER THAN HAVE EVER BEEN OFFERED.

We still take the lead in

Picture Framing.

A beautiful stock of MOULDINGS and FRAMES to select from.

☞ In order to meet the wish of our patrons we have arranged to deliver goods on the eve of Christmas day, in company with Santa Claus. Call and select your presents early.

Wishing you a very Merry Christmas.

J. E. MOORE.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 339. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO. THURSDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

"DECEMBER AD."

$1,600

IN GOLD AND SILVER

WATCHES!

Walnut and Nickle Clocks, Roll Plate and Fine Gilt Chains, Gem and Wedding Rings, Jewelery and Fine Silverware for Holiday * Trade!

If I felt the public were fools enough to believe me and knew "myself" to be "knave" enough to beat the wholesale, I would talk big discount and wholesale prices for above goods. Wholesale prices in a retail store won't pay rent, light taxes, etc. Continuous discounts 5 times in 1 year, either pays by marking goods away up, or else by using deception as to quality af goods. There are Jewellers who have 14 k. wedding rings stamped 18 k. My Plain Rings are made by P. W. ELLIS & CO., and after this will have my initials, W.B. stamped on.

Goods as represented every time.

Prices at "whisper" mark. Discounts as usual, 5 per cent.

Warrants cover Breakages!

Don't accept any other kind. Everybody invited to call when in town and get my prices.

For 4 Years

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA, 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

351-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE,

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Miss Ada M. Sproule has returned to Flesherton to spend the holidays.

Bargains in Tweeds this week at M. Richardson & Co's.

Mr. C. W. Rutledge, of the Markdale Standard, was in town Thursday last.

Just think of it, all wool Grey Flannel 28 inches wide for 25c. yard at R. Trimble's.

Mr. Geo. Blakely returned home on Wednesday of last week, and did not forget to pay ye Editor a visit.

Mr. Earle Strain, who has been attending the Toronto School of Medicine, is home for Xmas' holidays.

THE ADVANCE sent for one year to the address of some of your friends would be a very suitable Xmas present.

Another very large stock of mens Felt Boots, Rubbers, and Overshoes just received, selling cheap at R. Trimble's.

Lemons and Oranges at the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

A toilet luxury in every respect, Ayer's Hair Vigor never fails to restore the youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It also eradicates dandruff and prevents the hair from falling.

Grand Christmas entertainment in the Methodist church, Maxwell, next Monday evening, 26th inst. Tea served from 5:30 p. m., chair taken at 7:30. See bill for particulars.

Monday next is Nomination day in Flesherton. There should be a large turnout in the afternoon to hear the Fathers give an account of their stewardship.

Furs, Furs, Furs.—I have decided to clear out my entire stock of Mens Fur Caps, ladies Fur Caps, Muffs, Boas, Goat Robes, Fur Trimming, &c., regardless of cost at R. Trimble's.

Cards, Cards, Cards, Come and see them at the Medical Hall.

The High School Entrance Examinations commenced in the new Schoolhouse, Flesherton, yesterday afternoon and will continue to-day and to-morrow. A large number of pupils are in town.

Just arrived at J. W. Bates:—Another of those beautiful Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth and Plush Bands. Will be sold cheap for cash. Just the thing for an Xmas present.

Please call and see my nice selection of Mossware, Chinaware, Colored setts glassware engraved or plain. Just see my $2.50 Colored Tea Sett, best value in town at R. Trimble's.

Wareham Public School children to the number of sixty or seventy sat for group photographs at Mrs. Bulmer's gallery, Flesherton, one day last week. Mrs. Bulmer is gaining wide and well deserved popularity as a painstaking and clever artist.

All sorts of Knick-knack at the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

Rev. Mr. Ranton, a well-known evangelist, has been assisting Rev. Mr. Shilton at the special services now being held at the Meaford Road appointment. Sunday week Mr. Ranton delivered an excellent discourse in the Methodist church here.

We are pleased to notice that the Trustees of Flesherton Public Schools have re-engaged the old Teachers, Mr. Wm. Irwin and Miss Ganton. This fact will be equally pleasing to the ratepayers generally of this school section. Mr. Irwin has proved himself a most painstaking and efficient Principal, while Miss Ganton is well spoken of.

Please call at once and get your supplies of Raisins, Currants, Peels, Spices, Icing Sugar, Coffee and Tea at R. Trimble's. My 25 cent Tea is the best value ever offered in Flesherton.

TAMARAC is an Elixir carefully prepared by an experienced chemist, which the well-known Tamarac as the fundamental principal, and all the other ingredients in its composition are of the purest, and best calculated to relieve all cases of Coughs, Colds and Lung troubles.

—BARGAINS!—

ENORMOUS BARGAINS!

Immense Bargains!

NOW GOING ON AT

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, FLESHERTON!

WHERE WILL BE FOUND THE LARGEST AND FINEST STOCK OF

Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Knives, Razors, &c.

EVER SHOWN IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY. OUR GOODS

TOOK FIRST PRIZE AT FLESHERTON FALL SHOW,

And in order to give parties who were not able to take advantage of our discount sale in October, we have decided to again make this Great Offer and give

TWENTY PER CENT. OFF

On all Cash Sales of $1 and over from 1st day of December, 1887, to 1st day of January, 1888.

Now, this is a grand chance to secure fine goods at about wholesale prices. All Watches we sell bear a written guarantee of from three to five years. We will still make another Grand Offer to anyone purchasing one of our LADIES' FINE GEM RINGS or 18 k. WEDDING RINGS which we have for the number of nearly one hundred, we will give a beautiful Plush Ring Box worth $1.00, any color. These bargains everyone should take advantage of. You will never have as good a chance again and remember the only place to get your Watch repaired properly is at

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON.

Royal Black Preceptory.

At the last meeting of Victory Royal Black Preceptory, No. 282, Markdale, the following were elected officers for the ensuing year:

J. Brodie, W.P.
W. Brady, D.P.
J. Gillespy, Chap.
T. Elliott, Registrar.
J. Elliott, Treasurer.
J. Erskin, 1st Lecturer.
T. Abbitt, 2nd "
J. McMaghan, 1st Censor.
J. H. Carson, 2nd "
T. Gilray, 1st Standard Bearer.
J. McFadden, 2nd "
J. Gibson, Pursuivant.
T. Abercrombie, 1st Com.
J. Trickey, 2nd "
W. Rutledge, 3rd "
W. H. Johnson 4th "
J. H. Heard, 5th "
G. Ritchie, 6th "
R. W. Blakely, 7th "
T. McArthur, Tyler.

This Preceptory meets on the 1st Friday in each month in the Orange Hall.

THE ADVANCE and the Toronto Daily World for $2.50—two papers for less than the price of one.

Physicians prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla in cases of scrofula, and in every form of chronic disease, because this medicine is safer to take, and is more highly concentrated, than any other preparation. It can always be depended upon as an effective blood purifier.

Beneath the Pines.

O sunless deeps of northern pines!
O broad, snow-laden arms of fir!
Dim aisles were wolves slip to and fro,
And noiseless wild deer swiftly shirr!
O home of wind songs wild and grand,
As suits thy mighty strains! O harp
On which the North Wind lays his hand!
I walk the pungent glooms once more
And shout amid thy stormful roar.

As in deep seas is a haven found,
No wintry tempest stirs, though high
As hills the marching waves upbound
And break in hissing foam, so I
Walk here secure; though far above
The Storm King with his train of snows
Sweeps downward from the bitter north,
And shouts hoarse fury as he goes.

I laugh in tones of chiming glee
To see the shaking of his hair,
And hear from out his cloud of beard
His voice immerial sweep the air.
The dark pine shower their lofty crests,
As warriors bow when chieftain grim
Rides by and shouts his stern behests,
And with swift answers echo him.

—Hamlin Garland.

STOP IT.—Continual hawking and spitting caused by Catarrh is permanently removed by Nasal Balm.

THE ADVANCE and The Empire one year for $1.65. Subscribe now and get the first number of the Empire which will be issued next week. The Empire is the new Conservative newspaper, and will be the same size as the Toronto Mail. It will contain several departments, however, far superior and much more interesting to country readers than the latter.

For Choice New Season Japan Teas and extra value go to M. Richardson & Co's.

FARMERS

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., ROLLS CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

ELOPED WITH A BRAKEMAN.

An Heiress Braves Her Family's Displeasure and Marries Her Choice.

A Pulaski, N.Y., despatch says: The disappearance of Miss Alice Wrightson, of Parish, in this county, heiress of the late Philip Wrightson, together with that of Henry McAulay, a railroad brakeman, has caused a great sensa ion in this section. Miss Wrightson inherits about $80,000 from her father. She is a pretty blonde, has fascinating manners and a superior education, having been attendant at Mount Holyoke Academy for two years. She is 19 years of age and has been the belle in society at Parish for two years. She came home on vacation from school six weeks ago and became acquainted with Henry McAulay, a railroad brakeman, at Parish. The acquaintance very quickly ripened into a love match. The young lady's mother was scandalized at her daughter's intimate acquaintance with McAulay, whom she considers far beneath the young lady in social position, and forbade McAulay to call upon or speak to her daughter. Miss Wrightson's brothers guarded her almost constantly and refused to have McAulay visit the family residence. Notwithstanding this the young lady had many clandestine meetings with him and an elopement was arranged. She started ostensibly alone for a prayer meeting last evening, and has not yet returned. It is known that McAulay met her and, hiring a carriage from a farmer, drove to Mexico, where cars were taken for the west. Miss Wrightson mailed a letter at Parish last evening announcing her elopement. She said she could not live without McAulay, and no matter what his lot she would share it with him. Her brothers vow they will shoot McAulay on sight, but have made no effort to find him or their sister. Many people at Parish say that McAulay has a wife and child in Brooklyn. He is 34 years of age, far from prepossessing, and can scarcely read. Miss Wrightson will come in possession of her fortune in three years. She had $90 with her when she fled last night.

AWFUL MINE DIS STER.

Ten Miners Thrown Down a Shaft—Four Killed and Six Seriously Injured.

A Wilkesbarre, Pa., despatch says: Intelligence has reached this city of a frightful accident at Luzerneborough, four miles distant. The carriage at Waddell's shaft, used for hoisting coal, was about to be lowered into the pit, 300 feet deep. Upon it were ten miners. When within 100 feet of the bottom the carriage became stationary and the rope began to slacken. Before the engineer could take up the slack the carriage suddenly descended with great force, throwing four of the men off, and they fell to the bottom of the pit. James Johnston and Hugh Monaghan were horribly mangled and instantly killed. Wm. Boyd and John Blight were picked up fatally injured. The legs and arms of each were broken in several places and they were badly crushed. The six others were seriously injured and badly shaken. Wm. Boyd and John Blight were still alive at 8 o'clock, and Chase Conningham and John Lloyd, who were also frightfully injured, still live, but the death of all these men is expected at any moment.

THEY LICKED AN EDITOR.

High School Girls Whip a Newspaper Man.

A Hammond, Ind., despatch says: Misses Belle Guthrie, Bertie Hammond and Julia Potter, high school girls, published a communication in the Weekly Independent on Tuesday, saying that Porter B. Towle, editor of the Evening Echo, had a silly brain, was a mass of conceit and belonged to a club-footed race. Towle replied in Thursday's issue of the Echo by denouncing the high school girls. He said the writers of the article were things and readers of immoral papers. Last evening seven young women of the high school met Towle in the street and threw red pepper in his eyes, while three of them horsewhipped him most unmercifully. He threatened to shoot, but fled instead and took refuge in an outhouse in fear of his life. Citizens had prepared to pelt Towle with rotten eggs, but they arrived too late. Much indignation is felt here, all endorsing the action of the high school girls, who are of the best families. Porter B. Towle is a brother of the millionaire mayor of this city.

Counterfeiters in the States.

A Washington despatch says: The annual report of the Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury was made public to-day. It shows that there were 355 persons arrested by officers of the service during the past fiscal year for violations of laws against counterfeiting, etc. Of this number 70 were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. The report says that the counterfeiting now being done is principally the work of Italians, who operate in bands in different portions of the country. The counterfeiting done during the past year amounted practically to nothing, the only attempts in that direction being a $10 silver certificate and a $2 silver certificate, and these were such poor imitations as to be practically harmless. The report refers to the fact that all but two of the many skilled operators arrested since the war for counterfeiting United States bonds are now at liberty, and says they may be expected to resume their nefarious operations at any time.

Caught a Wolf in the Streets of Chicago

A Chicago despatch says: As John Steller, a night-watchman, was returning home at an early hour yesterday, he was met at the gate by a strange-looking animal that he drove away. Mr. Steller entered his house, only to be called out shortly after by the cry of "Wolf!" The animal that had met Mr. Steller at the gate had returned to his doorstep. A lively chase ensued and resulted in the capture of the wolf. He was a young one, dark gray, with shaggy hair and alert ears. Not being satisfied with the blood of a cow which he had bitten he put his teeth into Mr. Steller and drank briefly of that gentleman's life current, but was finally secured. The wolf was bound with a heavy rope, but he promptly severed it with his sharp teeth.

—The proof of a weather prediction is in the patience that waits long enough for it to come true.

A CLERICAL WINDFALL.

A Poor Methodist Preacher Secures a Fortune by Accident.

A Middletown, N.Y., despatch says: The poverty of Methodist ministers who serve on country circuits is proverbial. Rich men among them are as scarce as hens' teeth. When one does get rich it is not by accumulations from his scanty salary, but by some such lucky windfall as has just now blessed the lot of Rev. A. J. Van Cleft, the esteemed pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of the neighboring village of Norwich. Seven years ago Rev. Mr. Van Cleft was officiating as presiding elder of the Wyoming district, and as pastor of the principal church of the denomination at Scranton, Pa. Among his associates in the ministry of the district was the Rev. William Stevens, an Englishman, who in his youth had worked in the tin mines of Cornwall, in that country. The elder was something of an enthusiast in mineralogy, and one day he exhibited to his brother clergyman some curious specimens of tin ore that had been presented to him by a friend from the Black Hills of Dakota, and that came from an undeveloped lode in that region. Rev. Mr. Stevens was struck with the apparent richness of the specimens, and impressed his views of the probable value of the mines from which they came on Elder Van Cleft. The result was that the elder and two friends made up a moderate purse and sent Rev. Mr. Stevens to Dakota, with instructions to buy the property if his judgment and experience approved of the venture; under these instructions they became the owners of seventy acres of land covering the supposed valuable lodes. But the purchase had exhausted all their means, and the property has since lain idle and unproductive to the owners. Last summer, however, the attention of a party of English capitalists was attracted to the property, and they sent over Captain John R. Cook, a Cornwall mining expert, to examine it with a view to its purchase. The expert's report was favorable, and the Englishmen have now paid Rev. Mr. Van Cleft and his associates $250,000 for the property.

BEATEN TO DEATH.

A Father Charged With Revolting Cruelty to His Own Child.

A Grand Rapids, Mich., despatch says. Oragon Hamilton, of Woodville, is under arrest at Newaygo for the murder of his infant child. Hamilton is a man of vicious character, and the facts, as nearly as can be ascertained, are that the child was brutally beaten and literally whipped to death, and the verdict of the coroner's jury is that the child came to its death by violent means. Hamilton's wife, the mother of the child, died about a year ago, and this child was being kept by Mrs. Ellsworth, who came here under the name of Marsden. Nellie Oberholzer, wife of the constable who had Hamilton in charge at the coroner's inquest, covered him (Hamilton) with a Winchester rifle during the proceedings. It is the prevailing opinion that the relations of Hamilton and the woman who took care of the child were not the most savory. The body of the child presented a sickening sight when viewed at the inquest. It was black from its little arms to its knees. Its father manifests no sorrow in the least, but since his imprisonment has been trying to throw the whole crime upon the woman who had it in charge, while it is the general belief that both are equally guilty, and a warrant has been issued for her arrest. Had the prisoner not been removed immediately after the inquest the county would have been saved any costs in trying the wretch, as forces from mills and camps were concentrating and would have lynched him.

HURT BY AN ACCIDENT.

Passengers and Brakeman Injured by a Mishap on the K. & P.

A Kingston despatch says: The regular passenger train on the K. & P. Railway, going north, was derailed by an accident near Clyde Forks. A car on the track was caught by the catcher and thrown on one side clear of the engine and tender, but must have rolled back from the side of the cutting to the track, derailing the passenger car and detaching it from the other part of the train. In its descent the car, it is said, rolled completely over two or three times, of course overturning all the passengers, of whom Mr. MacLean, a student of Queen's University on his way to preach at Arnprior, was badly cut. Only one passenger escaped without injury. The brakeman was badly burned by the stove being upset. It pinned him down until the other train hands recovered themselves sufficiently to go to his assistance. His hands were badly burned in his efforts to release himself. The car caught fire, but the flames were soon quenched.

Another Child of Satan.

A Jersey City, N.J., despatch says: Fred. Riley, aged 10, is an inmate of the Home of the Sisters of the Peace, in which are living over a hundred children. Riley is a very vicious boy and the other inmates fear him and avoid him as much as possible. Yesterday Riley found little Tommy Jones, 3 years old, playing in the kitchen alone. Riley caught the little fellow, gagged him with a handkerchief, and then after removing his clothing, held him down on the top of a red-hot stove. Jones succeeded in getting the handkerchief from his mouth and his cries brought Sister Evangeline to his assistance, but not until he was terribly burned and it is thought that he will die. Riley was turned over to the police. His father is dead, and his mother, being unable to control him, had put him in charge of the institution.

An Old Lady's Enterprise.

Mrs. Charlotte Forse, of Windham, Norfolk County, in the last three months of her 78th year, pieced and quilted a quilt which contains 1,598 pieces. It is a splendid piece of workmanship, and considering the lady's age is a remarkable achievement. Who can beat it? Mrs. Forse is an old Norfolk girl, having been born in the Township of Charlotteville, and has resided in Norfolk county ever since.

A Scene in the United States Senate.

Gorman, George and Edmunds signed together, and George blew his nose with his fingers while waiting his turn for the pen, to the horror of Mrs. Cleveland, who whispered vehemently to her spectacled companion about the matter.—Washington Special.

TRAIN ROBBERY.

Three Masked Men Get Away With About $40,000 Worth of Valuables.

A Little Rock, Ark., despatch says: The train bound north over the St. Louis, Arkansas & Texas Railroad was stopped by train robbers ten miles this side of Texarkana, Ark., last night, and the express car was robbed. The mail and passengers were not molested.

The robbery occurred at 7 o'clock. R. P. Johnson, the post clerk on duty at the time, says the train was suddenly stopped when moving out of Geneva station. He saw three rough-looking men board the engine, and he knew something was wrong, so he blew out the lamps in his department and locked the doors. The express messenger did the same thing. The three robbers were armed with a Winchester rifle and a couple of pistols each. They ordered the doors open, and fired several shots through the windows. They then used a pick-axe and Johnson fired one shot out through the window, which was answered by a volley.

Finding resistance useless, and the lives of the engineer and fireman at stake, the express messenger opened his doors, when a light was struck, and search by the robbers began. The leader of the robbers was much agitated, and the mail clerk told him he was more scared than he (Johnson) was. Johnson says he would know one of the men anywhere. The leader weighs 200 pounds, and is thick and heavy set. There was a panic among the passengers, who seemed paralyzed with fear.

After going through the express car the men entered the mail car. Johnson expostulated that that was Uncle Sam's dominion and that they already had a good deal of booty, and if they disturbed the mails it would go hard with them. One replied, "That's so," and that they would not touch the mails.

Great excitement prevails in the region of the robbery, and mounted men are scouring the woods everywhere. Gov. Hughes has offered $200 for the arrest and conviction of each robber. The railroad company also offers several thousand dollars reward The amount taken is said to reach $40,000.

The Canadian Northwest.

The Pine Portage Mine, Lake of the Woods, has been sold for $200,000. On the property is a ten-stamp mill.

Kupferschmidt, the alleged Catholic priest who eloped from Dakota to Langenburg, N.W.T., with a young lady of 18, became partially insane after the lady returned home with her mother, and yesterday, while being taken before a justice of the peace for trial, committed suicide by cutting his jugular vein. He was in the back part of the sleigh and committed the act before the man in charge had any suspicion of his intention.

Sir Adolphe Caron and General Middleton inspected the infantry school barracks to-day and left for the East to-night. Sir A. Caron called upon Archbishop Tache to-day. While at Victoria, B.C., the Minister of Militia selected a site for the infantry school barracks. At the Victoria banquet he spoke in opposition to Commercial Union, saying he believed it meant annexation to the United States.

A meeting of citizens was held yesterday to take preliminary steps towards petitioning the Dominion Government for the immediate improvement of the Red River, so as to render navigation between this city and Lake Winnipeg practicable.

G. Rushbrook, a Moose Mountain settler, set out on November 22nd in search of a band of ponies and has not since been heard from. He is supposed to have missed the trail and perished on the prairie. He is a young Englishman of 22.

Intelligence received from Cumberland House states that influenza and measles have caused a great amount of sickness, and starvation is threatening the residents of that district. The Dominion Government will be applied to for relief.

Gossip of a Day.

A single foggy day in London costs the town something like $40,000 for extra gas.

A law has been passed in Waldeck, Germany, forbidding the granting of a marriage license to a person addicted to the liquor habit.

"Jernmantfakturbolagsforsjalningsmagagin" in Swedish means, in English, "The Iron Manufacturing Company's sale shop."

Old Temple Bar was being removed on the 25th ult. from Farringdon street, London, to Theobolds Park, Cheshunt, where it will be erected on Sir Henry Meux's estate.

Lord Stanley, of Preston, who is spoken of as the probable successor of Lord Lansdowne as Governor-General of Canada, is heir presumptive to the earldom of Derby.

While a lady of Xenia, O., was preparing feed for her chickens recently the diamond in her engagement ring dropped into the mixture, and the loss was not noticed until the feed had been eaten by the fowls. It became necessary to massacre ten chickens before the stone was found, but it was found at last.

Thomas Randall, of Buffalo, owes his life to the reprehensible habit of wearing celluloid collars. In a quarrel which he had with a laborer named McNerney, the latter drew a knife and made a lunge at Randall's neck, but the collar broke the force of the blow and he escaped with slight injuries.

Rev. Dr. Malcolm Douglass, who was buried at East Wareham, Mass., the other day, provided in his will that his body should go to the earth in a pine box, and that nobody should run the risk of catching cold by standing bareheaded at his grave.

Don't Forget That

Every time you borrow you take a hack at your self-reliance.

Every time the mercury drops the price of coal goes skyward.

Every time you gush over classic music you play the hypocrite.

Every time you snub a reporter the gods will unite and smite you.

Every time you do good and tell of it you lose the fruit of the action.

Every time you buy that which you can't afford you prove yourself a fool.

Every time you throw a banana-peel on the sidewalk you endanger somebody's neck.

Every time you call a man a liar he will knock you down—if he has any style about him.

Every time you talk about your own worth you convince your hearers that you have none.

"THE LAND O' CAKES."

Latest Scottish Jottings from All Over.

Wm. Rae, forester to Colonel Stirling, of Kippendavie, has been appointed custodian of Dunblane Cathedral.

The other day a kingfisher, in full plumage, was captured by a cat at Rutherford boathouse, in the parish of Maxton.

Mr. Wm. Renwick, a native of Jedburgh, who went to Peru many years ago, has recently died, and left a silver mine as a gift to his native town.

Mr. C. S. Parker, M.P., addressing his constituents at Perth, recently, spoke strongly in favor of granting Home Rule to Ireland.

There died on the 12th ult. at Pittyvaich, Dufftown, Henry Gordon-Cumming, eldest surviving son of the late Sir W. Gordon-Cumming, Bart., of Altyre and Gordonstown, aged 65 years.

In memory of the late Rev. John Murker, for half a century minister of the Congregational Church in Banff, a memorial stone has been erected over his grave in the churchyard there.

Mr. John Collier, Hatton of Carnoustie, died on the 13th ult., aged 83 years. He was a well-known and highly-respected agriculturist, and his services as a valuator were much sought after.

Rev. Andrew Douglas, Arbroath, in a soiree speech, condemned the proposal to appoint lady deaconesses as most absurd. Its authors, in his opinion, showed an extraordinary want of knowledge of human nature.

Major-General A. L. Littleton-Annesley, who will have the command of the military forces in Scotland in a short time, on the retirement of Major-General Elliot, C.B., is a cavalry officer, having joined the 11th Hussars in 1854, in time to have a share in the Crimean campaign.

A new underground railway is projected from Glasgow and suburbs. Starting from St. Enoch Square it goes up Buchanan street, Cowcaddens, Great Western Road, then to Dowanhill and Partick, crosses the river to Govan, and strikes eastward to Ibrox, Kinning Park, Shields Road, West street, Bridge street, and completes the circle by again crossing the river to St. Enoch Square.

The Seaforth Highlanders, whose chief depot is at present at Edinburgh Castle, will be removed soon either to Glasgow or Dublin, and the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders will take possession some time in March or April. The entire regiment is at present stationed at Devonport. The Royal Scots will leave Glasgow for Aldershot, and the Scottish Rifles (Cameronians) go from Curragh to Cork.

The following recent advertisement is beyond comment: "Stonehaven Free Church.—Rev. John Robertson will (D.V.) preach on Sabbath as under: 11.30 a.m.—Children's sermonette, 'The Biggest Rock in the World;' sermon, 'God with His Coat Off;' 6 p.m.—First monthly sermons to young men, 'Make Room for Your Uncle;' 7.30 p.m.—Old Mission Town Hall, 'Unclaimed Cash of Yours.'"

A good story regarding the shortness of the straw this season comes from Strathmore. In a small town not far from Forfar two farmers met, and in the course of their remarks began to speak about the exceedingly bad crops of corn. First Farmer: What like's your crap the year, M——? Second Farmer: Oh, it's naething ava; the langest o't is just aboot that length (indicating on his staff about eight or nine inches). First Farmer: Ay, weel, you've nae need to complain. If you only saw mine; the very craws hae to gang doon on their knees to get a peck at the heads o't.

Shortly before the forenoon service began in Stockbridge Free Church, Edinburgh, on Sunday, 13th ult., a young man named James Fairbairn came quietly in at the church door, and as soon as he had got inside he rushed with outstretched arms along the passage and up into the pulpit. Coming to the front, he cried out in a loud voice, "I am Elijah the prophet." This caused much commotion among those of the congregation already assembled. Several attempts were made to remove the intruder, and at length force had to be used. It seems Fairbairn is liable to mental derangement. His family are connected with the Church.

The Clyde-built steamer Ormuz, of the Orient Line, has made the passage to Australia in 24 days.

The Clyde Locomotive Company have secured the contract for the locomotives for the Midland Uruguay Railway.

Colonel Balfour, of Balfour, died in Edinburgh on the 19th ult., aged 76 years. He was an extensive landowner in Orkney.

Wiman's deer forest extends across Scotland, from Beauly Firth on east to Kintail on west coast, 346 square miles, 221,700 acres.

President Meiklejohn, St. Andrews, has again been selected as the candidate in the Gladstonian interest for the Tradeston Division of Glasgow.

The order for the closing of Dingwall prison on March 1st has been received, and the prisoners will be transferred to the prison at Inverness.

Rev. P. Mackercher, the deposed minister of Kilmore, preached a valedictory sermon to his old parishioners recently in the schoolhouse at Dunach.

The Lord's Supper has been this year dispensed in two parishes, Barvas and Lochs, in the Lewis, for the first time perhaps since the Disruption.

The author of a remarkable forthcoming volume against teetotalism is a graduate of Edinburgh University, and a probationer of the Free Church of Scotland.

Norman Macleod's old church at Newmilns was the only one in that parish which had services on the Fast-day last month, all the other churches having ceased to observe it.

Mr. Wm. Macdonald, editor of the North British Agriculturist, died on the 19th ult., after a short illness, at his residence in Sylvan Place. He leaves a widow and four children.

Rev. Dr. Alex. Whyte, discoursing on "Some Autobiographies," declared that of all works in this department religious autobiographies were infinitely and incomparably the best.

Prof. Mackinnon, the occupant of the Gaelic chair at Edinburgh, says the name of the Clyde is derived from cleuse, "to wash," so that in modern Gaelic the name signifies "the clear or pure river."

There were three appeals before the House of Lords the other day relating to the will of the late Dr. Boyd Baxter, Dundee. Strange that so celebrated a lawyer could not make his own will explicit.

The ministerial jubilee of the Rev. Horatius Bonar, D. D., of Edinburgh, which was to have been celebrated this month, has been postponed, on account of the venerable doctor's indisposition, till March, 1888.

Rev. Herbert Bell, of John Knox Church, Aberdeen, threw himself on the 21st ult. in front of the afternoon express as it was passing Kittybrewster and was cut to pieces. Recently he had been in poor health, caused by severe domestic affliction.

At a meeting of the Lord Provost's Committee of the Edinburgh Town Council, held on Nov. 23rd, it was unanimously agreed to recommend to the Council that Dr. Chambers' statue be erected in the centre of Chambers street, opposite to the Industrial Museum.

Considerable excitement was caused in Glasgow Royal Exchange on the 24th ult. by the discovery that 15,000 tons of pig iron had been sold at the afternoon market, in compliance with a forged order purporting to be signed by James Watson & Co. A searching investigation will be made int the scandalous affair.

A laird of Speyside, who had just received a commission as a County Magistrate, said to a half-witted individual who had been sent on an errand on horseback, "Oh! Josie, you are riding on a horse today; would not an ass suit you better?" "Ou aye," returned Josie, "but asses are unco scarce noo-a-days—they've a' been made Justices o' the Peace."

A curious sacrilege case has caused some talk in Glasgow lately. Jane Watson, 25 years of age, who is employed in a Glasgow warehouse, was arrested one Sunday recently at Adelaide Place Baptist Church on a charge of having stolen £2 from the collection plate at the door when she was entering. The young woman, who is respectably connected, has been for several years an adherent of the church. After being two days in prison she was dismissed by the Magistrate (Bailie Colquhoun) with "an admonition."

Cute Sayings by the Little Ones.

TOMMY'S EXPERIENCE IN SCHOOL.

Little Tommy had spent his first day at school. "What did you learn?" asked his auntie.

"Didn't learn anything," said Tommy.

"Well, what did you do?"

"Didn't do anything. A woman wanted to know how to spell 'cat' and I told her."

WHAT CHARLEY OBJECTS TO.

Little Charley puzzled his mamma one day with the inquiry, "Mamma, do all good people go to heaven when they die?"

"Yes, my son."

"And will grandpa go to heaven, too?"

"I hope so, my boy."

"Then I don't want to go to heaven."

"Why not?" asked the astonished mother.

"Because grandpa will say, when he sees us boys there, 'Whew! whew! whew! What's all these boys doing up here."

CLOSE REASONING.

A little chap uptown who called himself Doctor Sol says wiser things than one would expect from a three-year-old.

"When will baby talk?" he said to his mother the other day.

"When she gets her teeth," said his mother.

"All her teeth?"

"All."

"Well, I don't believe it," said the little fellow after reflection. "Grandfather has only one tooth and he talks you to death."

Something About Footwear.

Fifty years ago boots had the preference. To-day shoes. Formerly, in all weathers, the boot was worn outside of the trousers. To-day, when worn at all, the legs of the boots are covered by the legs of the trousers. The whirligig of time is bringing boots into the fashion again, at least for winter wear, and it seems to be in the interest of good health. It stands to reason that it should be so. Everybody respects the force of the general hygienic principle that it is necessary to keep the head cool and the feet warm if good health is sought. Boots cover not only the feet, but the ankle and the lower leg, and hence fight off rheumatism that delights in attacking those parts. Woolen stockings are possibly too heating and make the feet perspire. With a pair of good boots, cashmere socks are better. The sole of a winter boot should be thick, but, being thick, it isn't necessary that it should be heavy. Cork soles are excellent, and they make a light-weighted boot, while protecting the foot from the wet. A pair of fancy leather tops, say of the best morocco, will last many years, and so, with footing, boots eventually cost as little as shoes. The boot legs should fit as snugly to the limbs as the size of the feet will permit. This makes the legs of the trousers fit the better. Eschew galoshes. They injure by "drawing." Let thick soles serve their purpose. If the feet get wet put them into cold water, next dry them thoroughly, and then, with a change of socks, they will fairly glow with warmth.—New York Times.

Nearly a Checkmate.

They tell it on a member of the club, but it may only be a gross slander. He had been playing chess at the club-rooms until a late hour, and after he got outside he stood on the sidewalk meditating. A policeman, unperceived, made his approach. "Move on," he said, gruffly. "It's your move," said the absent-minded citizen, and if mutual recognitions had not occurred it might have been the policeman's.

Many years ago—it was when the four Harper brothers, of New York, were living—a well known physician came into their office one day and was talking with one of them, who noticed that his visitor's coat sleeve was torn. He called his attention to it, saying that it would be well if he would ask his wife to mend it, as it did not look well for a gentleman to go about with his clothes in that condition. "Sir," announced the doctor, sternly, "I prefer that it should remain as it is. A tear may be the accident of a day, but a darn is the sign manual of penury."

Too Late.

In dust of roses in an antique jar,
With rare sweet savors round and over it
Of spicy odors Time can never mar,
I find a letter by a woman writ.
No ghost could make me shudder as the sight
Of this poor missive all so long unseen,
Wherein I read of all my lost delight
And all the sweetness of what might have been.

A woman's face, a woman's tender touch,
A woman's gentle voice and soft caress—
Yourself, my darling, whom I loved so much,
Forever by my side to soothe and bless—
All mine for but one poor unspoken pray'r
My faint lips might have uttered long ago—
All lost (and surely this is hard to bear)
Because I did not hope and could not know!

I hold the crumpled sheet that tells it all,
And, looking on your gracious loving words,
One dead sweet hour my dreaming thoughts recall,
Made glad by whisp'ring leaves and song of birds.
And in a green and shady woodland place
I see the Spring's pale sunshine on your hair,
The matchless marble beauty of your face,
Beyond all other women's cold and fair.

Across a dreary gulf of tears and pain
You come, a radiant vision of the Past,
And all unchanged, unwithered, still remain,
O love, as when I looked upon you last!
Ah, had I told you in that hour, my sweet,
Of all the true deep love you could not guess,
And poured my soul's wild passion at your feet,
I might have heard your soft and whispered "Yes!"

But, fool and blind, I did not dare to speak;
No tender glance or word would fear allow
Because my love had made my heart so weak!
I wrote my pray'r, and read the answer—now!
Now—and I waited, oh, with that despair
In that dead time of bitter loss and shame;
And while I deemed my grief too hard to bear,
You watched and wondered, and I never came!

Some wayward chance, some pitiful mistake—
Ah me, could sadder destiny appear?—
Two hearts were ruined and two hearts might break—
This letter lay among the roses here!
Oh, cold and cruel irony of Fate,
That, having held most precious gifts unseen,
Then mocks us with the bitter words, "Too late,"
And hardest taunt of all, "It might have been!"

Here and There.

California has sent east seven solid train loads of raisins, each train composed of twenty cars, thus far this season.

It is a singular fact that the recent cold snap in Georgia froze up the ice factory at Griffin and deprived the town of ice.

A man in Paineville, Ore., bit off an adversary's nose in a qurrrel and the local paper says that he was fined $250 and placed under bonds to keep the piece.

Congressman Scott, of Pennsylvania, is worth anywhere from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. He began life as a clerk on a canal boat at the age of twenty.

A ferocious panther rushed through the streets of Montgomery, Pa., pursued by a pack of dogs, the other day. A score of men turned out with guns to kill the animal, but it escaped into the woods.

Whenever Ben Mann, of Terrell county, Ga., returns from a hunting trip he throws a nickel to his favorite pointer and the dog picks it up in his mouth, trots over to the butcher's and buys a piece of meat for himself.

When the fire department at Brunswick, Ga., is called out at night Mrs. M. C. Rowe hangs a lantern on the piazza of her house to notify the firemen that there is hot coffee awaiting them there when they have finished their labors.

A Kansas City oculist says that nearly two-thirds of the spectacles and eyeglasses which near-sighted people pay good prices for are merely bits of common glass treated with a coating of chemicals, which gives them the appearance of being genuine pebbles.

The largest diamond ever found in the United States was picked up by a laborer employed in grading a street in Manchester, Va. It weighed 23½ carats in rough, and 11½ carats when cut. It passed into the possession of Capt. Samuel Dewey, and John Morrissey once loaned $6,000 on it.

A young man in Tallahassee, Fla., who in calling on his sweetheart stayed until past midnight, found the front door of the house fastened when he was ready to go. He made his exit through a window, and fell into the hands of the town marshal, who mistook him for a burglar and marched him off to the lock-up.

Mrs. Johnson Newman, of Jasper, Tex., heard dogs baying the other evening, and going out of doors she found that they had driven a handsome buck deer into a corner of the fence near the house. Procuring an axe, she dealt the animal two powerful blows on the head and killed it.

The Piute Indians of Nevada are just now engaged in their annual rabbit hunt. It is their custom to form a circle ten or twelve miles in diameter and gradually contract it until large numbers of rabbits have been driven together in the centre. Then the slaughter begins, the little animals being killed in thousands.

How the Bank of England is Protected.

The Bank of England doors are now so finely balanced that a clerk, by pressing a knob under his desk, can close the outer doors instantly, and they cannot be opened again except by special process. This is done to prevent the daring and ingenious unemployed of the metropolis from robbing the bank. The bullion department of this and other banks are nightly submerged several feet in water by the action of the machinery. In some banks the bullion department is connected with the manager's sleeping-room, and an entrance can not be effected without shooting a bolt in the dormitory, which in turn sets in motion a alarm. If a visitor during the day should happen to knock off one from a pile of half sovereigns the whole pile would disappear, a pool of water taking its place.

Novel Remedy for Rheumatism.

A lady residing on South Main street arose from her bed last night in response to the appeals from her daughter, who was suffering from rheumatic pains, to give her a vigorous application of some effective liniment which the family had been in the habit of using on such occasions. The fond mother rubbed her daughter's limbs and applied the remedy without stint. The pains soon disappeared and the daughter slept well until morning, when she discovered that nearly 50 cents worth of cough medicine had been wasted on her rheumatism. Her pains returned as quickly as they had disappeared.—Jacksonville (Ill.) Courier.

The Child of the Period.

Small girl—Why did that policeman touch his hat to you, aunty? Have you got one as well as nurse?—London Punch.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Cousin Kate's Weekly Budget of Fashion and Other Gossip.

The Men Need Comforters.

The road along which the man of business travels is not a macadamized one, nor does it ordinarily lead through pleasant scenes and by well-springs of delight. On the contrary, it is a rough and rugged path, beset with "wait-a-bits" thorns, and full of pitfalls, which can only be avoided by the watchful cares of circumspection. After every day's journey over this worse than rough turnpike road, the wayfarer needs something more than rest; he requires solace, and deserves it. He is weary of the dull prose of life and athirst for the poetry. Happy is the husband who can find that solace and that poetry at home. Warm greetings from loving hearts, fond glances from bright eyes, the welcome shouts of children, the many thousand little arrangements for our comfort and enjoyment that silently tell of thoughtful and expectant love, the gentle ministrations that disencumber us into an old and easy seat before we are aware of it, these and little tokens of affection and sympathy constitute the poetry which reconciles us to the prose of life. Think of this, ye wives and daughters of business men! Think of the toils, the anxieties, the mortifications and wear that fathers undergo to secure for you comfortable homes, and then compensate them for their trials by making them happy by their own firesides.

A Slipper-Hint.

No person should run about sleeping-rooms or into halls from bed in bare feet. Air currents are constantly in motion near the floor, and circulation is more easily retarded in feet and legs than near the heart. It is therefore a good plan to have a warm pair of slippers always close to the bed, that may be slipped on quickly before one's feet touch the floor; made loose enough to be kicked off when climbing into bed again. For one who is liable to be called up frequently, as in cases of illness, the slipper-hint will prove valuable if followed.

The Latest Freak in Feminine Fashion.

When last season a young debutante appeared at a fashionable dance in a dress trimmed with a flight of stuffed canaries, and another lady flitted about with parrots' heads glaring at the beholder from all parts of her gorgeous costume, it was thought that the fashion could not go much further in its use of the "dumb creation." The summit, however, was not yet reached, as an item of news from Paris plainly shows. A favorite dress at fancy dress balls this winter, we are told, will undoubtedly be the black cat costume—a low necked and sleeveless corsage—tunic in gold yellow satin cut in one, in the Princess style. The latter is looped over a short underskirt in black velvet, and is bordered with a row of little figures of Napoleon cut out of black velvet. On the left side of the corsage is placed a large stuffed black cat, the tail curving over the wearer's shoulders, while the outstretched forelegs of the animal claw up one side of the overskirt. Long black gloves reaching above the elbow, gold yellow silk stockings, and black satin slippers complete the toilette. It is bad enough to butcher the birds of the air in the service of fashion, but there is at least some beauty in brilliant and gracefully arranged feathers, while a "large black cat" calls forth nothing but thoughts of ghastly tales of witches and sorcerers.

Household Hints.

Clean zinc with kerosene.

Painted chamois skin tidies now decorate chairs and sofas.

Silver continues to be the rage for every description of costly toilet articles.

"Save cold tea for the vinegar barrel," says a housewife. "It sours easily and gives color and flavor."

To soften water for dish washing and laundry purposes thoroughly dissolve one teaspoonful of granulated lye in four gallons of water.

Oscar Wilde on Fashions.

In an article on dress, Mr. Wilde observes: "Without freedom there is no such thing as beauty in dress at all. In fact, the beauty of dress depends on the beauty of the human figure, and whatever limits, constrains and mutilates is essentially ugly, though the eyes of many are so blinded by custom that they do not notice the ugliness till it has become unfashionable."

Latest Fashion Notes.

Shoulder capes of fur have taken the place of boas.

With the gobelin-blue costumes, almost as fashionable now as heliotrope used to be, are worn gloves of the same color in dressed kid, with broad stitchings on the back in a lighter shade.

Bonnets are growing much smaller, and before the winter is over there will be few of the high ones left. The new ones are round and low and the exact opposites of those of last winter. They are not nearly so becoming as the ones they supersede.

A morning gown for an invalid is made of old blue cashmere, opening at a point from the throat over a loose front of the same shade of plush. Broad gros-grain ribbons of old-blue confine it loosely at the waist and the deep turned over collar and cuffs are of the plush. An edging of a double fold of blue and of white ribbon finishes the inside of the sleeves and collars.

A pretty morning gown for a lady in mourning is of black cashmere made with train and Watteau pleat. The front is of white surah, over which is a loose Fedora front of black embroidered net. This is slightly confined with a broad black watered ribbon sewed to the under arm seams and knotted in front some distance below the waist. The close sleeves have loose puffs of the net-covered surah appearing from beneath them at the waist, while the collar is of watered ribbon.

A very pretty dress for a child has a guimpe and sleeves of tucked nainsook, the frock itself being brown cashmere, with four deep tucks in the gathered skirt. The waist is laid in narrow tucks forming a V shape in front. It is corded on both edges and pointed back and front. The sleeves are only three inches long and have three tucks, being considerably frilled in the armhole. Around the waist is passed a very broad stip of brown Hercules braid and knotted loosely on one side having fringed ends.

Red and black are the favorite colors of the season in theatre and street bonnets. A charming bonnet just imported from London was smoothly covered with poppy velvet, and planted erect in front were a cluster of narrow, silky wing feathers of the black cock. Black lace about three inches wide was ruffled among the feathers and hung in a frill over the pointed front of the bonnet. Red velvet strings were cut flaring at the ends and pinned across with little gold pins, making thus a broad bow beneath the chin.

For travelling round hats are preferred to bonnets. These new felt sailor shapes are very much liked because their brims are turned up sharply in the back and admit of leaning back against the side of the car without damage to their appearance. For travelling these are simply trimmed with big loops of wide ribbon with a couple of quills thrust through them; but for street wear the cluster of ostrich tips are preferred. Nothing can be more becoming for either blonde or brunette than a black sailor hat trimmed with black plumes.

Silks striped lengthwise at broad intervals with velvet are seen in some of the newest costumes. A handsome one of dull green has a skirt striped with velvet, with the stripes alternately broad and narrow. This is made without trimming. The draperies are of plain silk and are in two pieces, being drawn back from the front, showing a section of the skirt up to the edge of the velvet-striped bodice, which is cut basque shape back and front, and on the sides is long, forming two panels reaching to the edge of the draperies. The bodice has a vest of the plain silk.

Many of the new bonnets are made with crowns of embroidered felt. These come in round pieces of felt in all shades, in open work and embroidered in contrasting colors, or else silver, gold or copper. They are set upon frames whose brims have been covered with velvet, and are trimmed either with feathers or ribbon. Some of the felt bonnets are made of narrow edging of felt embroidered in scallops, and this is set in close over-lapping rows over the entire bonnet. A pretty gray one is embroidered with scallops of silver and trimmed with gray feathers and poppy velvet.

"Poor Jim."

At the Brompton county court yesterday His Honor Judge Stonor heard a case in which Mrs. Silverton, a laundress, sued Mme. Corner, a lady residing in Montpelier square, for £15 13s. 2d., being the balance of amount due for the board and maintenance of a cat. Mr. Robinson appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Richards for the defendant.

Mr. Robinson stated that the cat, which was a favorite and very valuable, came into the possession of the plaintiff in June, 1883, when an agreement was entered into by which she undertook to keep the animal and supply it every day with half a pound of liver and a pint of milk, for which she was to receive 2 shillings per week, payable by instalments of £1 in advance. The defendant paid various sums up to Aug. 1st, 1884, and several letters passed, one of which ran as follows:

"Dear Annie,—Inclosed is £1 off James' (the cat's) account, and a tin of sardines for his dinner, which I hope he will enjoy. I inclose you also a loin of pork, which I trust will be equally acceptable to yourself."

In August last the defendant became desirous of having "Poor Jim" poisoned, and sent a messenger with a letter begging that the cat should be handed over to him for that purpose. The plaintiff stated that in 1883 Mme. Corner, who was a wealthy lady, lived in Sussex street, Pimlico, and the witness was her charwoman. On changing her residence she asked the witness to take care of the cat, and the witness was to feed it as stated.

Mr. Rickards (in cross-examination)—"Have you a receipt for what you fed that cat on?"

The witness—"No; but my solicitor has. Very often my husband and I have fed that cat when we were hungry ourselves. We did it out of respect to Mme. Corner. She sent us many valuable presents, such as a loin of pork."

Mr. Rickards—"It was a very valuable cat, was it not?"

The witness—"Yes."

Mr. Rickards—"I should think so. He ate almost enough to keep a man."

The witness—"I would not like to keep you on it long."

"Not on loins of pork?"

The witness—"We ate the pork. 'Jim' ate the sardines."

Ultimately His Honor gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.—St. James' Gazette.

Momentous Domestic Event.

Young Mrs. Tupper rushed into Tupper's office the other day, all out of breath, her bonnet on one side of her head and her bangs drifting in wild disorder over her alabaster brow. "Caught a car and came down just as soon as I could," she gasped. "Oh! Reginald, you——" "For heaven's sake, what is the matter?" gasped Tupper, pale as a ghost. "Why, you poor, unsympathetic man! Baby's got his first tooth!"—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

A Little Information About Maine.

More than half the area of Maine is north of the northern line of New Hampshire and Vermont. The northern part of the State is farther north than Quebec. More than half of Maine is still an unsettled wilderness. It almost deserves the name of "the empire state."—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

The Empty Barn.

"If I were as bald as you," said Gus DeSmith to one of the most prominent citizens of Austin, "I would wear a wig." "I don't see why you should ever wear a wig if you were bald," was the quiet response, "an empty barn doesn't need a roof."—Texas Siftings.

THE HANDSOME WOMAN.—No woman can be handsome by the forse of features alone, any more than she can be witty by the help of speech alone. Character must shine through the looks, and beauty or its absence will depend on what the character may be.—Hughes.

SICKNESS HEALED BY FAITH.

Convention of People Who Believe in Personal Appeal to God—A Former Hamilton Pastor's Experiences.

(Chicago News.)

"The prayer of faith heals the sick," was the motto that guided the band of believers assembled to-day in the First Methodist Church audience room. When the hands of the big clock, that looked silently down on the assembly, had crept along to the hour of 10 a large, elderly gentleman stepped behind the pulpit and opened the devotional exercises. It was the Rev. Glen Wood. His locks are like the snow, and his tremulous voice thrilled the large audience as he prayed for the sick and needy, and declared his consecration to the work of God.

The Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, editor of "Word, Work and World" (formerly of Knox Church, Hamilton), made the opening address. Mr. Simpson visited Chicago two years ago, and has long been associated with those who have devoted their labors and time to reclaiming unfortunate women in the great metropolis, New York. He is a tall man, slightly built, with a high forehead, a dark complexion, and hair and whiskers as black as coal. His manner of address is very impressive, the speaker emphasizing his earnest language by bringing his hand down emphatically on the desk.

Mr. Simpson said that the Greeks of old were continually looking for a new philosophy. The Apostle Paul brought that philosophy. It was the wisdom of Jesus Christ. That philosophy was both practical and complete. The speaker believed physical redemption to be the direct touch of God. It was a necessary part of a complete redemption. It was as necessary to-day as a century ago, and was a special manifestation by the Son of God of the truth of the scriptures. We needed faith in the Lord as an answer to skepticism as well as a means of approaching the throne of grace. The second coming of the Lord was another necessary adjunct to the theory of redemption. If it was cut off the highest incentive of life was destroyed. The second coming is an eternal complement to our righteousness, sanctification and physical redemption. The healing of the body was of the same Christ. It was the breath of Christ, and was nothing when not connected with Him. Jesus imparted to us the precious transfusion of his life and blood, not in a physical but a spiritual sense.

A few weak bodies, wasted with disease, had wended their way up the flights of stairs and into the audience room to listen to the words of hope that fell from the lips of the speakers. Just as Mr. Simpson had finished his address a lady grown prematurely aged from disease slowly mounted the tiresome steps, holding to the banisters to keep her tottering body from falling.

"Which is the door?" the feeble voice asked. "I want to hear a single word of hope." A strong hand guided her to the place of worship, and as Bishop Fallows' earnest voice rang throughout the room that weak frame earnestly drank in every word and feebly murmured: "Amen." By her side sat an old man suffering with disease of the spine. The pink of youth had fled from his cheek, but his pale features shone with joy as he contemplated his probable restoration to health.

American Cotton.

Bradstreet's calls attention to the fact that there has been a steady decrease in the yield of cotton in the Southern States, and that this decrease has gone on in the face of a yearly increase of acreage. It is stated that the average yield per acre is thirty-one pounds less than it was five years ago. This decrease amounts to about 15 per cent., while the decline in price has been 24 per cent. The cotton crop of 1882 amounted to 7,000,000 bales, which were grown on 16,134,000 acres. The estimated crop for the present year is 6,300,000 bales, and the area 18,698,000 acres. This decline of late years in the yield of cotton is supposed to be due in part to the fact that the soil of late years has been deprived of its natural fertilizer, the cotton seed, which has become a marketable commodity, and artificial fertilizers have not as yet been introduced to a sufficient extent to compensate for the loss.

Sayings by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Numerous little excuses always prove the absence of any real excuse, or a desire that it shall not be discovered.

It is an acknowledged fact that one pretty woman never sees any beauty in another. It would not be human nature if she did.

So much a man will do where nothing is needed—so much time and money he will spend for a woman who needs neither!

If I were a man I would never want to marry a blonde, for I know she would be a faded and washed-out woman before she reached maturity. It hardly pays to be pretty for so short a time.

No woman who lives rightly, and means rightly, insists upon keeping an engagement secret.

A man will do so much where nothing is needed.

Two Fine Country Families.

Mrs. Waldo, of Boston—I have a letter from your Uncle James, Penelope, who wants us to spend the summer on his farm. Penelope, dubiously—Is there any society in the neighborhood? Mrs. Waldo—I've heard him speak of the Holsteins and Guernseys. I presume they are pleasant people.

Not Deceived.

Papa (to little Tommy, who has been to see "Uncle Tom's Cabin")—I suppose you saw little Eva die and go to heaven?

Tommy—I saw her die, but I don't believe she went to heaven, 'cause I saw her come out after the performance.—Philadelphia Times.

—A writer on the care of canary birds says that a raw apple, cabbage leaf and plantain should be provided. Aim to give one or the other of these things every day the year round. Occasionally give a piece of bread soaked in milk, but never cake or candy. Once a week give boiled eggs mixed with cracker. Never hang any birds in a draft or wind, and never set them out of their cages. In moulting time give a dusting of cayenne pepper to their egg and cracker, or bread and milk.

Ira Sankey, Moody's former co-laborer, is working on a new hymn book.

The Sick Child.

CHILD.

O mother, lay your hand on my brow!
O mother, mother, where am I now?
Why is the room so gaunt and great?
Why am I lying awake so late?

MOTHER.

Fear not at all, the night is still,
Nothing is here that means you ill—
Nothing but lamps the whole town through,
And never a child awake but you.

CHILD.

Mother, mother, speak low in my ear,
Some of the things are so great and near—
Some are so small and far away
I have a fear that I cannot say,
What have I done, and what do I fear
And why are you crying, mother dear.

MOTHER.

Out in the city the sounds begin;
Thank the kind God, the carts come in!
An hour or two more and God is so kind,
The city shall be blue in the window blind.
Then shall my child go sweetly asleep
And dream of the birds and the hills of sheep.
—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Sentiment at an Auction.

There was a bit of sentiment in an auction sale this week. Although it was a disposal of the effects of Henry Ward Beecher, little interest was excited outside of his personal friends, who attended for the purpose of buying souvenirs of their beloved pastor. Books and bric-a-brac went one after another at about their original cost until a tiny paper-bound copy of Mrs. Browning's poems was offered. The auctioneer regarded it carelessly, but one person had discovered written on a fly-leaf: "Theodore Tilton to Henry Ward Beecher," and he bid it up slowly to $1, $2, $3, finally losing it to somebody who gave $5.

"Glad I didn't get it," he remarked. "It isn't worth any such ridiculous price."

Who had paid $5 for a thing intrinsically worth not more than five cents? Elizabeth Tilton. The ostensible purchaser was an intimate friend. Presumably Mrs. Tilton desired it as a joint memento of the two remarkable men who have made such an awful commotion over her. What particular memory was to her associated with this gift of her husband to her pastor I do not know, but I do know that the little volume is now at a bindery being covered handsomely with morocco. It used to be predicted that Theodore Tilton would take his wife back, but he has never done so, and he is living in Paris, where he earns a modest living with his pen. Nor did the Plymouth Church people ever forgive her. So far as known neither Tilton nor Beecher ever communicated with her after the scandal.—Chicago Tribune's New York Letter.

The Glorious Uncertainty of the Law.

A clearer case of the ups and downs which may befall the parties to a legal contest has seldom occurred than that which will appear by the following resume

1. On the 31st day of May, 1883, the plaintiff, Henry Beatty, brought an action against the defendants, the Northwest Transportation Company, to set aside the sale of a steamer called the United Empire. The matter first came before the Chancellor of Ontario (Boyd), who on the 9th day of May, 1884, decided in favor of the plaintiff. The plaintiff goes up and the defendants come down.

2. The defendants appealed to the Court of Appeal of Ontario, composed of Hagarty, C.J., Burton and Osler, J.J., and were successful. The plaintiff comes down and the defendants go up.

3. The plaintiff then appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, composed of Ritchie, C.J., Fournier, Henry, Taschereau and Gwynne, J.J., and was successful. The plaintiff goes up and the defendants come down.

4. The defendants finally appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of the United Kingdom, composed of Lord Hobhouse, Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir Richard Baggally and Sir Richard Couch, and were successful. The defendants go up for good and the plaintiff comes down to stay.

A layman's advice is—Never go to law unless you know.—Ottawa Journal.

The Passover in Algeria.

A correspondent sends to London Notes and Queries particulars of a curious Passover custom in Algeria. He says: "During the Passover week, in the present year, I noticed that many of the houses in the Jew quarter in Oran and in Tlemcen were marked on the outside with the impressions of the human hand. These impressions were in different colors—red, black, yellow or blue; and in no instance, as well as I can recollect, were they either upon the sideposts of the doors or upon the lintels, but always upon the walls of the houses. In some cases there was one impression only, in others there was as many as five; and, further, in others, they were arranged somewhat in the form of a branch, having three hands at the summit and three at each of the sides. At Tlemcen I saw a man making an impression with a brush and ordinary red paint. This custom does not appear to be known among the English Jews, for, after many inquiries, I have met with none who has ever heard of it." The correspondent asks. "Is it not an outgrowth or survival from that ceremony which was performed on the night of the flight of the Israelites from Egypt? and may not the branch-like figure be symbolical of the bunch of hyssop?"

Cock-Fighting at Macassar.

The spurs used were about three inches long and made of the blades of razors ground down to excessive thinness. With such weapons there is but little cruelty in the affair. We waited to see a main fought before we left. The king and other royal personages made their bets, the combatants were placed opposite to one another, they made two feints, and in less than half a dozen seconds the vanquished bird lay motionless on the ground. Had he met his fate legitimately at the hands of the poulterer his death could not have been more rapidly effected.—The Cruise of the Marchesa.

No Sham for Him.

Barber (to rural customer)—Have a shampoo, sir?

Rural Customer—Not much. What d'ye take me for? I may be from Squedunk, but I don't take no shampoo. I take the real thing every time.

Rev. John Wakefield, of Brantford, has accepted the invitation from the Quarterly Official Board of Washington Church to become their pastor for the ensuing year, subject to the approval of the Stationing Committee.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, DEC. 22, 1887.

A SPUR RAILWAY?

The time has now arrived, we think, when Flesherton should do something towards bettering her railway facilities. It is simply loss of time waiting for some line of railway to run across the County from West to East, and risk the chances of its touching Flesherton en route for some port on the Georgian Bay. Other places are waiting for the same "chance" Let us drop chance-work and turn our attention to certainties.

Some years ago a mild agitation arose here in reference to the necessity for a spur railway from the Station to Flesherton. A public meeting was held, when it was resolved to have the road surveyed. This was done—the expenses in connection therewith being chiefly borne by Mr. R. J. Sproule, a gentleman who has been most untiring in his efforts to advance our mutual interests. But after the road was surveyed, the scheme fell through.

There is now nothing impossible or impracticable about that spur railway project. Private individuals have been known to build lines of railway, for their own accomodation, three times the length. Surely a wealthy and growing place like Flesherton will not allow itself to be thrown into the shade by the enterprise and pluck of a single individual? We trow not. Besides it is not necessary to have a branch line more than about one mile in length, which would bring the terminus to a distance of not more than half a mile from the centre of the town. This would be quite near enough, and we do not think the slightest difficulty need be feared in regard to the C.P.R. Co. furnishing rolling stock. Indeed they have shown a disposition to secure as much of the business of this town as possible, in that they have already decided to run a telegraph line from the Station to Flesherton. Mt. Forest, for instance, is connected with the main line by a branch railway. Why not Flesherton?

What say our citizens? If they condemn the scheme, then we must—as the next best thing—fall back upon the much-talked-of straight level road. Which shall it be?

Flesherton Cheese Factory,

On Thursday 8th inst. the patrons of this factory met in Flesherton, to close up the business of the present year and to make some arrangements for the next. The output of the factory this year has been 88102½ lbs. of cheese made from 926,863 lbs. of milk realizing in all $9045.37, the total expenses was $1876 20, leaving for the patrons $7169.17. There was paid for making cheese $1101.28, milk drawing $720.92, to president and secretary $40, Telegraphing, postage and stationery $14. The following were elected directors for next year: J. McKee, D. Thompson, J. Teeter, T. McArthur, T. Wright, D. McMullin, R. Oliver, W. Wilcock, and S. Pedlar.

The next meeting will be held on the 1st of March.

The Illustrated London News (American Edition) is the handsomest weekly newspaper in the world and, considering the vast expense entailed in getting up a single number even, it amazes one to think that this superb journal can be sent to any address in this country for one year for the paltry sum of $4. or single copies 10 cent each. And yet such is the case. One can scarcely imagine a more appropriate Christmas present than a year's subscription to this splendid journal, or even a copy of the Xmas number of the same, recently issued, and which—pictorial and typographical excellence considered—is the finest holiday number we have ever seen. Address:—THE ILLUSTRATED NEWS Co., Potter Building, N.Y.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

Forestry Report,

Mr. Phipps very interesting and excellent Forestry Report—noticed in our last issue—should be in the hands of every farmer, as well as every person interested in the culture and preservation of our forests. Following is a brief synopsis of the contents:

A report from 160 townships, giving the amount of wood fit for fuel yet standing in the older settled portions of Ontario.

A report of a careful examination of two townships, in Ontario, one lying northerly and one southerly, with the view of obtaining an accurate idea of the effects of woods, or lines of trees, on the growing crops, and the climatic differences observed since the clearing up of the country.

Notices of the progress of forestry in other countries.

Result of experiments in sowing evergreens in large quantities in Ontario, and directions as to how similar results may be obtained.

Complete directions as to raising all trees from seed, and planting them out.

Carefully prepared statements as to the lumber district of Ontario, the Value and Uses of Woods here, Planting in School Grounds and on Arbour Day, Value of Woods in Preserving Humidity in adjacent fields, Proposed Forest Reservations, Management of Trees in Cities, Overclearing in Ontario, Plantations Advisable in Ontario Farms Preservation of Birds, Forest Work in India, Evergreen Hedges, and many kindred subjects, as well as suitable reports from gentlemen who have of late years started plantations here.

Money to be Made.

It is said that dull times are not known by the agents for the great publishing house of George Stinson & Co., of Portland, Maine. The reason of this exceptional success is found in the fact that they always give the the public that which is keenly appreciated and at prices that all can afford. At present we understand their agents are doing wonderfully on several new lines. They need many more agents in all parts of the country. Those who need profitable work should apply at once. Women do as well as men. Experience is not necessary, for Messrs. Stinson & Co. undertake to show all who are willing to work, not hard but earnestly, the path to large success. It should be remembered that an agent can do a handsome business without being away from home over night. Another advantage—it costs nothing to give the business a trial, and an agent can devote all his time or only his spare moments to it. Stinson & Co. guarantee grand success to all who engage and follow simple and plain directions that they give. We have not space to explain all here, but full particulars will be sent free to those who address the firm; their full address is given above.

Luxuriant Hair

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was last losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, converted my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton,

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

The CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For? Where?

To W. S CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than those for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 73 to 0 78
Spring Wheat	0 73	0 78
Barley	0 55	0 75
Oats	0 30	0 31
Peas	0 56	0 56
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 80	6 00
Hay, per ton	8 00	8 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 40	0 56
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

A Positive Cure. ✝ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines,

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, restlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation. Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✝ A Pleasant Cure.

W. BOOTH,

The Boss Barber,

FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316388

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

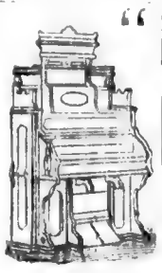
GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

Flesherton Station Mill.

The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. GEORGE MOOREHOUSE, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.
FLESHERTON ONT.

A splendid rich toned New Organ and two famed New William's Sewing Machines for sale at a great reduction for cash or trade at C. Teadgold's residence Flesherton. 4w.

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give

Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVeau, 262 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Executor's Notice

IN pursuance of sect. 1, Chap. 9, 46 Vic., notice is hereby given that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of W. H. Colquett, deceased, late of the township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, and Province of Ontario, who died on or about the 26th day of May, 1886, are to sent by post prepaid or delivered to William S. Christoe, M.D., on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, a statement containing their names and addresses and full particulars of their claims and of the securities (if any) held by them and after the said, last mentioned date, the said W. S. Christoe, for the personal Estate and effects, rights and credits of the said W. H. Colquett—will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased amongst the parties entitled thereto, regard being had only to the claims of which notice has been given as above required, and Executors will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person or persons of whom claims have not been received by the said W. S. Christoe.

And further, all parties who are indebted to the said Estate of the said W. H. Colquett, deceased, are to pay as the same becomes due, to the said W. S. Christoe.

W. S. CHRISTOE,
for the Executors.
JAMES LOVE, SAMUEL COLQUETT, and MRS. COLQUETT.

Dated, Flesherton, this 20th day of Dec., 1887.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

SANTA CLAUS IS HERE!

You will Find Him Busy in Richardson's Drug Store.

Yes! Santa Claus and his reindeers and all the rest—jingle, jingle, jingle! tinkle, tinkle, tinkle! On Prancer, on Blitzen—ah! here we are! Where? Why at Richardson's Drug Store to be sure, where all the pretty things in Vases, Xmas Cards, Toys, Wax Dolls, Toy Guns, Tin Whistles, Swords, Trumpets, Velocipedes, Bicycles, Banks, Humming Spinning Tops, Flags, Engines, Kaleidoscopes, Stoves and Furniture complete, Drums, Valises, Boats, Full sets Furniture, Shell Goods. Chinaman and Baby, The Wonderful Clacking Hen, Steamboats, Pretty Little smoothing Irons, Alphabetical Blocks, Chinese Lanterns and Wax Candles, Building Blocks,—well, really, there is such a tremendous stock—such a bewildering display of beautiful and cheap holiday goods that it is impossible to give a detailed description—it would puzzle old Santa Claus himself to do so. See the comical banks—funny enough to make an owl laugh. And the sweets—oh! my! they say it even made Santa Claus' mouth water as he parcelled up Lozenges, Candies, Mixed Sweets, Gum Drops, Caramels, &c., &c. Yes, and the dear old fellow just nibbled a few on the sly—they were so good, you know. Ha, ha, ha! Sly old boots—just knew he liked sweets as well as little folks. And do you know—whisper—I hear that old Santa has made Richardson's Drug Store his headquarters! Fact! Wouldn't it be just jolly to slip quietly in some night and catch the old chap at work buying piles of goodies and pretty things from Will Richardson! Splendid! And we'll do it to. Let us go right off now.

Born.

KERR.—In Artemesia, on the 16th inst., the wife of John F. Kerr, of a daughter.

LEADING! LEADING!!

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store in Flesherton Still Leading the Trade in this County!

The people ask, how is it that OTHER JEWELERS GET MAD and say naughty things about us? The reason is very simple, namely, WE ARE A TERROR TO HIGH PRICES—selling finer goods at lower prices than they can and of course the public appreciate our efforts to give them first prize goods at prices away down. OTHER FELLOWS will get mad when they cannot gull the people into buying goods 26 per cent. higher than ours. We would suggest to them to buy from us as it would enable them to sell at a small living profit. Another IMMENSE STOCK just received of gold and silver ladies' and gents' Watches, fine rolled gold ladies' and gents' Chains and Guards, Gold Lockets, &c. A-1 solid 18 k. wedding Rings, the finest stock of ladies' diamond and gem Rings, fine Silverware, gents' fine heavy Waltham, Elgin, Illinois, Springfield and Columbus Watches from $10 to $20, sold elsewhere from $15 to $25, 18 k. Wedding Rings from $3.90 to $5, sold elsewhere from $4.50 to $6. All watches bear written warrents from 3 to 5 years, WARRANTS COVERING ALL BREAKAGES. We have done great business in the past and we intend to do even more in the future by giving the people genuine bargains and we take this opportunity to thank our friend for advertising us so well. We are well pleased, it saves us money and increases our business every time. A few more of those famous 8 day Walnut Clocks still going at $4.80; other dealers ask $6 for the same clock.

A fine stock of FANCY GOODS and XMAS CARDS to hand now. Be sure you see them.

And always take your Watches, &c., to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, to be repaired. IT WILL PAY YOU. 2t.

Journalistic Discourtesy.

To the Editor of The Advance.

SIR.—A communication under the above heading appeared in a recent issue of the ADVANCE signed "From a Henry" and as the writer failed to convey any specific idea of the nature of the offence, your readers would naturally wonder what the Standard had been doing to merit such an invective; we therefore reproduce the offensive item, which was given without any motive other than complimentary, but which has been misconstrued into the opposite. Our type accidently set up Friday instead of Tuesday, which mistake we did not detect until a week afterwards. Following is the item:

"FOR BETTER FOR WORSE—On Friday last Mr. James R. Cunningham, son of Mr. Wm. Cunningham, of Artemesia, took unto himself a partner for life in the person of Miss Susan Henry, daughter of the late Wm. Henry of the same township, and formerly of Albion. Mr. Cunningham has been employed in Toronto at the carpenter business for some time and had his house furnished and ready for the girl of his choice. They left per evening train on Tuesday for said home in Toronto. They have the best wishes of the Standard."

We will leave your readers to judge of its merits.

In a further correspondence which appeared last week, this "Henry" says, it was not the first offence. All we have to say in reply to this charge is, that we never knowingly or intentionally published any remark or item in the least discourteous to any member of the family. It is to be regretted that they should make such a glaring exposition of want of common sense, which has certainly placed them in the mortifying position of having gained the universal contempt of both neighbors and friends.

C. W. RUTLEDGE, Ed. Standard.

Eugenia.

Correspondence of The Advance.

The harvest is past, the summer is ended, the autumn is flown, winter is here. The weather very changeable, a little snow the last few days gave us the music of the sleigh bells once more. Yes, seasons come and go, so do the people. Several of our young men of this neighborhood have been in distant lands for the summer months, have returned to winter quarters at home sweet home. There's a welcome home, boys, aint there? Cupid has made a recent triumph in our town, friends wish the bride and groom many anniversaries of the day. But yet we have some estimable citizens that say, "Let the world jig along as it will, I'll be free and happy still."

A change of teachers in our public school is to take effect at the New Year, the Trustees having engaged Mr. Clemis for the next year. He comes well recommended, and we trust a revolution will take place in the scholars simultaneously with his taking command.

A reign of terror having prevailed for some time past such as might be expected from so many (not all) heathens in the dark continent. The genial P.S. Inspector paid his regular visits and expressed much dissatisfaction at the conduct and progress of the scholars. Now we hope the lane will turn and give us brighter days in these matters.

Our town Yankee has protected and ornamented his orchard and garden grounds by erecting a very creditable picket fence around it. Ya, ya, boys, look at those posts, they are s-t-r-a-i-g-h-t as a line.

Talk about road deviations, blockades, &c. Excitement run high in this vicinity lately in this line. But one thing shines out amusingly. What a host of devotees of Blackstock spring into prominence from the "wee wee Lilliputian to the big overgrown Brobdignagian. Each Saturday asserting the legal point at issue according to their profound rendering of the intricacies of the consolidated statutes of our great Dominion. But if mine client would use the same judgement, he would if choosing cloth according to the price, he would pronounce it shoddy and throw it in the waste basket.

On Saturday, a number of people gathered at the forks of the Beaver river, Valley Road, incident to the letting of the bridges to be built there. After a spirited contest, F. Carr & Co. took No. 1 and Mr. D. McMullen & Co., No. 2. They expect to have them completed soon.

The old folks are getting the Christmas goose ready.

Photos,

Photos,

Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY.
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF. POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

RICHLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act: they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed: we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

Commercial Union

—— Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of ——

FURNITURE!

— AT —

J. W. BATES'.

It is Good Goods at Low Prices that tells and has told for the last seven years. This season I am in a position to give both old and new Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Designs.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business:

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, Gents Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $30.00. A beauty for $14.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $5.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $4.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.35.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 35 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

Grand Gift Sale

—— FOR THE ——

CHRISTMAS × HOLIDAY'S

—— AT THE MARKDALE ——

Book Store.

As I have been carrying a stock of goods the past year double the quantity necessary for the Trade of the Locality. I have determined to reduce same by offering the following liberal inducements:—

To all purchasers of BOOKS, TOYS, FANCY GOODS, or WALL PAPERS, amounting to 50 cents and upwards choice of a Book worth 15c. One dollar and upwards 25c. One dollar and fifty cents 35c. Two dollars and upwards 50c., and so on in proportion equal to a discount of nearly 25 per cent. off all purchases in the above Lines.

THIS IS A BONA FIDE OFFER,

and as my object in making it is to induce Sales, I invite the general public to come along in force and participate in the large Reductions. I will still allow twenty-five per cent. off straight to School Trustees and Sunday Schools requiring Books for prizes or Library's NOW IS YOUR TIME to replenish or purchase a New Library. Hundreds of Books to select from.

This Sale will continue from now till the 1st January, 1888.

A. DINSMORE,
PROPRIETOR.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

Evelyn sighed as she read the letter; it sounded a little cold to her. If she had been in Erle's place she would have wanted him to come at once. Was it not her right as his promised wife, to be beside him and to try to comfort him? How could she have the heart for these hollow gaieties, knowing that he was sad and troubled? If it had been left to her, she would not have postponed their marriage; she would have gone to church quietly with him, and then have returned to Belgrave house to nurse the invalid; but her aunt had seemed shocked at the notion, and Erle had never asked her to do so.

Evelyn was as much in love as ever, but her engagement had not satisfied her; every one told her what a perfect lover Erle was—so devoted, so generous. Indeed, he was perfection in her eyes, but still something was lacking. Outwardly she could find no fault with him, but there were times when she feared that she did not make him happy; and yet, if she ever told him so, he would overwhelm her with kind affectionate speeches.

Yes, he was fond of her; but why was he so changed and quiet when they were alone together? What had become of the frank sunshiny look, the merry laugh, the careless indolence that had always belonged to Erle? She never seemed to hear his laugh now; his light-hearted jokes, and queer provoking speeches, were things of the past. He was older, graver; and sometimes she fancied there was a careworn look on his face He was always very indignant if she hinted at this—he always refuted such accusations with his old eagerness; but nevertheless Evelyn often felt oppressed by a sense of distance, as though the real Erle were eluding her. The feeling was strong upon her when she read that letter; and the weeks of separation that followed were scarcely happy ones.

And still worse, their first meeting was utterly disappointing. He had come to the station to welcome them, and had seen after their luggage, and had questioned about their journey; his manner had been perfectly kind, but there had been no eager glow of welcome in his eyes. Lady Maltravers said he looked ill and wearied, and Evelyn felt wretched. But it was the few minutes during which her aunt had left them together that disappointed her most; he had not taken the seat by her at once, but stood looking moodily into the fire; and though at her first word he had tried to rouse himself, the effort was painfully evident. "He is not happy; there is something on his mind," thought the poor girl, watching him. "There is something that has come between us, and that he fears to tell me."

Just then he looked up, and their eyes met.

"I am afraid I am awfully stupid this evening, Eva," he said apologetically; "but I was up late with Uncle Rolf last night."

"Yes," she answered gently; "I know you have had a terrible time; how I longed to be with you and help you. I did not enjoy myself at all. Poor Mr. Huntingdon but as you told Aunt Adela, he is not really worse."

"No, he is just the same; perhaps a trifle more conscious and weaker; that is all."

"And there is no hope '"

"None; all the doctors agree in saying that. His health has been breaking for years, and the sudden shock was too much for him. No; it is no use deceiving ourselves; no change can happen but the worst."

"Poor Mrs. Trafford."

"Ah, you would say so if you could see her; Percy's death has utterly broken her down; but she is very brave, and will not spare herself. We think Uncle Rolf knows her, and likes to have her near him; he always seems restless and uneasy if she leaves the room. But indeed the difficulty is to induce her to take needful rest."

"You are looking ill yourself, dear Erle," she returned, tenderly; but at that moment Lady Maltravers re-entered, and Erle looked at his watch.

"I must go now," he said hastily; and though Evelyn followed him out into the corridor there were no fond lingering words. "Good-bye, Eva; take care of yourself," he said, kissing her; and then he went away, and Evelyn went back into the room with a heavy heart. He had been very kind, but he had not once said that he was glad to see her back; and again she told herself that something had come between them.

But there was no opportunity for coming to any understanding, for the shadows were closing round Belgrave House, and the Angel of Death was standing before the threshold.

Ah! the end was drawing near now. Mr. Huntingdon was dying.

He had never recovered consciousness, or seemed to recover consciousness, or seemed to recognize the faces round him; not even his favorite Erle, or the daughter who fed and soothed him like an infant; and yet in a dim sort of a way he seemed conscious of her presence. He would wail after her if she left him, and his withered hands would grope upon the coverlet in a feeble, restless way, but never once did he articulate her name.

He was dying fast, they told Erle, when he had returned home that night; and he had gone up at once to the sick-room and had not left it again.

Mrs. Trafford was sitting by the bed as usual. She was rubbing the cold wrinkled hands, and speaking to him in a low voice; she turned her white, haggard face to Erle as he entered, and motioned him to be quiet, and then again her eyes were fixed on the face of the dying man. Oh! if he would only speak to her one word, if she could only make him understand that she forgave him now!

"I have sinned," he had said to her, "but in the presence of the dead there should be peace;" but she had answered him with bitterness; and then he had fallen across the feet of his dead grandson, with his grey head stricken to the dust with late repentance. And yet he was her father! She stooped over him now and wiped the death dews from his brow; and at that moment another scene rose unbidden to her mind

She was kneeling beside her husband she was holding him in her arms, and he was panting out his life on her bosom.

"Nea," she heard him say again in his weak, gasping voice, "do not be hard on your father. We have done wrong, and I am dying; but, thank God, I believe in the forgiveness of sins;" and then he had asked her to kiss him; and as her lips touched his he died.

"Father," she whispered as she thought of Maurice. "Father!"

The fast glazing eyes turned to her a moment and seemed to brighten into consciousness.

"He is looking at you—he knows you, Mrs. Trafford."

Ah, he knows her at last; what is it he is saying?

"Come home with your own Nea, father—with your own Nea; your only child, Nea;" and as she bends over him to soothe him, the old man's head drops heavily on her shoulder. Mr. Huntingdon was dead.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

EVELYN'S REVENGE.

Look deeper still. If thou canst feel
Within thy inmost soul,
That thou hast kept a portion back
While I have staked a whole
Let no false pity spare the blow.
But in true mercy tell me so.

Is there within thy heart a need
That mine cannot fulfil?
One chord that any other hand
Could better wake, or still?
Speak now—lest at some future day
My whole life wither and decay.

Adelaide Anne Proctor.

Evelyn Selby stood at the window, one afternoon about three weeks after Mr. Huntingdon's death, looking out on the snowy gardens of the Square, where two rosy-faced lads were pelting each other with snowballs.

She was watching them, seemingly absorbed in their merry play; but every now and then her eyes glanced wistfully towards the entrance of the Square with the sober expectancy of one that has waited long, and is patient; but weary.

Erle had once owned to Fay, in a fit of enthusiasm, that Evelyn Selby was as good as she was beautiful; and it was true. Placed side by side with Fern Trafford, and deprived of all extraneous ornament of dress and fashion, most people would have owned that the young patrician bore the palm. Fern's sweet face would have suffered eclipse beside her rival's radiant bloom and graceful carriage; and yet a little of the bloom had been dimmed of late, and the brown eyes had lost their brightness.

As a well-known figure crossed the Square, she turned from the window with a sigh of relief; "at last," she murmured, as she sat down and made a pretence of busying herself with some fancy-work; but it lay unheeded on her lap as Erle entered and sat down beside her.

"I am afraid I am very late this afternoon, Eva," he said, taking her hand. "Mrs. Trafford wanted to speak to me and so I went up to her room; we had so much business to settle. She has given me a great deal of trouble, poor woman, but I think I shall have my way at last."

"You mean about the money?"

"Yes; I think she will be induced to let me set aside a yearly sum for her maintenance. She says it is only for her children's sake if she accept it; but I fear the truth is that she feels her strength has gone, and that she cannot work for them any longer."

"And she will not take the half?"

"No; not even a quarter; though I tell her that so much wealth will be a heavy burthen to me. Eight hundred a year that is all she will accept, and it is to be settled on her children. Eight hundred; it is a mere pittance."

"Yes; but she and her daughters will live very comfortably on that; think how poor they have been; indeed, dear, I think you may be satisfied that you have done the right thing; and after all, your uncle wished you to have the money."

"I do not care about it," with a stifled sigh. "We shall be awfully rich, Eva; but I suppose women like that sort of thing. I shall be able to buy you that diamond pendant now that you so admired."

"No, no; I do not want it; you give me too many presents. Tell me, Erle, does Miss Trafford come to see her mother, now she is ill?"

"Yes, of course; but I never see her," he answered so quickly that Evelyn looked at him in surprise. "I have not spoken to her once since Uncle Rolf's death—the lawyers keep me so busy; and I never go into the sick-room unless I am specially invited."

"But poor Mrs. Trafford is better now."

"Yes; and Dr. Connor says that it will be better for her to be anywhere than at Belgrave House. We want to persuade her to go down to Hastings for the rest of the winter. When I see Miss Trafford, I mean to speak to her about it; but" interrupting himself hurriedly—"never mind all that now; you told me in your letter that you wanted to speak to me particularly. What is it, Eva?" looking at her very kindly.

"Yes; I have long wanted to speak to you," she returned, dropping her eyes, and he could see that she was much agitated. "Erle, you must not misunderstand me; I am finding no fault with you. You are always good to me—no one could be kinder; but you are not treating me with perfect frankness."

"What do you mean?" he asked, astonished at this, for no suspicion of her meaning dawned upon him. "You have no fault to find with me. Surely want of frankness is a fault?"

"Yes, but I think it is only your thought for me. You are so anxious that everything should be made smooth and bright for me, that you do not give me your full confidence, Erle"—pressing closer to him, and looking up in his face with her clear, loving eyes. "Do you think that I can love you so and not notice how changed you have been of late—how pale and careworn? though you have tried to hide from me that you were unhappy."

He pulled his moustache nervously, but he could not answer her.

"How often I have watched for you," she continued, "when your poor uncle's illness has detained you, and have seen you cross the Square with your head bent and such a sad look on your face; and yet, when we meet, you have nothing for me but pleasant words, as though my presence had dispelled the cloud."

"And why not, Eva? do you think your bright face would not charm away any melancholy mood?" But she turned away as though not noticing the little compliment. He was always making these pretty speeches to her, but just now they jarred on her. It was truth—his confidence—that she wanted; and no amount of soft words could satisfy her.

"You are always good to me—always," she went on; "but you do not tell me all that is in your heart. When no one is speaking to you, I often see such a tired, harassed look on your face, and yet you will never tell me what is troubling you, dear; when we come together—when you make me your wife, will our life be always unclouded; am I to share none of your cares and perplexities then?"

He was silent; how was he to answer her?

"It would not be a true marriage," she continued, in a low, vehement tone, "if you did not think me worthy to share your thoughts. Erle, you are not treating me well; why do you not tell me frankly what makes you so unlike yourself. Can you look me in the face and tell me that you are perfectly happy and satisfied?"

"I am very fond of you; what makes you talk like this, Eva," but his eyelids drooped uneasily. How was he to meet those candid eyes and tell her that he was happy—surely the lie would choke him—when he knew that he was utterly miserable.

"Erle," she said in a low voice, and her face became very pale, "you do not look at me, and somehow your manner frightens me; you are fond of me, you say—a few months ago you asked me to be your wife; can you take my hand now and tell me, as I understood you to tell me then, that I am dearer to you than any one else in the world?"

"You have no right to put such a question," he returned angrily. "You have no right to doubt me. I have not deserved this, Eva."

"No right!" and now her face grew paler. "I think I have the right, Erle. You do not wish to answer the question; that is because some one has come between us. It is true, then, that there is some one dearer to you than I?"

He hid his face in his hands. No, he could not lie to her. Was not Fay's miserable exile a warning to him against marriage without confidence. He would have spared her if he could, but her love was too keen-eyed. He could not take her hand and perjure his soul with a lie; he loved her, but he could not tell her that she was the dearest thing in the world to him.

It all came out presently. He never knew how he told it, but the sad little story of his love for Fern Trafford got itself told at last. Poor Erle, he whose heart was so pitiful that he forbore to tread on the insect in his path, now found himself compelled to hurt perhaps wound fatally—the girl who had given him her heart.

Evelyn heard him silently to the end. The small white hands were crushed together in her lap, and her face grew white and set as she listened; but when he had finished, and sat there looking so downcast, so ashamed, so unlike himself, her clear, unfaltering voice made him raise his eyes in astonishment. "I thank you for this confidence; if—if—" and here her lips quivered, "we had been married, and you had told me then, I think it would have broken my heart; but now—it is better now."

"And you can forgive me, dear; you can be sorry for me? Oh, Eva! if you will only trust me, all may yet be well. I shall be happier now you know the truth."

"There is nothing to forgive," she answered quickly; "it is no fault of yours, my poor Erle, and you were always good to me—no," as he tried to interrupt her, "we will not talk of it any more to-day; my head aches, and of course it has upset me. I want to think over what you have said. It seems"—and here she caught her breath—"as though I can hardly believe it. Will you go away now, dear, and come to me to-morrow. To-morrow we shall see how far we can trust each other."

"I must go away if you send me," he answered humbly, and then he got up and walked to the door. He had never felt more wretched in his life. She had not reproached him, but all the color and life had gone out of her face. She had spoken so mildly, so gently to him. Would she forgive him, and would everything be as though this had never happened? "Oh, Erle, will you not wish me good-bye?" and then for a moment the poor girl felt as though her heart were breaking. Was she nothing to him after all?"

At her words Erle quickly retraced his steps. "Forgive me, Eva," he said, and there were tears in his eyes; "I am not myself, you know; all this takes it out of a man." And then he stooped over her as though to take her into his arms.

For an instant she shrank from him; then she lifted up her face and kissed him. "Good-bye, Erle," she said, "good-bye, my darling. No one will ever love you as I have loved you." And then as he looked at her wistfully, she released herself and quietly left the room, and no one saw Evelyn Selby again that night.

* * * * *

The following afternoon Fern stood by the window, looking out on the white snowy road sparkling with wintry sunlight. Her little black bonnet lay on the table beside her, and the carriage that had brought her from Belgrave House had just driven away from the door. Erle had given special orders that it was to be at Miss Trafford's service, and every morning the handsome bays and powdered footman drew a youthful crowd around the side door of Mrs. Watkins'. Sometimes Fern entered the carriage alone, but very often her little sister was with her. Fluff revelled in those drives; her quaint remarks and ejaculations often brought a smile to Fern's sad lips.

Those visits to Belgrave House were very trying to the girl. Mrs. Trafford used to sigh as she watched her changing color and absent looks. A door closing in the distance, the sound of a footstep in the corridor, made her falter and turn pale. But she need not have feared; Erle never once crossed her path. She would hear his voice sometimes, but they never once came face to face. Only one day Fern saw a shadow cross the hall window as she got into the carriage, and felt with a beating heart that Erle was watching her.

That very morning her mother had been speaking to her of Erle's generosity; indeed the subject could not be avoided. "He wanted me to take half his fortune," Mrs. Trafford had said with some emotion; "he is bitterly disappointed at the smallness of the sum I named; do you think I am right to take anything, Fern? My darling, it is for your sake, and because I have no strength for work, and I feel I can no longer endure privation for my children."

"I think you are right, mother; it would not be kind to refuse," Fern returned quietly; and then she tried to feel some interest in the plans Mrs. Trafford was making for the future. They would go down to Hastings for the rest of the winter—Fern had never seen the sea—and then they would look out for some pretty cottage in the country where they could keep poultry and bees, and perhaps a cow, and Fern and she could teach in the village school, and make themselves very busy; and the mother's pale face twitched as she drew this little picture, for there was no responsive light in the soft grey eyes, and the frank, beautiful mouth was silent.

"Yes, mother," she at last answered, throwing her arms round her mother's neck; "and I will spend my whole life in taking care of you."

She was thinking over this conversation now, as she looked out at the snow, when her attention was attracted by a private brougham, with a coronet on the panel, that stopped before Mrs. Watkins', and the next moment a tall girl, very quietly dressed, entered the house.

Fern's heart beat quickly. Was it possible that it could be Miss Selby? But before she could ask herself the question, there was a light tap at the door, and the girl had entered, and was holding out both her hands to Fern.

"Miss Trafford, will you forgive this intrusion? but I feel as though we knew each other without any introduction. I am Evelyn Selby; I daresay you have heard my name from"—with a pause—"Mr. Huntingdon."

"Oh, yes, I have heard of you," returned Fern with a sudden blush. This was Erle's future wife, then—this girl with the tall graceful figure and pale high-bred face that, in spite of its unusual paleness, looked very beautiful in Fern's eyes. Ah, no wonder he loved her! Those clear brown eyes were very candid and true. There could be no comparison between them—none!

She had little idea that Evelyn was saying to herself, "What a sweet face! Erle never told me how lovely she was. Oh, my darling, how could you help it? but you shall not be unhappy any longer!"

"Of course I knew who it was," went on Fern, gently; "you are the Miss Selby whom Mr. Erle is to marry. It is very kind of you to come and see me."

Oh, the bitter flush that passed over Evelyn's face; but she only smiled faintly. "Do you know, it is you who have to do me a kindness. It is such a lovely afternoon, and you are alone. I want you to put on that bonnet again and have a drive with me; the park is delicious, and we could have our talk all the same. No, you must not refuse," as Fern colored and hesitated at this unexpected request; "do me this little favor—it is the first I have ever asked you." And Fern yielded.

That drive seemed like a dream to Fern. The setting sun was shining between the bare trees in the park, and giving rosy flushes to the snow. Now and then a golden aisle seemed to open; there was a gleam of blue ice in the distance. Miss Selby talked very quietly, chiefly of Mr. Huntingdon's death and Mrs. Trafford's sudden failure of strength. But as the sunset tints faded and the grey light of evening began to veil everything, and the gas lights twinkled, and the horses' feet rang out on the frozen road, Evelyn leant back wearily in her place and relapsed into silence. Either the task she had set herself was harder than she thought, or her courage was failing; but the brave lips were quivering sadly in the dusk.

But as the carriage stopped, she suddenly roused herself. "Ah, are we here?" she said with a little shiver; "I did not think we should be home so soon." Then turning to the perplexed Fern, she took her hand gently. "You must have some tea with me, and then the brougham will take you back;" and, without listening to her frightened remonstrance, she conducted her through a large, brilliantly lighted hall and down a narrow corridor, while one of the servants preceded them and threw open a door of a small room, bright with firelight and lamplight, where a pretty tea-table was already set.

Fern did not hear the whispered order that Miss Selby gave to the servant, and both question and answer were equally lost on her. "Do not say I have any one with me," she said, as the man was about to leave the room; and then she coaxed Fern to take off her bonnet, and poured her out some tea, and told her that she looked pale and tired. "But you must have a long rest; and, as Aunt Adela is out, you need not be afraid that you will have to talk to strangers. This is my private sanctum, and only my special friends come here."

"I ought to be going home," replied Fern uneasily; for the thought had suddenly occurred to her that Erle might come and find her there, and then what would he think? As this doubt crossed her mind, she saw Miss Selby knit her brow with a sudden expression of pain; and the next moment those light ringing footsteps, that Fern often heard in her dreams, sounded in the corridor.

Fern put down her cup and rose; "I must go now," she said unsteadily. But as she stretched out her hand for her bonnet, Erle was already in the room, and was looking from one pale face to the other in undisguised amazement

"Miss Tarfford!" he exclaimed, as though he could not believe his eyes; but Evelyn quietly went up to him and laid her hand on his arm."

"Yes, I have brought her. I asked her to drive with me, and she never guessed the reason; I could not have persuaded her to come if she had. Dear Erle, I know your sense of honor, and that you would never free yourself; but now I give you back this"—drawing the diamond ring from her finger; "it is Miss Trafford's, not mine. I cannot keep another woman's property."

"Eva," he remonstrated, following her to the door, for she seemed about to leave them; "I will not accept this sacrifice; I refuse to be set free," but she only smiled at him.

"Go to her, Erle," she whispered, "she is worthy even of you; I would not marry you now even if she refused you, but"—with a look of irrepressible tenderness—"she will not refuse you;" and before he could answer her she was gone.

And Fern, looking at them through a sudden mist, tried to follow Evelyn, but either she stumbled or her strength forsook her. But all at once she found herself in Erle's arms, and pressed closely to him.

"Did you hear her, my darling?" he said, as the fair head drooped on his shoulder; "she has given us to each other—she has set me free to love you. Oh, Fern, I tried so hard to do my duty to her; she was good and true, and I was fond of her—I think she is the noblest woman on God's earth—but it was you I loved, and she found out I was miserable, and now she refuses to marry me; and—and—will you not say one word to me, my dearest?"

How was she to speak to him when her heart was breaking with happiness—when her tears were falling so fast that Erle had to kiss them away. Could it be true that he was really beside her; that out of the mist and gloom her prince had come to her; that the words she had pined to hear from his lips were now caressing her ear.

But Evelyn went up to her room.

It is not ordained in this life that saints and martyrs should walk the earth with a visible halo round their heads; yet, when such women as Margaret Ferrers and Evelyn Selby go on their weary way silently and uncomplaining, surely their guardian angel carries an unseen nimbus with which to crown them in another world.

CHAPTER XL.

AUNT JEANIE'S GUEST.

The cooing babe a veil supplied,
And if she listened none might know,
Or if she sighed;
Or if forecasting grief and care,
Unconscious solace then she drew.
And lulled her babe, and unaware
Lulled sorrow too.

Jean Ingelow.

All the winter Fay remained quietly at the old Manse, tenderly watched over by her kind old friend and the faithful Jean.

For many weeks, indeed months, her want of strength and weary listlessness caused Mrs. Duncan great anxiety. She used to shake her head and talk vaguely to Jean of young folk who had gone into a waste with nought but fretting, and had been in their graves before their friends realized that they were ill; to which Jean would reply, "'Deed and it is the truth, mistress; and I am thinking it is time that Mrs. St. Clair had her few 'broth.'" For all Jean's sympathy found expression in deeds, not words.

Jean seldom dealt largely in soft words; she was somewhat brisk and sharp of tongue—a bit biting, like her moorland breezes in winter time. In spite of her reverential tenderness for Fay, she would chide her quite roughly for what she called her fretting ways. She almost snatched the baby away from her one day when Fay was crying over him.

"Ah, my bonnie man," she said indignantly; "would your mither rain tears down on your sweet face, and make you sair-hearted before your time? Whist, then, my bairn, and Jean will catch the sunshine for you;" and Jean danced him vigorously before the window, while Fay penitently dried her eyes.

"Oh, Jean, give him back to me. I did not mean to make him cry; the tears will come sometimes, and I cannot keep them back. I will try to be good—I will, indeed." But baby Hugh had no wish to go back to his mother; he was crowing and pulling Jean's flaxen hair, and would not heed Fay's sad little blandishments.

"The bairns are like auld folks," remarked Jean, triumphant at her success, and eager to point a moral; "they cannot bide what is no bright. There is a time for everything, as Soloman says, 'a time to mourn and a time to dance;" but there is never a time for a bairn to be sair-hearted: neither nature nor Soloman would hold with that, as Master Fergus would say. Eck sirs! but he is a fine preacher, is Master Fergus."

Fay took Jean's reproof very humbly. She shed no more tears when her baby was in her arms. It was touching to see how she strove to banish her grief, that the baby smiles might not be dimmed. Jean would nod her head with grim approval over her pile of finely ironed things as she heard Fay singing in a low sweet voice, and the baby's delighted coos answering her. A lump used to come in Jean's throat, and a suspicious moisture to her keen blue eyes, as she would open the door in the twilight and see the child-mother kneeling down beside the old-fashioned cradle, singing him to sleep. "He likes the songs about the angels best," Fay would say, looking up wistfully in Jean's face. "I sing him all my pretty songs, only not the sad ones. I am sure he loves me to do it."

"Maybe the bairn does not know his mither apart from the women angels," muttered Jean in a gruff aside, as she laid down her pile of dainty linen. Jean knew more than any one else; she could have told her mistress, if she chose; that it was odd that all Mrs. St. Clair's linen was marked "F. Redmond." But she kept her own counsel.

Jean would not have lifted a finger to restore Fay to her husband. The blunt Scotch handmaiden could not abide men—"a puir-hearted, feckless lot," as she was wont to say. Of course the old master and Mr. Fergus were exceptions to this. Jean worshipped her master; and, though she held the doctrine of original sin, would never have owned that Mr. Fergus had a fault. But to the rest of mankind she was suspiciously uncharitable. "To think he drove her from him—the puir bit lammie," she would say; "and yet the law can't have the hanging of him. Redmond, indeed! but we won't own to any such name. It is lucky the old mistsess is not ower sharp-sighted—but there, such an idea would never get into her head."

(To be continued.)

Better Times.

Men talk of it being hard times for the poor, and yet a poor man can to-day buy a locomotive for $9,000, which would have cost him $30,000 ten years ago.—Detroit Free Press.

CURRENT TOPICS.

PRINCIPAL CUNNINGHAM, of St. Andrew's University, says there never would have been a union between England and Scotland if the conditions had been imposed that the latter should renounce its church and its laws.

No one knows the exact nature of electricity. Its effects and the laws overning its action are well understood, but what it s is still a mystery. Probably it is a mode of motion, like light and heat. The causes which produce the electricity of thunder storms and auroras are still a matter of doubt.

THE human cuticle is fine, supple, tough and durable. It is easily tanned in the usual way, and keeps out water, cold and heat. Medical students are in the habit of tanning it or having it tanned and getting useful and ornamental articles made of it. They send it to their friends as purses, pocket-books, card-cases, slippers and covers for books, music, footstools and handbags.

SIX thousand kangaroo skins are received at Newark, N. J., every week. They are brought from Australia, 300 miles from the coast. There are twenty varieties of this animal, and the skin is worth 70 cents a pound. Parisian and London shoe manufacturers, as well as buyers in Greece, Spain, and even Australia itself, are said to purchase tanned skins from Newark tanneries.

THERE are many authentic examples of French history of the fancy for human skin. Many great persons have shown a predilection for that leather. Carnot, Robespierre, Billaut and many others dressed themselves with garments made out of human skin. They had slippers, boots, hats, gloves, robes, vest and breeches made out of this stuff, and they not only wore them openly, but boasted of them.

THE experiment is being made in Chicago of paving a street with steel rails 16 feet 10 inches in length, with a grooved surface on top, so that the horses will not slip on them. The rails will be placed a few inches apart, and the space between will be filled with a patent composition that is said to be very hard and durable. A trial lot of fifty tons has been made at the Bay View Iron Works, Mich.

IN 1840 the tonnage of British shipping entered and cleared from the ports of the United Kingdom was 6,505,000; in 1885 it was 46,390,000. In 1840 there was 58 per cent. British to 42 per cent. foreign; in 1885 the percentages were 73 and 27. The era of free trade has thus been one of phenomenal progress not only in manufacturing industries but in the twin industry of the carrying trade.

THE authorship of the poem "If I Should Die To-night" has been a subject of dispute for a long time. It was not written by Henry Ward Beecher, as has been supposed by many. The Hartford Times says that the authorship "has been traced to Miss Belle E. Smith, at present a teacher in Tabor College, Tabor, Ia. It first appeared in the Christian Union, June 18th, 1873. The authorship is vouched for by President Brooks, of Tabor College."

DR. CAMMON LANG, minister of St. Giles', Edinburgh, before leaving Melbourne, threw out the suggestion that Scotsmen in Australia should assume the responsibility of erecting a monument to John Knox in St. Giles', where the reformer so often thundered from the pulpit. The suggestion has found much favor and is likely to take a practical shape. Mr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, has sailed for Melbourne to continue the pacific work begun by Dr. Lees.

MRS. GLADSTONE, despite her 75 years, is one of the most active and energetic of women. The improved condition of the cottagers all about Hawarden attest her influence. In the schools she has placed teachers who instruct the children in serving, cookery, etc., and in various handicrafts suited to boys; she has also founded an industrial school for boys at Clapham, and a home for aged and incurables, both of which are model charities and under her direct supervision.

A NUMBER of Bradford, Eng., firms have received notice from their correspondents in Germany and other countries on the continent that "Volapuk," the new universal language, will be used after a certain date. The attention of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce has been drawn to the matter, but the Chamber has not yet determined to assist in spreading the knowledge of "Volapuk." Its study has been taken up, to a certain extent, privately, and a class will soon be formed in Bradford.

THE great cottonwood trees in the swamps of Tennessee contain veins of clear, sparkling water, which tastes somewhat like unsweetened soda water, and which spurts forth as if under gaseous pressure when a vein is punctured. It is said to be deliciously refreshing, and hunters are in the habit of carrying gimlets with which to pierce the veins when they are thirsty. It is a point of honor with them to plug up the orifice when their thirst is satisfied, so that the next comer may not be disappointed.

A POWDER of pine needles is now prepared in Germany, and is becoming popular for use in baths. A half pound or a pound of the powder is allowed to dissolve in lukewarm water for a few minutes, when the bath is ready. The principles extracted act upon the skin as a tonic and antiseptic, and the baths are prescribed for rheumatic complaints, gout, certain skin diseases, and for invigorating the system generally. The powder is also used for fumigations in chest affections, etc., or, as an antiseptic, a little may be placed on a hot shovel and carried about the room.

THE chances of life are thus set down: Out of every 1,000 men 25 die annually. One-half of those who are born die before they attain the age of 7 years. The men able to bear arms form a fourth of the inhabitants of a country. More old men are found in elevated situations than in valleys and plains. The number of inhabitants of a city or county is renewed every thirty years. The proportion between the deaths of women and those of men is 100 to 108. The probable duration of female lives is 60 years, but after that period the calculation is more favorable to them than to men.

PAVING blocks called iron brick are now being introduced by Louis Jochum, of Ottweiler, near Saarbrucken, Germany. This brick is made by mixing equal parts of finely ground red argillaceous slate and finely ground clay, and adding 5 per cent. of iron ore. This mixture is softened with a solution of 25 per cent. of sulphate of iron, to which fine iron ore is added until it shows a consistency of 38 degrees Baume. It is then formed in a press, dried, dipped once more in a nearly concentrated solution of sulphate of iron and finely ground iron ore, and is baked in an oven for forty-eight hours in an oxidizing flame and twenty-four hours in a reducing flame. The German Government testing laboratory for building materials has reported favorably on this brick.

THE advertisement of a divine in London, England, that he is prepared to loan his sermons at the rate of 5s. apiece, or three for 10s., is our excuse for directing attention to the striking titles of some sermons printed in the British capital in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries: "Crumbs of Comfort for Chickens of Grace," "The Snuffers of Divine Love," "The Church's Bowel Complaint," "Cuckoldom's Glory, or the Horns of the Righteous Exalted," "A Pack of Cards to Win Christ," "The Spiritual Mustard Pot, to Make the Soul Sneeze with Devotion," "A Funeral Handkerchief," and "Baruch's Sore Gently Opened and the Salve Skilfully Applied." Nobody in those times regarded any of these as irreverent, and they were not meant to be funny.

INDIANS on the Pacific coast in times of scarcity of food sometimes eat pine bark. Around many of the watering-places in the pine forests of Oregon and California the trees may be seen stripped of their bark for the space of three or four feet near the base of the trunk. This has been accomplished by cutting with a hatchet a line around the tree as high as one could conveniently reach and another lower down, so that the bark, severed above and below, could be removed in strips. At certain seasons of the year a mucilaginous film separates the bark from the wood of the trunk. Part of the film adheres to each surface and may be scraped off. The resulting mixture of mucilage-cells and half-formed wood is nutritious and not unpalatable, so that, as a last resort, it may be used as a defence against starvation.

PROFESSOR ELMSLIE, of the London Presbyterian College, yet a young man, is one of the most accomplished Hebrew scholars of the day. Although he does not go in for literalism in the interpretation of the Old Testament Scriptures, he gives his whole strength to the maintenance of orthodoxy in the Church. According to him, liberal interpretation does not necessarily conflict withthe old and accepted views regarding the great fundamental truths of Scripture and the general scope and purport of Divine revelation. Professor Elmslie, in the December "Contemporary Review," gives a new interpretation of the Mosaic account of creation. He sees in the Mosaic account what he calls a theologico-literary device. The days stand, not for definite periods, but for achievements, and, these in agreement with Hebrew parallelism, are broken up into two sets of three each, the first set dealing with untenanted spheres and the second with the inhabitants of those spheres. The whole narrative, he says, is a poetic description of the character, being and glory of God.

THE new electric type-writer relieves the operator of every duty except pressing down the keys. The carriage moves automatically to the starting point whenever the end of a line has been reached, and also moves up one notch or line at the same time. But the most important office of the new instrument seems to be its use in receiving and transmitting telegraphic despatches. It is said at the Patent Office that the instrument can be used both as a transmitter and receiver of intelligence over a single wire, no matter how great the distance may be. The receiving instrument does not require the attendance of an operator, but prints the despatch automatically. The instruments at both ends of the line print the despatch sent, and so a safeguard against mistakes is provided. It is claimed that the electric type-writer will be valuable as a local aid to business and offers many advantages over the telephone. One advantage claimed for it is that no matter whether a person called up is at his place of business or not, the message can be printed through the medium of his type-writer and will be there for perusal on his return. The despatches printed are in letter form, and not an endless tape. The instrument has been christened the dynamograph.

For Ambitious Boys.

A boy is something like a piece of iron, which, in its rough state, isn't worth much, nor is it of very much use, but the more processes it is put through the more valuable it becomes. A bar of iron that is only worth $5 in its natural state is worth $12 when it is made into horseshoes, and after it goes through the different processes by which it is made into needles its value is increased to $350. Made into penknife blades it would be worth $3,000, and into balance wheels for watches $250,000. Just think of that, boys; a piece of iron that is comparatively worthless can be developed into such valuable material! But the iron has to go through a great deal of hammering and beating and rolling and pounding and polishing; and so, if you are to become useful and educated men, you must go through a long course of study and training. The more time you spend in hard study, the better material you will make. The iron doesn't have to go through half so much to be made into horseshoes, as it does to be converted into delicate watch-springs; but think how much less valuable it is! Which would you rather be, horseshoe or watchspring? It depends on yourselves. You can become whichever you will. This is your time of preparation for manhood. Don't think that I would have you settle down to hard study all the time, without any interval for fun. Not a bit of it. I like to see boys have a good time, and I should be very sorry to see you grow old before your time, but you have ample opportunity for study and play too, and I don't want you to neglect the former for the sake of the latter.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Explained.

"My sister Calra," said Bobby to young Mr. Sissy, "was talking to ma about your leaving so early last night."

"Did she say she was sorry, Bobby?" whispered young Sissy.

"No; she said she s'posed you went home so early because very likely your mamma won't let you carry a night-key."—The Epoch.

Truths in Business.

Men who have company must have money.

Some men carry too much sail, some too little.

Great men when analyzed usually prove to be very small men.

Men trade on borrowed reputation as they trade on borrowed capital.

Good intentions will not help a man on his way if he takes the wrong road.

The history of trade shows that failure is the rule and winning the exception.

Money moves the crops that make the great west the granary of the world.

One man is overnice and becomes fussy; another is careless and loses his trade.

The same great lesson of failure is taught in the professions that is taught in trade.

One man ruins his business because he is a sloven; another ruins it because he is a fop.

Men neither win nor lose in the same way. One fails and is smart; another wins and is dull.

Talent and temper often go together. It is rare to find a sharp, bright man that is a courteous man.

The merchants of old Tyre were "princes, and her traffickers were the honorable of the earth."

Integrity, honor and piety do not save a man from disaster if he fails to observe the law of success.

The law of success is as certain as the law of the tides. All must obey these laws if they would prosper.

A diamond with a flaw is better than a pebble without. But the flaw adds nothing to the value of the diamond.

Mormon Superstition.

"You can tell a Mormon house by the number of doors," I heard some one say as we approached Salt Lake City, writes a Minneapolis Tribune correspondent. Sure enough! There they were, two doors side by side, even in the smallest houses. Sometimes there were two woodsheds, or two wells; and we saw one house that had begun with a single room, and been lengthened out room by room and door by door. That patriarch must needs look about him sharply on the resurrection morn, or he will overlook some poor wife and have her sleeping through all eternity. The Mormons have a doctrine that in the resurrection the men rise, but the women lie in their graves until their husbands please to call them. If the liege lord pleases to be so gracious he goes to the grave side of his spouse and speaks the new name he received in the endowment house at the time of his marriage, which has never before crossed his lips. She answers with the name which she received at the same time and rises. One of the most potent means of domestic tyranny among the ignorant Mormons is the threat, frequently resorted to by the head of the house, that he will not raise his wife on the resurrection morn "unless," etc., etc.

When the Modest Girl's Alone.

Most men like modest girls best. Modesty is discretion; that's all. The modest girl won't let you hold her hand when there's anybody to see; but she's wholesouled when there's nobody looking, and gives you both her hands. I have known young ladies who would squeeze your hands tenderly, look into your eyes and do everything that was agreeable in the most shameless manner before other people; but when they are alone with you they'll sit a half a mile off and talk primly about the weather. I don't think those girls would make good wives. At all events they don't make good sweethearts, and about marrying it is much the same as with boys eating cherries. They lay aside the best to finish up with, but when they get to what they've laid aside they're so full of cherries that they can't enjoy any more. Of course there are other boys who eat all the good ones first. But it seems to me all rules work both ways anyway, and end in discomfiture of some kind. The only rule of life experience brings to is never to lose a chance for fun when we can get it.

Sixty Thousand Useless Words.

"There is no man living," said a public school teacher the other day, "that knows every one of the 75,000 words in Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, nor half, nor a third of them. Nor is there a man that could define them if he were asked. Shakespeare, who had the richest vocabulary used by any Englishman, employed only 16,000 words. Milton could pick out from 8,000, but the average man, a graduate from one of the great universities, rarely has a vocabulary of more than 3,000 or 4,000 words. Right here in Buffalo there are Americans born and bred who contrive to express all their wants and opinions in 300 words, and in the rural districts the knowledge of 150 or 200 words is sufficient to carry a man through the world. So the unabridged dictionary is cluttered up with 60,000 or more technical or obsolete words that you never hear in ordinary conversation or see in ordinary books and newspapers.—Buffalo Courier.

The Palate-Tickling Oyster.

On the subject of oyster eating the writer recently saw a rhyme something after this order, entitled "How to kill an oyster:"

Don't drown it deep in vinegar, nor season it at all,
Nor cover up its glistening form with pepper like a pall;
But raise it gently from its shell, and firmly hold your breath,
And then, with eager tooth and tongue, just tickle it to death.

The Merciful Wife is Merciful to "Him."

When a man comes home late at night, after working hard all the evening at the office on the books, it is mean for his wife to require him to say, "Say, should such a shapely sash shabby stitches show?" before she will unbolt the front door.—Journal of Education.

OUR lady friends will be interested in knowing that by sending 20c. to pay postage, and 15 top covers of Warner's Safe Yeast (showing that they have used at least 15 packages) to H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y., they can get a 500 page, finely illustrated COOK BOOK, free. Such a book, bound in cloth, could not be bought for less than a dollar. It is a wonderfully good chance to get a fine book for the mere postage and the ladies should act promptly.

—A man's life may be like an open book, but it is bound to be closed.

"A THREE-TIME WINNER."

Has Hanlan Lost His Grip?—Philosophical Training Demanded.

The defeat of "Ned" Hanlan by Teemer at Toronto in August indicates the "end of the glory" of the doughty champion.

He has sustained his record with admirable pluck and success, but the tremendous strain of years of training must certainly some day find its limit.

Apropos of this we recall the following interesting reminiscence of aquatic annals:

On a fine bright day in August, 1871, an excited multitude of 15,000 to 20,000 persons lined the shores of the beautiful Kenebecasis, near St. John, N.B., attracted by a four-oared race between the famous Paris crew, of that city, and a picked English crew, for $5,000 and the championship of the world. Wallace Ross, the present renowned oarsman, pulled stroke for the Blue Nose crew, and "Jim" Renforth, champion sculler and swimmer of England and of the world, was stroke in the English shell.

Excitement was at fever heat.

But three hundred yards of the course had been covered when the Englishmen noticed that their rivals were creeping away.

"Give us a dozen, Jim," said the veteran Harry Kelly, ex-champion of England, who was pulling No. 3 oar.

"I can't, boys, I'm done," said Renforth, and with these words he fell forward, an inanimate heap in the boat.

"He has been poisoned by bookmakers," was the cry, and belief.

Everything that science and skill could suggest for his restoration was tried; but after terrible struggles of agony, the strong man, the flower of the athletes and pride of his countrymen, passed away.

The stomach was analyzed, but no sign or trace of poison could be found therein, though general examination showed a very strange condition of the blood and the life-giving and health-preserving organs caused by years of unwise training. While the muscular development was perfect the heart and kidneys were badly congested.

The whole system was, therefore, in just that state when the most simple departure from ordinary living and exertion was of momentous consequence. His wonderful strength only made his dying paroxysms more dreadful and the fatality more certain.

Hanlan is now in Australia. Beach, champion of that country, is a powerful fellow, who probably understands the liability of athletes to death from over-training, the effect thereof being very serious on the heart, blood and kidneys, as shown by poor Renforth's sudden death.

Within the past three years he has taken particular care of himself, and when training, always reinforces the kidneys and prevents blood congestion in them and the consequent ill-effect on the heart by using Warner's safe cure, the sportsman's universal favorite, and says he "is astonished at the great benefit."

Harry Wyatt, the celebrated English trainer of athletes, who continues himself to be one of the finest of specimens of manhood and one of the most successful of trainers, writes over his own signature to the English Sporting Life, September 5th, saying: "I consider Warner's safe cure invaluable for all training purposes and outdoor exercise. I have been in the habit of using it for a long time. I am satisfied that it pulled me through when nothing else would, and it is always a three-time winner!"

Beach's and Wyatt's method of training is sound and should be followed by all.

A Large Estate.

A broad land is this in which we live, dotted so thickly with thirfty cities, towns and villages! Amid them all, with ever increasing popularity and helpfulness, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, giving hope and cheer where there is disease and despair. Wherever there is humanity there is suffering; wherever there is suffering there is the best field for this greatest American Remedy. Consumption (which is lung-scrofula) yields to it, if employed in the early stages of the disease; Chronic Nasal Catarrh yields to it; Kidney and Liver diseases yield to it! If you want the best known remedy for all diseases of the blood, ask for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and take no other.

Making Hay While the Sun Shines.

"You seem to be enjoying yourself, Bobby," remarked one of the guests at a dinner party.

"Yes," assented Bobby, with his mouth full, "I am making the most of it, 'cause after pa an' ma give a big dinner like this, it's always cold pickin' for the next thirty days."—Harper's Bazar.

Always Prompt in Action.

This is just what every sufferer wants—prompt action and rapid relief from pain. The grandest discovery of the age, the great pain cure, is Polson's Nerviline—prompt, powerful, pleasant to the taste, and yet so pure that it may be given to the youngest infant. Try a 10 cent sample bottle, which you can purchase at any drug store. Nerviline, the great, sure, and prompt pain cure. The large bottles are only 25 cents.

Who Told You So?

It is a solemn hour with a rose-lipped society bud when she begins to wonder vaguely how a mustache feels on the face.—Binghamton Republican.

Popular Preparation!

Pure, Potent, Powerful! Pallid People Praise, Progressive People Purchase! Positively Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, Properly Partaken, Preserve Physical Powers, Produce Permanent Physical Perfection. Purchase, Prove!

There Was Wire Enough.

Friend (to happy father)—Hello, Jones, let me congratulate you. I hear you have a new boy at your house.

Happy Father—By George, can you hear him all this distance?—Pittsburg Chronicle

Isaiah Williamson, of Philadelphia, is the richest bachelor in the United States. His fortune of $20,000,000 was made in the dry goods trade, and yields him an annual income of a million and a half.

—Notice is given by Bennet Rosamond, of Almonte, of application for divorce from his wife, Adair M. Rosamond, on the grounds of adultery and desertion.

ALMA LADIES' COLLEGE,

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO.

This institution which had last year the largest enrolment of all the Canadian Colleges for women is offering superior advantages to young women in Literary Course, Fine Arts, Commercial Science and Music at the very lowest rates.

Address, Principal Austin, B. D.

The Longest Word in the Dictionary is incompetent to communicate the inexpressible satisfaction and incomprehensible consequences resulting from a judicious administration of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a preparation designed especially for the speedy relief and permanent cure of all Female Weaknesses, Nervousness and disease peculiar to the female sex. The only remedy for a woman's peculiar ills, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, to give satisfaction. See guarantee on wrapper of bottle. This guarantee has been faithfully carried out for many years by the proprietors.

Doggishness Acknowledged.

Passenger (in crowded car)—Is this seat engaged?

Occupant—Don't yer see it is?

Passenger (forcibly removing bundles, placing them on the floor, and sitting down)—Pretty comfortable kind of a sty, ain't it?

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DUN L. 51 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE BAKING POST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P.O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

GORDON'S

OLD RELIABLE HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON!

Is still open and Old Customers will find it Stocked with

Carriage & Team

HARNESS!

Which has become celebrated throughout this vicinity for superior quality, finish and durability. All guaranteed as heretofore. At

Reduced Prices for Cash.

Also a large stock of Winter Goods in the line of

HORSE COVERS!

of superior quality, at the lowest prices ever offered in Flesherton. A fine selection of

Sleigh ❋ Bells!

at a slight advance on cost for the next 30 days. If you want a first-class

WHIP!

It is to be found at Gordon's. Also

TRUNKS,
VALISES,
RUGS,
HORSE BRUSHES,
CURRY COMBS,
SWEAT PADS

and all other Horse Furnishings found in a first-class Harness Shop.

The Celebrated Harness Oil!

Kept constantly on hand. But the Crowning Specialty is the perfect fitting

Scotch ❋ Collar!

Warranted not to gall your horses and for which this establishment has become so well known throughout this County. Repairing attended to promptly, carefully and cheaply.

A Call is Respectfully Invited at

GORDON'S HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

LOST DOG.—Any person or persons giving information which will lead to the recovery of a large black Newfoundland dog, with curly hair, white throat, and white tip on each foot, which went away from my premises on the evening of the 14th inst., will be suitably rewarded.—A. Down, Flesherton P.O. Or information may be left at Advance Office.

All the leading lines in Tobacco's and Cheap at M. Richardson & Co's Tobacco Counter. McDonald's bright Smoking Tobacco only 37½ cents per lb.

Mr. W. T. Paul, late Postmaster at Lady Bank, Osprey township, has removed to Maxwell. The vacancy caused by his removal has been filled by the appointment of Mr. John Pool, who, it is believed will prove an efficient successor. Mr. Paul was an excellent official and made many friends in the neighborhood of Lady Bank.

The latest, the safest and the best Lantern on the market is the Electric Lighting Lantern. No matches needed. For sale at M. Richardson & Co's.

The first number of The Daily Empire will be issued on Tuesday next. The weekly edition of The Empire will be issued on Thursday next. Now is the time to send in your clubbing subscriptions to The Advance and commence with the first number of this truly representative Canadian journal. Fuller particulars in reference to The Empire in next week's Advance.

Be sure you call and see my immense stock of Ladies Dress Goods, Plushes, Velvets, Velveteens and Cashmeres at R. Trimble's.

Confectionery and Nuts at the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

Mr. Will. Campbell is now operator at Dry Fork, Montana, U. S., on the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba R. R., at an increased salary. He says:—"I can't say I'm in love with the country so far; although the land is said to be good. There are no settlers here, this being an Indian reserve..... The nearest town of any importance is Fort Benton, which is 28 miles West. The Advance is a more welcome visitor now than ever."

Don't have your barns and stables burned by using matches. Get one of those Electric Lighting Lantern's at M. Richardson & Co's.

On Thursday last, an Osprey farmer had an upset while driving a team of horses attached to a wagon with a load of grain, down the hill opposite the Speetson mill road. It seems that some person left a sleigh and a load of wood on the side of the road the night before which took up nearly all the road, and, while driving past, the hind wheels of the wagon slid down a steep embankment taking with them the wagon and the horses. Fortunately, nothing but the spring seat and one of the horse's mouths were damaged.

The largest, cheapest and best selected stock of gents Fine Boots, ladies Fine Boots, and Childrens Boots in town at R. Trimble's.

Mr. Wm. Ward, sr., was in the act of riding out of town last Thursday morning mounted on his well-known gray mare—when Mr. Cole came along and got on the animal behind the former. The old mare strongly objected to this unusual proceeding and made several frantic efforts to dislodge the intruder, by kicking her heels up in the air. But it was no use—Cole stuck to Ward and Ward stuck to the old mare like a burr to a sheep's back—and finally the animal started off for home with her double burden, much to the amusement of a number of spectators.

M. Richardson & Co. offer extraordinary Bargains in Ladies Fur Goods and Astrachan Mantles this and next week. Call and see.

Mr. Will Breen returned home to Flesherton from the North-West on Monday evening last. He has grown fat during his stay in the great lone land, and some scarcely recognized him at first, so great was the change. Will has seen considerable ser ice on the Mounted Police force. Those who should know say he was one of the sturdiest and most splendid specimens of men, physically, on the force. His visit home was a pleasant surprise to his esteemed and respected parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Breen, as well as to a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Large Presents given with Mayell's Baking Powder, you will find them at the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

Mr. Ranton, the evangelist, occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church here last Sunday evening. He delivered an interesting discourse to a large congregation. He is a fluent speaker, does not hesitate to call things by their proper names, and deals with the question of a material hell without gloves. His remarks on the evening in question secured the close and earnest attention of his auditors. Mr. Ranton is a tall, slim young man, with very fair complexion, prominent nose, keen, clear eyes, light curly hair, and with a very pleasing address. We understand that he is a member of Savage's celebrated band of evangelists.

An attempt was made to break into M. Richardson & Co's store here late last Saturday night or early on Sunday morning. The burglars broke the lock and bolt but an additional fastening on the inside rendered their efforts to effect an entrance abortive. Next time they visit these premises their ardor will probably be cooled by a dose of lead. The time has now arrived when the services of a Vigilance Committee or a good sharp detective will have to be called into requisition, as it is evident the burglars are located in the immediate neighborhood. Suspicion points strongly in a certain direction and we don't think a smart detective would have much difficulty working up a clear case.

Immense Bargains now going on for the holiday trade, such as gents Scarfs, Silk Hdks., Fancy Ties at R. Trimble's.

The children of the Methodist Sabbath School, Flesherton, are undergoing a thorough drilling at the hands of Squire Armstrong, in view of the approaching New Year's Anniversary, which is so eagerly looked forward to by young and old. The Squire has for many years been a prominent figurehead at these pleasant annual re-unions, and under his careful and experienced management the children have made rapid progress in musical culture and in that more important branch of Sabbath School training, viz., the study of the Word of God. The Anniversary will be held on the evening of the 2nd January. Tea will be served in the basement of the church, and the program will be presented in the lecture room.

Everything cheap for cash at the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

Rev. John A. McDonald will preach the Anniversary sermon, in connection with the Presbyterian Sabbath School, Flesherton, on Sunday afternoon next (Christmas day) at 2:30 o'clock. On Monday evening following, 26th inst., the Sabbath School Anniversary will be held in the same church. Tea will be served in the basement from 4 to 7 o'clock, after which a carefully prepared program will be presented in the lecture room. One of the features of the Anniversary will be the rendering of a charming cantata, entitled, "The Star of Bethlehem," in which some twenty persons take part under the efficient leadership of our popular tenor singer, Mr. J. G. Russell, whose services in connection with the now famous "Flesherton Glee Club" have obtained for him a wide and well-deserved popularity. See bills for particulars.

A choice stock of New Fruits and Christmas Groceries to suit everybody at M. Richardson & Co's.

Over two dozen Fleshertonians visited Priceville on Tuesday evening as spectators of and contributors to the entertainment held in Watson's Hall, under the auspices of the Methodist church in that place. Our popular Band, under the excellent leadership of Mr. E. Vanzant, turned out almost in full force and furnished a great variety of choice music, which was rendered with a faultlessness of execution that won for them the hearty and unstinted praise of all present. Rev. Mr. Ottewell, Superintendent of the circuit, occupied the chair. His quaint and droll sayings, his brief and appropriate comments, his untiring patience, and his dignified manner, formed a most pleasing contrast when compared with the long-winded, tiresome utterances and lack of tact displayed by some chairmen we wot of. The Flesherton Glee Club gave a splendid account of themselves, winning golden opinions on all hands; so also did the Priceville Quartette—with Miss Bella Christoe and Mrs. Dr. Hixon as organists respectively. Miss Christoe's solo, which was most charmingly rendered, was a feature of the concert. Her accentuation was clear and distinct—not a word being lost to the audience. Recitations and dialogues by Master Grier and others created great amusement. Mr. Brander read well, his selection showing good taste. Miss Hopkins recitation was so excellently rendered that you could almost have "heard a pin drop." This splendid recital created a most profound impression and elicited a hearty burst of applause. Dr. Christoe delivered an energetic and strikingly original impromptu address. Rev. Mr. McLeod made a neat little speech. Dr. Hixon, in a few well chosen words, moved, and Mr. Robt. Watson seconded, a vote of thanks to the various performers, which was manifested by a vigorous and hearty clapping of hands. At the close of this most enjoyable evening's entertainment, Rev. Mr. Ottewell invited the Flesherton visitors and others to the parsonage, where a splendid spread of cold turkey and other substantial viands had been prepared and to which ample justice was done. To say the least, the visitors were treated in a most royally hospitable manner by the kind people of Priceville. The proceeds of the concert amounted to something over $31.

Perfumery in great variety at the Medical Hall, Flesherton.

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. Grand outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine.

BOOTS & SHOES!

—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—

WINTER GOODS!

RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS and FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

HEARD'S!

Carriage Works, Flesherton,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.

SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.

Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

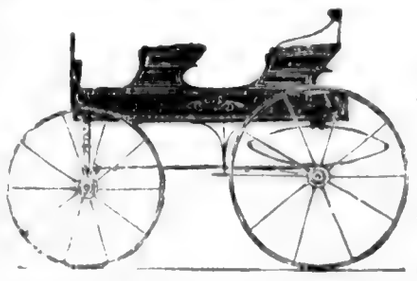
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.



MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith,

THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

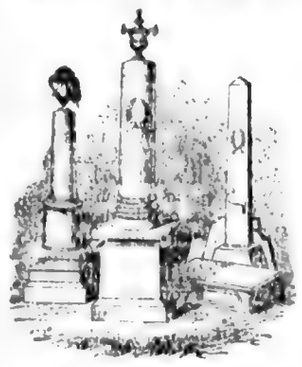
Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

I an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor Holloway's Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR"—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 340. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

"DECEMBER AD."

$1,600

IN GOLD AND SILVER

WATCHES!

Walnut and Nickle Clocks, Roll Plate and Fine Gilt Chains, Gem and Wedding Rings, Jewelery and Fine Silverware for Holiday Trade!

If I felt the public were fools enough to believe me and knew "myself" to be "knave" enough to beat the wholesale, I would talk big discount and wholesale prices for above goods. Wholesale prices in a retail store won't pay rent, light taxes, etc. Continuous discounts 5 times in 1 year, either pays by marking goods away up, or else by using deception as to quality of goods. There are Jewelers who have 14 k. wedding rings stamped 18 k. My Plain Rings are made by P. W. ELLIS & CO., and after this will have my initials, W.B. stamped on.

Goods as represented every time.

Prices at "whisper" mark. Discounts as usual, 5 per cent.

Warrants cover Breakages!

Don't accept any other kind. Everybody invited to call when in town and get my prices.

For 4 Years

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA, 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

331-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE,

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

The North-bound C. P. R. train was two hours late on Christmas Eve.

Mrs. Chislett, of the town of Collingwood, is visiting friends in Artemesia.

No blow, no puff, my watch repairing gives satisfaction and charges are never extortionate. W. A. Brown, Markdale.

Mr. Will Wright, who has been attending the Toronto School of Medicine, is home for the holidays.

Mr. J. J. Heron, an old schoolfellow of ye Editor's, paid us a brief visit one day last week.

Mr. Edwin Richardson, who has been studying at Toronto University, is home for the holidays.

Miss Lilly Carberry and Mr. Albert Carberry, of Toronto township, are holidaying at the residence of ye Editor and wife.

My 18k. Rings are made P. W. Ellis & Co., Toronto. Trade mark, the maple leaf with E. in centre. W. A. Brown, Markdale. 2t.

Mr. J. B. Sloan, of Eugenia, bought a lot of turnips the other day. Two of the turnips were found to measure 2 ft. 10 in. and 3 ft. 2 in. around respectively.

Subscribers of THE ADVANCE, who may chance to be in Toronto a few days after publication, will find copies of the paper on fyle at the reading room of the Public Library there, on Church street.

Mr. Richard Heron, of the well-known Osprey Woollen Mills, has been nearly forty years a member of the Sons of Temperance, having joined Harvest Home lodge in the Co. of York when he was sixteen years of age.

The carol singers were out early on Christmas morning, and the sounds of sweet music evolved on the occasion caused a temporary illumination of many residences in Flesherton. We are glad to notice that this beautiful and time-honored custom is still kept up in this town. May it ever be thus.

Mr. A. W. Rowe, of Dundalk, will visit Flesherton in the course of a few weeks for the purpose of organizing a Young Mens Protestant Benevolent Association lodge here. He has asked us to tell those who are desirous of becoming members of the Society to leave their names with the Editor of THE ADVANCE as soon as possible.

Rev. John A. McDonald, of Horning's Mills, preached the Sabbath School Anniversary sermon in the Presbyterian church, Flesherton, last Sunday afternoon. There was a large congregation and the sermon—which partook more of the nature of a conversation between preacher and juvenile hearers—was listened to with much attention.

NEWDALE, Dec. 20.—Dear Sir, you will find enclosed $1 to pay for THE ADVANCE for the year 1888. I have had copies sent me during part of this year and like it very well. I hope your Maxwell correspondent will keep his ears open as that is the part which interests me most. I was going to send you some Newdale items, but I am very busy and besides they could not be of interest to most of your readers. However, this part, and I think the whole province, is enjoying unusual prosperity. Farmers have had abundant crops and fair prices. It is useless for me to give the yield as Ontario farmers would not believe it. The best thing they can do, is to come out and see the country. If they would, Ontario would soon be depopulated.—JOSIAH GAMBY, jr.

—BARGAINS!—

ENORMOUS BARGAINS!

Immense Bargains!

NOW GOING ON AT

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, FLESHERTON!

WHERE WILL BE FOUND THE LARGEST AND FINEST STOCK OF

Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Knives, Razors, &c.

EVER SHOWN IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY. OUR GOODS

TOOK FIRST PRIZE AT FLESHERTON FALL SHOW,

And in order to give parties who were not able to take advantage of our discount sale in October, we have decided to again make this Great Offer and give

TWENTY PER CENT. OFF

On all Cash Sales of $1 and over from 1st day of December, 1887, to 1st day of January, 1888.

Now, this is a grand chance to secure fine goods at about wholesale prices. All Watches we sell bear a written guarantee of from three to five years. We will still make another Grand Offer to anyone purchasing one of our LADIES' FINE GEM RINGS or 18 k. WEDDING RINGS which we have for the number of nearly one hundred, we will give a beautiful Plush Ring Box worth $1.00, any color. These bargains everyone should take advantage of. You will never have as good a chance again and remember the only place to get your Watch repaired properly is at

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON.

The Presbyterian Sabbath School Anniversary held here last Monday evening was a success in every particular. The fine large lecture room of the church was filled to the doors. The decorations displayed excellent taste. S. S. banners were hung on the walls along with several neatly lettered and appropriate mottoes, and on the wall just behind the pulpit—in beautiful rustic letters—was the cheering word "welcome." The platform occupied central position at the front of the room, from which the merry eyes of a large number of bright children looked out upon the audiitorium. To the right of the children arose the tall and graceful form of an evergreen, which was covered with Christmas presents for the little folk. As a finishing touch to this charming scene, the well-known and kindly features of the pastor, Rev. A. Wilson, and the superintendent, Jos. Blackburne, Esq., looked forth upon the smiling faces of the vast assembly of people. The singing by the children was simply beautiful, while the recitations and dialogues were rendered in an excellent manner. Miss Damude presided at the organ, and the musical exercises were conducted by Mr. J. G. Russell in a very creditable manner. An exceedingly well rendered recitation by Mr. Thompson, and a grand Scottish song—"My ain Countree"—by that prince of vocalists, Mr. Anderson, are deserving of special mention; also a thrilling recitation by Miss Hogg, of Flesherton Station. The cantata, "The Star of Bethlehem," was charmingly rendered. Those who particularly distinguished themselves in the cantata were Miss VanDusen, Miss Damude, Miss Cole, Miss Gordon, Miss May Damude, Mr. J. G. Russell and Mr. J. H. Anderson. Miss Christoe presided at the organ part of the time. Shortly after nine o'clock this interesting entertainment was brought to a close by the singing of the doxology, after which the fruits of the Xmas tree were distributed among the children. The Librarian's and Secretary's report gave a very healthy showing. There are now 187 scholars on the roll and a cash balance on hand of over $60.

We are thankful to those who have renewed their subscriptions to THE ADVANCE so promptly for 1888. Will others kindly follow the good example thus set by doing likewise.

The Advance and Weekly Empire Till Jan., 1889, for $1.65!

FARMERS

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding the price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., OILING, ROLL-CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 30th, 1887.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

Fay's secret was quite safe with Jean, and, as the weeks and months went on, a feeling of utter security came over her. She hardly knew how time passed. There were hours when she did not always feel unhappy. The truth was, she was for a long time utterly benumbed by pain; a total collapse of mind and body had ensued on her flight from her home. She had suffered too much for her age and strength. Sir Hugh's alarming illness, and her suspense and terror, had been followed by the shock of hearing from his own lips of his love and engagement to Margaret; and, before she could rally her forces to bear this new blow, her baby had been born.

Fay used to wonder sometimes at her own languid indifference. "Am I really able to live without Hugh?" she would say to herself. "I thought it must have killed me long ago, knowing that he does not love me; but somehow, I do not feel able to think of it all; and when I go to bed I fall asleep."

Fay was mercifully unconscious of her own heart-break, though the look in her eyes often made Mrs. Duncan weep. When she grew a little stronger her old restlessness returned, and she went beyond the garden and the orchard. She never wandered about the village, people seemed to stare at her so; but her favorite haunt was the falls. There was a steep little path by a wicket gate that led to a covered rustic bench, where Fay could see the falls above her shooting down like a silver streak from under the single graceful arch of the roadway; not falling sheer down, but broken by many a ledge and boulder of black rock, where in summer time the spray beat on the long delicate fronds of ferns.

Fay remembered how she used to stroll through the underwood and gather the slender blue and white harebells that came peeping out of the green moss, or hunted for the waxy blossoms of the bell-heather; how lovely the place had looked then, with the rowans or witches, as they called them—the mountain ash of the south, drooping over the water, laden heavily with clusters of coral-like berries, sometimes tinging the snowy foam with a faint rose tint, and fringed in the background with larch and silver birch; the whole mass of luxuriant foliage nearly shutting out the little strip of sky which gleamed pearly-blue through a delicate network of leaves.

It was an enchanting spot in summer or autumn, but even in winter Fay loved it; its solitude and peacefulness fascinated her. But one day she found its solitude invaded. She had been some months at the Manse, but she had not once spoken to the young minister during his brief visits. She had kept to her room with a nervous shrinking rom strangers; but she had watched him sometimes between the services, pacing up and down the garden as though he were thinking deeply.

He was a tall, broad-shouldered young man, with a plain, strong-featured face as rugged as his own mountains; but his keen grey eyes could look soft enough at times, as pretty Lilian Graham knew well; for the wilful little beauty had been unable to say no to him as she did to her other lovers. It was not easy to bid Fergus Duncan go about his business when he had made up his mind to bide, and as the young minister had decidedly made up his mind that Lilian Graham should be his promised wife, he got his way in that; and Lilian grew so proud and fond of him that she never found out how completely he ruled her, and how seldom she had her own will Fay heard with some dismay that Mr. Fergus was coming to live at the Manse after Christmas; she would have to see him at meals, and in the evening, and would have no excuse for retiring into her room. Now, if any visitor came to the Manse, Lilian Graham, or one of her sisters—for there were seven strapping lasses at the farm, and not one of them wed yet, as Mrs. Duncan would say—Fay would take refuge in the kitchen, or sit in the minister's room—anything to avoid the curious eyes and questioning that would have awaited her in the parlor; but now if Mr. Fergus lived there, Lilian Graham would always be there too.

Mr. Fergus was rather curious about Aunt Jeanie's mysterious guest. He had caught sight of Mrs. St. Clair once or twice at the window, and had been much struck with her appearance of youth; and his remark, after first seeing her in the little kirk, had been, "Why, Aunt Jeanie, Mrs. St. Clair looks quite a child; how could any one calling himself a man ill-use a little creature like that;" for Mrs. Duncan had carefully infused into her nephew's ear a little fabled account of Fay's escape from her husband, to which he listened with Scotch caution and a good deal of incredulity. "Depend upon it, there are faults on both sides," he returned obstinately. "We do not deal in villains now-a-days. You are so soft, Aunt Jeanie; you always believe what people tell you. I should like to have a talk with Mrs. St. Clair; indeed, I think it my duty as a minister to remonstrate with a young wife when she has left her husband."

"Oh, you will frighten the bit lassie, Fergus, if you speak and look so stern," replied his aunt in an alarmed voice. "You see you are only a lad yourself, and maybe Lilian wouldn't care to have you so ready with your havers with a pretty young thing like Mrs. St. Clair. Better leave her to Jean and me." But she might as well have spoken to the wind, for the young minister had made up his mind that it was his duty to shepherd this stray lamb.

He had already spoken out his mind to Lilian; the poor little girl had been much overpowered by the sight of Fay in the kirk. Fay's beauty had made a deep impression on her; and the knowledge that her betrothed would be in daily contact with this dainty piece of loveliness was decidedly unpalatable to her feelings.

Lilian was quite aware of her own charms; her dimples and sweet youthful bloom had already brought many a lover to her feet; but she was a sensible little creature in spite of her vanity, and she knew that she could not compare with Mrs. St. Clair any more than painted delf could compare with procelain.

So first she pouted and gave herself airs when her lover came to the farm, and then, when he coaxed her, she burst into a flood of honest tears, and bewailed herself because Fergus was to live up at the Manse, when no one knew who Mrs. St. Clair might be, for all she had a face like a picture.

"Oh, oh, I see now," returned Fergus, with just the gleam of a smile lighting up his rugged face; "it is just a piece of jealousy, Lilian, because Mrs. St. Clair—to whom I have never spoken, mind you—happens to be a prettier girl than yourself," —which was wicked and impolitic of Fergus.

"But you will be speaking to her, and at every meal-time too, and all the evenings when Mrs. Duncan is up in the minister's room; and it is not what I call fair, Fergus, with me down at the farm, and you always up in arms if I venture to give more than a good-day to the lads."

"Well, you see you belong to me, Lilian, and I am a careful man and look after my belongings. Mrs. St. Clair is one of my flock now, and I must take her in hand. Whisht, lassie," as Lilian averted her face and would not look at him, "have you such a mean opinion of me that you think I am not to be trusted to look at any woman but yourself, and I a minister with a cure of souls; that is a poor lookout for our wedded life." And here Fergus whispered something that brought the dimples into play again; and after a little more judicious coaxing, Lilian was made to understand that ministers were not just like other men, and must be suffered to go their "ain gait."

And the upshot of this conversation was that Fay found herself confronted at the wooden gate one day by a tall, broad-shouldered young man, whom she knew was the young minister. Of course he was going to see the falls, and she was about to pass him with a slight bow, when he stopped her and offered her his hand. "I think we know each other, Mrs. St. Clair, without any introduction. I am Fergus Duncan, and I have long wanted to be acquainted with Aunt Jeanie's guest;" and then he held open the gate and escorted her back to the Manse.

Fay could not find fault with the young man's bluntness; she had no right to hold herself aloof from Mrs. Duncan's nephew. He must know how she had avoided him all these months, but he seemed too good-humored to resent it. He talked to her very pleasantly about the weather and the falls and his uncle's health and Fay answered him with her usual gentleness.

They parted in the porch mutually pleased with each other; but the young man drew a long breath when he found himself alone.

"Ech, sirs! as Jean says, but this is the bonniest lass I have ever set eyes on. Poor little Lilian! no wonder she felt herself a bit upset. Come, I must get to the bottom of this; Aunt Jeanie is too soft for anything. Why, the sables she wore were worth a furtune; and when she took off her gloves her diamond and emerald rings fairly blinded one."

Fergus arrived at the Manse with all his traps about a fortnight after this; and when the first few days were over, Fay discovered that she had no reason to dislike Mr. Fergus' company.

He was always kind and good-natured, and took a great deal of notice of the baby. Indeed, he never seemed more content than when baby Hugh was on his knee, pulling his coarse reddish hair, and gurgling gleefully over this new game. Fay began to like him very much when she had seen him with her boy; and after that he found little trouble in drawing her into conversation.

His first victory was inducing her to make friends with Lilian. Fay, who shrank painfully from strangers, acceded very nervously to this request. But when Lilian came her shy, pretty manners won Fay's heart, and the two became very fond of each other.

Fergus used to have long puzzled talks with Aunt Jeanie about her protege. "What is to be done about Mrs. St. Clair when Lilian and I are married?" he would ask; "the Manse cannot hold us all."

"Eh, lad, that's what Jean and me often say; but then the summer is not here yet, and maybe we can find a cottage in Rowan-Glen, and there is Mrs. Dacre over at Corrie that would house them for a bit. Mrs. St. Clair was speaking to me about it yesterday. 'Where do they mean to live when they are married?' she says quite sensible-like. 'Is there anywhere else I can go to make room for them?' And then she cried, poor bairn, and said she would like to stay in Rowen-Glen."

"Mrs. St. Clair," observed Fergus one day, looking up from his writing, "don't you think people will be talking if you stay away from your husband any longer?" for he had once before said a word to her on the subject, only Fay had been hysterical and had begged him not to go on.

"Oh," she said, turning very pale, and dropping her work, "why will you speak to me of my husband, Mr. Fergus?"

"Because I think you ought to go back to him," he replied, in a quiet business-like tone; "it is a wife's duty to forgive—and how do you know that your husband has not bitterly repented driving you away from him. Would you harden your heart against a repentant man?"

"My husband does not want me," she returned, and a spasm crossed her face. "Should I have left him if he wanted to keep me? 'One of us must go,' that is what he said."

"Are you sure you understood him? asked Fergus; but he felt at the moment as though it would relieve his feelings to knock that fellow down; "a man can say a thing when he is angry which he would be sorry to mean in his cooler moments."

"I saw it written," was the low answer; then, with an effort to silence him, "Mr. Fergus, you do not know my husband; —you cannot judge between us. I was right to leave him; I could not do otherwise."

"Was his name St. Clair?" he asked somewhat abruptly; and as Fay reddened under his scrutinizing glance, he continued rather sternly, "please do not say 'yes' if it be untrue; you do not look as though you could deceive any one."

"My husband's name is St. Clair," replied Fay, with as much displeasure as she could assume. "I am not obliged to tell you or any one else that it is only his second name. I have reasons why I wish to keep the other to myself."

"Thank you, Mrs. St. Clair," answered Fergus, moved to admiration by this frankness and show of spirit; "believe me, it is through no feeling of idle curiosity I put this question, but because I want to help you."

"Yes, I know you are very good," replied Fay, more gently.

"If you would only trust us, and give us your confidence," he continued earnestly. "Aunt Jeanie is not a woman of the world, but she has plenty of common sense; and forgive me if I say you are very young and may need guidance. You cannot hide from us that you are very unhappy, and that the husband you have left is still dear to you ——" But Fay could hear no more; she rose with a low sob and left the room, and Fergus' little homily on wifely forbearance was not finished.

It was so each time that he reopened the subject. Fay would listen up to a certain point, and seem touched by the young minister's kindness and sympathy, but he could not induce her to open her heart to him. She was unhappy—yes, she allowed that; she had no wish to leave her husband, but circumstances had been too strong for her, and nothing would induce her to admit that she had done wrong.

"Who would have thought that little creature had so much tenacity and will," Fergus said to himself, with a sort of vexed admiration, after one of these conversations; "why, Lilian is a big woman compared to Mrs. St. Clair, and yet my lassie has not a tithe of her spirit. Well, I'll bide my time; but it will not be my fault if I fail to have a grip of her yet."

But the spring sunshine touched the rugged tops of Bemuich-dhu and Ben-na-hourd before Fergus got his "grip."

He was taking his porridge one morning, with an English paper lying beside his plate, when he suddenly started, and seemed all at once very much absorbed in what he was reading. A few minutes afterwards, when Fay was stooping over her boy, who lay on the carpet beside her, sprawling in the sunshine, he raised his eyes, and looked at her keenly from under his bent brows; but he said nothing, and shortly afterwards went off to his study; and when he was alone, he spread out the paper before him, and again studied it intently.

A paragraph in the second column had attracted his attention—

"A reward of two hundred pounds is offered to any person who can give such information of Lady Redmond and her child as may lead to them being restored to their friends. All communications to be forwarded to Messrs. Green and Richardson, Lincoln's Inn."

And just above—

"Fay, your husband entreats you to return to your home, or at least relieve his anxiety with respect to you and the child. Only come back, and all will be well.

HUGH."

"And Hugh is the baby's name. Aye, my lady, I think I have the grip of you at last," muttered Fergus, as he drew the ink-stand nearer to him.

The next morning Messrs. Green and Richardson received a letter marked "private," in which the writer begged to be furnished without delay with full particulars of the appearance of the missing Lady Redmond, and her age and the age of the child; and the letter was signed. "Fergus Duncan, the Manse, Rowan-Glen."

CHAPTER XLI.

UNDER THE ROWANS.

My wife, my life. O we will walk this world,
Yoked in all exercise of noble end,
And so thro' those dark gates across the wild
That no man knows. Indeed I love thee: come,
Lay thy sweet hands in mine and trust to me.
Tennyson's "Princess."

Fergus was not kept long in suspense; his letter was answered by return of post. Messrs. Green & Richardson had been evidently struck with the concise, business-like note they had received, and they took great pains in furnishing him with full particulars, and begged that, if he had any special intelligence to impart, he would write direct to their client, Sir Hugh Redmond, Redmond Hall, Singleton.

After studying this letter with most careful attention, Fergus came to the conclusion that it would be as well to write to Sir Hugh Redmond. He was very careful to post this letter himself, and, though he confided in no one, thinking a secret is seldom safe with a woman, he could not hide from Lilian and Aunt Jeanie that he was "a bit fashed" about something.

"For it is not like our Fergus," observed the old lady tenderly, "to be stalking about the rooms and passages like a sair-hearted ghost."

Sir Hugh was sitting over his solitary breakfast, with Pierre beside him, when, in listlessly turning over his pile of letters, the Scotch postmark on one arrested his attention, and he opened it with some eagerness. It was headed, "The Manse, Rowan-Glen," and was evidently written by a stranger; yes, he had never heard the name Fergus Duncan.

"Dear Sir," it commenced, "two or three days ago I saw your advertisement in the Standard, and wrote at once to your solicitors, Messrs. Green & Richardson, begging them to furnish me with the necessary particulars for identifying the person of Lady Redmond. The answer I received from them yesterday has decided me to act on their advice, and correspond personally with yourself. My aunt, Mrs. Duncan, has had a young married lady and her child staying with her all the winter. She calls herself Mrs. St. Clair, though I may as well tell you that she has owned to me that this is only her husband's second name"—here Hugh started, and a sudden flush crossed his face.

"She arrived quite unexpectedly last September. She had been at the Manse as a child, with her father, Colonel Mordaunt;" here Hugh dropped the letter and hid his face in his hands. "My God, I have not deserved this goodness," rose to his lips; and then he hastily finished the sentence, "and she begged my aunt to shelter her and the child, as she had been obliged to leave her husband; and as she appeared very ill and unhappy, my aunt could not do otherwise.

"The particulars I have gleaned from Messrs. Green & Richardson's letter have certainly led me to the conclusion that Mrs. St. Clair is really Lady Redmond. Mrs. St. Clair is certainly not nineteen, and her baby is eleven months old; she is very small in person—indeed, in stature almost a child; and every item in the lawyers' letter is fully corroborated.

"We have not been able to gain any information from Mrs. St. Clair herself; she declines to explain why she has left her home, and only appears agitated when questions are put to her. Her fixed idea seems to be that her husband does not want her. Her health has suffered much from ceaseless fretting, but she is better now, and the child thrives in our mountain air.

"As the sight of your handwriting would only excite Mrs. St. Clair's suspicions, it would be as well to put your answer under cover, or telegraph your reply. I need not tell you that you will be welcome at the Manse, if you should think it well to come to Rowan-Glen.—I remain, dear sir, yours faithfully, FERGUS DUNCAN."

A few hours later a telegram reached the Manse.

"I am on my way: shall be at the Manse to-morrow afternoon. No doubt of identity; unmarried name Mordaunt.—H. REDMOND."

"Aunt Jeanie must be taken into counsel now," was Fergus' first thought as he read the telegram; his second was, "better sleep on it first; women are dreadful hands at keeping a secret. She would be fondling her with tears in her dear old eyes all the evening, and Mrs. St. Clair is none so innocent, in spite of Jean and Lilian calling her a woman-angel. Ay, but she is a bonnie lassie though, and brave-hearted as well," and the young minister's eyes grew misty as he shut himself up in the study to keep himself safe from the temptation of telling Aunt Jeanie.

He had a sore wrestle for it though; but he prided himself on his wisdom; when, after breakfast the next morning, he led the old lady into the study, and, after bidding her prepare for a shock, informed her that Mrs. St. Clair's husband, Sir Hugh Redmond, would be down that very afternoon.

He might well call Aunt Jeanie soft, to see her white curls shake tremulously, and the tears running down her faded cheeks.

"Eh, my lad—eh, Fergus," she sobbed, "Mrs. St. Clair's husband—the father of her bairn. Oh, whatever will Jean say? she will be running away and hiding them both—she cannot bide the thought of that man."

"Aunt Jeanie," broke in Fergus in his most masterly voice, "I hope you will not be so foolish as to tell Jean; remember I have trusted this to you because I know you are wise and sensible, and will help me. We have made ourselves responsible for this poor child, and shall have to account to Sir Hugh if we let her give us the slip. I have said all along that no doubt there were faults on both sides, only you women will take each other's parts. Now, I am off to the farm to see Lilian. Just tell Jean that I am expecting a friend, and that she had better choose a fine plump pair of chicks for supper; she will be for guessing it is Lothian or Dan Ambleby, or one of the old lot, and she will be so busy with her scones and pasties that one will hardly venture to cross the kitchen." And then, begging her to be careful that Mrs. St. Clair might not guess anything from her manner, Fergus strode off to the farm to share his triumph and perplexities with Lilian.

It was well for Aunt Jeanie that Fay was extremely busy that day, finishing a frock for her baby; so she sat in her own room all the morning at the window overlooking the orchard, and baby Hugh, as usual, crawled at her feet.

He was a beautiful boy now, with the fresh, fair complexion of the Redmonds, with rough golden curls running over his head, and large, solemn grey eyes. Fay had taught him to say "dada," and would cover him with passionate kisses when the baby lips fashioned the words. "Yes, my little boy shall go home to his father some day, when he can run about and speak quite plain," she would tell him; and at the thought of that day, when she should give him up to Hugh, she would bury her face in the fat creasy neck, and wet it with her tears. How would she ever live without her child?" she thought; but she knew, for all that that she would give him up.

When Fergus returned to luncheon, he found Aunt Jeanie had worked herself almost into a fever—her pretty old face was flushed and tremulous, her eyes were dim when Fay came into the room carrying her boy.

"He is far too heavy for you, Mrs. St. Clair," exclaimed Fergus, hastening to relieve her. "I know mother's arms are generally strong, but still this big fellow is no light weight. What are you going to do with yourself this afternoon? Aunt Jeanie always takes a nap in Uncle Donald's room, but I suppose you have not come to the age of napping."

"No," returned Fay with a smile; "but Jean has finished her preparation for the strange gentleman, and she wants to take baby down to Logill; Mrs. Mackay has promised her some eggs. It will do the boy good, will it not, Mrs. Duncan?" turning to the old lady; "and as I have been working all the morning, and it is such a lovely afternoon, I think I will go down to the falls."

"That is an excellent idea," returned Fergus with alacrity before his aunt could answer. He had to put down the carver to rub his hands, he was so pleased with the way things were turning out—Mrs. St. Clair safely at the falls, where they knew exactly where to find her; Jean, with the boy and her basket of eggs comfortably occupied all the afternoon, and Aunt Jeanie obliged to stay with Uncle Donald. Why, he would have the coast clear and no mistake. Sir Hugh would have no difficulty in making his explanations with the Manse parlor empty of its womankind.

He had received a second telegram, and knew that the expected visitor might be looked for in an hour's time; but it was long before that that he saw Jean with the boy on one arm, and the basket on she other, strike out bravely down the Innery road, from which a cross lane led in the direction of the village where the accommodating Mrs. Mackay lived.

A few minutes later Mrs. St. Clair passed the parlor window. It was a lovely May day, and she wore a dainty spring dress—a creamy silk fabric—and a little brown velvet hat, which particularly suited her. As she saw Fergus, she looked up and smiled, and then called Nero to order as he scampered amongst the flower beds.

"Ay, my lady, I have my grip of you now," he observed, with a gleam in his eyes, as he turned away.

About twenty minutes later he heard the click of the gate, and saw a tall, fair-bearded man, in a tweed travelling suit, walking up the steep little path, and casting anxious glances at the windows. Mrs. Duncan saw him too.

(To be continued.)

Musical and Dramatic Notes.

Faure, the baritone, is going to Vienna to sing in opera and concerts.

Anton Rubinstein has endeavored to fuse the operatic and oratorio styles in a new work entitled "Moses."

Cowen, the composer, has taken the place of Sir Arthur Sullivan as conductor of the London Philharmonic concerts.

A posthumous opera of Flotow's, entitled "The Musician," has been applied, with fair success, to the patient people of Hanover.

Rev. Dr. Warren claims that if there were no women on the stage no men would go to the theatre. How does he account for the time-honored popularity of minstrel shows?

Mme. Patti sends word to her American friends that she loves them all and longs to return to them—"they are so enthusiastic." This is the first authoritative announcement that Patti contemplated another farewell tour in this country.

In order to try the extent to which a tragic actress is moved by the whirl of stage passion, Sarah Bernhardt's pulse was once tested at the wings immediately after a scene of great intensity. It ticked as regularly and normally as an eight-day clock.

Wilson Barrett proposes to revive the Princess successes from "Lights of London" and "Romany Rye" onward. In the same way Grace Hawthorne talks of reviving all of Boucicault's dramas on a scale of magnificence not yet attempted here. It is reported that Boucicault himself will appear in well known characters.

Mr. Joseph Murphy, the comedian, is about to take a long rest from the stage, and will travel in Europe and otherwise court leisure for a year at the close of this season. During fifteen years of continued work the actor has accumulated a large fortune, one of the largest among men of his profession, and now he will rest awhile, content with both fame and fortune.

Patti is going on a South American tour in the spring. She says the birth of children has spoiled Gerster's voice, as it will any woman's. Patti has no children. "Mme. Nilsson's voice is as good as ever," added Patti, "only she prefers not to sing. Then I hear that Mlle. Arnoldson, who is young and pretty, has a remarkably sweet voice; but what is this I hear about her engagement to Robert Strakosch? Is it true?" "I think not," the correspondent replied; "I heard M. Strakosch himself deny it to-day."

Little Josef Hofmann a few months ago was asked by an English lady of high degree to spend a week at her country seat. He was too well bred and too knowing to decline the invitation. To his father, however, he whispered: "I don't want to go, and I won't go!" "Why not?" asked his father, not a little dismayed. "Why? Because there are too many ladies in those English places. And they cut off my hair and they ask me to write in their albums all day long, and—they kiss me and hug me from morning till night—and I don't like it, there!" Just you wait ten years, little Master Josef, and then——.

A Steamboat Race on the Pacific.

From a gentleman who arrived here yesterday we lean the particulars of a great steamboat race which took place on Monday between the sidewheel steamer Yosemite, late pride of the Sacramento River, and the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company's new steamer Premier. Ever since the latter arrived from San Francisco there has been a great rivalry between the captains of the two boats as to which is the faster. About a week ago they had a little brush for about ten miles, when it was claimed that the Yosemite gained on the propeller, and a great deal of talk was made about it at Victoria and elsewhere. Last Monday the Yosemite came down out of the Fraser River into the Gulf, and rounded the buoy about half a mile ahead of the Premier. Both boats were on the alert, expecting to meet at that point and it is needless to say were all ready for a big race. As soon as the Premier sighted the sidewheeler she gave chase and for a time it seemed as though she would be unable to overtake her rival, but as steam came up to the full amount allowed by law and her screw began to turn over at the rate of 124 revolutions per minute she commenced to come up on the Yosemite and passed her. As she came along the sidewheeler was making 24 turns per minute and fairly flying through the water. The new boat proved too long-winded for her rival, and in the fourteen-mile race across the gulf led the sidewheeler fully two miles. It is stated that the Premier developed a speed of over sixteen miles per hour during the race. Considerable money changed hands on the result.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer of Dec. 7th.

Christmas Among the Esquimaux.

For the benefit of such of our readers as have never spent a winter in Labrador, Alaska or other countries of the far North, we will relate some interesting facts illustrative of their manner of keeping Christmas.

The winter residences of the Esquimaux are made of blocks of solid snow with thin sheets of ice for windows. Thus the glazier in that country carries his materials for patching up windows in an ice waggon.

Esquimaux children hang up their seal-skin socks on Christmas Eve. They, like our own little folks, appreciate a pair of skates or a sled, but in place of candy they long for blubber. When a young Esquimau wakes up in the morning and finds his stocking full of blubber he is happy. If he doesn't—well, he blubbers all the same.

Their Christmas dinner is a rare feast for them. It consists of a chunk of raw whale with a sauce of rose-colored hair-oil, washed down with a flagon of seal's blood. Tallow candles with dip are served as dessert.

Rev. Daniel P. Pike, whose death has lately been announced at Newburyport, Mass., is credited with preaching 5,000 sermons, marrying more than 2,000 persons, conducting more than 2,000 funerals, and baptising (by immersion) nearly 1,100 converts.

According to Sir John Lubbock, the negroes knew nothing of the art of kissing until it was taught them by Caucasians.

Go Slow.

I planted trees at twenty,
And gave them time to grow
And now good fruit in plenty
I pluck from every row.
Enough for you, boys,
Enough for me, boys,
There'll always be, boys,
If we let it have time to grow.
There's neighbor Hale, the rich man's son,
He could not wait till fall;
He ate his apples green poor chap,
And now has none at all.
Ha, ha, my boys, ho, ho!
I tell you what I know;
'Tis fortune's waste when fools make haste;
You'd better go it slow.
I got my wealth by saving;
I always worked my way;
And I never cared a shaving
For "luck" in trade or play.
I never drank, boys,
Nor lived too high, boys,
And that's just why, boys,
I'm a hearty old man to-day.
There's rapid Ned, who sowed wild oats,
(As most young fellows can)—
Now tramps a beggar on the street,
Where once he drove a span, a span.
Ha, ha, my boys, ho, ho!
I tell you what I know;
'Tis fortune's waste when fools make haste;
You'd better go it slow.

Let the World Talk.

Oh! the world will talk,
However you walk;
'Tis an Argus-eyed, sleepless thing;
It will misconstrue
Whatever you do,
And its words have a poisoned sting.

"But it has no right,"
You exclaim, "save might
Thus to slander and carp and jeer;
So I'll keep my walk
And not heed its talk
Though it shriek in my very ear."

Ah! my friend, though gall
Are the words that fall
From its lips, yet they oft are truth;
They're the sense combined
Of all human kind
And are worth the respect of youth.

The world has a right
To keep you in sight
And remark upon what you do,
For you are a part
Of its own great heart,
And its throbbing depends on you.

Let me tell you this,
Not the vipers hiss
Till they see there is danger rife;
So, if not quite sure
Your designs are pure
Let the world be your guide in life.

It will cry "Beware"
Ere you see the snare
That is set in your life's pathway;
All your friends it knows,
It will name your foes
And their merciless plots betray.

Yet if you are sure
Your designs are pure,
Of its snarls be unmindful quite,
For the time will come
When, ashamed and dumb,
It will fawn where it sought to bite.

—Arthur Weir in Montreal Star.

Around the Circle.

A novel sight witnessed near Mount Vernon, Me., last week was that of a man mowing on the ice. A portion of his farm is in swamp land, which is too wet to mow in summer, but by waiting until it freezes he is enabled to harvest a large crop of hay from it.

While using stove blacking on her kitchen range the other day Mrs. Margaret Twibell, of Montpelier, Ind., got a small quantity of the polish in a cut on her hand. Blood-poisoning ensued, the hand swelled to great size, and it is thought that it will be necessary to amputate it.

The French Academy, by its recent annual distribution of "prizes of merit," has proclaimed Jean Adolphe Delannoy, a Calais pilot, the most heroic of Frenchmen. He has risked his life twenty-one times in saving shipwrecked crews and is loaded with medals. He also wears the cross of the Legion of Honor.

The city of Lecompton, Kan., which thirty years ago was one of the most promising towns in the west, is to-day a striking example of a "busted boom." Town lots that sold readily for $1,000 each in 1864 cannot now be disposed of at $50, and the half a million dollar State House then under way is now a mass of ruins.

John Sheetz, of Reading, Pa., brought suit before the Aldermen to recover 10 cents from a man named Wentzel. The case grew out of a dispute about the value of an apple butter jar, which Sheetz declared to be worth 10 cents, while in Wentzel's opinion it was worth only eight. The Aldermen gave judgment in favor of Sheetz for 10 cents and heavy costs.

Chatter of the Children.

SLOWED OUT THE SUN.

I have a little boy, 3 years old, named Leonard. One day he was out at play and the sun became clouded. He came into the house and said to his grandmother:

"Well, gamny, I have come in."

"What have you come in for, Lenny?"

"Well," he says, "they have blowed the sun out, and I thought I would come in and go to bed."

ONE WAY TO GET MORE PUDDING.

After the mid-day meal was over little Ethel was observed with her head hung down and her hands clasped, motionless in her place.

"Why, Ethel," said her mother, "don't you know dinner's over now?"

"Don't talk, ma," said Ethel. "I'm a prayin' for more puddin'."

She got it.

Dog Sense Sized Up.

Robinson—"That's a fine dog you have, Dumley. Do you want to sell him?"

Dumley—"I'll sell him for $50."

Robinson—"Is he intelligent?"

Dumley (with emphasis)—"Intelligent? Why, that dog knows as much as I do."

Robinson—"You don't say so! Well, I'll give you 25 cents for him, Dumley."—New York Sun.

Rose Coghlan smokes a cigarette on the stage with ease and elegance. Langtry, it is said, has too big a fist to do the thing neatly, although she has to do it as Lena Despond in her new play, "As in a Looking-Glass," but Bernhardt, on the other hand, is said to be a mistress of the art of elegant smoking. She holds the cigarette lightly between her slender fingers, so a gossiper says, and takes long whiffs, looks at the lighted end, seems to smile at it, and then takes some more lazy whiffs. Modjeska is likewise said to be an adept in the manipulation of the dainty weed, and the story goes that when its fumes mingle with the aroma of tea the great actress is at her best and wittiest.

The further a man gets away from dollar the bigger it looks.

A GREAT DETECTIVE STORY.

Startling Revelations Regarding Montreal Detective Robberies.

HOW BIG BURGLARIES WERE PLANNED.

Mr. Frank Hayner, special Deputy Sheriff of New York, who has been on a visit to Toronto, was interviewed by a Globe reporter. Mr. Hayner has been engaged for the past fifteen weeks working up the robberies alleged to have been committed by Detectives Fahey and Naegele and Constable Bureau, of Montreal.

"When were you first sent for to Montreal and by whom?" asked the reporter.

"Pardon me," said Mr. Hayner, "if I don't answer that question. I will not divulge the name of the gentleman who brought me there, but he is one of the wealthiest of Montreal's citizens. I first went to Montreal on the 17th of August. The gentleman who brought me told me he believed Fahey and Naegele to be crooked. He backed me up, paid the most extravagant expenses and told me to hang on to them if possible. I was introduced to Fahey in his own office the day I arrived. He took me for a sporting man, and thought I was a right good fellow. I made the Richelieu Hotel, Montreal, my headquarters; but Boston was my base of operations, and I was seven or eight times between Boston and Montreal during the first eight weeks. While in Montreal Fahey and I were together always. I worked into Fahey's confidence and he eventually took me for a first-class crook. The first plan of robbery he ever proposed was to steal Sir Donald Smith's picture, "Les Communicants," by Jules Breton, which was purchased for $45,000. He said he would give me a water-inspector's uniform and get me into the house to locate the picture and plan the robbery, but I told him it would be too difficult and he abandoned the project. He next drove me out towards the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary after night. He showed me the residence of a wealthy widow who collected immense rents once a month and took the money home with her. He wished to arrange the robbery of the lady or of the house, and planned the cutting of the telephone wires, etc., in order that the police could not be communicated with quickly. It was a ludicrous scene the night we went to the widow's house in the darkness. About a dozen of big bulldogs came after us and we had to run for our lives. We didn't rob the widow. Three days afterwards he planned the robbery of the Grand Trunk paymaster. He then introduced me to Naegele and informed me that he had the watchman of the Grand Trunk station under his power. The plan was to knock the paymaster on the head, but I disagreed to that, as I felt that if a murder were committed I would get into a mess and be unable to clear myself. I therefore advised them to commence on a smaller scale. The next day he planned the vault robbery and I agreed to that. The watchman gave the key of the safe and we took an impression of it and had another key made. Thirty-one bags were taken from the safe, containing $1,210, but several thousand dollars which might have been taken were left. The money was divided and they were very anxious that I should leave the city, so I took the 9 30 train for Boston. From there I went to Chicago and communicated with the Grand Trunk authorities and Detective Flynn met me in Detroit and we returned to Montreal and then went again to Boston. Here Flynn dictated letters which I wrote to Fahey regarding the robbery and thus extracted from him a thorough confession of the crime. Then Fahey planned another and more extensive robbery and wrote to me to engage a first-class crook and secure burglar's tools with which to commit a series of burglaries which he would point out. Flynn and I then returned to Montreal, and according to my instructions a man was sent to me for further assistance in the case. He came under the name of Cray. He had a first-class kit of burglar's tools (but was no other than Chief Detective Maxwell, of Chicago), and looked every inch a first-class crook. I introduced him to Fahey, Naegele and Bureau. They took the bait, and Fahey took him around the city and pointed out the places he wished the crook to operate upon, and assured him every protection. Maxwell verified all the evidence of Fahey's guilt and his accomplices' guilt that I had gathered, and with the letters sent to me in Boston and opened and inspected by Detective Flynn a splendid case was made out."

An unsuccessful attempt was made on Friday night to rob the safe in the office of Wm. Connor's paint and color works, Troy, N.Y. The burglars attacked the safe in one corner of the office, and broke to pieces the dial over the lock by using a chisel and steel punches, but were unable to open the safe because of the breaking of their tools. They left a note for the proprietor saying, "Our tools are N.G."

The case of Wm. Showers, who has been on trial at Lebanon, Pa., for several days charged with having murdered his two grandchildren, was left at the mercy of the jury at 10 o'clock on Saturday night. Yesterday morning they brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree. Showers will carry the case to the Superior Court. A dramatic scene occurred during the closing hour of the trial, when Stephen Showers, a son of the accused, took the stand, and testified in reference to the letters which his father had written him from prison asking him to swear falsely so as to clear the old man. The son said he could not take a false oath even to save his father's neck.

Four weeks ago a plumber named Thos. Sheridan, while in delirium tremens, jumped from the fourth story of a tenement house in New York and was killed. Daniel Sheridan, a brother of the dead man, went to the funeral in the same carriage with a pretty girl of 22 named Lillian Trinneer, who had been engaged to Thomas. On the return from the grave Daniel told his parents he was going to marry Lillian and that henceforth she would be a member of the family. On Saturday night Daniel went home drunk and made an insulting proposal to the girl. When he approached her she jumped out of the window and sustained injuries which may cause her death. Sheridan is in jail.

REMARKABLE CASE.

A Lady Sues a Dead Man for Breach of Promise of Marriage.

In the Appeal Court at London the other day was heard the suit of Finlay vs. Chirney and another. The action was brought by plaintiff, Mrs. Isabella Finlay, a widow, living at Hepscott, near Morpeth, against the executors of the late Alderman George Beaumont Chirney, of Morpeth, for an alleged breach of promise of marriage. The deceased, who was formerly an alderman and mayor of Morpeth, had carried on the business of a butcher in that town and had realized a considerable fortune. The plaintiff had had three children by her late husband, who died in 1880, and a fourth by the deceased, who had been an elder in the Presbyterian Church. In the beginning of 1881 the deceased purchased a small farm at Stob Hill, two or three miles from Morpeth, and engaged the plaintiff as superintendent and manageress of his dairy. According to the plaintiff's case, shortly afterwards he, being then about 60 years of age, and she 40, made her a promise of marriage, under which it was alleged he had seduced her. The deceased subsequently broke off the engagement, and he died in April, 1886. After his death the plaintiff brought the present action against the executors of the deceased. When the trial came on at Durham, before Mr. Justice Cave, his lordship nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that there was not sufficient corroborative evidence of the promise of marriage. On an application for a new trial before Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Wills, sitting as a divisional court, their lordships held that the learned judge had improperly nonsuited the plaintiff, and ordered a new trial. The matter now came before this court on appeal from their decision. Their lordships reserved judgment.

Christmas Gifts.

The secret pleasure of a generous act
Is the great mind's great bribe.
—Dryden.

Chinese toy books and Jap dolls flood the counters.

Objects in antique wrought-iron are much sought for holiday gifts.

Small clocks in fancy framings of metal are pretty and inexpensive holiday gifts.

Aqua marine, topaz or other colored jewels set in small diamonds are quite in favor for gift rings.

Moonstones and tiger's eyes are popular semi-precious stones or rings, scarf, shawl and lace pins.

Pieces of silver, white and frosted, enameled and decorated with niello work, make very choice Christmas gifts.

Flocks of geese and ducks, droves of pigs, teams of horses and mules and groups of goats compose some of the new metal bisque paper weights.

All kinds of furs will be acceptable as holiday presents, but sets of fox furs, black and silver, red, blue and gray, are the first favorites with young ladies.

Shoe-horns with fanciful heads are new and make very good Christmas gifts for those very difficult persons to satisfy, the men and women who "have everything." Some are of carved wood, some of silver, and some of metal.

It is said—but one can hardly believe it—that the most acceptable of all holiday presents to a lady from her husband or brother, or any friend who has a right to give it, is a long narrow strip of tinted paper on which is written: "Pay to the order of —— $— —c."

The favorite jewel ornaments for Christmas gifts are diamond or "rose diamond" paste brilliants in the form of suns stars, crescents, flowers, butterflies, flies and leaves or balls or other forms, mounted on hairpins, which can be utilized for other purposes as well as the coiffure.

Novelties for the Christmas tree consist of silver and gilt paper bonbonieres in the shape of helmets, bird cages, boats, ships, yachts, fishes, ducks and geese, inclosing tiny silken bags—red and blue, lilac and yellow—with narrow ribbon draw-strings to attach them to the tree, after closing the bag over the bon-bons within.

Patience Not a Virtue Just Then.

She (to George, who is taking her out for a ride and whose horse has balked)—Don't be annoyed, George; have patience and he will move on presently. He—Patience, my dear! Why, I am paying for this measly animal by the hour.—N. Y. Sun

Not In.

Visitor—You say your mistress is not in Fresh domestic—She was in the sitting-room a little while ago, but I can't find her now. I guess she saw you coming, put on her bonnet and skipped out the back way.

Paris journals state that on the 1st of January President Carnot will pardon all political prisoners.

The Masonic fair in New York was closed on Saturday night. It was the most successful ever given by the fraternity. The proceeds will amount to over $60,000.

A young man who was arrested at Springfield, Ill., Friday, and gave the name of Wm. Clark is without doubt John H. Webber, the embezzling messenger of the Northern Pacific Express Company. Webber stole $33,000, and spent it in fast living.

Diphtheria has been doing deadly work in Schoharie, N. Y., and vicinity recently, and there have been twenty-eight fatal cases. In one family there were four deaths. Most of the fatal cases were among young children, but three persons of ages from 16 to 20 years have fallen victims to the disease. It is now thought that the danger is past and that the disease is abating.

Robert Montgomery, formerly an actor and at present a clerk at the Mott iron works, New York, was arrested yesterday morning on suspicion of having murdered his wife in their apartments on 25th street. The body of the young woman was found in the yard at the rear of the dwelling half dressed. There was a pistol wound in the left breast, and as there was little blood to be seen it was evident that death had been almost instantaneous. Montgomery was asleep in his bed when the officers went to arrest him. He is 35 years old and the woman was 25. At the station house the prisoner said the dead woman was not married to him but had lived with him for a year. The young woman's name was Nellie Southwick. She came from Seneca Falls, N. Y., and worked as a dressmaker. Montgomery was discharged for lack of evidence.

ON THE WHEEL!

What 'Round-the-World Stevens and Champion Howell Say of the Sport.

The popularity of 'cycling is growing.

Thomas Stevens, who has just been around the globe on a wheel, says that the best roads in the world are found in British India. The Grand Trunk road is 1,600 miles, an unbroken highway of marvellous prefection, from Peshawur on the Afghan frontier to Calcutta. It is made of smooth, hard, natural concrete, beds of which lie along the line.

How such roads would be appreciated by the enthusiastic 'cyclers of this country!

The wonderful achievement of Mr. Stevens, in the face of myriad dangers, entitles him to all his honors.

The fast riding champion of the world, however, is Richard Howell, of Leicester, England. He is a splendidly made fellow, between 25 and 30 years of age, six feet high, and weighing, in training, about 160 pounds.

He commenced riding in 1879 and in 1881, at Belgravia grounds, Leicester, he won the one-mile championship of the world, beating all the best men of the day.

From that time his career has been one of almost unbroken successes. He came to the United States is 1884 and 1885, and at the great Springfield tournament in 1885 won seven out of eight races.

In the 'Cycling News (Eng.), October 1st, 1887, is the following interview with him.

"What are your best performances?"

"This year I did a full mile on the track at Coventry in 2 minutes, 35 seconds. Good judges think, with everything in my favor, I could do 2 30 for the distance."

"What is your system of training?"

"I eat plain, good food, and plenty of it. I take a little walk before breakfast, and then, after that meal, if I am foggy, ride eight or nine miles on the track here, in thick flannels. After dinner I do some more 'slogging' work, and may be a walk and early to bed.

"But there is one idea of mine which I have found invaluable. If I have done too much work, or my system is out of order, or if I don't feel quite sound, I take what I have used since I was 'queer' in 1883. I have always found that Warner's safe cure sets me up and puts me to rights again, and it is a remedy which I believe in and tell all my friends about.

"In the winter-time especially, when you can easily understand I am not so careful of my health as in the spring, summer or autumn, I have found it invaluable.

"All I want, to beat the fastest bicyclist in the world, is plenty of practice, an occasional dose of my favorite, and my machine.

"When I am about right in weight I content myself with short, sharp bursts as hard as ever I can go on the track, and when I can cover 440 yards in thirty seconds with a flying start, I reckon to be moving as well as I want to."

Bicycling is glorious sport, but it has its physical ill effects which, however, can be easily overcome by the method used by Champion Howell.

Better Than a Hero.

"What a coward that Major Smith is," said Jones to Robinson, "why, the very sight of gun powder would make him ill. How did he ever manage to become an officer in the army?" "Don't say anything against Smith," answered Robinson, "he once saved my life." "Saved your life! Nonsense, impossible! What do you mean?" "I mean that I was in the first stages of consumption; I was losing strength and vitality every day with the terrible disease, when Smith advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical discovery. I had tried all kinds of medicines without success, and my physician had given me no hope, yet here I am, as well as ever a man was, and I owe my life to Smith, and to the wonderful remedy he recommended."

—The handsome editor of the Milwaukee Journal says: One of the most trying things to the patience of an observer is to see a pretty woman in love with an ugly dog.

A Young Girl's Grief

at seeing her charms of face and form departing, and her health imperilled by functional irregularities, at her critical period of life, was turned to joy and gratitude after a brief self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It purified and enriched her blood, gave a healthy activity to the kidneys, stomach, bowels and organs, and her return to robust health speedily followed. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years

A lady in Saline county, Mo., came within sixteen votes of beating the most popular man in the county for the office of Register of Deeds.

ITCHING PILES.

SYMPTOMS—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Son and Hair.

Mrs. Youngmater—Do you know, Emily, I think baby has inherited his father's hair. Mr. Y. (prematurely bald)—I'm glad to hear somebody inherited it, my love, for I have often wondered what became of it.—Texas Siftings.

Don't hawk, and blow and spit, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

It is said that Lady Randolph Churchill is going to write an article for Oscar Wilde's magazine.

The Fire Bells

Ring out an alarm and it is heeded. This is to notify you that base substitution is practised when the great, sure-pop corn cure is asked for. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor never fails to take corns off. It makes no sore spots and gives no pain. Be sure and get "Putnam's."

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that organ, blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a Pimple, or Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-Joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick

CALFSKINS

for us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty. Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S.

DON L. 53 37

IN THE SELECTION OF

A CHOICE GIFT

For Pastor, Parent, Teacher, Child, or Friend, both elegance and usefulness will be found combined in a copy of Webster's Unabridged.

Besides many other valuable features, it contains

A Dictionary
of 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings,
A Gazetteer of the World
locating and describing 25,000 Places,
A Biographical Dictionary
of nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,
All in One Book.

3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.

Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, DEC. 29, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

As the Editor of THE ADVANCE does all the editorial writing in connection with his paper, and does not leave such important work in the hands of the devil, after the manner of the Dundalk Herald and Creemore 'Tizer, Master "Toby" of our first named cotem. is hereby informed that he can murder the English language to his heart's content. We won't molest him, neither will we hire our devil to do so. Wade right in, sonny.

The Meaford Monitor gently intimates that it was "sour grapes" that induced us to publish the printing expenses in connection with the Franchise Act and incurred just prior to the last Dominion elections. Wrong, friend Sunter. We opposed the Franchise Act from first to last, and neither sought or asked for any printing pap in connection therewith. Had it been offered we would have accepted it just as we would any other printing. But we would scorn to go begging for work which was the outgrowth of a measure we all along condemned as having a tendency to unnecessarily burden the people with taxes, for the sake of aidling briefless barristers and impecunious newspaper publishers and printers.

Now is the time to renew your subscriptions to THE ADVANCE for another year.

Attention.

Attention all, both great and small,
To what I'm about to say
The summer is gone and winter is on,
And the builder wants his pay.

Those who are indebted to me by book account will please call and settle the same by cash or note on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, as I must have my book acct. settled up. Thanking my friends for past patronage, I would solicit a continuance of the same.
—JOHN WHITTEN.

To Assist Nature

In restoring diseased or wasted tissue is all that any medicine can do. In pulmonary affections, such as Colds, Bronchitis, and Consumption, the mucous membrane first becomes inflamed, then accumulations form in the air-cells of the lungs, followed by tubercles, and, finally, destruction of the tissue. It is plain, therefore, that, until the hacking cough is relieved, the bronchial tubes can have no opportunity to heal.
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Soothes and Heals

the inflamed membrane, arrests the wasting process, and leaves no injurious results. This is why it is more highly esteemed than any other pulmonary specific.

L. D. Bixby, of Bartonsville, Vt., writes: "Four years ago I took a severe cold, which was followed by a terrible cough. I was very sick, and confined to my bed about four months. My physician finally said I was in consumption, and that he could not help me. One of my neighbors advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and before I had taken half a bottle was able to go out. By the time I had finished the bottle I was well, and have remained so ever since."

Alonzo P. Daggett, of Smyrna Mills, Me., writes: "Six years ago, I was a traveling salesman, and at that time was suffering with Lung Trouble.

For months I was unable to rest nights. I could seldom lie down, had frequent choking spells, and was often compelled to seek the open air for relief. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which helped me. Its continued use has entirely cured me, and, I believe, saved my life."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

ARTEMESIA'S GRAND OLD MAN.

DR. CHRISTOE,

Reeve of Artemesia and ex-Warden of the County of Grey.

We have much pleasure this week in presenting our readers with a portrait of one of the most prominent municipal figureheads in the County of Grey, viz., Dr. Christoe, Reeve of Artemesia, and ex-Warden of the County. The cut was taken from a photograph of the Doctor when he was a somewhat younger man than he is now; nevertheless those to whom his features are familiar will at once perceive that the above is really an excellent picture. We obtained the photo rather surreptitiously, and hence this explanation.

Dr. Christoe was born in England in the year 1825, and, at the early age of 17 years, sailed across the Atlantic to Canada. He was self-educated—not having received any instructions from a teacher after 12 years of age, until entering a Medical College. He taught school in Cornwall, England, at 15 years of age. He also taught school in Canada for six or seven—his certificate having been endorsed by the father of the present Judge Armour and the celebrated Presbyterian minister, Rev. Wm. Ormiston, now of Brooklyn, N.Y. After this he was book-keeper for a firm several years. The firm failing—and not caring to teach in the Common Schools again—he went into the Medical profession, matriculating without aid of teacher. He graduated as M.D. in 1866, practiced for a short time in Clarke Township, then removed to Owen Sound, and finally located at Flesherton in the year 1867.

He entered the Municipal Council of Artemesia in 1874 as Ward Councillor; was elected Reeve the following year, and has been Reeve continuously ever since. He was elected nine times by acclamation, and had five contests, but always secured large majorities against his opponents. Elected Warden of Grey in 1881.

Under his Reeveship the Township came rapidly to the front and now stands foremost with any in the County. His policy—invariably carried out with that persistence, energy and determination for which he is everywhere noted—has been to keep down the taxation of the Township as well as the County. Fierce opposition he has had time and again—not merely on the hustings but elsewhere—but he has ever been equal to emergencies and, backed by the sturdy support of at least three-fourths of the electorate, he has been enabled to carry out his policy most successfully in the face of all opposition thereto. The celebrated R.R. bonus controversy was a notable example, and developed the well-known fighting abilities of the Dr. (intellectually speaking).

His extraordinary force of character and marvellous vital energy have long since stamped him as a man who occupies a position far above the ordinary level; while his untiring and successful efforts in behalf of the best interests of the people of the whole Township have obtained for him the warm esteem of four-fifths of the ratepayers, and the respect of his most violent opponents.

In the County Council, none stand higher, nor are there any who are more respected. He is now one of two of the oldest continuous members in it, and, as might be expected, he ranks among the best authority on Municipal government in it. Firmness characterizes him. Defending the right with all the energy of his nature, he is equally fearless in exposing and denouncing that which is wrong.

All the moral reforms find in him a staunch and unflinching advocate. He is a faithful, earnest and consistant member of the Methodist church, and one of the foremost Temperance workers in the Province. His speeches are characterized by an originality of ideas and an earnestness in the delivery thereof which never fail to command the close attention of his auditors. Frank and outspoken—sometimes blunt—as he is, he is a true friend, a generous though determined opponent, and honorable in his dealings with his fellow-mortals.

Although his hair is whitened by the frosts of sixty-two winters, and his life has been one of unceasing activity from early boyhood, the Doctor still possesses that wonderful vitality, energy, clearness of mental vision, sprightliness and vivacity, which have been prominent characteristics throughout his long and eventful career. May he long be spared to the people, who have for many years benefitted by his wisdom, his straightforwardness, and his uprightness of character as their Chief Magistrate.

BIG CLUB OFFER.—We will furnish that excellent religious paper, THE METHODIST OBSERVER, and this journal for 1888, both papers for only $1.50. The Observer is an 8-page 40-column, weekly paper and is cheap at one dollar a year. Each issue contains a 5 to 6 column summary of Methodist Church news, and a great variety of choice reading matter. Send your address to JAMES PUBLISHING HOUSE, Bowmanville, Ont. for a free sample copy, or call at this office and see one.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

To the People

Of Artemesia, Osprey, and Surrounding District.

The undersigned respectfully tenders his sincere and grateful thanks to the general public for the excellent patronage extended to him since opening out in the Boot & Shoe Business in Flesherton, and trusts he has merited their continued support.

At the same time, he wishes to state that he has a good stock of Mens Long Boots, Ladies Boots & Shoes, &c., of his own make, which will be sold at Cost Prices. Must clear out the stock—come and get bargains! Wishing one and all a "Merry Christmas and a Happy new year."

Flesherton, Dec. 21st, 1887. JOS. SMITH.

Executor's Notice

IN pursuance of sect. 1, Chap. 9, 46 Vic., notice is hereby given that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of W. H. Colquett, deceased, late of the township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, and Province of Ontario, who died on or about the 20th day of May, 1886, are to sent by post prepaid or delivered to William S. Christoe, M.D., on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, a statement containing their names and addresses and full particulars of their claims and of the securities (if any) held by them and after the said, last mentioned date, the said W. S. Christoe, for the personal Estate and effects, rights and credits of the said W. H. Colquett—will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased amongst the parties entitled thereto, regard being had only to the claims of which notice has been given as above required, and Executors will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person or persons of whom claims have not been received by the said W. S. Christoe

And further, all parties who are indebted to the said Estate of the said W. H. Colquett, deceased, are to pay as the same becomes due, to the said W. S. Christoe.

W. S. CHRISTOE,
for the Executors.

JAMES LOVE, SAMUEL COLQUETT, and MRS COLQUETT.

Dated, Flesherton, this 20th day of Dec., 1887.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton.

Repairing, Reroofing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

'The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For?

Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to 0 78
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 78
Barley	0 55	0 73
Oats	0 33	0 33
Peas	0 57	0 57
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	6 80	4 60
Hay, per ton	8 00	8 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 25
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

W. BOOTH,

The Boss Barber,

FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

READY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed: we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—|—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-309

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards where ever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines,

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

THE FLESHERTON

FURNITURE

Wareroom's

Last Announcement for 1887.

WE WISH A

Happy New Year To All,

And in order to make it so in every home in Artemesia and Surrounding Townships, we have decided to make still further

REDUCTIONS

In all the Leading Lines of Furniture.

For the New Year Festivities we have a most

COMPLETE STOCK

To select from notwithstanding the great rush of the past weeks. We were so fortified with reserves of stock that our Showrooms are again full and must be cleared (in order to make room for Undertakers Goods which will shortly arrive) at a

Very Small Advance on Cost.

We are satisfied with the policy upon which we have commenced Business and shall continue to use the same Motto, viz.,

Small Profits and Quick Returns.

Our Stock is all new and being almost daily replaced.

To Close, Cash Buyers we would say call and see us before purchasing elsewhere as

It Will Pay You.

We manufacture and buy close for money and

Sell Quick on a very small Margin.

COME AND GET PRICES.

SAW LOGS

—AND—

LUMBER

of all kinds Wanted for which highest price will be paid.

J. E. MOORE'S

Furniture Warerooms, Durham St. Flesherton.

New Railways.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Notice is given in the Canada Gazette of application to parliament for an act to incorporate the Collingwood and Bay of Quinte Railway company, with power to construct a line of railway from the town of Collingwood, in the county of Simcoe, to some point in the bay of Quinte, in the county of Hastings, and for other purposes in connection therewith.

Mr. Charles Drinkwater gives notice that the Ontario and Quebec Railway company will apply to the Dominion Parliament, at the next session, for an act extending the time for the completion of its western extension; and also of its Don branch into the city of Toronto, authorized to be constructed by order in council, dated 25th January, 1887.

Notice is given that application will be made to the Parliament of Canada, at the next session thereof, for a charter to construct and operate a line of railway, commencing at or near Port Hope, county of Durham, thence through the counties of Ontario, York, Simcoe and Dufferin to a point at or near the town of Durham, county of Grey, with power to extend to Lake Huron, at or near Kincardine and Southampton, county of Bruce.—Winnipeg Call.

The above notices I find are not generally known by the people, even the people who should be very much interested in the matter. Therefore I beg to submit them through your columns to whom it may concern, and just here I would advance a few ideas, wise or otherwise. It is now an established fact that railways passing through any part of country raises the value of land and bring business, capital and markets right along the route. Although there may be extensive outlay and expense by the municipality through which it passes, by way of bonuses or otherwise, yet it has been demonstrated that the expenditure has been a good and paying investment in most cases. Now let us look at the notices that will most immediately concern us. Collingwood & Bay of Quinte railway with intimations of a possible extension from Collingwood westward. That will be into or through Grey. Just think where Artemesia is situated in such an event, and what might be ours if we took time by the forelock and bestirred ourselves to secure the best obtainable situation. But in regard to the new railway which most concerns us is the one commencing at Port Hope, through Ontario, York, Simcoe and Dufferin to or near Durham, county of Grey, with a possible extension west to Lake Huron. Now has not every intelligent thinking ratepayer of Artemesia recognized the urgent need of a railway stretching across the railways already running through the country. Such a one the Port Hope line would be. It would give us here in Grey easy and rapid access to the lakes on the west. But better still to the markets to the East of Toronto. Think of the competition in R. R. traffic and consequent reduction in freight rates, &c., and making easy connection with the railways it would cross. But one objection Artemesia should make to the route proposed to be chartered for is that instead of passing through Dufferin it be carried further north through South Grey, Good reasons can be assigned for this. Dufferin is too far south to open up a portion of country that needs it most, where forests, streams and products abound, and await developement. Dufferin is already well, supplied with R.R. facilities and conveniently near the markets to the south. Heavier grade and engineering difficulties would be met with to pass through Dufferin than through South Grey. Let South Grey be on the alert and if Port Hope shoots up a railroad in our direction, see to it that its rails run through South Grey, say from east to west. Why not? South Grey can challenge the continent along her Beaver and Saugeen rivers for water powers that cannot be excelled, and manufacturing, capital and industry, only await the snort of the iron horse to allow them to operate in full blast. With regard to the objection we hear from some selfish individuals, that a bonus would be required, we say, wait till you are asked for one and then think if past experience has not resulted in such being a good paying investment and should establish confidence in judiciously granting others.—F.T.C.

A PERSON Unable to sleep in bed, unable to work, unable to take ordinary exercise from the effects of Asthma until using Southern Asthma Cure. A sample package relieved, three packages permanently cured.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The holiday season is upon us and happy faces are seen everywhere, especially among the juveniles, where Santa Claus seems to have been most interested in trying to please, and in which he appears to have been most successful.

The nominations of our Township Fathers came off on Monday and a large number congregated to hear the old Council give an account of their stewardship, which was done to the satisfaction of nearly all present. There were four nominations for Reeve but two withdrew—leaving D. K. Preston and J. Douglas in the field. These aspirants are looked upon as first-class men and are both pledged not to canvas for votes, but will abide the decision on their merits.

The tea meeting in the Methodist church on Monday evening was as usual a grand success. The chair was occupied by Rev. W. Ferrier, and it is only necessary to say that the eating, speaking and music were first-class and everyone seemed well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

A Ball was also announced for Monday evening at the hotel and a few noted worthies did attend and bawl, and such a bawl But no need of anything more on this item.

Wood bees are all the rage here, each one making a bee gets all his winter's wood cut in one day, and the boys are always jolly over their work.

We are pleased to see our old friend Mr. J. Blakley, back to our village. Buf he seems to think he has had plenty of Nebraska, and there is no place like Maxwell after all.

WANTED.—Local & travelling salesmen to sell our choice varieties of Nursery Stock either on salary or commisson. Permanent employment to the right men, no room for lazy ones, upright and honest are the ones we are looking for. Address with references, May Brothers, Nurserymen, Rochester, N. Y.

"I was troubled with an eruption on my face, which was a source of constant annoyance when I wished to appear in company. After using ten bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the humor entirely disappeared."—Mary M. Wood, 40 Adams st., Lowell, Mass.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,

FLESHERTON.

Grand Gift Sale

—FOR THE—

CHRISTMAS × HOLIDAY'S

—: AT THE MARKDALE :—

Book Store.

As I have been carrying a stock of goods the past year double the quantity necessary for the Trade of the Locality. I have determined to reduce same by offering the following liberal inducements:—

To all purchasers of BOOKS, TOYS, FANCY GOODS, or WALL PAPERS, amounting to 50 cents and upwards choice of a Book worth 15c. One dollar and upwards 25c. One dollar and fifty cents 35c. Two dollars and upwards 50c., and so on in proportion equal to a discount of nearly 25 per cent. off all purchases in the above Lines.

THIS IS A BONA FIDE OFFER,

and as my object in making it is to induce Sales, I invite the general public to come along in force and participate in the large Reductions. I will still allow twenty-five per cent. off straight to School Trustees and Sunday Schools requiring Books for prizes or Library's NOW IS YOUR TIME to replenish or purchase a New Library. Hundreds of Books to select from.

This Sale will continue from now till the 1st January, 1888.

A. DINSMORE,

PROPRIETOR.

Commercial Union

—Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of—

FURNITURE!

—AT—

J. W. BATES'.

It is Good Goods at Low Prices that tells and has told for the last seven years. This season I am in a position to give both old and new Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Designs.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, [illegible]nts Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $80.00. A beauty for $14.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $5.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $4.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.35.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 35 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

A CHINESE FLOOD.

The Yellow River Overflows and Inundates Seven Thousand Square Miles—Terrible Loss of Life and Property and Great Suffering.

A San Francisco despatch says: The steamship City of Sydney arrived to-day from Hong Kong and Yokohama. Chinese papers give details of a disaster occasioned by the Yellow River overflowing its banks in the Province of Honan and describe it as one of the most appalling occurrences in loss of life and property recorded in recent times. The river broke its banks on the evening of September 28th, southwest of the city of Ching Chow, and not only completely inundated that city, but also ten other populous cities. The whole area is now a raging sea, ten to thirty feet deep, which was once a densely populated and rich plain. The former bed of the Yellow River is now dry, and the present lake was the bed of the river centuries ago.

The loss of life is incalculable and the statement is made by missionaries that millions of Chinese are homeless and starving. Thos. Paton, one of the American missionaries, writing from Honan Province, under date of October 28th, says: "The newly gathered crops, houses and trees are all swept away, involving a fearful loss of life. The country was covered with a fine winter braidy, which is gone and implies complete destruction of next year's crop. "Bread, bread," is the cry of thousands who are on the river bank. Benevolent people go in boats and throw bread among the masses here and there, but it is nothing compared with the requirement. The mass of people is still being increased by continual arrivals even more hungry than the last. There they sit stunned, hungry and dejected, without a rag to wear or a morsel of food. Huts are being erected for them. What it will be in two months I cannot conceive." The misery is increased owing to the bitter cold weather."

Yellow River has long been known as China's sorrow, and the present disaster has served to reassert its right to the terrible title. As yet details of the disaster are very meagre. It has occurred in a district where but few foreigners are, and the reports furnished by the officials and published in the Pekin Gazette convey a very inadequate account of the extent of the loss of life and property and the sufferings of the survivors. The Governor in Honan reports to the throne that "nearly all the people have been drowned in the district reached by the water, the survivors being those who escaped to the high ground or took refuge in the trees, where they remained till they were rescued." This gives but little impression as to what the extent of the disaster really is.

The Chinese Times, in the Province of Chihli, where disastrous inundations have also occurred, says there are 270 people homeless, representing those whose lives were destroyed, and adds that the misery in that Province is trifling as compared with that caused by Huango-Ho, or the Yellow River. The extent of ground swept over by the overwhelming flood given in English figures is over 7,000 square miles, and the land thus submerged formed a part of one of the richest and most densely populated plains in Northern China.

The necessity for liberal aid may therefore be imagined. Already considerable sums have been contributed towards the relief of the sufferers. The Emperor of China has given two millions of taels and the Chinese have started subscription lists in Shangai, to which foreigners have liberally contributed. Millions have been rendered houseless and entirely deprived of all chances of earning their livelihood, for their fields will either become permanent lakes or uninhabitable swamps. It is feared that the distress which will be felt during the coming winter will equal in intensity the famine of ten years ago, when charitable donations contributed from all parts of the world were utterly inadequate. It is stated that owing to the action taken by the Yellow River, it no longer flows towards the sea, but seems content in converting Eastern Honan and Northern Nganwhui into a lake. It may ultimately flow into the sea through the Kiangon, or it may even possibly join the Yangtse.

A PHYSICIAN'S FATAL BLUNDER.

He Introduces Diphtheria Germs in His Family—Three Deaths Result.

A Wellsville (O.) despatch says: Diphtheria is epidemic here. After a post-mortem examination on one of the victims, Dr. C. N. Kale took a portion of the diseased membrane of the throat to his home for microscopic investigation. His research was conducted with the utmost carelessness, even some of his children being allowed to view the germs. Two died on Monday, and yesterday the doctor himself succumbed to the disease, while five remaining children are at the point of death. To add to the misery of the situation, some time ago Kale became insanely jealous of his wife and drove her from his home. She sought refuge in Pittsburg, and is entirely ignorant of her loss.

Piano-Playing Led to the Murder.

An Enterprise, Fla., despatch says: At Titusville, Aug. 26th, C.R. Cook walked up to a man on the street and asked him if his name was G. R. Hoyt. On receiving an affirmative reply, Cook told him that Mrs. Hoyt kept him awake the night before by playing on the piano at her house until an unseasonable hour. He finished his complaint by telling Hoyt that he would kill him if the occurrence was repeated. Hoyt replied that the piano was the property of his wife's sister and that he could not control it. Cook flew into a rage, said he could not have any more piano-playing and shot Hoyt dead. He barely escaped lynching. A change of venue was obtained and he was tried here to-day and convicted, with a recommendation to mercy. A plea of alcoholism was his only defence. The people of Titusville are indignant that he should have been recommended to mercy.

"Ah, sir," exclaimed a Scotch elder, in a tone of pathetic recollection, "our late minister was the man! He was a powerfu' preacher; for, i' the short time he delivered the word amang us, he knocked three pulpits to pieces, and dang the insides out o' five Bibles!"

The Ontario Legislature will be called together on Wednesday, January 25th.

A WIDOW AMONG THE FARMERS.

She Got Pledges to Save the Song Birds, and Made Promissory Notes of Them.

A Seneca Falls, N.Y., despatch says: Two weeks ago a little woman, about 35 years of age, arrived in Seneca Falls. She was in mourning. She had an unusually fair complexion, dark blue eyes and brown hair, and her face was attractive and expressive of modesty and refinement. She said she was Mrs. Ruth Armstrong, of New York, and was one of twelve agents whom the Society for the Prevention of Killing Song Birds in New York had sent out into the rural districts of this State for the purpose of getting pledges from influential people that they would do all in their power to suppress the slaying of the birds. She obtained several pledges from people in Seneca Falls, and on the next day drove over to the hamlet of East Varick, Seneca county, where she went to Elder Colton, a pillar in the church there, and the richest farmer in the town. She stated her errand to the elder, and was invited to his house to spend the night. The Colton family were delighted with her, and Elder Colton not only signed a pledge, which Mrs. Armstrong presented, but presented the lady with three $10 bills for the treasury of the society in New York. Deacon Skinner, of Lodi, was also visited and moved by the fair lady's words to sign a pledge for checking the slaughter of song birds. Hezekiah Bishop, Justice of the Peace in West Varick, and Daniel Simpson and Peter Henson, of Tyre, also gladly signed. Next day the pretty widow received a telegram from Albany, and with tears in her eyes she hastily packed her trunk at her boarding house in Seneca Falls. Her only brother was dying in Albany, she said, and she took the first train for that city. Several days later there were some pretty mad men in Seneca county. The pretty little widow's bird pledges all turned up as promissory notes. Albert Hall, a banker and merchant at Sheldrake, bought the notes to the amount of $940, which purported to have been given by Elder Colton and Hezekiah Bishop. Mr. Hall bought them of a middle-aged man, who pretended to have sold farm machinery in this region, and thus to have obtained the notes. They had been ingeniously constructed from the pledges to protect the birds. Similar notes, varying in amount from $1 50 to $300 each, have been sold by the man in other parts of the county during the past five days, and it is reckoned that the total amount of notes constructed from the song-bird pledges and sold in this region is $1,500 or $1,600.

To-day it has been learned that a woman exactly answering the description of Mrs. Armstrong, worked the song bird-pledge swindle in Genesee and Livingston counties several months ago. The result of the work at that time was over $2 700. An old gray-haired man negotiated the promissory notes then.

TWO REMARKABLE JUSTICES.

One Awards Himself Damages, the Other Believes a Witch Story.

A Vincennes (Ind) despatch says: At Murphreysboro', in Jackson county, Ill., William Bonner, a justice of the peace, brought a suit against his son-in-law, Samuel Derrington, for slander. Bonner and his regular constable served the papers and brought the case into his own court. At the trial Bonner heard all the evidence, and then called Constable Woolsey to the chair. The latter administered the oath, and the justice took the witness stand to testify in his own behalf before his own court. He then resumed his judicial chair and heard with patience the arguments of the attorneys on both sides. He finally summed up the evidence and rendered a decision against Derrington, his son-in-law, allowing himself damages in the sum of $5.000.

A Vincennes (Ind.) despatch says: A most remarkable case occurred in a justice's court in Mifflin township, which is attracting very general attention. Mrs. Seiler sued John Wahl for assault and battery, claiming that he knocked her down. The defendant set up as his defence that the woman was a witch, and by her machinations had caused sickness and death in his family. In order to keep her away from his premises he had, in the name of the Holy Trinity, hung a cross on the gate through which she was to enter, and the holy power thus exerted had knocked her down when she attempted to pass the gate. No other witnesses were examined, and the defendant was dismissed though the plaintiff was badly hurt.

Novel Contest.

Another hair-dressing competition took place last night in Paris, says a telegram of a recent date. Thirty young women with blonde tresses sat down in the hall of the Grand Orient, and for the space of about forty-five minutes the fingers and hands of the perruquiers were busy among their locks. The first prize of £20 and a cross for professors was awarded to a M. Nessi, while a pupil won a gold medal and £12 for turning out the best coiffure in the shortest space of time. After the competition "fantasias" in hair-dressing were executed, old styles being temporarily revived or new ones exhibited to the delighted gaze of a crowd of coiffeurs and their friends. The proceedings were terminated by a ball, in which the victorious barbers selected the prettiest of the damsels who had been operated upon, and danced away with them until the small hours of the morning.

Not as Strange as It Might Have Been.

The wife of one of X's friends, having lost her husband, wrote him a detailed account of the melancholy event.

"My poor Edward had three attacks; it was the last that carried him off."

"It would have been still more remarkable," thought X to himself "if it had been the first."

A New England parson announced to his congregation on a recent Sunday, "You will be sorry to hear that the little church at Jonesville is once more tossed upon the waves, a sheep without a shepherd."—Christian Advocate.

—A little child, eating her breakfast, asked her mother to remove the "bark" from her sausage. She hinted at a great canine truth very closely.

The Hotel Iturbide (once the palace of Emperor Iturbide) in the city of Mexico is to have an elevator and electric lights. The latter will be quite an advance from tallow candles.

AN HEIRESS STRANGELY DISAPPEARS.

After Twenty Years' Absence She Returns and Claims Her Estate.

A Sharon (Pa.) despatch says: Dr. Edgar and his wife were among the wealthiest people of the county twenty years ago and lavished great affection on an only daughter, about 18 years old Suddenly, to the astonishment of the fashionable circle in which she moved, the girl left the parental mansion, saying her father or mother would never see her again. True to her word, they did not. The parents succumbed to their great blow without ever permitting the community to know the nature of the family skeleton which caused the mysterious separation. Death soon removed from trouble the grief-stricken couple, and after months of advertising for the lost heiress the estate was put up at administrator's sale and converted into cash, which, in the absence of the daughter, supposedly dead, drifted into the hands of distant relatives. The latter were astonished recently by the reappearance, after twenty years' absence, of a portly, middle-aged woman, who, with legal assistance, established her identity as the doctor's daughter. Her identification was placed beyond doubt by a peculiarly crippled hand. Judge Blandin, of Cleveland, with several local attorneys, will to-morrow commence the trial of the plaintiff's case for the recovery of the estate.

A PECULIAR STORY.

An Old Soldier and His Three Wives.

A Detroit special to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: The Pension Department has unearthed the following singular story: A veteran in Pennsylvania applied for a pension as Daniel Tenney, of the 83rd Pennsylvania volunteers, company F. A woman in Stanton, Mich., applied at about the same time as the widow of the same soldier. An investigation was instituted, and resulted in showing that the woman was acting in perfect good faith and believed that she was a widow, and that, furthermore, she was a good and honest person. Her husband was a worthless man, who one day started out for a hunt and never came back. The neighbors at Stanton concluded that he had perished in the woods. When the snow went off the next spring they found the mangled body of a man, a black bear and a cap, lying in the woods near Farwell. It was supposed Tenney had been killed by the bear. It is now found that Tenney was not killed by the bear, but had gone to Pennsylvania, where he took up life with another woman, who was his first and lawful wife, of whose existence, it is presumed, the Michigan woman knew not. Finally the Pennsylvania wife went to Nebraska to get rid of him. Then he married another woman. Now the question arises, "Who killed that bear and the man who was found dead by the bear?" The man certainly had on Tenney's clothes. Suspicion looks toward Tenney, and the natural conclusion is that he may know more about the matter than any one else. Meanwhile no one has got the pension, and there are three women who think they have an undivided interest in the husbandship of Daniel Tenney. Mr. Tenney is in Pennsylvania and saying nothing.

THE GERMAN MILITARY BILL.

Germany's Preparations for War and Wish for Peace.

A Berlin cable says: According to the Reichsanzeiger's version of General Von Schellendorff's speech on the Military Bill yesterday, the Minister of War said that the object of the Bill could be perfectly summed up in the words of the Emperor on the opening of Parliament—that the Empire, by God's help, should become so strong that it could meet every danger with calmness, from whatever quarter it might be attacked. The Minister, continuing, said that danger threatened, not from the warlike disposition of the allied Powers, for the German people always leaned towards peace, but from attacks by other people. The Empire was strong and it had allies, but in war its might depended only upon its own strength. The Bill aimed to increase considerably the numerical strength of the army through the extension of the term of service in the Landstrum. The additional strength given would be of great value, and with the physical hardiness of the Germans no difficulty will be experienced in giving effect to the provisions of the Bill. The Germans, he felt sure, would not be sparing of their powers when the time came for beating off the enemy. After referring to the technical military arrangements required under the Bill, the speaker concluded by expressing the wish that the day when it would become necessary to put the measure to practical use was far off. Still, he said, everything must be ready, if an attack were made, for the German army to enter upon the war-path armed in the most perfect manner, so that their flags would again lead the German people to victory.

Among the Churches.

Dr. Hamilton's "History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland" has been issued in a cheap edition. In three days from its issue nearly 9,000 copies were sold.

Rev. Moffat Jackson, of Sligo, who died on the 17th ult., had a brilliant college career, and was among the earliest alumni of Queen's, Belfast, founded in 1849. Sligo was his only charge. He was a man of retiring disposition and of a cultured mind. His son, Rev. Wm. J. Jackson, is the successor of Dr. T. Y. Killen in the pastorate of Duncairn Church, Belfast.

A Martyr.

"My dear," said he, reflectively surveying the piece of meat he had been trying to mutilate, "I can see how it is possible for a man to die at the steak, and surely none more richly deserves the name of martyr."—Binghamton Republican.

Three petrified toads were found in a bucket in the cellar of the Cumberland Valley Railroad station at Chambersburg, Pa., recently. The bucket was placed in the cellar last summer, when the toads are supposed to have hopped into it.

Atlanta Constitution: The sober, industrious young man who killed his whole family, including himself, at Louisville the other day, because he was afraid of poverty, belonged to a class daily increasing in numbers.

A LITTLE WIDOW'S REAL GRIT.

Gaining Her End After Years of Toil and Privation.

An Atlanta, Ga., despatch says: A determined little Washington County widow named Bufford, after a quarter of a century of admirable perseverance and sacrifice, has accomplished no ordinary feat.

At the breaking out of the war her husband, an overseer in Macon County, enlisted in a Georgia regiment and left his wife and eight small helpless children, with no funds, on a small estate, against which there was an indebtedness of $3,000. When her husband was killed, a year or two later, the eldest of her children was less than 12 years of age. She realized that the responsibility of their maintenance and education devolved upon her, and she did not shrink from it. Thrown entirely on her own resources she applied herself to the spindle and supported her family by spinning thread and weaving cloth. This she did successfully until "store bought" goods forced her to turn her energies in a more profitable direction. Uneducated and without capital there was no opening for her but the field. She rented a mule and some neglected land and began farming, actually doing the laborious work incident to farm cultivation. Her children could not aid her, and for several years the brave little woman ploughed her ground, sowed her seeds and reaped her harvests. She was exceedingly energetic and economical, and finally had saved sufficient money to purchase a home. Now she has a well paying estate, mules, cattle and other stock and a comfortable little fortune laid aside. Her children are grown up and command the respect of the community. A few days ago the successful "farmer" made overtures to secure the ancestral plantation, and to-day the prosperous little family returned to the home of a quarter of a century since.

Latest Scottish News.

The City Parochial Board of Glasgow has resolved, by a large majority, to send 93 Irish-born paupers back to their native country.

The existing Old Kirk at Montrose was built in 1791, but it stands on the ruins of one built early in the 13th century, of which the spire is intact, but built at a later date, about 1641.

Mr. Archibald, senior pastor of Udny church, where he was settled in 1843, is dead. When still a probationer he took part with Dr. Chalmers in the great service at Banchory House before the Disruption. He was buried on the 21st ult.

The late Miss Jane Jeffrey, Portobello, bequeathed £5,000 to the University for founding two bursaries or scholarships for young men attending the University of Edinburgh, and studying for the ministry in connection with the Church of Scotland.

The Commission of Assembly has deposed Rev. Mr. McRae, Cross parish, Lewis, who was found guilty at last Assembly of slander, falsehood, the use of profane language, and scandalously inefficient and irregular conduct of the services of the sanctuary.

On the night of the 1st inst. Alexander Robertson, better known as "Dundonnachie," began a lecture in the lesser of the National Halls, Glasgow, on "The Absurdities of our Land Laws." The proceedings were suddenly terminated by the announcement that a man named Laurence Rough, well known to many of those present, had dropped dead at the hall door.

An apprehension has been made by the Glasgow police in connection with the fraud which was committed the other day on the pig iron market. George Robertson, a young man employed in an iron merchant's office in Glasgow, was arrested charged with having forged the order on John F. Alexander, iron broker, to sell 15,000 Scotch iron warrants on behalf of James Watson & Co., iron merchants. The sale following upon the forged order depressed the market and resulted in a considerable loss.

As a minister of a country parish was going along the road, he met the blacksmith of the village getting home pretty much under the influence of liquor. "Ah, Tam," said the minister, "if, instead of drinking your sair-won siller that way, ye had ta'en a good drink o' milk, it would have done you more good, and saved you a bit of money." Tam drew himself up to his full height as well as his unsteady legs would admit, and, with a look of supreme contempt, said: "Milk! milk! (hic)—ye may drink milk till ye burst, but it will never gar ye think yersel' a king!"

How They Do It In Boston

The modern girl doesn't give herself away when she allows herself to be wooed and won. She compels her adoring swain to surrender himself. Per example, says the Boston Transcript.

He put on his hat, started slowly for the door, hesitated, came back, sighed deeply and took the lily white hand in his own and pressed it to his lips.

"Katie," he murmured, "I have waited long—oh, how long!—for this opportunity. Will you, Katie, will you, darling, be mine?"

"Henry," she replied, with a look half of sorrow and half of determination, "it can never be."

"Never be! Oh, why have you permitted me to hope? Why have you encouraged me, only to stamp upon my bleeding heart at last?"

"I am sorry, Henry, but I can never be yours. I have other objects in view."

"Other objects?"

"Yes, Henry; I cannot consent to belong to any man. I intend that you shall be mine."

But Nero Was an Office-holder.

Nero was an emperor, and yet he fiddled for fun while Rome was burning. In these days you can't get a high toned fiddler to fiddle for less than $1,000 a night.—Boston Courier.

Bronson Alcott celebrated his 80th birthday on the 29th of last month. His gifted daughter, Louisa M., celebrated her birthday the same day.

—The girl with the highest hat is reckoned at the lowest figure.—New Haven News.

—A spruce young fellow is very often pop'lar with the ladies.

EUROPEAN TROOPS.

Praise for the Germans, Italians and Swiss, but England Has the Model Soldier.

Col. Clark, of the 7th Regiment, who has just returned from a three months' leave in England and the continent, had his eyes on things military while across the water, says the New York Herald.

Soldiers are met so frequently over there as to impress him with the magnitude of the burden their support must entail. The English soldier, he says, is a model in appearance. He is strong and athletic, very erect, with a most soldierly carriage. His uniform is clean, handsome and well-fitting, and when seen off duty, with a natty little cap perched jauntily on the side of his head, cane in hand and well gloved, "he is in appearance the most distinguished soldier in the world." Distinctive uniforms add greatly to the esprit de corps of the army, for every uniform has a history and a record that is to be maintained. While he deems the English volunteers a powerful adjunct for national defence, he thinks their organization and system in many respects inferior to our National Guard.

The armies of Holland and Belgium are small and insignificant, he thinks, compared with those of the great powers of Europe. The soldiers of these countries seem to have no pride in their military duties, are not very muscular or well set up, are clean but very slouchy, and their uniform, which greatly resembles the service uniform of this State, is in strong contrast with the handsome and close-fitting dress of the English troops.

Mr. Clark's reference to the French soldier is very timely, and in view of the present condition of affairs they are very interesting: "French soldiers are a disappointment, for they seem spiritless, dull and despondent. They move about listlessly, are slouchy in gait and appearance, are not always neat and clean, do not appear to be educated or specially intelligent; in short, are not at all the ideal soldiers of the period. Their drill, as observed in and about Paris, was careless and indifferent, and their discipline is inferior."

"The German soldier, as seen at Strasburg and in other parts of the empire, is the result of a most careful and thorough military organization for a long series of years and of a military system that has reached perfection. He is an educated man, physically and mentally, and a part of his education is acquired under military discipline. He is not so dashing in his appearance as the English soldier, but he shows in his figure the result of thorough training in athletic and gymnastic exercises, and there is an air and expression of intelligence and mental culture about the German soldier not seen in the army of any other nation. His uniform is scrupulously neat and clean; he is sober, quiet, respectful and obedient; he is faithful, loyal and patriotic. My observation of the German soldier leads me to think that in physical development, in military education in every detail, and in general education, which includes the knowledge of several languages, the German soldier has no superior or equal."

The Swiss establishment he considers something like our National Guard. The men "are plainly but comfortably uniformed, passably well drilled, of good physique, and are active, sprightly and patriotic."

"The Austrian army is large and imposing, but its material does not compare favorably with that of the English or German armies, physically or intellectually, except in some favorite or select battalions. The soldiers of Austria proper are superior in appearance, more elegant and cleanly in dress, and more soldierly in bearing than those from Bohemia, Hungary and other parts of the Austrian empire, but there is a servile manner about most of them which must be the result of the despotic character of the Government, rather than good military discipline. Some soldiers from the Austrian Provinces are so poorly and cheaply uniformed, so untidy in person, and so very slouchy and unsoldierly in carriage and bearing that 'a looker-on in Vienna' is obliged to doubt the military efficiency and success of an army composed in part of material of that character."

The Italians he likes better than the Austrians, and thinks they will compare "favorably with those of France and Austria, and, considering the brief existence of the Kingdom, resulting from Italian unity, deserve special notice. They are active and sprightly, well uniformed and equipped, and appear to be in a fair state of drill and discipline. In appearance and in spirit they well represent a country that is rapidly improving and developing under its present Government, but why it is necessary to burden this fair, sunny land, so very old, and yet so very young in modern civilization, with the support of so large an army only those wise in European statesmanship can explain."

His Objection to Dogs.

She—And you don't like big dogs, Mr De Garmo?

He—No, I can't say I have very much love for them.

She—But they have such large hearts.

He—It isn't their hearts I object to; it's their mouths.

Enough for the Money.

Deacon Jones (to country minister)—Some of the members of the congregation, Mr. Goodman, complain that you do not speak quite loud enough.

Country minister—I speak as loud as I can afford to, Deacon, at five hundred dollars a year.—Epoch.

A Gentle Hint.

He—What will you have, dear, candy or ice cream?

She—No, Edward, get me some pop-corn, please.

He—Do you like that stuff?

She—Yes; I like every thing that pops.—Harper's Bazar.

Tired Enough to Sit Down.

He had been out very late the night before, and it was 10 o'clock when he came down to breakfast.

Husband—What makes the coffee so weak?

Wife—Because it has been standing so long.

—From a sleepy industry the sleeping-car business has made lots of money.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Aunt Kate's Weekly Budget of Fashion and Other Gossip.

A Family of Blondes.

An enthusiastic young lady, writing from London, says:

The Queen's grandchildren are nearly all remarkably pretty blondes, and she can be proud of her sons and sons-in-law, splendid men, all of them. The daughters, Princesses Christian, Louise and Beatrice, and the Crown Princess of Germany, are all very large, fine women, and Beatrice has a charming face. The Princess of Wales is a snowflake, or a white lily leaf, and there is a combination of stateliness and gentleness in the poise of her dainty head and the contour of her flower-like face. She does not look over 20, and though very slender her form is beautifully rounded. Her complexion is as smooth and pale as white marble, eyes very large and of a violet color, hair softly curling and pale brown, golden when kissed by the sunbeams. She is a woman to be adored—a creature of saintly life, and with a beautiful face. The Prince of Wales is charming. He is very handsome, only a little too stout, and is so graceful. His wonderful personal magnetism extends even to a great multitude, and when the crowds roar, as they do the moment they spy him, he lifts his hat and bows and makes every one feel as if he or she had been personally thanked. Prince Albert Victor, his eldest son, is a tall slender youth, very like his mother, giving promise of a handsome man when matured. The Queen is not good-looking, and is very stout, but there is something regal in her presence and in her stern, grave face, with its sad lips, and the cold blue eyes of her family. She bows sweetly and graciously, but seldom smiles, although in the jubilee procession she smiled a little to the old pensioners when they bared their grey heads to her, whom they had so nobly served when her life was young.

Origin of Ugly Fashions.

Charles VII. of France wore long coats to hide his ill-made legs.

Queen Elizabeth patronized immense ruffs because her neck was not handsome.

It was to hide the short stature of Louis XIV. that high heels and towering perruques were introduced.

Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Anjou, had his shoes made with long points to screen from observation an excrescence on one foot.

Short hair became fashionable in France when an accident to the king's head during a snowball fight necessitated the removal of his flowing locks.

Full-bottomed wigs were invented by a French barber named Duvillier to conceal the fact that one shoulder of the dauphin was higher than the other.

The Latest Fashion Fads.

Gray in every shade is considered in Paris just now the most stylish of all colors.

A pretty bonnet called the "Florentine" is entirely covered with real applique lace.

The holiday dolls may be said to canture the Charlotte Russe, for they are exquisite.

Emeralds are sought after more and more every day, the finer grade being very scarce.

Young matrons have re-adopted fanciful breakfast caps for home wear in the morning.

India embroideries in metal trim evening wraps made of the new changeable velvets and plushes.

Coronet fronts will appear on most fashionable bonnets. They will be of beads, feathers or velvet.

On invitation cards the initials R.S.V.P. have been superseded by the plain English, "An answer is desired."

Fairy lamps, placed in the centre of a large dish of flowers is a table ornamentation now on the occasion of a fashionable dinner party.

A present style consists in wearing four gold-wire rings on the same finger, each being set with a single small stone, as a sapphire, emerald and ruby.

Long black cloth ulsters trimmed with astrachan on collar and cuffs and lined with fur are shown for men, "to be worn over the dress suit only."

Champagne pitchers of glass in the form of a tulip are new, and, if not always useful in prohibition families, are certainly ornamental. They come from Vienna.

Large breastpins, containing a picture of some ancestor, are more or less fashionable among "pedigree people," who, if they've no ancestor of their own, use somebody else's.

Black velvet basques, with long skirts and almost completely covered with jet of the most costly kind, are already seen on ladies who do not buy their finery at the bargain stores.

Some of the women of Vanity Fair are wearing button shoes with tops of the same material as their dress, which, of course, must be made to order; and thus do we get our exclusive footwear.

Plain plush wraps are to be exceptionally popular. They will be trimmed with flat-beaded trimming and with rich ornaments at the front of the collar, on the sleeves and at the lower ends of the fronts.

A Capital Recipe for Cheese Fritters.

The following is a capital recipe for cheese fritters: Grate very finely three ounces of cheese. Beat the whites of three eggs to a very stiff froth: throw the cheese into this, adding a little salt and pepper. Mix well and lightly by beating with a fork. Take up dessert-spoonfuls of the mixture and fry them in boiling lard until they become a nice brown complexion. The fritters must be sent to a table immediately they are cooked, and eaten at once.

For Young Housekeepers.

A much worn broom is very hard on the carpet.

If possible, keep one utensil sacred to onions alone.

Breathing the fumes of turpentine or carbolic acid is said to relieve whooping-cough.

Clam broth is said to be excellent for a weak stomach, and ginger ale for stomach cramps.

Do not allow the spice boxes to become disorderly. Have each division carefully labelled and permit no mixing of the contents.

To take grease spots out of clothing wet them thoroughly in ammonia water, then lay white soft paper over them and iron with a hot iron.

Galvanized iron pails for drinking water should not be used. The zinc coating is readily acted upon by water, forming a poisonous oxide of zinc.

Honey sometimes has an onion flavor, from the bees gathering from fields of onion seeds. If allowed to set a few weeks the unpleasant flavor will soon pass off.

A remedy for catarrh is to gather hops when perfectly dry and sift the pollen or "flour" through Swiss muslin. Use as a snuff early in the morning or on retiring at night.

If the stove is cracked, take wood ashes and salt, equal proportions, reduced to a paste with cold water, and fill in the cracks when the stove is cool. It will soon harden.

It is said that in canning fruit, after the jar is filled, if the fruit is stirred with a spoon that reaches the bottom of the jar, until air bubbles rise to the top, the contents will never mould on top.

For bunions get 5 cents worth of saltpetre and put it into bottle with ufficient olive oil to nearly dissolve it; shake up well and rub the inflamed joints night and morning, and more frequently if painful.

A starch superior to gloss starch for calico and cambric can be made of flour by wetting the flour up with very warm water a day before you need the starch; add boiling water and cook when you want to use it.

To keep moths out of closets, clothes and carpets, take green tansy. It is better before it goes to seed. Put it around the edges of carpets and hang it up in closets where woollen clothes are hung, and no moth will ever come where it is.

To prevent pie juice from running out in the oven, make a little opening in the upper crust and insert a little roll of brown paper perpendicularly. The steam will escape from it as from a chimney, and all the juice will be retained in the pie.

A carpet, particularly a dark carpet, often looks dusty when it does not need sweeping. Wring out a sponge quite dry in water (a few drops of ammonia help brighten the color) and wipe off the dust from the carpet. This saves much labor in sweeping.

A Novel Substitute for Morphine.

"Pretty near time to go home, ain't it?" said one Ninth Warder to another, as the two stood at the four corners waiting for the last car.

"Well, I guess it is, though I have already been to bed to-night," replied No. 2.

"How is that, do you say?"

"Well, for years I have been troubled with insomnia, and I used to take quantities of morphine to invite sleep, but that lost its virtue. Then I tried dumb-bells and Indian clubs and other violent exercise, but as I had Aldermanic ambition I was afraid I would hurt my chances, and so one night I hit upon a substitute that never fails—riding on the street cars. Before I can get to sleep at night I ride a bob-tail to the four corners and back as regularly as I used to take morphine. Sometimes I find it necessary to take two, and I have taken as many as three trips, but usually 10 cents' worth of street car puts me in such a condition that I fall asleep as soon as I strike the bed. The only time it has failed me was the Saturday night before it was announced street cars would be ordered off Sunday to comply with Sunday laws. Then I suppose I worried at the thought of returning to Indian clubs.

"No, sir; for suicidal purposes I suppose morphine has its friends, but as a cure for insomnia give me the bob-tail car."—Rochester Democrat.

Two Faith Cures.

Mr. Eli Forsythe, one of the most prominent citizens of Hannibal, Mo., hobbled into a faith cure meeting in that city recently on a cane and knelt at the altar to be cured. For forty years, as his neighbors could testify, a stiff knee had made walking a most painful thing for him. After remaining in prayer a few minutes Mr. Forsythe arose, declared himself cured, threw away his cane and walked around the church like a young athlete.

A wonderful case of faith cure is reported from Toledo, where the Christian Science Convention was recently in session. Miss Edna Coffin lost her voice last January, and from that time until last week she could not speak a word, although the best physicians treated her. On Monday, December 5th, she was converted to the faith cure doctrine, and on the following morning she walked into the convention hall at Toledo and astonished everybody by speaking in a loud voice.

It Depended on His Luck.

A young wag uptown started out with his gun incased in canvas to take a train for Sullivan County the other day, and met a lady of great heart and age.

"Do you mean to tell me," she asked, "that you are deliberately going to shoot little birds and timid, inoffensive animals?"

"No, ma'am," he replied, "I will not go so far as to say that. If I have my usual luck I shall shoot nothing but my gun."—Harper's Bazar.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF IT.

A man must follow his heart, my dear,
And I must follow mine,
Until it's parcel and part, my dear,
Of thine.

A man must follow his heart, my love,
When it leaps from his breast,
And seeks, with passion and art, my love,
For rest.

A man must follow his heart, sweetheart,
Night and day; for, in short,
Man without heart is a part, sweetheart,
Of naught.

Mr. O'Meara, the Irish dentist, is in Afghanistan, where he recently fixed up the mouths of three of His Majesty's wives.

During her twenty years of married life Mrs. John Guest, of Wichita, Kan., has presented her husband with twenty-two children. She has twice given birth to twins and once to triplets.

A Chicago physician recommends hypodermic injections of the sulphates of strychnine and atropine as a sure cure for seasickness.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Mme. Adam said the other day that since Oscar Wilde had cut off his hair and become a father London was no longer picturesque or amusing. He is a proud parent of a baby who is less like him, happily, than its beautiful mother, who has lost none of her girlish loveliness in matronhood. She was at a swell reception the other day in a gown designed by her husband. It was a thick brocade of dull, delicate pink, made in the empire fashion, with the waist under the arms and long, loose sleeves hanging from the shoulder, lined with that soft, quiet shade known as old-blue. There was a Medici collar lined with the same blue and edged with pink pearls. Her dark curling hair was heaped high on her head, with little Recamier curls on the brow. In her hand she carried a big fan of pink feathers with silver sticks.

It is a favorite phrase of the Irish landlord, remarks the London Truth this week, that the Irish peasant is impoverished because he is idle and dishonest. No more effective repudiation could be desired than was given at the private view of the exhibition and Christmas sale of Irish handwork in embroideries, laces and homespuns at the Donegal Industrial Fund, 43 Wigmore street, on Saturday. It is only four years since Mrs. Har[illegible], finding the Gweedmore peasants starving, set herself to improve their skill in spinning and weaving, and to teach them the arts of vegetable dyeing. Within that time she has developed what was a private charity into an important public enterprise, and now the embroideries, homespuns and all-wool underwear of the fund make their own way into the wholesale markets. The Irish peasants have shown themselves deft, skilful, laborious and honest. Eight hundred persons now find a living in these delightful hand-wrought stuffs, among whom some eighty distressed Irish ladies are employed.

The seven Bibles of the world are the Koran of the Mohammedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Try Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta and the Scriptures of the Christians. The Koran is the most recent of the seven Bibles, and not older than the seventh century of our era. It is a compound of quotations from the Old and New Testaments, the Talmud and the gospel of St. Barnabas. The Eddas of the Scandinavians were first published in the fourteenth century. The Pitikes of the Buddhist's contain sublime morals and pure aspirations, but their author died in the sixth century before Christ. There is nothing of excellence in these sacred books not found in the Bible. The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, king meaning web of cloth, or the warp that keeps the threads in place. These sayings cannot be traced to a period higher than the eleventh century before Christ. The three Vedas are the most ancient books of the Hindoos. The Zendavesta of the Persians is the grandest of all the sacred books next to our Bible. Zoroaster, whose sayings it contains, was born in the twelfth century before Christ. Moses lived and wrote the Pentateuch fifteen centuries before Christ.

Christmas Tide.

A boy may be persuaded to go to bed early Christmas Eve, but he makes his presents known in the morning. By the way, speaking of presents, we read the other day that a Mexican family has thirty-eight children. Wonder how the chimney looks when all those stockings are hung up!

There is more pleasure in giving than receiving, according to the proverb, but the boy who is given a dose of castor-oil don't believe it, and it is one of the hardest things in the world to persuade him that he is mistaken.

There are Christmas presents that do not overwhelm the recipient with joy; for instance, when a poor man's wife presents him with a worked canvas for a nice traveling bag and he has to squander the money he needs for cigars in having it made up.

The Norristown Herald man is of the opinion that women should not aim merely to give their husbands acceptable gifts, but they should also practice a wise economy in purchasing such gifts. He suggests that a good way to achieve this object all sublime is to borrow the money from their husband's pockets, while he is asleep, and buy him a smoking-cap. He would never wear it, of course, but that's no objection. On the contrary, it would last all the longer for not being worn—and that is economy.

The journals abound in Christmas stories, but the most generally circulated Christmas story is: "I don't expect anything this year."

If a man's expectations in this direction are realized—and they frequently are—he can act like a philosopher, fill his socks with contentment, and go about his affairs as usual on Christmas Day.

One of the most discouraging features is bills. Christmas bells would be very nice if they were not so suggestive of Christmas bills.

An unidentified poet has written the following beautiful lines on "Christmas Tide:"

Out of the four great gates of day,
A tremulous music swells;
Hear, hear,
How sweet and clear,
Over and under, far and near,
A thousand happy bells.
Joy, joy and jubilee!
Good will to men from sea to sea,
This merry Christmas tide.

Yes, Christmas Tide would be very nice if the idiots with guns and fish horns could be tied and gagged.

—A little Burlington boy who saw an open-faced watch for the first time, exclaimed, "Look, mamma! There's a watch that has lost its hat."

—A dream of fair women is most pleasing if the dream be not of women who made you buy things you did not want at the fair and gave no change back.

Wanamaker, the great Philadelphia clothier, was employed for years in his father's brickyard at scant wages, and his first work away from home brought him only $1.50 a week. He now has 3,000 clerks to do his business.

N. K. Fairbank, the big soap and lard manufacturer of Chicago, is a New Yorker by birth. He began life as a bricklayer's apprentice at the age of 15. He is now worth several millions, and is considered one of the handsomest men in Chicago.

TWO ABYSSINIAN CHIEFS.

King John and Ras Alulu—Interesting Orientals who Always go Barefooted.

Except the king himself, the most noteworthy Abyssinian is the commander of the army, who this summer has defied the Italians at the very gates of Massowah. Ras Alulu is described by Europeans who have seen him as one of the best-bred and handsomest of his race. "Are you a Christian?" is the first question this impetuous warrior addresses to his white visitors, all of whom he would willingly consign to perdition if he mistrusted them of coveting an acre of his native land. Less than 50 years of age, he has long been one of the chief agents of the king's absolute will. Last week's despatches indicate that Ras Alulu is up and doing, determined to maintain his fame as a hard fighter, everywhere at once, and very difficult to catch. The coast tribes promised Italy 10,000 warriors, many of whom are now in camp near Massowah. The dashing Abyssinian improved the opportunity early this month to swoop down upon the coast, knocking to pieces all the native forces brought against him and advancing to Assaorta, about fifty miles south of Massowah. It has been Italy's policy to make no aggressive movement until prepared to take the field in earnest and settle the quarrel once for all. For five months, therefore, Ras Alulu's cavalry has amused itself so frequently by charging through the environs of Massowah that no soldier has been permitted beyond the protection of the guns.

Barefooted like his sovereign, Ras Alulu is noted for the elegance of his attire and the richness of his belongings, both at home and in camp. His cheerful and lively manner is in striking contrast to the demeanor of the gloomy, morbid and fanatical king. Scarcely older than his general-in-chief, and himself a noted fighter, King John has all the fears for his personal safety that usually torture a despot. A king who denies tobacco to his pipe-loving subjects because the smell of it offends him is probably justified in fearing that internal plots may some day prove his overthrow. The best picture of King John represents him on a spirited charger, carrying a lance, the chief weapon of his army, and looking like the brave soldier and the leader of men he has proved himself. His big toes alone rest in the stirrups. Perhaps it was this picture that induced Queen Victoria upon a certain occasion to send a pair of scarlet-topped boots to the barefooted king. By way of compliment to his distinguished friend, the king with great difficulty pulled them on. He had never enjoyed the civilized luxury of tight boots before, and as his attendants could not pull them off again his majesty went to bed with his boots on. It was not long before the king's discomfort became insupportable, and, with all due respect to Queen Victoria, her present was removed from his feet in pieces.—New York Sun.

The Canadian Northwest.

Over one hundred excursionists left for Ontario to-day to spend the Christmas holidays.

At a meeting of the officers of the Central Congregational Church this evening Rev. J. B. Silcox tendered his resignation, taking effect at the end of January. He will probably accept a call to a California church.

The buildings of the Winnipeg Gas Works Company were entirely destroyed by fire at 9 o'clock to-night. The blaze was started by an explosion of gas near the furnace in the centre of the main building and the large structure was soon a mass of flames. By hard work the firemen managed to save the large gasometer fifty feet away, in which the supply is stored. This will last but a few hours, when the city will be in darkness. Harry Avery, the engineer, is missing and, it is supposed, perished in the flames. The loss is $60,000; no insurance. Guelph parties are heavily interested.

The exodus of pastors continues. Following up on the announcement of Rev. Mr. Silcox's call to California comes the news that Rev. Mr. Pitblado, of St. Andrew's Church, has received an offer to accept the pastorate of a prominent Presbyterian congregation in San Francisco. Rev. Hugh Pedley, of Cobourg, is spoken of as Mr. Silcox's successor.

John Lee, a Chinaman, who had been running a laundry here, and who was killed by being struck by a hand car, was buried to-day by the Presbyterian ladies of this city, whose class he had been attending for religious instruction. The other Chinamen in the city were all present.

Coal is being mined at Edmonton for $1 per load.

The first through train for four days arrived from the coast last night. Landslides have been the cause of delay.

An Indian just in from 100 miles west of Battleford reports having seen four buffalo and tracked fourteen others in that neighborhood.

The city carpenters have resolved to demand thirty cents per hour and nine hours per day after February 1st.

Girls Had Dolls in Pharaoh's Time.

Dolls have amused the girls for ages and seem to have been well known in the days of the Pharaohs; for, in the tombs of ancient Egypt, figures of painted wood, of terra-cotta, of ivory and of rags have been found whose limbs were made moveable for the delight of children. It is quite probable that Pharaoh's daughter threw aside a mimic child for the real baby which she discovered in the famous bullrush basket. In the tombs of Etruria—by the way, where was Etruria?—similar toys have been discovered; they were spread in the East, and in China, as well as in India, moveable figures were made to act from time immemorial by hand and on strings, or as shadows behind a curtain. The ancient Greeks were experts in the manufacture of puppets, including wax dolls, and several of their poets allude to offerings of dolls to Artemis and Aphrodite made by maidens before their marriage.—Philadelphia Times.

The Shadow of Coming Care.

Mary to Alice—Your doll looks very poorly. What ails it?

Alice—It frets a good deal. Alfred knocked out one of its eyes last week, and it lost a great deal of sawdust, and hasn't been the same doll since.—Boston Herald.

—About the fastest men in the West are the cowboys who hold up express trains.

LIFE IN THE PENITENTIARY.

Reflections After a Visit to the Inmates of Sing Sing.

Think what it is to enter these walls and face that clock, whose slow pendulum shall beat out—not seconds, minutes, hours, days, weeks or months—but years of your precious youth and manhood before you again see the world which has discarded you! Think of the unrelieved round of toil, succeeded by the solitary cell and miserable hours of thinking what might have been and what is! How slow the hours to him without hope, without profit in his bitter toil, without respect in his solitude, without honor, without comfort, without liberty! How slow the days make the week, and the weeks the month, where each is drearily the same, season in and season out, till the doleful year is told!

To be the companion of the vilest, cheek by jowl; to wear the garb of infamy; to be driven from the cell to labor, and from the labor to the cell; to see on all sides the high walls and the redoubts, where gleam the rifles ready to kill the insurgent; to know that however skilfully the escape is planned, however bravely executed, there are keen-scented and lynx-eyed pursuers to track and the strong arm of the law to recover; to feel that by no power can relief come until the long distant day appointed, save the power which can bless an unhappy life by ending it.

What a record of hopelessness, of despair, remorse and gnawing misery the pitiless stone of those cells could tell! Small wonder that after years of confinement every kindly trait of nature is withered, root and branch, and only sullen desperation and hatred of society remain.

Look at their faces to read their story. Not one in a hundred has the face of shame, of unhappiness, but of stolid resignation to inevitable privation and disgrace. See that long line of gray misery marching to its noonday meal—a human centipede—a hundred locked together—shuffle, shuffle, shuffle—the very step is a degradation. Slowly they file into the cheerless room, and in silence, and with bowed head, each sits to devour his portion. Not a word, not a whisper, all wants expressed by signs. Long lines of keepers, each coldly and keenly watchful, each ready with pistol to suppress the slightest token of revolt, for this is the time of danger in a State prison. The meal is soon over. At a beckon they arise and look together—shuffle, shuffle, shuffle, shuffle—back to labor again.—Henry Guy Carleton.

A NEW SWINDLE ON THE RAILWAY.

The Man With Safety Match, Who Can Light it Anywhere.

General W. F. Walsh, of Arkansas, who is now at the Hoffman House, New York, has recently made an extensive tour in the West, and he says that the safety match has become a substitute for the three-card monte game as a swindling device upon railroad trains in the West. General Walsh says that on his way East from California two weeks ago a typical looking frontiersman got on the train at a station in Wyoming. The man seemed utterly uncivilized and the other passengers began to comment upon his strange appearance.

Finally the man took a safety match from a box attached to the side of the car and tried to light it upon the sole of his boot. He scraped away for some time without the match showing any sign of igniting, and then attempted to light it against the woodwork of the car. In the meantime every one was laughing at the fellow's apparent ignorance. Finally a passenger, whose egotism had made him conspicuous, told the man that the matches were of a kind that could only be lighted upon the box.

"I bet you $10 I can light one without the box," said the man.

"I'll go you," said the egotistical passenger, as he selected a ten-dollar bill from a roll.

The strange-looking man covered it, and then, taking a match, lighted it against a groove in the car window. Of course most of the other passengers knew this was possible. General Walsh afterwards learned that the man was a regular bunco man.

Living After Decapitation.

A very peculiar argument was once urged against the guillotine. It was said that a man could feel after his head was off. The instant the head fell the trunk ceased to feel, because cut off from the brain, the seat of sensation; but it did not follow that the head immediately lost all feeling or even consciousness. Ridiculous as it may seem, it is asserted that the lips of the ill-fated Mary Queen of Scots moved for a full half hour after she was beheaded. Guillotine himself was present at an execution, and attests the fact that a criminal's decapitated head being addressed by name the eyelids were raised and the eyes turned from side to side. Another case occurred at Coblentz, when the half-closed eyes opened wide and looked with reproach at those standing around. These instances are hardly to be classed with the cases of the Irish knight beheaded by Saladin in the holy war, whose head got up and avowed that it was never cut off by so sweet a cimeter before; or the case of Legaro, the assassin, whose decapitated head swore roundly at the executioner for not keeping a sharper axe.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Ferry Boat Collision.

A Jersey City despatch says: A collision occurred in the North River last night between the steamship Breakwater and the ferry boat Pavonia. The guards and a portion of the stern cabin on the gentlemen's side of the Pavonia were demolished. Three men were caught in the wreck and seriously injured. Frank Moriarty, 30 years old, of Medford, Mass., was hurt about the hips and chest; ex-Assemblyman David Henry, aged 50, was crushed about knees and abdomen; Richard Coughlin, 75 years old, was hurt about the side and head and both of his ankles were broken. The excitement among the uninjured passengers on the ferry boat quickly subsided when it was ascertained that she was in no danger of sinking. Several of those who were slightly hurt left the boat at Jersey City with improvised bandages of handkerchiefs.

Many of the farmers and lumbermen in Northern Michigan are making use of dogs this winter to draw their sleds. It is said that the dogs become very expert at the work after a little training and in many ways equal to the Esquimau dogs.

GORDON'S

OLD RELIABLE HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON!

Is still open and Old Customers will find it Stocked with

Carriage & Team

HARNESS!

Which has become celebrated throughout this vicinity for superior quality, finish and durability. All guaranteed as heretofore. At

Reduced Prices for Cash,

Also a large stock of Winter Goods in the line of

HORSE COVERS!

of superior quality, at the lowest prices ever offered in Flesherton. A fine selection of

Sleigh Bells!

at a slight advance on cost for the next 30 days. If you want a first-class

WHIP!

It is to be found at Gordon's. Also

TRUNKS,
VALISES,
RUGS,
HORSE BRUSHES,
CURRY COMBS,
SWEAT PADS

and all other Horse Furnishings found in a first-class Harness Shop.

The Celebrated Harness Oil!

Kept constantly on hand. But the Crowning Specialty is the perfect fitting

Scotch Collar!

Warranted not to gall your horses and for which this establishment has become so well known throughout this County. Repairing attended to promptly, carefully and cheaply.

A Call is Respectfully Invited at

GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP,

FLESHERTON.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Overshoes and Rubbers selling off very cheap at Wm. Claytons. 2t.

Mr. John Blakely has returned home from Nebraska. Canada first, last and all the time—hurrah!

A fine assortment of open face silver Watches for teachers use, special discount at W. A. Brown's, Markdale. 2t.

The ADVANCE and the Hamilton Weekly Spectator one year for $1.65. The Spectator is one of the best weeklies on the continent.

One of Taylor's latest improved combination safes has been placed in Russell's Noted Jewelry Store here. This is an important addition to our popular jewelry establishment.

The annual school meeting was held yesterday. The Trustees elect for 1888 are, Messrs. M. Richardson, S. Damude and Geo. Swanton—the first named being Sec.-Treasurer.

Mr. Thos. Clayton and Mr. Will. Clayton—both of Toronto—are spending the Christmas holidays with their parents here, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Clayton.

I don't do the business of this "county," only of this section. 16 clocks and 12 fine watches sold since Oct. 3rd this year by W. A. Brown, jeweller, Markdale. 2t.

The first number of the Daily Empire appeared on Tuesday. The weekly edition will be issued to-day. The general make-up of the daily is decidedly prepossessing.

A meeting of Centre Grey Farmer's Institute will be held at Rocklyn, on Wednesday and Thursday of next week. Professors Brown and Grenside, of the Agricultural College, Guelph, will deliver addresses.

We are informed that the Flesherton Station hotel has been rented—but not to Mr. Jennings of Shelburne. Another gentleman made a better cash offer and the bargain was closed. One gentleman—a noted grain dealer—told us not long since, that if Mr. Jennings leased the hotel he would invest $500 or $1000 in an elevator or grain warehouse at the Station forthwith. Perhaps he will do so anyway.

Sabbath School Anniversary sermons will be preached in the Methodist church, Flesherton, Sunday next. The pulpit will be occupied by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Shilton, B.A., in the morning, and by Rev. Josias Green, a former pastor, in the evening. On Monday following the Anniversary entertainment, in connection with the School, will be held. Tea will be served from 5 to 7 o'clock, after which will come the splendid and carefully prepared musical and literary program.

Miss Hopkins has severed her connection with Flesherton Station school. On the occasion of her departure, the boys of the school presented her with a handsome silver napkin ring and dressing case; while the girls followed up this graceful tribute to her ability and popularity, by making her the recipient of a beautiful whisk holder. Miss Hopkins is held in very high esteem wherever she has taught—in the social circle as well as in the schoolroom—and the best wishes of a very large circle of friends go with her to her new sphere.

The Maxwell gentleman who got one of my 18k. Wedding Rings, initialed W. B., on the 24 inst., will find it to be a golden bond always. Fine stock, sizes 5 to 8. W. A. Brown, Markdale. 2t.

Nomination Day.

ARTEMESIA.

Dr. Christoe was re-elected Reeve by acclammation. He has now been in the Reeve's chair for thirteen years in succession—having been elected nine times by acclammation and four times in contests with prominent gentlemen. Messrs. John McArthur, John Boland and Wm. Sharp were re-elected Councillors by acclammation for Wards 1, 2, and 3 respectively. For Ward No. 4, Mr. Arch. Cairns and Mr. Wm. T. McKee were nominated.

Dr. Christoe spoke at length thanking the people for the confidence again reposed in him and proceeded to discuss municipal matters in that frank, clear and easy manner for which he is noted.

Mr. A. S. VanDusen took the platform and said a few words in favor of the proposed new railway from Port Hope to Durham or some other point near thereto, and asked if the Council would do anything for such a scheme should it be pushed.

Dr. Christoe said he had heard little about the scheme, but he did not hesitate to express his belief that if a bonus were asked it would not be granted.

Mr. John McArthur, Deputy Reeve, thanked the people for the honor conferred and expressed his belief that if Deputy Reeves were elected by popular vote it would be much more satisfactory.

Mr. John Boland, Deputy Reeve, endorsed what Mr. McArthur had said in reference to the Deputy Reeveship, and concluded by thanking the ratepayers for the honor conferred upon him.

Mr. Sharp made a brief but really good speech, in which he also returned thanks for the honor conferred upon him. He had not found the Ward [illegible] adequate to the requirements of his section, but would make next year's appropriation cover the portions not covered during the past year.

Mr. Henry Cairns gave a detailed account of the manner in which he had expended the money appropriated to Ward No. 4, and defended his distribution of the same as being in the best interests of the ratepayers of Ward No. 4.

Mr. Wm. T. McKee said that he was the only intruder on this occasion, as the gentlemen who had preceeded him were all members of the Council Board of 1887, and some of them members for 1888. However, it was evident Mr. Cairns had not given satisfaction or the speaker would not be where he was. He had been accused of being a prime mover in the Valley Road scheme. He was not, although he believed that road would be a benefit to the travelling public.

Dr. Christoe got up to say a few words relative to the election or selection of Deputy Reeves. He referred to the importance of sending good, intelligent men to the County Council. He also said he did not believe in appropriating amounts to the Wards as had been the custom in past year. Every dollar expended should be under the direct supervision of the Council as a whole.

Several questions asked and answered.

Councillor McArthur moved and Mr. John Hazard seconded That the thanks of the ratepayers of Artemesia be tendered the Editor of THE ADVANCE for his services as reporter of proceedings of Council during the past year.—Carried.

Mr. John Hazard occupied the chair in a dignified and impartial manner.

OSPREY.

For Reeve,—Messrs John Douglas and D. K. Preston. For Deputy-Reeve,—Messrs. Arch. McIntyre and Edw. Potts. For Councillors,—Messrs. Joseph Brown, John Hudson, Wm. Monaghan, J. Speers, Robert Sprott and Joseph Taylor.

You Carry

A whole medicine chest in your pocket, with one box of Ayer's Pills. As they operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all that any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

A Physician

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrison, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost in crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of the profession."

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

BOOTS & SHOES!

—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—

WINTER GOODS!

RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS AND FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

HEARD'S!

Carriage Works, Flesherton,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.

SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.

Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

CHEAP AND DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

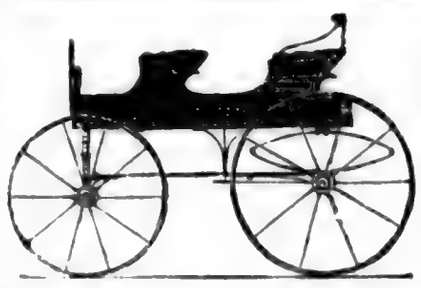
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.



MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith, THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

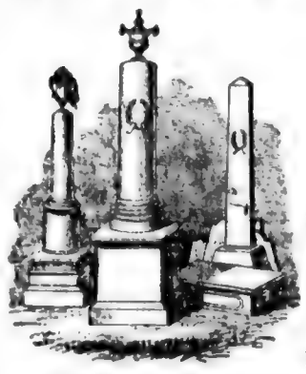
Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 341. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

"DECEMBER AD."

$1,600

IN GOLD AND SILVER

WATCHES!

Walnut and Nickle Clocks, Roll Plate and Fine Gilt Chains, Gem and Wedding Rings, Jewelery and Fine Silverware for Holiday * Trade!

If I felt the public were fools enough to believe me and knew "myself" to be "knave" enough to beat the wholesale, I would talk big discount and wholesale prices for above goods. Wholesale prices in a retail store won't pay rent, light taxes, etc. Continuous discounts 5 times in 1 year, either pays by marking goods away up, or else by using deception as to quality of goods. There are Jewellers who have 14 k. wedding rings stamped 18 k. My Plain Rings are made by P. W. ELLIS & CO., and after this will have my initials, W.B. stamped on.

Goods as represented every time.

Prices at "whisper" mark. Discounts as usual, 5 per cent.

Warrants cover Breakages!

Don't accept any other kind. Everybody invited to call when in town and get my prices.

For 4 Years

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA, 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

331-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES. APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

TO VILLAGE SUBSCRIBERS.

The Editor of THE ADVANCE will call on many of you next Saturday in person. He has a large sum of money to meet this month and trusts that all called upon will be ready to renew their subscriptions for 1888 and pay off arrearages, as the case may be. The Editor relies upon the generosity of his readers generally to enable him to discharge his obligations promptly, and earnestly hopes that no one will feel offended because he has adopted this plan.

Jannary 5th, 1888.

Cattle Fair here next Monday.

If you want a fine Wedding Ring, full 18k., you have to go to Russell's, Flesherton, for it.

Mr. J. W. Henderson, Inspector of the North of Scotland M. Co., is visiting friends in town.

Mr. and Mrs. McCannell, of Collingwood, are the guests of Mr. James Beecroft, of this town.

McCall Bros.—the well known Lardine and Machine Oil men, of Toronto—have published a neat calendar for 1888.

A fine assortment of open face silver Watches for teachers use, special discount at W. A. Brown's, Markdale. 2t.

Miss Alice Leitch, of Owen Sound is spending the holidays with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Leitch.

Our Township Fathers meet in the Town Hall here next Monday, for the first time in 1888, for the transaction of business.

The annual Orange Soriee, held under the auspices of Kimberley L.O.L., will take place in that thriving village on the 13th inst. Go, by all means.

My 18k. Rings are made P. W. Ellis & Co., Toronto. Trade mark, the maple leaf with E. in centre. W. A. Brown, Markdale. 2t.

It was a Goldie & McCullough instead of a Taylor safe—as stated last week—that was placed in Russell's Noted Jewelry Store here. It is a beauty.

A large number of people from near Thornbury attended the Methodist entertainment here on Monday evening last.

We have just received a beautiful Calendar for 1888 from Mr. A. J. Taylor, Travelling Passenger Agent at Toronto for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R.R.

The dealer that only sells twelve watches and sixteen clocks in three months, must have large profits to be able to pay taxes, rent, &c. It is quite different at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Squire Armstrong and the officers and teachers of the Methodist Sabbath School here, are to be congratulated upon the brilliant success which attended their efforts in connection with the recent Anniversary. The church was crowded to the doors, and the singing, recitations and dialogues by the children were all that could be desired or expected, Rev. J. W. Shilton occupied the chair, and introduced the program by a nice little speech. Rev. Mr. Green said a few words, which were very appropriate. The decorations were handsome and reflected the good taste and artistic ability of Mr. W. H. Flesher, who superintended the work in this department. The Librarians', Secretary's and Treasurer's Reports were, as usual, very interesting and showed a healthy state of things in all the departments of the School. Over $80 were realized at this Anniversary.

No blow, no puff, my watch repairing gives satisfaction and charges are never extortionate. W. A. Brown, Markdale.

If you want a fine Wedding Ring, full 18k., you have to go to Russell's, Flesherton, for it.

Kimberley Sabbath School Anniversary will be held this evening. A splendid time expected. Addresses, music, recitations, dialogues, &c. Tea served from 5 to 7 o'clock. Go!

If you want a first class Gold or Silver Watch in Ladies' and gents' sizes, Russell's, Flesherton, is the place to go. Warrants from three to five years covering all breakages at lower prices than elsewhere.

At the last regular business meeting of members of Flesherton Methodist Choir, it was moved by A. R. Fawcett, seconded by Mr. Campbell, and carried unanimously, "That the hearty thanks of the members of this Choir be and they are hereby tendered to Mr. C. J. Sproule—who is shortly to remove to Maxwell—for his faithful and efficient services as Leader of this Choir during the past three years; and, at the same time, taking this opportunity to express our sincere regret at losing such an esteemed and valued member."

NOTICE.—I shall be in Flesherton until Saturday. Anyone wanting their Sewing Machines repaired or cleaned, please leave word at Clayton's Shoe Shop, or drop me a postal card and I will call.—C. H. THOMPSON.

The municipal contest in Euphrasia resulted as follows:—For Deputy Reeve, Peter McAusland polled 248 votes, Wm. Fawcett 236; for Councillors, J. Erskine 236; Wm. Stuart, J. P. 228, J. Boyd 191, W. Paton 175, and T. McAfee 152. Mr. Thos. Gilray was re-elected by acclamation—an honor he richly merited. The Council for 1888 is composed as follows:

T. Gilray, Reeve.
P. McAusland, Deputy Reeve.
J. Erskine, W. Stewart, J. Boyd } Councillors.

Business at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, has increased so largely during the past year they have had to add new nichol show cases, &c., to contain their magnificent stock of fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. We have also added a fine burglar proof safe from the well known firm of Goldie & McCullough.

Our Watch repair trade is increasing every day. Thirty-nine watches into repair at the present time and the people come over twenty miles around to get their work done at Russell's, Flesherton, as they have proved by experience that is the only place to get them done properly.

Two fine new brick residences are to be erected in Flesherton early next spring, viz., one by Mr. Joseph Blackburne, on the vacant lot opposite the Town Hall, and another by Mr. C. J. Leitch, on the lot opposite Dr. Christoe's Medical Hall, on Collingwood street. Others are already being talked of. Oh, Flesherton is getting to be a real big boy and no mistake about it.

We can easily lay claim to doing the business of this section for 25 miles around, having sold from Oct. 3rd, 1887, to Dec. 29th, 1887, eleven fine gold watches, thirty-two silver watches and twenty-nine clocks, against another dealer's blow of twelve watches, and sixteen clocks. There is no doubt about it that the people will come to us to buy as they know they can do far better than elsewhere at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

THIS SPACE

Is Reserved for

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON,

The Place where the People of Grey get Genuine Bargains in

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, SPEX &C.

We are just Taking Stock so look out for Great Bargains in our New Ad. shortly, they will astonish you.

Life's Lessons.

Gin the warld be dark an' drearie,
Dinna sit thee doon an' sigh;
Ye maun still be bright an' cheerie,
T'ill make sunshine by-and-by.

Gin the warld look brighter, dearie,
Dinna sit thee doon content;
Ye maun still be chirp an' cheerie,
Lest the sunshine soon be spent.

Bear in mind an' a' remember,
Drearie skies nor sunshine gay
Wi' na' last fore'er an' ever—
A' keeps changing day by day.

A' keeps changing, 'tis God's bidding,
And the chances wi' na' cease,
Till our lessons are completed,
An' our teacher whispers "Peace."

FLORA N. MONTGOMERY.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"Ay, but he is a goodly man," she said, half aloud. "I like a man to walk as though all the world belongs to him;" and for the first time a doubt crossed her mind, whether Fay's childishness may not have been to blame; for Hugh Redmond's handsome face and frank, careless manner always found favor in women's eyes.

Fergus felt himself impressed by Sir Hugh's lordly bearing; he felt an awkward, raw-boned Scotchman beside this grand-looking aristocratic man. As he went out into the porch Sir Hugh put out his hand and said, in a quick, agitated voice, "Mr. Duncan, you have made me your debtor for life, but we will talk of that presently. Will you take me to my wife, please?"

"Certainly, but Mrs. St. Clair—Lady Redmond, I mean—has gone down to the Rowans—the falls over yonder; shall we walk there at once, or will you come in and rest a little?" moved by the pale, harassed look of the face before him. "You have had a long journey, Sir Hugh, and perhaps you would like to get rid of the dust."

"No, I cannot rest until I have seen my wife; you will understand my feelings, I am sure, Mr. Duncan;" and Fergus took down his hat from the peg and said gravely that he could well understand them. "It is only a step," he continued, "and I will just walk with you to the gate. The Rowans is Lady Redmond's favorite haunt; she thinks there is no place to compare with the falls. You will find no difficulty if you follow the little path"—but with that rare intuition that belongs to a sympathetic character, Fergus said no more. He could see that Sir Hugh was much agitated at the thought of the impending meeting, and directly they reached the wicket-gate leading to the falls, he pointed to the path and retraced his steps to the manse.

Hugh gave a sigh of relief as he found himself alone. His hand shook a little as he unlatched the gate. As he passed the covered rustic seat he noticed a few sprays of withered heather that had been lying there since last year. Perhaps Fay had gathered them.

He hesitated a moment—should he wait for her here or seek her farther? A trifle decided him. Among the raspberry bushes that tangled the underwood was a little bunch of wild flowers caught on a bramble. The floral message seemed to lure him onward, and he followed the narrow winding path. By and by he came to a little green nook of a place as full of moss and sunshine as a nest; there was a great pool near it, where some silver trout were leaping and flashing in the light. The whole spot seemed to come before him strangely. Had he seen it in a dream?

He crept along cautiously. He fancied he had caught a white gleam between the trees that was neither sunshine nor water. He groped his way through the underwood, putting the branches back that they might not crackle, and then all at once he stood still; for he saw a little runlet of a stream making dimples of eddies round a fallen tree, and a great silver birch sweeping over it; and there, in her soft spring dress, with the ripples of golden-brown hair shining under her hat, was his lost Wee Wifie. She had floated a rowan branch on the stream and was watching it idly, and Nero, sitting up on his haunches beside his little mistress, was watching it too.

Hugh's heart beat faster as he looked at her. He had not admired her much in the old days, and yet how beautiful she was. Either his taste had changed or these sad months had altered her; but a fairer and a sweeter face he owned to himself that he had never seen, and all his man's heart went out to her in a deep and pitiful love. Just then there was a crackling in the bushes and Nero growled, and Fay, looking up saw her husband standing opposite to her.

In life there are often strange meetings and partings; moments that seem to hold the condensed joy or pain of years. One grows a little stony—a little colorless. There are flushes perhaps, a weight and oppression of unshed tears, and a falter of questions never answered; but it is not until afterwards that full consciousness comes, that one knows that the concentrated essence of bitterness or pleasure has been experienced, the memory of which will last to our dying days. It was so with Fay when she looked up from her mossy log and saw Hugh with his fair bearded face standing under the dark larches. She did not faint or cry out, but she clasped her little hands, and said piteously, "Oh, Hugh, do not be angry with me. I tried so hard to be lost," and then stood and shivered in the long grass.

"You tried so hard to be lost," he said in a choked voice. "Child, child, do you know what you have done; you have nearly broken my heart as well as your own. I have been very angry, Fay, but I have forgotten it now; but you must come back to me, darling, for I cannot live without my Wee Wifie any more;" and as she hid her face in her trembling hands, not daring to look at him, he suddenly lifted the little creature in his arms; and as Fay felt herself drawn to his breast, she knew that she was no longer an unloved wife.

* * * * *

She was calmer now. At his words and touch she had broken into an agony of weeping that had terrified him; but he had soothed her with fond words and kisses, and presently she was sitting beside him with her shy, sweet face radiant with happiness, and her hands clasped firmly in his. He had been telling her about his accident, and his sad solitary winter, and the heart-sickness that he had suffered.

"Oh, my darling, will you ever forgive me?" she whispered. "It was for your sake I went. How could I know that you would miss me so—that you really wanted me? it nearly killed me to leave you; and I do not think I should have lived long if you had not found me."

"My child," he said very gravely and gently, "we have both done wrong and must forgive each other; but my sin is the heavier. I was older and I knew the world, and I ought to have remembered that my child-wife did not know it too. If you had not been so young you would never have left me, but now my Wee Wifie will never desert me again."

"No, never. Oh," pressing nearer to him with a shudder, "to think how you have suffered. I could not have borne it if I had known."

"Yes," he said lightly, for her great, beautiful eyes were wide with trouble at the recollection, and he wanted to see her smile, "it has changed me into a middle-aged man. Look how my hair has worn off my forehead, and there are actually grey hairs in my beard. People will say we look like father and daughter when they see us together."

"Oh," she returned shyly, for it was not quite easy to look at him—Hugh was so different somehow—"I shall not mind what people say. Now I have my own husband back, it will not matter a bit to me how grey and old you are." Then, as Hugh laughed and kissed her, she said in a very low voice, "Do you really mean that you can be content with me, Hugh; that I shall not disappoint you any more

"Content," he answered ondly, 'that is a poor word. Have I ever really deserved you, sweetheart; but I mean to make up for that. You are very generous, Fay; you do not speak of Margaret—ah, I thought so," as her head dropped against his shoulder—"she is in your mind, but you will not venture to speak of her."

"I am so afraid you must regret her, Hugh."

And Hugh, with a shade of sadness on his fine face, answered slowly:

"If I regret her, it is as I regret my lost youth. She belongs to my old life; now I only reverence and cherish her memory. Darling, we must understand each other very clearly on this point, for all our unhappiness springs from that. We must have no secrets, no reservations in our future life; you must never fear to speak to me of Margaret. She was very dear to me once, and in some sense she is dear to me still, but not now, thank God, so precious in my eyes as the wife He has given me." Then, as she put her arms round his neck and thanked him with innocent, wifely kisses, he suddenly pressed her to him passionately, and asked her to forgive him, for he could never forgive himself.

Then, as the evening shadows crept into the green nest, Fay proposed timidly that they should go back to the Manse, for she wanted to show Hugh their boy; and Hugh consented at once. And hand in hand they went through the tangled underwood and past the shimmering falls; and as Hugh looked down on his little wife and saw the new sweet womanliness that had grown on her with her motherhood, and the meek purity of her fair young face, he felt a proud happiness thrilling within her—knew that it was God-given, and that its blessing would last him throughout his whole life.

CHAPTER XLII.

KNITTING UP THE THREADS.

Day unto day her dainty hands
Make life's soil'd temples clean,
And there's a wake of glory where
Her spirit pure hath been.
At midnight through that shadow land
Her living face doth gleam,
The dying kiss her shadow, and
The dead smile in their dream.

Gerald Massey.

A little later, Jean, honest woman, suffered an electric shock. She was brushing out baby Hugh's curls, that had been disordered by the walk, when she thought she heard Mrs. St. Clair's footsteps, only it was over quick like, as she remarked later, "like a bairn running up the stairs," but she fairly shook with surprise when the door opened, and a rosy, dimpled, smiling little creature stood before her.

"Give me the baby, Jean, quick—no, never mind his sash; he looks beautiful. My husband has come, and he wants to see him. Yes, my boy! Father has come"—nearly smothering him with kisses, which baby Hugh returned by mischievous grabs at her hair.

"Ech sirs," began Jean, turning very red; but before she could give vent to her surprise, a big, grand-looking man suddenly entered the old-fashioned room, and took mother and child in his arms before her very eyes.

Jean vanished precipitately, and Mrs. Duncan found her an hour afterwards, basting the fowls with a skewer, while the iron ladle lay at her feet, and with a stony, impassive expression on her face which always meant strong disapproval hith Jean.

"Well, Jean," remarked her mistress cheerily, while her white curls bobbed with excitement, "have you heard the news, my woman? That pretty creature has got her husband, and he is as fine a man as one could ever set eyes on, and that is all a mistake about his not wanting her—a parcel of childish rubbish."

"Hoots, lass," as Jean remained glum and silent, and only picked up the iron spoon with a toss of her head, "you do not look over-pleased, and yet we are bidden to rejoice with them that do rejoice. Why, he is a baronet, Jean, and as rich as Crœsus, and she is Lady Redmond, bless her dear heart! Why, I went into the nursery just now, and it was just a lovely sight, as I told Fergus. The bairn had been pulling at her hair, and down it came, a tumbling golden-brown mass, over her shoulders like the pictures of a woman-angel, and she just laughed in her sonsie way, and tried to gather it up, only Sir Hugh stopped her. 'Let it be, Fay, you look beautiful so,' he says, worshipping her with his eyes. Oh, it was good to hear him; and then he looks up and sees me, and such a smile comes to his face. Oh, we understood each other." But to all this Jean turned a deaf ear, only when her mistress had finished, but not a moment before, she answered crossly, how was the tea-supper to be ready for the gentry if folks hindered her with their clavers, at which hint Mrs. Duncan, judging which way the wind blew, prudently withdrew.

But the moment the door closed on her mistress, Jean sat down, and throwing her rough apron over her head, had a good cry.

"Woman-angel indeed," she sobbed, "and how am I to bide without herself and the bairn, and they the verra light of the house—as the saying is?"

But Jean's grief did not hinder long. The fowls were done to a turn, and the rashers of ham grilled to a delicate brown; the tea-supper, always an institution at the Manse, looked a most inviting meal, with piles of oat-cake, freshly baked scones, and other bread stuff, the best silver tea-pot hooded in its satin cosy, and the kettle singing on its brass tripod.

Sir Hugh looked on at the preparations with the zest of a hungry traveller as he sat in the old minister's arm-chair talking to Fergus; but every moment his eyes turned expectantly to the door. The young Scotchman smiled as he patted Nero, for he knew their guest was only giving him scant attention.

"I hope Aunt Jeanie is content with 'the brutal husband' now," he thought, with a chuckle of amusement. "I wonder what my lady is doing all this time."

My lady had been extremely busy. First she had put up the hair that baby Hugh's naughty little fingers had pulled down; then she had gone in quest of a certain dress that reposed at the top of one of the trunks. Janet had insisted on packing it, but she had never found an opportunity of wearing it. It was one of those dainty, bewildering combinations of Indian muslin and embroidery and lace that are so costly and seductive; and when Fay put it on, with a soft spray of primroses, she certainly looked what Fergus called her, "Titania, queen of all the fairies."

Both the men absolutely started when this brilliant little vision appeared in the homely Manse parlor. Fergus clapped his big hands softly together and said "Ech sirs!" under his breath; but Sir Hugh, as he placed a chair for her, whispered in Fay's ear, "I am afraid I have fallen in love with my own wife"—and it was delicious to hear Fay's low laugh in answer.

What a happy evening that was; and when, some two or three hours later, Fay stood in the moonlight watching Hugh go down the road on his way to the Inn, for there was no room for him in the Manse, the parting words were ringing in her ears, "Good-night, my dear one, and dream of me."

Ah, they were happy tears that Jean's woman-angel shed by her boy's cot that night; what prayers, what vows for the future went up from that pure young heart, that at last tasted the joy of knowing itself beloved.

As for Hugh, a waking dream seemed to banish sleep from his eyes. He could see it all again—the green sunshiny hollow, and the shining pool—a little listless figure standing under the silver birch. A tremulous voice breaks the silence—"oh, Hugh, I tried so hard to be lost, do not be angry with me"——No, no, he will not go back to that. Stay, he is in the Manse parlor—the door opens—there is Titania in her spring dress, all smiles and blushes; his Wee Wifie is transformed into the queen of all the fairies. "God bless her, and make me worthy of her love," he thinks fervently, as he [illegible] and words; and with that brief prayer he slept.

Fay would willingly have remained for a few days with her friends at the Manse; she wanted to show Hugh all her favorite haunts, and to make him better acquainted with the good Samaritans who had so generously sheltered her; but Hugh was anxious to have his wife to himself and to get over the awkwardness of the return home. He would bring her back in the autumn he promised her; and with that Fay consoled poor Jean.

As for Fergus, he had reason to bless Aunt Jeanie's hospitality; for Sir Hugh overwhelmed the inhabitants of the Manse with liberal tokens of his gratitude—Aunt Jeanie, Fergus, Jean, even pretty Lilian Graham, reaped the effect of English munificence. Fay had carte blanche to buy anything or everything she thought suitable. Silk dresses, furs, books, and a telescope—long the ambition of the young minister—all found their way to the manse; not to mention the princely gift that made the young couple's path smooth for many a year to come. Want of generosity had never been a Redmond failing. Hugh's greatest pleasure was to reward the people who had sheltered his lost darling.

It was a painful moment for Hugh's proud nature when he first crossed the threshold of his old Hall, with Fay looking shy and downcast beside him, but Fay's simplicity and childishness broke the brief awkwardness; for the moment she saw Mrs. Heron's comely face she threw her arms round her neck with a little sob, and there was not a dry eye among the assembled servants when she said in her clear young voice, "Oh, how glad I am to be amongst you all again! Was it not good of my husband to bring me back? You must all help me to make up to him for what he has suffered."

"It was too much for the master," observed Ellerton afterwards; "he just turned and bolted when my lady said that—a man does not care to make a fool of himself before his servants; he would have stood by her if he could, but his feelings were too much for him, and you see he knew that he was to blame."

But Fay would allow nothing of the kind, when she followed him into the library, and saw him sitting with his face hidden on his folded arms, and the evening sunshine streaming on his bowed figure.

Fay stood looking at him for a moment, and then she quietly drew his head to her shoulder—much as though he were baby Hugh, and wanted her motherly consolation.

"My darling husband," she whispered, "I know it is all my fault, but you have forgiven me—you must not let me make you unhappy."

"Oh," he said bitterly, "to think I have brought my wife to this that she should need to apologise to her own servants. But then they all know you are an angel."

But she would not let him talk like this. What were his faults to her—was he not her husband? If he had ill-used her, would she not still have clung to him? "Dear, it is only because of your goodness and generosity that I am here now," she said, kissing his hand; "you need not have looked for me, you know;" and then she made him smile by telling him of Ellerton's quaint speeches, and after that he let himself be consoled.

Years afterwards he told her that the days that followed their return home were their real honeymoon, and she believed him, for they were never apart.

Bonny Bess hailed her mistress with delight, and Fay resumed her old rides and drives; only her husband was always with her. Hugh found out, too, that her clear intelligence enabled her to enter into all his work, and after that he never carried out a plan without consulting her; so that Fay called herself the busiest and happiest little woman in the world.

And what of Margaret?

In one of the most crowded courts of the East End of London there is a Sister who is known by the name of "Our Sister," though many patient, high-souled women belonging to the same fraternity work there too.

But "Our Sister" is, par excellence, the favorite, from the crippled little road-sweeper who was run over in Whitechapel Road to the old Irishwoman who sold oranges by day and indulged in free fights with others of her sex at night. "And the Heavens be her bed, for she is a darlint and an angel," old Biddy would say; and it would be "tread on the tail of my coat"—for it was an Irish quarter—if any man or boy jostled "Our Sister" ever so lightly.

"Our Sister" used to smile at the fond credulity and blind worship of these poor creatures. She was quite unconscious that her pale, beautiful face, bending over them in sickness, was often mistaken for the face of an angel. "Will there be more like you up yonder?" exclaimed one poor girl, a Magdalene dying, thank God, at the foot of the Cross; "if so, I'll be fine and glad to go."

"What do they do without you up there, honey?" asked another, an old negro woman whose life had been as black as her skin, "they will be wanting you bery much, I'm thinking;" and little Tim, dying of his broken bones, whispered as "Our Sister" kissed him, "I am wishing you could die first, Sister, and then it would be first-rate, seeing you along with the gentry at the Gate;" for, to Tim's ignorant mind, the gentry of heaven were somewhat formidable. "And what must I say to them, plase your honor? when they come up and says 'Good morning, Tim; but if Sister were along of them she would say, 'It is only Tim, and he never learnt manners nohow.'"

Raby would come down sometimes, bringing his wife with him, and talk to Margaret about her work.

"You are very happy, dear," he said one day to her; "I have often listened to your voice, and somehow it sounds satisfied."

"Yes," she returned quietly, "quite satisfied. Does that sound strange, Raby? Oh, how little we know what is good for us. Once I thought Hugh's love was everything, but I see now I was wrong. I suppose I should have been like other women if I had married him; but I should not have tasted the joy I know now. Oh, how I love my children—dirty, degraded, sinful as they are; how I love to spend myself in their service. God has been good to us, and given us both what He knew we wanted," and Raby's low "Amen" was [illegible]

There was one who would willingly have shared Margaret's work, and that was Evelyn Selby; but her place was in the world's battlefield, and she kept to her post bravely.

Fern, in her perfect happiness, often thought tenderly of the girl to whose noble generosity she owed it all; but for some years she and Evelyn saw little of each other. Fern often heard of her visits to the cottage where her mother and Fluff lived. She and Mrs. Trafford had become great friends. When Evelyn could snatch an hour from her numerous engagements, she liked to visit the orphanage where Mrs. Trafford worked. Some strange unspoken sympathy had grown up between the girl and the elder woman.

Evelyn's brave spirit and dauntless courage had carried her through a trial that would have crushed a weaker nature. Her life was an uncongenial one. Often she sickened of the hollow round of gaiety in which Lady Maltravers passed her days; but she would not waste her strength by complaint.

But by and by, when she had lost the first freshness of her youth, and people had begun to say that Miss Selby would never marry now, Hedley Power crossed her path, and Evelyn found that she could love again.

Mr. Power was very unlike the bright-faced young lover of her youth. He was a grey-haired man in the prime of middle-age, with grave manners, and a quiet thoughtful face—very reticent and undemonstrative; but Evelyn did well when she married him, for he made his wife a happy woman.

"Evelyn is absurdly fond of Hedley," Lady Maltravers would say; "but then he spoils her, and gives her [illegible] way in everything." Every one thought it was a pity that they had no children, but Evelyn never owned that she had wish ungratified. She contented herself with lavishing her affection on Erle's two boys. To them Aunt Evelyn was a miracle of loveliness and kindness; and the children of the orphanage had reason to bless the handsome lady who drove down often to see them.

"I do think Evelyn is happy now," Fern said one day to Erle, when they had encountered Evelyn and her husband in the Row.

"Of course she is," he would answer; "much happier than if she had married your humble servant. Hedley Power is just the man for her. Now, dear [illegible] must go down to the House, for Hugh and I are on committee;" and the young Member ran lightly downstairs, whistling as he went, after the fashion of Erle Huntingdon.

Yes, Hugh Redmond represented his county now, and Fay had her house in town, where her little fair-haired son and daughters played with Erle's boys in the Square gardens.

The young Lady Redmond would have been the fashion, but Fay was too shy for such notoriety, and was quite content with her husband's admiration. And well she might be, for the face that Hugh Redmond loved best on earth was the face of his Wee Wifie.

FINIS.

The Mexican Government has granted 55,000,000 acres of land to a company for colonization purposes.

BALL-PLAYING BLIND BOYS.

A Remarkable Scene Described by an Eminent Educator.

(C. M. Woodward in American Teacher.)

When I was in Louisville, Ky., a while ago I visited the Institution for the Blind. While walking across the grounds I saw some boys under the trees playing with a ball and bat. I asked, "What boys are those?" "They are blind boys," said the Superintendent. "But what are they doing?" said I, thinking there must be some mistake. When he told me that the blind boys regularly played ball I could hardly believe him, and begged that I might be allowed to see them play. He said the boys would play after dinner for my special benefit. Five or six of the best players were to play, and I believe that all but two of them were stone blind. The two could only see large objects, like the trunk of a tree, a man or a gravel walk. I do not think they could see a ball on the ground or in the air.

They took turns at the bat, and each one was anxious to make his bases. Their way of pitching and catching was this: The pitcher stood about six paces from the batter, while the catcher sat squarely on the ground immediately behind the bat. When all were ready the pitcher would count, "One, two, three," and gently toss the ball. The batter would, at just the proper moment, swing his bat, and the catcher would spread out his hands and feet to stop the ball. He seemed to hear the ball as it passed the batter (and it generally did) and struck the ground, and it was most surprising to see him catch it in his arms on the first bound, and yet perfectly blind! If he failed to stop the ball he would pursue it on his hands and feet as spry as a dog and almost as keen on its track. Either he could hear the ball roll along the grass, or he could judge from the nature of the surface and the known speed of the ball just how it would roll. His hands would sweep the ground with great rapidity, and when he had the ball he would jump on his feet and rush for the home base.

With the exception of the home base, all the bases were trunks of large shade trees. I was astonished to see how rapidly the boys could run. They just flew over the ground, making a great stamping on the smooth earth until they were within five or six feet of a base, and then they would feel up to it. Not once did they run against a tree, though it made me shudder to see how near they came to doing so. I suppose they knew when they were near a tree by hearing the echo of their steps. Occasionally the batter would make a good hit; then all hands but the runner went in search of the ball. As soon as he had made his run he would join in the hunt. They always started off in the right direction, and did not hunt in each other's tracks. Once the superintendent helped them find a ball that went some fifty yards, but generally they found it themselves. Though the game was played for my benefit the well-worn turf gave abundant proof of the fondness of the boys for the sport during their hours of play.

Expensive Christmas Gifts.

Nashville American's New York Letter Somebody showed me an ostrich feather fan in a Broadway store yesterday. Its sticks were of chosen pieces of mother of pearl inlaid with gold. On each was set a tiny gold rose, and in the heart of each rose sparkled a diamond. The ostrich plumes were thick and heavy, such feathers as one seldom sees. Each was chosen expressly for its position, and the whole made the daintiest white toy that ever a woman played with. It was to cost $1,000, and was meant, I was told, for a Christmas gift to Mrs. George Gould. It was ordered by a friend of the family or by one of the younger Gould boys, and will outshine anything in Pauline Hall's famous collection. People not so rich as the Goulds, plain, ordinary every-day millionaires, are putting a year's income for many hard-working folk into similar toilet trifles. I have seen within a week an umbrella which is to belong to a woman unknown to fame, but which has eaten up money at an extraordinary rate. It has a cover of silk, hand woven by a Brooklyn man who alone possesses the secret of its peculiar sheen. Its handle is a long hook, overlaid with oxidized silver, upon which are set curios of all sorts, each in its way an artistic gem. There are daintily cut cameos, old gold coins, snakes outlined in rubies, a toad in emeralds, a head of Bacchus etched in silver—every odd notion that fancy can devise, all to make an umbrella such as no woman carried before. A jewelled watch is set in the end of the stick, and the price is counted in the hundreds.

John Wesley's Pulpit for Sale.

The freehold Episcopal chapel in West street, close to Shaftesbury avenue, which connects Oxford street with Charing Cross, is to be sold by auction on Dec. 15th.

There is a record that about the year A. D. 1700 it was built on the site of a former Episcopal chapel, which had been used for the performance of divine worship in Irish.

John Wesley's diary contains many references to his ministry in West street chapel from Oct. 29th, 1743, when he preached his first sermon there, to Feb., 1790, when he made his last record about preaching there.

Whitfield, Romaine and Fletcher (of Madeley) were other equally gifted and favorite divines of the last century who, on various occasions, preached in West street chapel.

Besides the church pulpit and fittings there remains in the vestry the portable pulpit which Wesley was accustomed to use when preaching in the open air.—London Times.

The Way With Most of Them.

Wife (pleadingly)—I'm afraid, George, you do not love me as well as you used to do.

Husband—Why?

W—Because you always let me get up to light the fire.

H—Nonsense, my love! Your getting up to light the fire makes me love you the more.

Still Uncertain.

"Go," she said, and inquire how Mrs. X. is this morning. And if she is dead," she added, "ask when the funeral is to be." Mrs. X. is better this morning," was the report, "and they cannot tell when the funeral will be."

What the Poets Say about Christmas.

With trembling fingers did we weave
The holly 'round the Christmas hearth;
A rainy cloud possessed the earth
And sadly fell on Christmas eve.
Tennyson.

Shepherds at the grange,
Where the babe was born,
Sang with many a change
Christmas carols until morn.
Longfellow.

Be merry all, be merry all,
With holly dress the festive hall,
Prepare the song, the feast, the ball
To welcome Merry Christmas.
Spencer.

It is the Christmas time,
And up and down 'twixt heaven and earth
In the glorious grief and solemn mirth,
The shining angels climb.
D. M. Mulock.

This is the month, and this the happy morn,
Wherein the Son of Heaven's eternal King,
Of wedded maid, and virgin mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;
For so the holy sages once did sing,
That He our deadly forfeit should release,
And with His Father work us a perpetual peace.
Milton.

BYGONES.

(Charles Mackay in "Temple Bar.")

Ye doubts and fears that once we knew,
Ye bitter words, of anger born;
Ye thoughts unkind, and deeds untrue,
Ye feelings of mistrust and scorn;
Against your memory we rebel—
We have outlived your foolish day;
No longer in our hearts you dwell—
Bygones! Bygones! pass away!

But oh, ye joyous smiles and tears,
Endearments fond, and pleasures past,
Ye hopes of life's first budding years,
Ye loves that seemed too bright to last—
Ye charities and words of peace,
Affection's sunshine after rain;
Oh never let your blessings cease,
Bygones! Bygones! come again.

Not Altogether Friendless.

The small child is to the front again. He had been naughty. The naughtiness of youth and the naughtiness of age are widely different.

"If you do that nobody will love you," the tender mother told him.

"Tain't so. I know one who'll like me," he answered.

"Who?"

"Satan. He likes the bad ones."—San Francisco Chronicle.

An Unnatural Mother.

"I believe I've got the meanest ma in Texas."

"What did she do?"

"Just before Christmas she put me into long trousers. She did that so I would have to wear short stockings that wouldn't cost much to fill. What do you say to that for meanness? She'd make a nice stepmother, she would."—Texas Siftings.

Adding Insult to Injury.

Mr. Oldboy (a bachelor)—It's all over, Gussy, my boy. Miss Smith has refused me.

Gussy—I suppose she let you down easy by promising to be a sister to you?

Mr. Oldboy (bitterly)—No, b' thunder; she said she would be a daughter to me!

"Without Point or Epigram."

Sheridan used to pretend that he put Law down effectually. "When Law said, 'Pray, Mr. Sheridan, do answer my question without point or epigram,' I retorted, 'You say true, Mr. Law; your questions are without point or epigram.'"

What She Would Call Him.

Young Mr. Cilly—I say, Cousin Amanda, would you—aw—call me a dude?

Amanda—No, dear; just a little harmless dudelet, that's all.

The Year of Jubilee.

The Prince of Wales is delighted with John L. Sullivan. And Sullivan is pleased with the Prince. This is a year of international amity.—Athens Banner Watchman.

Miss E. M. Voth, a young woman, who some time ago took up a claim near Aberdeen, Dak., recently rescued from death a young man who had been caught in a blizzard on the prairie and had taken refuge in a deserted claim shanty near her farm.

—Anxious father—"I wish you would tell me what to do with my boy. He is wilful, disobedient and surly. I dress him down with a horsewhip a dozen times a week, and sometimes lock him in the coal-house for half a day to discipline him, but it does no good. He comes out as defiant as ever. What does such a boy need?" The Rev. Mr. Surplice (decidedly)—"He needs a change of fathers."

THE Shoe and Leather Reporter points out that the feet can be kept warmer in cold weather by wearing a shoe with a light sole than a thick one; with the former the foot has a chance to work, thereby keeping up a circulation; this, of course, applies only when the weather is dry. But when it is wet and rubbers are necessary, it is best to wear a single-soled shoe inside. In the summer the thick sole should be worn, for it keeps the heat from striking through to the foot. This is all so contrary to the preconceived opinions of the public that it is doubtful whether it will receive much credence, but it is the fact, all the same.

A traveller, recently returned from a trip to New Mexico, says that in a little valley in the south of the territory he saw ripe apples, green apples and apple blossoms all growing in the same orchard.

Says the Boston Journal: A picturesque street scene is made by the yoke of pure white oxen drawing the advertising cart. As the farmer in frock and broad brimmed hat guides the slow beasts along the pavements a characteristic bit of the country draws many affectionate glances from the city crowd.

In an envelope recently opened at Washington was a $5 bill, which the sender said had been exposed to a contagious disease, and, although fumigated, had better receive careful handling. When the young woman who received it read the warning, it is told, she dropped the bill with a scream, which brought fifty other young women in the division crowding around her desk.

The fair at the Masonic Temple, New York, in aid of the erection of an asylum for aged Freemasons and the widows and orphans of deceased members of the fraternity, has now closed. The result is that over $70,000 in cash has been deposited in bank in favor of the building fund, while promised donations, and outstanding claims in connection with the fair, will bring the total amount very nearly to $100,000.

THE OLD MUSICIAN.

A Christmas Incident.

Ushered in by a heavy fall of snow, at last Christmas Eve had come, after long and anxious waiting on the part of the little ones throughout the city; and even the older people welcomed it with feelings of pleasure as they saw the hopes of their own youth revived again in the faces of the children, bright with thoughts of the morrow. Happy fathers and mothers, laden with presents, were hurrying homeward; their purses were perhaps almost empty, but their arms were full, and their hearts were fuller yet. Now and again, far away through the falling snow, would be heard the faint but clear tinkle of the chiming sleigh bells, then a rush of horses, a flurry of snow and a peal of silvery music dying away in the distance. The markets were filled with people buying provisions for the holidays. The tradesmen were busier than they had ever been before. Joyous laughter kept breaking forth from the groups surrounding the gay shop windows, as some object more amusing than the rest caught their eyes. Every one seemed to be full of enjoyment. No one, as he looked at the others, could help involuntarily voicing the thought, "All Christendom must be happy at this time." For there is scarcely ever a joy existing in this world without a sorrow to equal it; great indeed is the burden, therefore, when it falls on a few saddened hearts to counter-balance the happiness of a city. So it was in this case.

In the attic room of a many-storied tenement, in the humbler part of the great city, sat an aged man. It was a poor little room. There was no furniture in it, unless the little three-legged wooden stool on which he sat, or the black case on the one shelf that had not been burnt for fuel, might be termed furniture. Off one corner of the roof the rafters had been swept away in the storm of the previous night, and the snow was slowly drifting in along the bare floor. There were holes in the window panes; some he had filled with straw from his bed, but now there was no more straw, and the wintry wind blew keenly through the others. It tossed his long white hair over his forehead. He shivered, and drawing his ragged coat closer round him, he bent forward on the rude stool toward the meagre fire of coke. His face, sad and careworn, was ghastly thin and drawn with the pangs of hunger, for "Old Franz," as the neighbors had nick-named him, had not tasted food for days. Down stairs in the flat below he could hear the voices of the children, as they gaily hung up their stockings, well-darned to hold carefully the presents that Father Christmas might give them. He heard their childish prattle and sighed, as memory wandered back to his own early days in the dear old home in the country. Nine, 10 and 11 rolled out the city clocks, and gradually all the sounds ceased except, now and then, the muffled footfalls of a late traveller hastening over the snow-covered sidewalk to his home. The old man dozed. His dreams were sorrowful for a tear glistened for a moment in his eye, and then trickled over his wrinkled face; even while he slept his sorrows were with him. The fire went out, but the wind grew bitterly cold and the old man moved uneasily in his sleep; he moaned once or twice, and sometimes he would mutter indistinctly.

Thus the night passed and the morning came. Christmas morning! and the children were joyfully examining the toys and playthings that Santa Claus had brought them in the night. Still 'Old Franz' dreamed on. The sunbeams creeping farther and farther over the floor made the room feel warmer, and as at last they played over his face, he smiled in his sleep and awoke. The smile changed as he remembered he was starving. He rose up with difficulty, and immediately fell back exhausted; he waited a little and then, slowly rising, he staggered to the shelf and took down his last, his only friend, his violin. For Franz was a musician; ay, he had been a great master once, but for years his hands had trembled so much to play, and he had been forced to teach for his daily bread. And now his pupils had left him; they said he was too old even to teach. Poor Franz! He held the violin tightly in his arms as though he thought some one would take it from him. "Shall I sell thee for bread, my own? Shall I beg?" he murmured. "No! No! 'Old Franz' may be poor, but he would rather die than become a beggar, and he will never part with thee." Then his mind wandered. The past came before him. He hugged more closely his violin to his breast. It was for love of music that he had left the happy farm home of his boyhood. It was for music he had braved his father's anger and the tears of his mother, and had gone to the great city to had suffered so much. Perhaps there is a moment in the life of an unsuccessful man so full of sadness and of joy, so filled with a longing that is strangely sweet and yet so full of the most intense regret as that in which he reviews the years that are told. He sees again the triumphs of his boyhood; the well-earned prizes of his college life; he had worked hard to gain them, and, as he received them from the hands of his old masters, what hopes did he not form, what ambitions did he not cherish, what fame did he not see crowning his after life? Ah! all that is passed now; the hopes were soon blighted, almost in their youth, never were the ambitions fulfilled, the fame always fled away before his eager grasp. True he can remember some of his companions, at how few they are, who have attained the goal of their wishes; they have indeed achieved success; but for him life has been a failure. In the years of his past can see only disappointment succeeding disappointment, misfortune rushing on misfortune; once more, as long ago, can hear the bells ringing in each new year full of promise for the future. Ah! they were also tolling the burial of the hopes of the year before. Franz thought of the past. He remembered again his early struggles; the old master that had had faith in his genius; his brilliant successes won at last after many years.

With his shaking hand he placed the violin to his shoulder, and drew the bow across its strings. The tone was rich and pure. His hand gained strength. Again he was before great audiences; again bouquets were showered upon him; again he heard their plaudits and he bowed his head to thank them. The bells of the city churches began to ring for the morning service. He started and murmured "It is Christmas." He thought of Christmas on the old farm, of his gray-haired father, of his tender, loving mother, of her teachings, of the holy service in the quaint old church, he was happy then but now—he bowed his head, overwhelmed with anguish. There comes a time in our lives when we near the final goal; behind us stretches the past with its mingled shadow and sunlight, but round us the mists of the evening are gathered, the shades of darkness deepen, sorrow after sorrow falls upon us with crushing force, the gloom increases, the light fades away and the night ensues, the darkness is intense, black heavens frown upon us, earthly supports give way beneath us and we feel we are sinking. In that moment, if never before, we remember our Creator. Franz thought of his God, and bowed his head in prayer. Presently he took up his violin and began to play again. The neighbors in the rooms below stopped their gossip to listen.

"It is the angels," whispered the children.

"It must be 'Old Franz,' said one of the men.

"Hush," said another. And silently one by one they stole up the stairs and stood with listening ears at the door of the garret room. They held their breath as the music, rising upward, swelled into an anthem of praise. It seemed like the morning carols of the birds returning thanks to their Maker that the day had come. Then the melody slowly died away into a wail of anguish, and as it rose again more softly they thought they heard a sorrowful child sobbing itself quietly to sleep in its Father's bosom. It ceased and all was still.

There were tears in the eyes of the neighbors as they opened the door and looked in. The old master leaned forward. His head fell upon his violin. "He is sleeping," they whispered to each other. Ay! they were right. "Old Franz" was sleeping—forever. And presently the choir in the neighboring church began to chorus the Christmas anthem, "Peace on earth! Good will to Men." It was his requiem. ERNEST L.

A Difference in Dudes.

Fashionable Americans are often reproached with Anglomania, but the dude is occasionally capable of an original idea. It would never occur to an English dandy to wear an insect round his neck with a gold chain attached to one of his legs. Yet here in New York you will sometimes see a Mexican beetle crawling lazily over an expanse of shirt-front. The Mexican beetle is a large creature, with yellow head and back, and black legs. He was offered to me in a shop the other day for $5, having enjoyed two or three days of freedom on the floor. "Is he expensive to keep?" I inquired. "Not at all," was the reply "Give him a little sugar about once every two months, and he'll be quite happy. This insect has an affectionate disposition and never bites.—St. James Gazette.

A Mayor in a New Role.

The following letter, addressed to "Santa Claus, City Hall," found its way into Mayor Hewitt's official mail in New York

DEAR SANTA CLAUS,—I am writing to you to tell you that my sister Maggie is very sick, and she says that you sent her a dollar, and she wants a big French doll and a stocking full of sugar plums and candy; and Santa Claus will you please send me the game of Chit Chat and a stocking full of sugar plums and candy, and send my sister Nellie a doll and a bank and a stocking full of sugar plums and candy, and my brother John wants a hobby-horse and a velocipede and a stocking full of sugar plums and candy. My name is Mamie Lyons, No. 8 Gansevoort street.

Before the Battle.

Fogg—Who was the man that just bowed to me, do you know?

Blogg—Which? The one who is raising his hat to that servant girl in the doorway opposite?

Fogg—Yes; who is he?

Blogg—Why, he is one of the new candidates for alderman. There he goes, shaking hands with a policeman on the corner.

Her Standby.

Happy man (to widow of three husbands)—Whom shall I ask to perform the ceremony, darling? That matter, of course, I shall leave to you.

Widow (hesitatingly)—Well, dear, I haven't any very particular preference, although I've always had the Rev. Mr. Goodman.—New York Sun.

Go One Voyage to Learn.

Mrs. Honeydove—Dear me. I can't see what can keep Charles out so late! Here it is 11 o'clock. He's a regular slave to his business.

Mrs. Twicemarried (pityingly)—That's what I thought of my first husband, dear; but the second knows it's always best to get home by dinner time.—Judge.

Well Supplied With Grandparents.

A son of Mr. William Strader, of Morrisburg, is burdened with grandparents. He has five living grandfathers, the eldest of the five being Mr. Strader, of Matilda, aged 101 years. He has six living grandmothers, the eldest of these being Mrs. Reddick, of Williamsburg, aged 93 years.

A Female Kilrain.

A Galena grocer named Scott offered to let a woman named Taylor strike him with a codfish for 25 cents. It was all a joke, you know, but she paid the money, gave the codfish a whirl or two, and when it hit Grocer Scott it broke his jaw and tore off part of his ear.—Lee County (Ill.) Times.

Not Dimmed by Time.

Caller, to little Bobby—Bobby, what makes your eyes so bright?

Bobby (after a little thought)—I des it's tause I haint had 'em in very long."

—The War Cry reports "a wonderful defection from the devil" at Hamilton.

—Agent (to man at the door)—"Is the head of the house in sir?" Man at the door—"Yes, she's in. What do you want o' her?"

BUFFALO BILL ABROAD!

A Little Love Affair—What the Cowboy Think of It.

The success of "our own" Buffalo Bill—W. F. Cody—in England is very gratifying to his thousands of admirers on this side.

There was more truth than many imagined in his reply to the inquiry:

"What are you doing in England?"

"Chiefly playing poker with Duchesses."

The English nobility quickly "cottoned to" Buffalo Bill because they recognized that he belonged to a higher order than their own—Nature's nobility. Despite his wild life he early managed to acquire an education and the polish which makes him easy even in royal society.

His polish is the bitter fruit, it is said, of a young love experience. When a young man on the plains, wild, woolly and unkempt in appearance and character, he fell in love with a dashing little school teacher. Full of pluck and faith in himself, he proposed to her. She laughed at him and he—collapsed.

After a time he braced up, bought some books and began to study.

His defeat proved his victory. The girl was his mascot, and his successes are due to her.

Magnificent specimens of manhood though they be "Bill's boys" are not perfection. Under date: "Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., London, Sept. 19th, 1887," D. W. Shoemaker, of the Cowboy Band, writes: "Some weeks ago I was suffering from great disorder of the liver and kidneys and general prostration. I was forced to quit work and take my bed. I called in a physician, who only afforded temporary relief. A friend induced me to take Warner's safe cure, which afforded almost instant relief, and after taking three bottles, I find myself in as good health as at any time in my life."

Two other members of the Wild West Show, Mawe Beardsley, pony express rider, and Jim Mitchell, a cowboy, add to this statement of Shoemaker's, that in their long experience on the plains, from change of water, climate and mode of life, and severe riding, they became subject to liver and kidney diseases, and they have found a sure remedy for these troubles in Warner's safe cure. Mawe Beardsley says: "I constantly recommend it to my friends."

Buffalo Bill has pluck and courage and hard sense, and not only controls all the wild elements that make up the Wild West Show, but controls himself.

His experience as a scout makes him wary, discreet and shrewd. He quickly learns the best way to secure results, and, like a true man, has no prejudices against anything that proves its merits.

Buffalo Bill is so popular in England he may come home a "Sir William." But if not he will probably enjoy himself quite as well, having secured a fortune ample enough for all his wants, title or no title.

A Baby in the House is the source of much sunshine and joy, brightening many a dark cloud and lightening many a heavy load—but joys continual abide only in a healthy body. The Creator with great wisdom has distributed over the earth vegetable remedies for every ill of human kind. This marvellous Laboratory reveals its secrets to man only by long and [illegible] attained greater success than Dr. R. V. Pierce: nor devised for suffering humanity a greater production than his "Golden Medical Discovery," the unfailing remedy for consumption in its earlier stages, as well as for chronic nasal catarrh, scrofula, tumors and all blood disorders.

A Pedler Puzzled.

Pedler—Does Mr. Smith live here? Mrs. S.—Yes. Pedler—Is his wife in? Mrs. S.—Certainly, I am Knott Smith's wife. Pedler—Well, is his wife in? Mrs. S.—Certainly, I am Knott Smith's wife. Pedler—Who said you was? Where is his wife? I want to see her. Mrs. S.—I am Mrs. Knott Smith. Pedler—Ah, yes, you are Mrs. Knott Smith, are you not? Beg pardon.

"That Miss Jones is a nice-looking girl isn't she?"

"Yes, and she'd be the belle of the town if it wasn't for one thing."

"What's that?"

"She has catarrh so bad it is unpleasant to be near her. She has tried a dozen things and nothing helps her. I am sorry, for I like her, but that doesn't make it any less disagreeable for one to be around her."

Now if she had used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy there would have been nothing of the kind said, for it will cure every time.

Would Rather Have Her Sister.

A Scotch Presbyterian minister who married a couple of his rustic parishioners felt exceedingly disconcerted on his asking the bridegroom if he were willing to take the woman for his wife by his scratching his head and saying, "Ay, I'm wullin' but I'd rather hae her sister."—The Thistle.

Have You Thought About It?

Pain is one of the sure things of life, and it becomes then a most important question to have at hand the quickest and most efficient remedy. Polson's Nerviline cannot fail to cure cramps, toothache, neuralgia, headache and all pain, internal or external. Nerviline is the most perfect combination ever offered to the public for the relief of pain. It will not cost you much to try it, for you can buy at any drug store for 10 cents a trial bottle, which will convince you of its mighty pain relieving power.

More Ways Than One.

The City Clerk of Ashland, Wis., shot a deer and wished to send it to some friends at a distance, but the express company refused to receive it. He thereupon placed the deer in a cheap pine coffin, marked it "John Deer, deceased, aged 1," and shipped as a corpse.

—"Know all men (and women) by these presents"—— that Christmas is at hand.

—Mr. Fred. Carling, son of the Minister, is down with a severe attack of typhoid fever.

Ah, Pat, my friend, they tell me,
You've donned the matrimonial chain;
All fools are thus not dead, I see,
"No, sur," said Pat, "you still remain."

In the Brampton branch of the Central Bank over $180,000 belonging to the people of the place is locked up.

An Extraordinary Phenomenon.

No other term than the above would apply to the woman who could see her youthful beauty fading away without a pang of regret. Many a woman becomes prematurely old and haggard because of functional derangement. What a pity that all such do not know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will restore their organs to a normal state, and make them youthful and beautiful once more! For the ills to which the daughters of Eve are peculiarly liable the "Prescription" is a sovereign remedy. It is the only medicine sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be returned. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

A Long Ten Years.

Miss Prime—Philosophers disagree as to which period of life seems the longest to mankind. What is your opinion, doctor?

Doctor (meditatively)—Well, it varies. In women, for instance, the longest generally is between 29 and 30. I know in my wife's case ten years elapsed between her 29th and 30th birthday.—Judge.

Gout, Rheumatism and No Dog.

"How is it you have so many young men call on you?" asked a jealous girl.

"Because," was the reply, "father has the gout in one foot and the rheumatism in the other; besides, we don't keep a dog."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets

The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache. Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2909 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

DON'L, 1-8

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JAN. 5, 1888.

INCORPORATION.

Incorporation is a popular theme for discussion in Flesherton now-a-days. And it becomes more popular every day. Time was when this was not so, and not so long ago either. Men who regarded the very idea of such a thing with suspicion twelve months ago, are now thinking seriously about it. And the question naturally arises—

Why this sudden change?

Well, there are several reasons, and we have taken the pains to jot down a few, which are hereby submitted to the public for perusal and consideration.

(1) The precedent established by our sister village to the South, Dundalk, and the energetic move now being made by our ambitious neighbor to the North, Markdale.

(2) Many Flesherton ratepayers are of opinion, that the amount of money expended in the place by the Township is not proportionate to the sum of money paid into the treasury by the citizens.

(3) It is believed that incorporation would put it within the power of the villagers to improve the facilities nature has bestowed with such a lavish hand upon Flesherton.

(4) That incorporation would add to the dignity of the place, would tend to improve our sidewalk system, and offer inducements for the location of manufacturing industries.

(5) That the village would have a distinct voice in County Council legislation.

(6) That a suitable lock-up—not a big box—would be provided for the accommodation of offenders against the majesty of the law.

(7) That the village would be less hampered than it now is in the matter of improving leading public highways and in bettering its travelling facilities generally.

(8) That the interests of Flesherton would be of paramount importance—first, last and all the time—which would have a tendency to attract new business enterprises to the place.

There! We've produced no less than eight reasons in favor of incorporation, which will be sufficient for the present. Enough has been given to show that the agitation, now in its infancy, is more likely to grow than to diminish. But what is more likely to fan this little blaze into a fierce flame, is the rapidly growing feeling, that it is the great panacea for all the ills Flesherton is heir to. "Give us incorporation," said one gentleman, "and we'll show you what Flesherton can do; we'll wipe out the mistakes and blunders of the past as quick as you could say Jack Robinson!" "Ah! but, sir—the taxes, the taxes!" groans another. "Bah!" snorts a third, "you're an old—goose, sir! if it improves your property fifty per cent. what need you care if you have to pay a few paltry dollars into the town treasury!"

On the whole, however, a tide has set in in favor of the scheme, and it is useless to pretend to ignore it. It simply remains for those interested to discuss the question calmly and dispassionately. Let both sides of the scheme be fairly considered. It is a grave mistake to indulge in superficial reasoning or to jump at conclusions. Every objection should be weighed well; every argument advanced in favor of incorporation should be critically considered—from every possible standpoint. After having thoroughly analysed the subject, it is well to finally ask the question—Would the change be beneficial to the village as a whole? First, "be sure you are right, and then go ahead!"

We can easily lay claim to doing the business of this section for 25 miles around. having sold from Oct. 3rd, 1887, to Dec. 29th, 1887, eleven fine gold watches, thirty-two silver watches, and twenty-nine clocks, against another dealer's blow of twelve watches and sixteen clocks. There is no doubt about it, that the people will come to us to buy as they know they can do far better than elsewhere at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The Annual Public School Meeting of this section was held in the school room on Wednesday last, and as there were a few dissatisfied parties who would be pleased to have our school closed, merely for the purpose of saving a few cents. An attempt was made to elect Mr. James Buckingham as Trustee in place of Mr. W. Long, retiring. But the majority of the ratepayers being in favor of maintaining a good school and employing also a good teacher, turned out in force and elected Mr. D. K. Preston as Trustee by a large majority.

Our Municipal Elections on Monday resulted in electing J. Douglas, Reeve, by a majority of 37 over D. K. Preston. Deputy Reeve, A. McIntyre; Councillors, Hudson, Monaghan and Taylor.

One of our leading merchants is very anxious to trade his stock of goods for a farm, and thinks farming a very profitable business.

Our prophet says war in Europe is now inevitable and that it will extend to Maxwell But money will be plentiful.

Our new school teacher commenced his duties on Tuesday. We wish him every success and from recommends received we expect to receive entire satisfaction.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

The Methodist S. S. Anniversary was held on Wednesday the 26th ult., owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not as large as might have been. After tea came the literary program. Miss Hutchinson presided at the organ, speeches were delivered by Messrs. McQuay, Burton and Strongman. The dialogues, recitations and readings were generally well rendered. Proceeds about $30.

Miss M. Johnston and Mr. C. Russell, who have been attending the Owen Sound Collegiate Institute are spending the vacation with their parents here.

Mr. W. Hames is building a new house here opposite the Victoria cheese factory.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, of Creemore, are visiting at Mr. and Mrs. W. Ludlow's.

The Inistioge Division, Sons of Temperance will give an entertainment here on Friday, Jan. 6th, commencing at 7 o'clock. A good time is expected, as there is a select program for the occasion. Admission free.

TAMARAC.—A cold will often cause an irritation, dryness and soreness inside the throat. The first dose of Tamarac Elixir will afford relief.

Luxuriant Hair

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, converted my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Mrs. Geo. Bath, of Euphrasia, sold a turkey to a Thornbury merchant the other day, which weighed 26½ pounds.

Mr. Hugh Fraser, father of Mrs. Chas. Pye, of Clarksburg, was killed by a train in Chicago last night—Thornbury Standard.

Dr. James Kennedy, of Owen Sound, is dead, aged 64 years. He was born in Co. Armagh, Ireland. He was a Presbyterian in creed, a Reformer in politics, and a Prohibitionist in temperance.

George Small, of Riverview, was fooling with a revolver cartridge the other day, when it exploded and inflicted severe injuries on his head.

Two prominent Mt. Foresters, who were attending County Court at Guelph, were taken for burglars not long since. Surely they weren't newspaper men?—er—um—why, of course not!

A farmer drove into Markdale with his wife last Sunday, having on poultry and other produce for market. They were both surprised and astonished to see Markdale market so quiet, and returned home in disgust, not with the town but with themselves.—Standard.

There is discord in Markdale on account of the recent rather inexplicable educational revolution.

MARRIED.—By Rev. O. Edgelow, Church of England minister, Dundalk, Mr. Thos. Bannon, to Miss Maria Ann, daughter of Mr. Alfred Ward, both of Artemesia. THE ADVANCE tenders its congratulations.

Counterfeit 25 cent pieces are in circulation in Dundalk.

Mrs. Symington, wife of the late C.P.R. station agent at Dundalk, died at Galt on Tuesday week.

Division Court will be held monthly in Owen Sound in future.

Daniel Hamilton of Sydenham township, a young man 22 years of age, was kicked in the ribs by a horse belonging to James Buckly of Owen Sound. Two of his ribs were broken and it is feared he is also injured internally.

Mr. Briggs, of Collingwood, was splitting wood in that town one day recently, when his axe came in contact with a clothes line and bounced back against his head, inflicting a wound just above his eyes.

Mrs. D. T. N. Mitchell, of Collingwood, got a rusty sewing needle in her throat, while eating some baker's bread one morning last week. The needle was removed with some difficulty, although it nearly cost the lady her life.

On behalf of the Marine department, the Mayor and town Councillors of Collingwood recently presented Miss Marie Collins of that place with a beautiful gold locket and chain, for rescuing Mr. Manning Brown and his nephew from drowning in August last. The brave young

---

Our Watch Repair trade in increasing every day. Thirty-nine watches in to repair at the present time, and the people over twenty miles around come to get their work done at Russell's Flesherton, as they have proved by experience that is the only place to get them done properly.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED!

A Quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery.
JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

OWEN SOUND

Collegiate ✠ Institute

WILL open on MONDAY, 9TH JANUARY, 1888. Excellent Staff of Teachers. Inspector officially reports it the

× Best Equipped School in Ontario.— ×

Classes for First, Second and Third Class Certificates, Junior and Senior Matriculation with honors, and Law and Medical Examinations.

At the Examinations, 1887, all the University Matriculation Candidates were successful, one obtaining honors in all departments, and a proficiency scholarship of $100. The Candidates from this School obtained

The Largest number of Teacher's Certificates in the Province.

FEES—Winter Term, $2; Spring Term, $2.

Apply to
F. W. MERCHANT, M. A., Principal,
or D. R. DOBIE, Sec. Board of Education.
Owen Sound, Dec. 15th, 1887.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 5c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.,

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For? Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.
Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00	to 4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	74	to 0	78
Spring Wheat	0	74	0	78
Barley	0	55	0	70
Oats	0	34	0	35
Peas	0	57	0	57
Butter	0	17	0	17
Eggs, fresh	0	17	0	17
Potatoes mush	0	40	0	40
Pork	6	40	6	50
Hay, per ton	7	00	8	00
Hides	6	00	7	00
Wool		18		21
Sheepskins	0	40	0	56
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	7	0	8
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	25
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	50

W. BOOTH,

The Boss Barber,

FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next – door – to – Clayton's – Shoe – Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

R. CHLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed: we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland Maine

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—|—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Made of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, manic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the semen fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, arrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently tered. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send for address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a foretaste. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

"The Good Time Coming."

For the Advance.

It was a comical sight, which all the intervening years with its wear and tear of life have not obliterated from my memmory. In all the vivid freshness of the present, the past, becomes again a living reality. It was a temperance meeting to which I refer; it was held in our Town Hall—a large and somewhat gloomy building—in which justice was presumed to be dispensed to the lawless, though from the magistrate on the bench, to the legal fraternity in their pomp of wig and gown immediately before him, I fear there were times when very little mercy mingled with it.

John Damper Parks was the leading Temperance light in our town, he was a retired florist at the time I write. He stood nearly six feet high, with a slight stoop. He had an expansive forehead, long flowing white hair, a Roman nose, large shaggy eyebrows, beneath which his keen bright eyes shone like diamonds. Brother John Collins, was a slim dapper little man—a silk printer by trade—officiating on Sabbath as minister to a Baptist congregation at "Antioch Chapel." He had a bright pleasing face, which his gold-rimmed spectacles set off to advantage. He was so exceedingly neat, as to impress you with the idea that he had just stepped out of a hat box.

Joseph Blackburne was a short thick-set individual of alderman ic proportions. His hair stubbornly resisted cultivation, and in its general uprightness, bristled with suggestions of strong determination. William Wheatly was a peculiar specimen—slim, tall and awkward—a pale face with sharply defined cheek bones. When his long arms were at rest, the tips of his attenuated fingers reached his knee joints. With his frock coat closely buttoned, he was a model which any undertaker might well have envied.

On this occasion Bros. Park and Collins occupied the centre of the platform, with short Bro. Blackburn and long Bro. Wheatly on their right and left. Bro. Parks gave out a Temperance hymn, in which the audience—not having books—were unable to join. Bro. Blackburn casting an upward glance at a distant fly spot on the ceiling proceeded, in measured tones to "raise" the tune. Bro. Collins gave a few feeble notes interspersed with sundry side-glances at Bro. B., as the varied grace notes of the latter issued from his stentorian voice. Bro. Parks was not musically gifted, but the continuous hum of his one note, was heard at the farthest end of the hall. Bro. Wheatly clasped his hands behind him, and with a half-frightened look, added his quota of supulchural bass.

From a critical standpoint the singing was not a success, as an unsypmpathetic audience left it chiefly to the quartette on the platform. Bro. Collins followed in prayer which had a mollifying effect in quieting the audience for the speeches which followed.

I shall not pursue these friends further, my purpose is to give you an idea of my first introduction to the movement, and to show you the kind of men, who, under tremendous difficulties, in years gone by, began to stem the tide of the drink traffic.

While we gaze in wonder and amazement at the majesty and beauty of the gilded spire, we are apt to overlook the fact, that it owes all its stability to the rugged foundations hidden beneath the surface. Even so let us overlook the moral heriosm of the men, the fruit of whose labours we now enjoy—men who bravely stood in the breach—men who dared, when the stream of popular derision was against them, to stand true to their colors, who fought inch by inch for their vantage ground—men who only laid down their labors with their lives, of whom it may be truly said "these all died in Faith not having received the promise, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them."

They fell, but the work continued, being dead they yet speak, for their works do follow them. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." As in the natural so in the moral. The frail bodies of these noble men have long since mingled with the mother earth "but their souls are marching on" to the glorious position of the good time coming.

Yes, thank God, the good time is coming, darkness has covered the earth and gross darkness the people, yet the dawn is breaking. Long indeed, has the demon bound in fetters the victims of the bowl, long indeed has their "imprisoned spirits laid fast bound in sin and errors night," yet a clarion blast has sounded from sea to sea, swelling louder and stronger, wafting upon every breeze to every clime the question, Watchman what of the night? While from the lofty mountain top, reverberating across the valleys, no longer in prophetic vision but in glorious fruition comes the glad reply "The Morning Cometh."

The little one has become a thousand, and the small one a strong nation. The time was—and not many years since—when an abstainer was pointed out as a veritible crank, but the crank has kept turning, until the moral verdict of public opinion regards him as a benefactor of the race. Keep the crank turning, brethren, until the poor mulbry-nosed muddled brained cranks of the whiskey bottle are rescued from their thraldom and are again "clothed and in their right mind."

We speak of the dangers to which those noble men are exposed, who "go down to the sea in ship," and "who do business upon the great waters" we carefully inspect their craft, we see that they are duly provided with belts and life boat—we survey the ocean and on our charts, mark plain the dangerous and hidden reefs—we carefully locate the quicksands and the shallows—along our coast we erect the lighthouse, whose friendly beacon, shines out its welcomed light, alike in calmest night or blinding storm, so that in "the perils off" to which they are exposed, all help is given, that in safety they may reach "the desired haven."

What Philanthropy has done for the sailor, Temperance aided by Christian patriotism is doing for humanity in order to save the millions of moral wrecks, whose broken and shattered barks, are dashing on the shores of time, and whose priceless souls are nearing the dreaded rocks of eternal darkness.

True, the beach is strewn with the whitened bones of the fallen, true it is that God's great Phonegraph is full of the widow's groans, and His vial full of the orphan's tears; the blood of the slain crieth from the earth for vengeance, while the smoke of their torment, and the wail of the lost—"where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched,"—ascended before him forever.

But the good time is coming, to the perishing, a noble army has arisen, no longer a scattered few, but "clothed" in a panoply of strength, backed by the power of omnipetence, led by the word and will of God, they go forward conquering unto conquer, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them. The world may deride, and the people scorn the movement as fanaticism.

"But the might and the right and the truth shall be,
Let there come what there may to stand in the way,
That day the world shall see."

In that day it shall no longer be asked "who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?" for the curse shall be removed, old things shall have passed away, behold all things shall have become new. These are not dreams of an enthusist, but the outgrowth of the sober facts of our own present surroundings. Drink is doomed, already the passing bell is tolling its downfall. In the towns where the Scott Act is in operation, where are the crowds of lazy loafers and helpless sots, who daily frequented the place?—ABSENT. No longer the sound of drunken revelry and licentious blasphemy rings through the place, a change has come "o'er the spirit of the scene." True there are yet those who in darkened rooms, in cellars, holes and corners get their liquor, yet since it has been relegated to the darkness—its own appropriate type—the remnant of self respect even in a drunkard, revolt at the sneaking proceeding. What will not stand the light of day is not worth supporting. The well worn statement "that there is more drinking done under the Scott Act than prior to its introduction," is as false as the system it endeavors to uphold, as personal experience and reliable statistics clearly prove. It is the dying wail of a dying cause, kept up by the sattolites of the landlord, whose dying profits from the dying souls, are daily growing "small by degrees and beautifully less," notwithstanding the fierce opposition of the liquor interest "the good time is coming." Strong drink leads to uncleanliness, adultery, to covetness, to idolitry, to all manner of evil, to death physical and to death eternal. "Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience." Therefore be not partakers with them, touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing." The good time is coming when the raggedness, the squallors, the wretchedness and misery of the outcast shall cease. While we view the abodes of the drunkard in all its dismal depravity and lack of comfort, when we look on the pinched faces of the helpless, when we gaze on the woe-begone dishevelled form they call Mother, do we not feel our hearts burn within us? do we not feel our heart of hearts silently breathe out the prayer, "How long, oh Lord, how long?" Let the wreck of what was once a handsome man, with his bleared eyes and tattered garments drivilling in his semi-idoicy the name he once reverently worshiped and adored, is it possible? What has transformed he that was made in the moral image of God, to a condition below the level of the brute creation? What is it that so deadened all the finer sensibilities of his nature, that with oaths and curses, and ofttimes with blows, he spurns from him the form of her he once swore to love and cherish. Oh the unutterable woe, oh the cloud of sorrow and anguish which alone Almighty God can fully know, which at this moment is surging throughout the land.

But the good time is coming when "instead of the thorn shall come up the fig tree and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree"—the day of rejoicing the world's grand jubilee.

In the good time coming we may all have a share, and this is a mighty incentive for individual action. Tis the many strokes that fell the oak, and the accumulated labors and prayers of the glorious army who have died in the field, can be utilized for the advancement of present success. Let us remember that they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmanent, and they that turn many to righteous as the stars for ever and ever.

While we are surrounded by such glorious possibilities of selfishness, let us lay under contribution ever power of our being for so grand an object. While our heart's deepest sympathy is drawn out for the heathen millions who dwell on the dark places of the earth, let us not lose sight of the worse than heathen of our own surroundings "eyes have they but they see not, ears have they but they hear not," upon whom the full blaze of the light shineth, giving freedom to the captive, who yet, as willing slaves, hug their chains and abide in darkness—Christianized in name yet in works they deny him. Let us arise in the majesty of our Heaven-born strength—let us buckle on the armour—let us push the battle to the gate, until the demon be overthrown, until from the hearts and homes of our fair Dominion shall arise, no longer the wail of misery and woe, but songs of thanksgiving and praise—that He may reign, whose we are and whom we serve "From the river unto the ends of the earth."—D.S.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

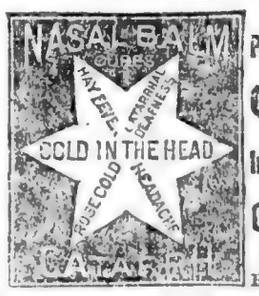
On Friday evening, 23rd ult., an Xmas tree entertainment was held in the stone school house which was a most decided success, and was most heartily enjoyed by all present. The school room was beautifully decorated with evergreens and appropriate mottos. The tree was well laden with all manner of presents. Mr. Kells acted as chairman and under his direction a most attractive program consisting of readings, recitations, dialogues, music, &c., was carried out. The teacher, Miss Ford, deserves great credit for the pains taken by her to make the entertainment a success.

At the annual school meeting held last Wednesday, Mr. Thos. Kells was re-elected school Trustee.

There has been another new arrival at Mr. Geo. Pitchard's, it is a daughter.

Mr. James Hanson has sold his farm to Mr. James Brodie and is going to Toronto to learn the veterinary business.

If you want a first-class Gold or Silver Watch in Ladies' or Gents' sizes, Russell's, Flesherton, is the place to go. Warrants from three to five years covering all breakages at lower prices than elsewhere.



A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price ... cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address ... FORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

Feversham.

To the Editor of The Advance.

I suppose some of the readers of the ADVANCE will be thinking that Feversham has gone out of existence. It is a long time since there has been any news from here. Well, I can assure them such is not the case as they would have been led to see had they been here on Friday evening, 23rd inst., it being the occasion of a Farewell Entertainment and Presentation to Mr. Geo. Mitchell, who is leaving this section after completing a very successful term of three years teaching. The Parents, Children and Friends of Mr. Mitchell turned out en masse. At 7:30 p. m. Mr. Chas. Neil, the popular merchant here, was voted to the Chair when an excellent programme consisting of Recitations, Dialogues, Vocal and Instrumental Music &c. was rendered by the pupils and young people of the section after which the pupils presented Mr. Mitchell with a beautiful Gold Headed Cane and the accompanying address.

To Mr. Geo. Mitchell:—

Respected Teacher,—We, the Pupils of S.S. No. 7, Osprey, who have been so much benefitted by your tuition during the past three years and learning with deep regret that you are about to leave us, desire to present you with this cane as a token of our esteem for you, not on account of its intrinsic value but as a souvenir of respect and as you look on it in days to come you may think of those you leave behind, and rest assured that whatever our lot may be in this life we shall not forget the happy hours we spent with you and if we should not be permitted to meet again in this world we hope and trust that it will be our happy lot to meet in that better land where parting is unknown.

LIZZIE HALE,
MARY A. NEIL,

In behalf of Pupils of S.S. No. 7, Osprey.

Mr. Geo. Mitchell made a suitable and feeling reply.

After the presentation, Rev. W. F. Ferrier, of Maxwell, was called on and gave a very pleasing and able address on the occasion, after which, the entertainment was brought to a close by the children singing, "Farewell to a Teacher."

NOTE.—The cane was furnished by the celebrated jeweller, Mr. J. G. Russell, of Flesherton.

Commercial Union

—Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of—

FURNITURE!
— AT —
J. W. BATES'.

Good Goods at Low Prices that tells and has told for the ... years. This season I am in a position to give both ... Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Designs.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY P... ... B...
THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business:

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, Gents Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $30.00. A beauty for $14.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $5.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $1.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.35.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 35 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

Photos,
Photos,
Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

THE GLOBE

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED
AND THE LEADING NEWSPAPER OF CANADA

DAILY GLOBE, Morning Edition, -	$6.00	per annum.
" " 12 o'clock " - -	3.00	" "
" " 3 " " - -	3.00	" "
WEEKLY GLOBE, - - - - -	1.00	" "
SATURDAY DAILY GLOBE, - -	1.00	" "

The different editions of The Globe can be procured from all News Dealers throughout Canada.

--- THE GLOBE SPECIAL FAST TRAIN ---

between Toronto and London, which has been running daily since 3rd March last, will be continued throughout 1888. This train arrives at London at 6.40 a.m., making connection with all the early trains from that point, securing for The Globe a delivery throughout Western Ontario hours in advance of all Toronto papers.

--- TO ADVERTISERS ---

As an advertising medium, The Globe has no equal in Canada. Its circulation, which appears at head of its editorial columns daily, is far in advance of all other Canadian papers, and it is the intention of the management to always keep The Globe in its proud position as the LEADING NEWSPAPER OF CANADA, both in point of circulation and influence.

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO.
TORONTO

SPEECH BY MARK TWAIN.

An Oration That Fits Either a Wedding, a Funeral, a Political Meeting or Even a Dinner of Boston Puritans.

A Boston despatch says: Mark Twain was one of the speakers at the banquet in Music Hall last night to celebrate Forefather's Day. He responded to "Post Prandial Oratory," and said: "In treating of this subject, a subject which I have long been familiar with, and may be called an expert in observing it in others, I wish to say that a public dinner is the most delightful in the whole world to the guest. (Laughter.) A public dinner also is the most unendurable suffering in the whole world to the guest. (Laughter.) These two facts don't seem to jibe, but I will explain:

"Now, at a public dinner when a man knows he is going to be called upon to speak and is thoroughly well prepared, got it all by heart, and the pauses marked in his head where the applause is going to come in—(laughter)—that man is simply in heaven. (Laughter.) But when at a public dinner it is getting way along towards the end of the things, and a man is sitting over his glass of wine or his glass of milk—(laughter)—according to the kind of banquet it is, with somebody at his elbow bothering him with talk and talk about nothing, that is just as nearly in the other place as can be. My scheme is this, to carry in my head a connected and tried and thoroughly and glibly emphasized speech that will fit every conceivable occasion in this life, fit it to a dot and win success and applause every time. (Laughter.) Now, I have a fitted speech of this kind and have brought it along as an example."

Twain then showed how such a speech is appropriate at a wedding breakfast, a granger gathering or a theological assembly or a political blow-out or an inquest or funeral anywhere in the world, simply by changing a word here and there, making his delivery tearful or anguishing, chirpy and facetious, or luridly and thunderously eloquent, turning himself loose.

"Suppose we are at a granger gathering," said he, "and are suddenly called upon. We come up with some lively hesitancies and deferences, so as to give the idea that the speech is impromptu. We can venture an impromptu remark to begin with: for instance, if a distinguished person is present we can make a complimentary remark about his great talent or his clothes. (Laughter.) This gives us an opening, and about the time the audience is pitying him we open our throttle-valve and go for those grangers. (Laughter.) The person wants us to be gorgeously eloquent. He wants to fire the granger's heart and start him from his mansard to his cellar. That man may say:

"'Sir: I am suddenly called up and am indeed not—not prepared to—was not expecting to be called up, sir; but I will, with what effect I may, add my shout to the jubilations of this spirited, stirring occasion. (Laughter.) Agriculture, after all, approximately speaking, may be [illegible] be the palladium of our economic [illegible]s. By it, approximately speaking, [illegible] be said to live and move and acquire [illegible]ng. All that we have been, all that [illegible] to be, was, is, and must continue [illegible]

[illegible] a wedding [illegible]as got to be [illegible] on, but must [illegible]e say: 'I am [illegible]., and am indeed not pared to-day. I was not expecting to be called up, sir, but with what effect I may I will add my shout to the jubilations of this spirited, stirring occasion. Matrimony, sir, is after all the palladium of domestic liberty (great laughter) by it, approximately speaking, we may be said to live and move and acquire our being, all that we have been, all that we are, all that we hope to be, was, is and must continue to be by the sublimest of the mighty interests of men. Thrice glorious matrimony.'" (Laughter.)

SUIT OVER A KISS.

A Young Wife Wants $5,000 for Osculation Without Leave.

A Lyons, N. Y., despatch says: Jennie Walker, the pretty young wife of Daniel Walker, in Ontario, this county, has begun action against Henry Elman, the wealthiest man in that locality, for $5,000 damages because of a kiss he gave plaintiff upon the cheek last August. Mrs. Walker alleges that Elman called upon her husband, and that while her husband was in an adjoining room he stooped over her chair and kissed her. She was so terribly shocked and grieved at his hasty action that she was confined to bed several weeks and was unable to do household work. Elman admits the kiss, but will defend the suit. Seven lawyers have been retained in the case.

A Royal Christmas Gift.

A Vienna despatch says: Emperor Francis Joseph yesterday presented Count Andrassy with a magnificent portrait of himself as a Christmas gift. In the letter which accompanied the gift, the Emperor says the present is given in recognition of the hospitality to the Emperor by Count Andrassy during the military manœuvres. The gift is generally believed, however, to have a political significance, the opinion being that the Emperor wished to express his approval of Count Andrassy's energetic policy. It is stated when the Count returned from the Berlin Congress, the Emperor wished to raise him to the rank of prince, and asked several of the Hungarian Ministers to try and induce him to accept the honor. Count Andrassy, however, refused the title and also declined to accept an order, so that the Emperor's only way to honor the Count was to send him an autograph letter, which is the highest Austrian distinction.

A Horse Eats Itself to Death.

A Camden, N.J., despatch says: Hugh McLaughlin, a milkman, of Sixth and Live streets, lost a horse from gluttony last night. The horse broke its halter, got out into the stable, opened the lid of the feed chest and cleaned it of all the corn and oats, something over two bushels. This morning the milkman found his horse dead beside the feed chest.

The mother of ex-President Garfield is now over 87 years old, but still remains bright and strong in mind and body.

—Waterbury American: A Christmas belle—The girl with the ring in her voice who will always chime in when anything tolled.

A SAD CHRISTMAS FOR HER.

Widowed Within a Year, Children in an Asylum and Herself in a Cell.

A New York telegram says: Jacob Baumann, of the firm of Baumann Bros., furniture dealers, appeared as complainant in the Yorkville Court before Justice O'Reilly yesterday against Kate Gibbons, 31 years old, of No. 518 West Fifty-first street, whom he charged with selling mortgaged property. The complainant alleged that Mrs. Gibbons purchased on the instalment plan from Baumann Brothers furniture of the value of $134.15, giving a chattel mortgage as security. Last fall she had paid $85 on account and then ceased making payments. When the firm demanded the goods it is said she asknowledged she had sold them. Mrs. Gibbons told a pitiful tale to the Judge, saying that when she purchased the furniture she was in good circumstances and able to make the payments as they came due. Then her husband died and she was left without support for herself and her three little children. She struggled along until she fell sick with erysipelas and was bedridden. She had no friends to whom to appeal, her children were starving, and she sold the furniture piecemeal to buy them food. When all was gone she appealed to Justice Murray at the Yorkville Court two weeks ago and had her little ones sent to an institution. She begged the complainant to give her an opportunity to pay the balance as soon as she was recovered sufficiently to go to work, but he was inexorable and insisted that she should tell him where the furniture was or go to prison. She said she could not tell what had become of the property, and again pleaded through her sobs for mercy, and was again refused. Justice O'Reilly very reluctantly complied with the law and held the poor woman in $300 bail to answer. Having no friend in her extremity she went to prison, moaning in her agony, and the final scene in the destruction of the happy home of a year ago was completed—children in an asylum, father dead and mother in a felon's cell.

TRAGEDY AT SEA.

Steamer Burned to the Water's Edge—Loss of Part of the Crew.

A last (Wednesday) night's San Francisco despatch says: The freight steamer San Vincinte, plying between this city and Santa Cruz, took fire last night off Pigeon Point, about forty miles south of the Golden Gate and burned to the water's edge. The crew consisted of nineteen officers and men. The burning vessel was sighted by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's steamer, Queen of the Pacific, which was bound from San Diego to this port. Sever lboats were lowered and went to the rescue of the San Vincinte's crew. Capt. Chas. Lewis and the second mate were found on the deck of the steamer, preparing to jump into the sea, as the flames were rapidly surrounding them. The first mate and four sailors were found drifting in a small boat, in which they had escaped, and another sailor was discovered clinging to the bottom of an upturned boat. These men were all rescued and taken on board the Queen of the Pacific. Several of them had suffered severely from exposure and one of the sailors died in a few hours. No trace could be found of the other eleven men who composed the crew, and it is supposed they were all lost. Captain Lewis stated that when the fire was discovered the men became panic stricken. Most of them jumped into one of the boats and before it could be lowered the tackle which held it burned away and the boat fell, throwing the men into the water. The San Vincinte was a small vessel and was valued at $30,000; no insurance. The loss on the cargo is light.

The Deacon's Green Goods.

A New York despatch says: Anthony Nelson, one of the "green goods" men recently arrested, was put on trial yesterday. Allen Gilliland, the deacon of a church at his home in Tennessee, or "Sucker No. 82" as the "green goods" gang termed him, identified the letters he had received inviting him to come to New York, where he could purchase $10,000 for $650. Counsel for the prisoner asked to have the case taken from the jury and his client discharged, on the ground that there was no proof that the "goods" mentioned in the circular and letters were counterfeit money. Judge Cowing held that the point was well taken and discharged the prisoner. Before letting him go he warned him that if he was brought before him again and convicted he would receive every minute that the statute would allow. Turning to the deacon, who had been locked up in the House of Detention as a witness since he made his complaint, Judge Cowing lectured him severely. "The best thing you can do," he said, "is to hurry back to Tennessee, and don't come here again. Go back and leave the church, and tell your congregation how you fell." The deacon said he was going to-night.

Trusting to Faith to be Cured.

A Lakewood N. J., despatch says: Miss Violet Hopkins, daughter of David A. Hopkins, the Jersey City manufacturer of railway supplies, who places implicit confidence in the faith cure, has come to this winter retreat to reside temporarily. She is an accomplished young woman and a fine linguist. Her father is proprietor of the American Sentry, a devout follower of Swedenborg, and is said to have spent an immense sum of money in his religious zeal to disseminate the teachings of that noted leader. Miss Hopkins shared her father's religious enthusiasm, and when, a year ago, she was attacked with acute pneumonia she determined to test the efficacy of prayer and faith, refusing to accept the services of a physician. She has not improved, and her health is now so seriously impaired that grave doubts are entertained for her recovery.

On the Tobogg n Slide.

Steersman—All ready, Bascom?

Bascom—Yes; or-er wait a moment. If Miss Kittyman will kindly tuck her feet in a little closer, I think we shall find less wind resistance.

—It is singular that, notwithstanding the great variety in the bill of fare at club dinners, there are some men who always want a little game after the dinner is over.

"The world is growing better every day,
And honest men abound," some people say,
But still the finest apples of the crop,
When packed in barrels, somehow get on top.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

She, Who Can Neither See, Talk Nor Hear, Enjoys the Presence of Friends, Their Addresses and the Music of a Blind Boys' Band—Her Fifty Years in an Asylum.

Miss Laura Bridgman, the blind, deaf and dumb inmate of the Perkins Institution for the Blind in Boston, has just given a reception to her friends to mark the 50th year of her residence in that institution, as well as the 58th anniversary of her birth. She enjoyed the music, the addresses of the guests and the presence of those she knew, after her own fashion, and expressed her approval of the remarks by clapping her hands.

Miss Bridgman entered the institution when she was 8 years old. When an infant sickness deprived her of eyesight and the powers of speech and hearing. The sense of smell was entirely destroyed and that of taste much impaired. She was a girl of quick sensibilities, a fact which aided her vastly in acquiring that wonderful comprehension of the 'things around her which has made her, her benefactor and the institution famous the world over. Dr. Samuel G. Howe, now dead, the husband of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, took charge of the girl when she came to Boston fifty years ago. She was taught, after indomitable and painstaking effort on the part of her preceptor and his assistant, Miss Drew, to write, read, spell, knit, and to converse with her teachers and with those who knew the mysterious language of the blind and the mute. The one sense left her, that of touch, enabled her to do this. Talking is carried on with her fingers. She places her hands in those of a person acquainted with the language, and conversation is successfully carried on by means of a finger alphabet. As her studies progressed, this child of unknowable world was taught geography, arithmetic, algebra, geometry, history and philosophy, until now she is as proficient in the ordinary branches of learning as the average person not handicapped by the loss of natural powers.

On Wednesday she sat in the hall of the institution with her tutor at her right hand. There was singing by a chorus of fifty little children in attendance at the institution, a recitation by a young blind girl, a voluntary on the organ by Miss Black, also blind, and an overture by a brass band composed of blind boys. So keen and refined is her sensibility that it is said Miss Bridgman can appreciate, in a small way, of course, the beauty of music by means of the sound vibrations on the floor. The exercises this afternoon were translated to her by her tutor in the mute language of the fingers, and Miss Bridgman attested her feelings by clapping her hands and smiling.

Miss Bridgman was 58 years old to-day, and so the reception had a double significance. During her earlier years she made a practice of keeping a journal, and for ten years, from 1840 to 1850, wrote page after page of notes, so that to-day she has forty or more manuscript books of her own make, the number of pages being about six hundred. She has also written three autobiographical sketches, several poems and numerous letters.

AN ENRAGED FATHER

Attempts to Murder the Seducer of His Daughter—History of the Masher.

A last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: Captain Dunne, lately Governor of Castlebar Jail, and an ex-officer in the United States Army, has been committed for trial in this city for firing a revolver at the Rev. Henry Melville, whom Dunne charges with seducing his daughter while she was residing with Mrs. Melville. Melville eloped with the girl to the Continent and travelled with her to different places. The pair finally returned to London and were discovered by Dunne. Melville fled to Ireland and was pursued by Dunne, who traced him to Dublin, and seeing him seated in a cab fired at him. Melville, however, held a travelling rug before him and stopped the bullet. The affair has created a sensation in Dublin society. The sympathy is with Dunne.

Melville, on being examined, said his real name was Peter Higginson. He had been a customs clerk and a horse dealer. His first wife, who is still alive, was named James. He was divorced from her in America. On marrying the widow of Mr. Whyte, an author, he assumed his present name. Captain Dunne's daughter was the companion and friend of the widow. Melville said he was ordained in South Africa, but did not perform clerical duties except to conduct the service in his household. The widow was wealthy enough to be able to keep fifteen servants. He acknowledged that he had been assaulted and beaten on two occasions for insulting women. He admitted having seduced Miss Dunne. He said that Dunne thrashed him before firing at him. Heavy bail was offered by Dunne, but it was refused.

A Mad Jap.

A San Francisco despatch says: The Bolivian bark Remegio, which arrived from Hakodate, reports that last Tuesday night a Japanese who had the watch on deck suddenly became insane. All the crew were below and at midnight he called them on deck stationing himself at the door of the forecastle with a hatchet in his hand and prepared to give a lively reception to whoever ventured above. The first who appeared, a Japanese, was saluted with a blow upon the head. Next was a negro, who was also struck and dangerously wounded. The insane Japanese then jumped overboard and was seen no more. It was found also that the cook of the vessel had been almost killed prior to the assault upon the crew and his recovery is doubtful.

Illustrated Snobocracy.

Bessie—Ma, dear; Mr. Spoonbill has to kiss me twice in the play we are doing for Mrs. Jamery's charity. Do you think I ought to let him?

Ma—Certainly not, child! What can you be thinking of?

Bessie—I was thinking he was a millionaire.

Ma—Why did not you say so before. It is for charity's sweet sake.

—Some one has written a book on "How to Save Money." No use. The only way to save money is not to spend it, and that knocks all the fun out of saving.

"LOVELY WOMAN."

She is Sized Up Differently in Public and at Home.

"Oh, woman, woman!" shrieked an orator in a speech the other night, "thou art the light, the life, the salvation of the world! I shudder when I think of what this world would be without thy gentle, refining, ennobling influence. I bow at thy shrine, acknowledging thy purity and truth! There is nothing, no nothing so beautiful, so true, so perfect as a woman! I reverence and bow down before them!"

And when he went home he said to the woman who was so unfortunate as to be his wife:

"What you let the fire get so low for? You knew I'd come home half froze. You're just like the rest of the women, you haven't a thought beyond your nose. Stir around and get me a cup of hot tea, can't you. See if you can do that much for a fellow. I'd just like to know what you women think you're good for, anyhow!"—Tid Bits.

The Lady and Her Maid.

Some light was thrown on the duties of a lady's maid in a case which was heard at Westminster Police Court, London, in which Felicia Vincent was charged with stealing some articles, the property of Mrs. Sebright, of No. 33 Lowndes street. It was stated by the prosecutrix that the prisoner had been discharged for impertinence. In reply to Mr. Dutton, who defended, prosecutrix said the prisoner declined to lace her boots, and was very impertinent. It was a maid's duty to put on her mistress' boots. Mr. Dutton—"On one occasion do you recollect putting a 'beauty-spot' on your face when you were going out to dinner?" Witness—"No, Mr. Dutton." "And were there not words between you and defendant because 'the spot' fell off into your soup at the dining table? (Laughter.) You put it down to the defendant's carelessness?" Mrs. Sebright—"The whole story is a fabrication. I never allowed the prisoner to put sticking-plaster on my face, and she was not discharged for carelessness in this particular." Other evidence having been given the prisoner was remanded.—St. James' Gazette.

She Wanted Smuggled Goods.

She asked for lace of a certain kind, and the clerk took down a box and excused the small quantity in it by saying:

"We sold a great quantity of this the other day at wholesale."

"This is exactly like my sample, isn't it?"

"Yes'm. You must have bought that here."

"Oh, no, sir—I bought it of a peddler."

"Ah!"

"And I paid him fourteen cents per yard, while you only charge six."

"I see. He told you—?"

"That it was smuggled over from Canada."

"Exactly. We sell to a number who go about telling the same story, but of course we are not responsible."

"I—I—!"

"Just so, ma'am. I know just how you feel about it; but, being a woman, you can neither swear at yourself nor kick the man for a liar. Will you sit down in the back end of the store until your emotion subsides? No? Ah, well, call again. Nothing else to-day?"—Detroit Free Press.

About the Size of It.

Austria—What are you taking your coat off for?

Russia (hesitatingly)—Well because it is hot, and——

Austria—You're a liar; it isn't hot. If you don't put your coat on again I'll take mine off, so there!

Russia—Bah!

Germany—What are you two fellows racketing about, anyway? Say, Russia, if you don't stop soaring that little fellow I'll help him to lick you. Put your coat on; d'ye hear me?

Austria—There, now; you'll have to put it on; yah!

Russia (with enthusiasm)—God save the Kaiser! (Proceeds to strip himself to his undershirt).—Chicago Journal.

Coming Home Christmas Morning.

New Boarder (who has got into wrong room)—"Thish izh very ext'r'orr-rd'nary, for if thish izh my room an' that izh my bed an' there I am in my bed, then who the mischief izh carryin' 'roun' thish lamp, I want er know?"

When an eminent man g ts himself in a hole
Through an interview hastily caught, or
When his ideas don't flow—through too much
the bowl,
It's always the wicked reporter.
If he says a good thing and it's off the third page,
He's as mad as a Hun or a Tartar;
But when his wild drivel's made clever and sage
Why, it's never the thoughtful reporter.

When Midas, on Christmas eve, ringing his bell
Tips the clerks with his usual bantour,
And the office b y visits the sanctum to tell,
It's always the prying reporter.
But when Midas falls, his son goes to the deuce
Or the c achman runs off with his daughter,
And the story's told shortly—with every excuse—
It's never the kindly reporter.

—Judge

In the death of Rev. Heriot Mackonochie, of London, a clergyman who caused a great stir in English religious circles is removed. His name was as familiar to the British public as that of the Archbishop of Canterbury. For fifteen years he continued at St. Albans Church, London, ritualistic practices in defiance of the Ecclesiastical courts, and went so far as to have the church guarded on Sundays by strong bodies of men with stout sticks to prevent the officials carrying out the decisions of his ecclesiastical superiors. This ended, on the suggestion of the late Archbishop Tait, in a compromise. Mr. Mackonochie exchanged places with the incumbent of St. Peters, London Docks. Latterly, however, he returned to St. Albans as curate, where previously he was incumbent. He was universally esteemed and devoted to the work of relieving the poor, of whom there are large numbers in the neighborhood of St. Albans. His only fault appears to have been his obstinacy in not retiring from the Church of England, although refusing to submit to its mode of worship and jurisdiction.

Vermont grocers do not sell sweet cider but they keep "new apple juice."

There are seventy-one locks in the Erie canal.

CHRISTMAS EVE AT THE WHITEHEADS.

"My love," said Mr. Simeon Whitehead, as he sat before the fire on Christmas Eve, "this is a glad and joyful time; a time to draw fond hearts nearer to each other and make them throb in loving unison."

"Yes, Simmy," said his wife.

"And withal, he went on oracularly, "it is a rollicking, merry time, and just to carry out the spirit of the hour, let's hang up our stockings."

"O, what fun!" chirped Mrs. Whitehead, though I haven't a thing for you, Simmy, dear, so you mustn't be disappointed," with a delusive smile.

So with many childish gurgles of glee they went off to bed arm in arm, leaving what looked like a long black sausage-bag suspended from the chimney-piece by the side of a short striped sock with a hole in the heel.

In the silent watches of the night Mr. Simeon Whitehead sneaked guiltily down stairs with a sealskin sacque under his arm. He groped his way to the yawning black stocking, and there ensued a wild and ineffectual struggle to stuff it in the sacque, but though he rolled it into its smallest possible compass and stretched the sausage-bag to the form of a peck measure, it was clearly a hopeless case, and wiping his perspiring face with a convenient portion of his attire, he hung the garment on the chimney-piece and left it, hugging himself as he thought of the surprise it would create in the morning, for he wot not that the descendant of Eve who shared his joys had opened his drawer with a false key and torn a hole in the paper wrapping with a hairpin.

Meantime Mrs. Whitehead awoke, and taking a tiny white box from under her pillow, slipped stealthily out of the room.

At the top of the stair she came in violent collision with her husband coming up, and with womanly presence of mind she grasped his bushy beard and screamed, "Burglars Murder! Simmy!"

Taken off his guard and his feet at the same time, Mr. Whitehead suddenly sat down, and, his wife clinging to him desperately, they coasted together down the stairs, landing in a confused heap at the bottom.

A loose carpet rod had played havoc with his abreviated garment, and scraped the porous plaster and a considerable portion of epidermis from his back.

As he struggled to his feet with a volley of choice expletives, his wife, who had escaped without a scratch, recognized the familiar tones and cried, "O, Simmy, are you hurt?"

"Hurt? No! Dangfest it, no!" hopping about in an agony of pain, "its rare sport to be used as a toboggan by a fat old porpoise that weighs three hundred! Perhaps you will inform me, Madam, where the humorous part of this performance comes in, for Mrs. Whitehead had turned up the gas, and now stood giggling hysterically at his capers. "Must you stand there grinning like a dangfested idiot, because you've knocked your husband down stairs and peeled his blasted back for him? Took me for a condemned burglar, did you? Well, if I ever burgle in this way again you may have the rest of my blame skin."

"O, Simmy, dear, don't swear. You said Christmas was a joyful, loving time."

"I did, did I? Well, ain't we enjoying it? Ain't we out in full dress in honor of the occasion?" glaring wildly at his tattered garments. "Haven't I sacrificed half a yard of cuticle to make this thing a howling success? Want to try another whirl? Perhaps I'm too slow for you?" Maybe you'd like to rig me up with a set of wheels and an air-brake for a dangfested roller-coaster. Anything to carry out these joyous festivities in rattling style. There, madam," he continued, kicking the sacque savagely about the room, "there's the condemned institution that has brought such an overflow of joy into this family. There's the last blame Christmas present you'll ever get from me. There's the dangfested article." Here he kicked a table leg. He didn't injure the table leg but spoiled the shape of his largest corn, and he limped groaning up-stairs.

"Simmy, dear," his wife called softly after him, "shall I come up and bathe your poor back with arnica?" but a vicious slam of the door was the only reply, so she tried the effect of the sealskin sacque over her robe de nuit and said, as she paraded before the glass, "I don't care, he can't take this back, any way, and if he won't have the diamond stud I'll trade it for a bracelet."

EMMA S. OLDS.

Still She Admired the Sermon.

Wife (returned from church)—You should have heard Mr. Goodman's sermon this morning, my dear. I don't know when anything has made such a profound impression upon me.

Husband—Did you walk home?

Wife—No, I took a street car; and do you know, John, the conductor never asked me for my fare. Wasn't I lucky?

—Charity may cover a multitude of sins, but it is not its regular business.

Mother and Son.

A beautiful story is told in connection with that wonderful book, "Ben-Hur," by Gen. Lew Wallace. It is said that Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace, in answer to the author's wish for her opinion on the appearance of the volume, replied: "O my son, it is a none-such of a story; but how did you ever invent that magnificent character, the mother?" "Why, you dear simple heart," he answered with a kiss, "how could you fail to know that the original of that picture is your blessed self?"

Chinese in the Canadian Northwest.

The Banff correspondent of the Calgary Tribune says: A small gang of Chinese have arrived at the mines and are at work screening coal. According to many expressions heard, it is evident that there is great dissatisfaction among the outside hands at this importation. More are to come.

A Bogus Santa Claus.

Patriarchal tramp (addressing small boy in doorway)—"Hush! Not a word! Don't you know me, little boy? Why, I'm dear, old Santa Claus, and I'm kinder cold. Just hand me out them two overcoats in there, and I'll fetch them back when I bring you your Christmas tree to-night."

—Table beds are new. They are converted from one to the other readily, and may be used as either.

THE SPIRIT OF THE PINE.

Christmas Dreams on Christmas Eve.

The winter winds blustered through the pine woods. The soft snow fell on the dark-green foliage, and all but covered it. Through the clouds the moon peeped down on the scene and cast a silver sheen over the white-topped kings of the woods and their smaller companions, making a fairy scene far away in those distant States designated as "down East." It was hearty Christmas time. The spirits of the pines were abroad, and whispered together in the wind. At once a voice, loud and imperative, broke in upon their murmuring. It was the spirit of the oldest and most weather-beaten of the group, which thus addressed the others:

"Harken, O my sisters! The frost, the snow, the piercing wind, all tell us that the time of the holy Christ-child is about to come. I, your king, bid you be ready, if a mission to mortals be given you. The fatal axe will fell some of you; the sap which fills your limbs will be stopped forever in its course, but back here, O ye spirits, ye will come! If to mortals you have done all in your power to brighten the feast of the holy Christ-child, I, your king, will give a new lease of life to you. With spring's first breath you will begin a new life, and aid your sisters in beautifying the landscape once more."

The great voice paused; in soft, low, quavering accents, a small bent tree at its feet broke the silence which followed.

"What could I do, O king, if I am taken from you, misshapen, small, as I am?"

"Your best! your best!" sang out the spirit of the great tree, and the other trees, joining in, sent forth on the wings of the wind a repetition of their great king's command,

"Do your best! Do your best!"

* * * * *

The horse, the stir of a great city. Towards one of the large markets a country cart is being drawn by a stout pair of horses. Many people as they hurry along pause to look at the pretty sight—the sight of a cart load of green in the dark, dingy streets. How many thoughts it conjures up in the minds of the onlookers. Christmas is coming, is all but here. Visions of pleasure and festivity fill the minds of some; others, too poor, too wretched to be affected by anything, scarce glance at the load as it passes its way market-ward. A jam in the roadway. Ah! A small bent piece of green has fallen off. It would be crushed under foot but for the little street Arab, who, almost at risk of his life, plucks it from under the horse's feet and hurries away with his prize.

Christmas Eve! What a world of joy and happiness those words imply!—to some, but not to all. Alas! Little Jim, the street Arab, who lived no one knew how, crawled up the ladder to his wretched quarters, on that blessed night, as cold and as hungry as usual. He had made no money for more than two days. No one had called him from his usual post on the sunny side of the street, by the high church railing, to hold a horse or run a message. He was literally starving to death, and his teeth chattered as, arrived in the cold attic where he spent his nights, he covered himself as best he could with the few thin, tattered pieces of carpet which, with a scant supply of straw, formed his bed. From among these uninviting bed-clothes he carefully extracted a long branch of pine. Then, hunting in his pocket, he produced a match and a small end of candle, such as are used on Christmas trees. Feeling about him he found a wide crack in the floor, into which he stuck the green bough, and producing a pin from his ragged coat he carefully fastened the candle on to the bough.

Now came the business of the evening. How carefully, poor lad, he struck the one match; it flickered—the attic was very draughty. Was it out? No! The candle was lighted, burning beautifully. Jim clapped his little wasted hands in ecstacy. "By gum! don't he burn nice, though," he said aloud. Then sinking back on the wretched apology for a bed, he watched the little candle splutter and burn with delighted eyes.

Soon, with hunger and cold, the poor little urchin fell asleep. The candle burnt on for a while, then, after a few flickering efforts, went out.

A lovely presence filled the lonely attic room. It bent over the little sleeping boy, and laid a soft, shadowy hand on his head. It was the spirit of the pine—of the bent, misshapen pine, which had been told to do its best in the mission to mortals on the Christ-child's holy night.

What dreams the poor, neglected, lonely child had, to be sure. Such dreams! The thin, drawn lips shaped themselves into a smile; he even laughed aloud; and by his side stayed the gentle spirit and watched him with loving eyes. The sweet odor of the pine penetrated the room, no doubt the child's dreams were leading him among the lovely forest trees, by babbling brooks, in summer time, strange scenes which he had never even imagined, having never seen. His short, pitiful life had been spent in the by-ways and alleys of a great city; his master want, his teacher neglect.

The night, the Christ-child's Eve, wore on. Ere dawn a chill presence filled the attic room. It was Amaranth, an angel of Death. Softly she gathered the sleeping child to her bosom. The spirit of the pine fell at her feet, awed at the dread presence. Amaranth pointed to the pale face of the little sleeper. "He smiles," she said softly. 'He smiles, and it is thy doing. Henceforth, O! Spirit, be thy mission one of healing. Sweet fragrance shalt thou distill, thou and thy fellows. Thou hast woven dreams to cheer the poor outcast, to his face thou hast brought a smile with which he will enter the presence of God! Adieu!" Amaranth was gone! Joyously through the wintry air flew the spirit of the pine, distilling sweetest fragrance as she went. Many others joined her, their sister, in her flight. Their several missions done, they hastened back to their forest home to report their various happenings to their king. And the spirit of the misshapen, small tree had done her best and received a reward above all the others; the reward of perpetual fragrance above her species. And long after, as she raised her graceful head above her fellows and looked up hard to the sky, the spirit of that fragrant pine was given a vision, in the stillness of the night, of the beautiful green pastures far away above the sky, where the little children play through the long, endless beauties of the New Jerusalem. A little, smiling face was always there; the face of him who once on earth was neglected, cold and starving—Jim, the street Arab.

* * * * *

"Dear me! I must have been asleep; and such a dream as I've had! All about the fragrant pine. You see, I fell asleep with the pine cushion that your mother sent me under my head. What strange fancies our surroundings cause. Pick up my specs and hand me my knitting, there is a dear grandchild. The Spirit of the Pines! Ah me! It is a lesson to all to do the best they can for every one this merry Christmas time."

F. H. HOLLAND.

Men Who Distribute Money by the Carload Once a Month.

The paymasters of the several railroads running into the city are getting ready for their regular monthly trip over the lines. The Pennsylvania Railroad and the Pennsylvania Company have the largest number of men on their pay-rolls. The latter company have in the neighborhood of 11,000, who draw over $500,000 monthly. The men are paid in cash—generally gold. The car, after paying all the employees in Pittsburg and Alleghany, goes out upon the road about the 11th of each month. They reach Chicago about the 21st. The men along the road are given notice that the car is coming by the train preceding it carrying blue flags on the engine. On the flags are the letters "P. M.," meaning paymaster. To guard against attacks of robbers at night very little money is kept in the car. Before the paymaster starts out he telegraphs to banks at different points along the line that he will be there at a certain hour on a certain day with cheques to be cashed. The cheque is just for about the amount that is to be paid that day. The first point cheques are given is at Salem, Ohio, where very often the amount is $60,000. A representative of the bank meets the car at the station and exchanges the money for the cheque. There are always three or four men besides the train crew on the car. The paymaster and his assistants go heavily armed, and it would be a hard matter for anybody to rob the car. The car stops at all stations along the line, and the employees in the immediate vicinity are supposed to be on hand to receive their money. The paymaster counts the money out before them and they sign the roll in his presence. J. H. Fredericks, one of the oldest employees of the Pennsylvania Company, is the paymaster. The Pennsylvania Railroad have about 10,000 men on the three divisions between Pittsburg and Philadelphia. All the employees in this city are paid in checks on the Merchants and Manufacturers' Bank. The cheques are received by mail and distributed by the officials of the various departments. Those out on the road get their cheques from the pay cars. There is one car for each division. They pay out about $500,000 monthly. If the employee wishes to get his money, for good cause, before the regular time, he is paid out of the contingency fund. The Baltimore & Ohio road pay about 2,500 men between Pittsburg and Cumberland. The officers and others in this city receive cheques and the employees on the road are paid in cash. About $200,000 is paid out. The Pittsburg & Lake Erie has about 1,500 men on their rolls who are paid about $75,000 in cash. Each man's money is put in an envelope with his name, number of days he worked and amount of money he is entitled to. It takes two and one half days to pay them. The Panhandle railroad car disburses about $160,000 between this city and Columbia. It also pays the Cleveland & Pittsburg employees. —Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

Objected to Her Photograph.

A case which created some interest was adjudicated upon at the Woolwich County Court by Mr. Powell. Messrs. Long & Faulkner, photographers, Woolwich, sued Mrs. Pearson, wife of an arsenal employee, for £2 6s. 6d. for portraits supplied to her order. Plaintiffs stated that when the photographs were complete Mrs. Pearson called with her husband and saw them, promising to call again and pay for them. No complaints were made, and as she did not call the likenesses were sent home, and subsequently returned with some frivolous complaints. An action was then brought against the husband, but it fell through, the wife asserting that she had a separate income. Two photographers now attended and expressed an opinion that the likenesses were correct, but admitted that the negative had been "touched up" to meet a common requirement of customers to look their best. Mrs. Pearson said she did not wish to be "flattered and tittivated up." In trying to make her look younger they had almost wholly lost the likeness. They had made her hair waved, whereas it was not so. Plaintiff, in reply to the judge, said it was not within the photographic art to make hair which had been photographed plain appear to be waved. The judge said the photograph certainly made the lady look younger than she now appeared to be. She did not give the photographer any specific orders to make her appear "just as she was," and the ordinary course of procedure—viz., to make the customers look their best—was followed. He considered that they were reasonable likenesses, and ordered the payment of the amount sued for.

Putting His Foot In It.

She—"And do you still squeeze up the ladies' feet in your country?" He—"On the contrary, madam! That is a Chinese custom. We in Japan always allow the ladies' feet to grow to quite their full size. Not that any would ever rival yours, madam!" (Is delighted with his neat little compliment!)—Punch.

A Philadelphia grocer who had three hams stolen from his store wrote and pasted up a paper which read as follows: "I know who stole the three hams from the front of my store. They are worthless to any one but myself. If returned in twenty-four hours no arrest." When the clerk opened the store the next morning the hams hung outside. They were made of sawdust and only for show.

"You cannot," said the schoolmaster, place a, the singular article, before plural nouns. No one can say a cows, a women." "Why not?" said the good boy. "When we go to church we say a-men!"—Judy.

OLD WORLD GOSSIP BY MAIL

From England.

Mr. Joel Walker, farmer, Heanor Gate Farm, Heanor, has just gathered a fine crop of Swede turnips on his land. Three turnips filled a large wheelbarrow. One of the turnips weighed 25 lbs.

As some men were pulling down an old shop at St. Mary Cray, recently, they discovered a very large number of Bank of England notes of a generation ago. Their disappointment was great on discovering that all the notes were cancelled a short time ago.

The Lord Mayor of London is said to have singled out two days of next year for his grand efforts. He will make them renowned in civic annals. They are the Jubilee Day on the Queen's coronation, and the day on which the Prince and the Princess of Wales will celebrate their silver wedding.

A man got into a London theatre the other night in a curious way. He had gone out between the acts, but having lost his check, the attendants who did not remember his face, would not readmit him, so he asked them to look at his coat-tails. The paint on his seat had adhered to them. The attendants were convinced, and passed him in.

One morning recently a little boy, aged 3 years, and his sister, aged 5 years, the children of a beerhouse-keeper named Eastenby, at Blackburn, went into the kitchen in their night-dresses. The boy lighted a piece of paper and set fire to his sister, who was so shockingly burned that she died in Blackburn Infirmary the same day.

From Ireland.

The Duke of Abercorn has been invited to accept the office of President of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland for next year.

An old woman named Lyons was found dead one day recently at her cottage in a lane out of Lower Leeson street, Dublin. Her skull was fractured, and there was a quantity of blood in the room. She was supposed to possess money, but except some trifling articles nothing seems to have been stolen.

At a Dublin Police Court one day recently a man named Walsh was charged with drunkenness. The evidence showed that when he was arrested his 4-year-old son was lying dead drunk beside him in the street. The father had taken the child around to a number of taverns and given him liquor to drink. By means of a stomach pump the child's life was saved and the father was fined ten shillings.

From Scotland.

The epidemic of measles is still raging in the island of Eriskay. There have been eleven deaths from measles in the island within about two months.

One afternoon recently when the inspector of the Port Glasgow Waterworks examined the filters at Parkhill he found the supply from Auchendores almost completely stopped. On further examination at the valve he found the pipe choked with a large eel 3 feet 2 inches in length, and weighing 4½ lbs.

Most of the suburban burghs of Glasgow are showing much activity on the Boundaries question. They have united in stating a general case in opposition to the elaborate annexation scheme. The Secretary for Scotland has appointed the Earl of Elgin and Mr. Crum, of Thornliebank, additional members of the commission. Pollokshields has voted in favor of annexation to Glasgow.

A Remarkable Ferry Steamer.

There will soon be launched at Detroit a vessel which, aside from her size, is one of the most remarkable ever built on the lakes. It is a car ferry boat for the Mackinac Transportation Company, and when completed is to ply on the Straits of Mackinac between Mackinac and Point St. Ignace. She is 235 feet in length, 52 in breadth, and 25 in depth, and is to carry ten freight or eight passenger cars. But it is as an ice breaker that the new boat is expected to be remarkable. Everything that modern ship-building, practice and experience can suggest to make her successful has been done. She has fine lines, bow and stern being nearly the same form, and it will be an impossibility for the soft ice, which so often hinders the passage of ordinary ferry boats, to cling to her sides. Her bow, on the inside, is a mass of framing as strong almost as solid timber, and the outside planking is six inches thick. Besides this, the hull is to be sheathed outside with steel plates one-quarter of an inch in thickness, which will effectually prevent the ice from scoring her sides.

Terrible Ravages of Diphtheria.

Reference was made the other day to the sad affliction of a family living on Metcalfe street that recently moved to town, the members of which were all down with diphtheria. Three of a family of six have already succumbed and the others are in a dangerous condition. The two who died yesterday were the two eldest of the family, aged 17 and 14 years respectively. The family, whose name is Smith, removed here from Burford.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

Brought His Man Down.

Rogers used to tell this story: An Englishman and a Frenchman fought a duel in a darkened room. The Englishman, unwilling to take his antagonist's life, generously fired up the chimney and brought down the Frenchman. "When I tell this story in France," pleasantly added the relator, "I make the Englishman go up the chimney."

A Disguised Statesman.

Hon. William Elvin, of Hamilton, Ont., is a guest at the Hall.—Montreal Star.

Now, who is the "Hon. William?" Hamilton has not many "Hons.," but the crop seems to be larger than the directory makes out.

Cotton Mill Shut Down.

The Kingston cotton mill has closed for three weeks in accordance with an agreement between the mill owners in Canada to prevent over-production.

Emperor William, according to a prophecy based on his handwriting, is to live to be 100 years old.

A clam weighing a pound and five ounces was dug up at Plymouth, Mass.

ORIGIN OF OLD PHRASES.

"Cutting a Dido," "Catching a Tartar," and "He has an Axe to Grind."

Dido, Queen of Tyre, about seven centuries before Christ, after her husband had been put to death by her brother, fled from that city and established a colony on the north coast of Africa. Having bargained with the natives for as much land as could be surrounded with a bull's hide, she cut the hide into narrow strips, tied them together and claimed the land that could be surrounded with the line thus made. She was allowed to have her way, and now, when one plays a sharp trick he is said to "cut a dido."

A tailor of Samarcand, Asia, who lived on a street leading to the burying ground, kept near his shop an earthen pot, in which he was accustomed to deposit a pebble whenever a body was carried to its final resting place. Finally the tailor died, and, seeing the shop deserted, a person inquired what had become of its former occupant. "He has gone to pot himself, was the reply by one of the deceased's neighbors.

During a battle between the Russians and Tartars a private soldier of the former cried out: "Captain, I've caught a Tartar." "Bring him along," said the officer. "He won't let me," was the response. Investigation proved that the captive had the captor by the arm and would not allow him to move. So "catching a Tartar" is applicable to one who has found an antagonist too powerful for him.

While lying on the ground over a slow fire St. Lawrence—in whose honor the Escurial was built by Philip II., said to the Emperor who was watching his sufferings: "Assatus ess, jam versa et manduca;" which one translator, not quite literally, but appreciatively of the same grim humor characterizing the original, rendered:

This side enough is roasted,
Then turn me, tyrant, and eat;
And see whether raw or roasted
I am the better meat.

Hence, "Done to a turn."

Formerly in London when a small dealer bought bread of the baker, for every dozen loaves purchased he was given an extra loaf as his profit, from which circumstances "a baker's dozen" signifies thirteen. Various origins have been assigned the phrase, but the above is the only one based on a sure foundation.

In a work, "Essays from the Desk of Poor Robert the Scribe," published in 1815, the author, O. Miner, tells the story of a boy who, by the offer of a liberal compensation, was induced to turn the grindstone for a man who desired to sharpen his axe. The promised compensation was never paid, and of one who disguises his own selfish aims under an appearance of generosity or disinterestedness it is remarked: "He has an axe to grind."—Christian Union.

People who Never Eat Meat.

There is no abstemiousness in the world, and no thrift, like the thrift and abstemiousness of the average native of India. Almost alone among the workingmen of the world he has raised himself nearly above wants, has stripped himself of all the impediment of luxury. Millions of men in India, especially on the richer soils and in the river deltas, live, marry and rear apparently healthy children upon an income which, even when the wife works, is rarely above 2s. a week, and frequently sinks to 1sd., says the London Spectator. The Indian is enabled to do this, not so much by the cheapness of food—for, though it is cheap, a European who ate the same food would want five times the money merely to feed himself—as by a habit of living which makes him independent of the ordinary cares of mankind. He goes nearly without clothes, gives his children none, and dresses his wife in a long piece of the most wretched muslin. Neither he nor his wife pay tailor or milliner one shilling during their entire lives, nor do they ever purchase needles or thread, which, indeed, it is contrary to a semi-religious etiquette ever to use. The poorest peasant inhabits a hut containing a single covered room of the smallest size, with an earthen platform or two outside it, and as he constructs or repairs his own dwelling, he virtually pays no rent except for the culturable land. He never touches alcohol or any substitute for it. There is an idea in England that he eats opium or hemp, but he as a rule swallows neither—firstly, because he regards them with as much moral antipathy as any English gentleman, and secondly, because he could not by any possibility pay for articles which in India, as everywhere else, are exceedingly expensive. He eats absolutely no meat nor any animal fat, nor any expensive grain like good wheat, but lives on millet or small rice, a little milk, with the butter from milk, and the vegetables he grows. Even of these he eats more sparingly than the poorest Tuscan. Once a quarter, perhaps, he eats enough, during some festival, but, as a rule, he knows accurately what will sustain him, and would be enraged with the wife who cooks for him if she prepared more. He is assisted in this economy by a religious rule which we have never seen a Hindoo break, and which is undoubtedly, like the rule against killing oxen, a survival from a military law or custom of the most remote antiquity.

An Accomplished Wife.

"Well, Nellie, does your husband still drink?" "Yes, mother, and it's worrying the life out of me." "Did you try the plan of breaking him of the habit that I suggested to you?" "Yes." "Did you put whisky in his coffee?" "Yes." "What did he say?" "He said I was the only woman he had seen since his mother died who knew how to make coffee as it should be made."

A Stylish Christmas Present.

"What are you going to buy your wife for a Christmas present?"

"I am thinking of getting her a piano."

"Can she play?"

"Of course not. Do you suppose I'd be such a fool as to buy her a piano if she could play? I am going to get her a piano because it makes the parlor look so stylish."—Texas Siftings.

Christmas Preferences.

Tailors prefer a Christmas turkey; they have a goose all the year round.—Toronto World.

The engaged young man has a similar preference; his general "table fair" is duck.

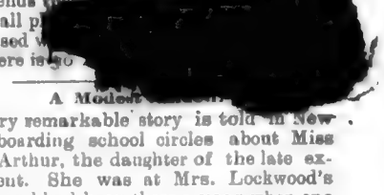
GUARDING RUSSIA'S CZAR.

He is Constantly Surrounded by Swarms of Soldiers and Detectives.

A few nights ago I attended the illuminations at Peterhoff in honor of the Czarina's birthday. The Czar's palace is on a peninsula and the grounds and buildings occupy almost a mile square—the most superb structures, fountains, and miles of the finest parking and drives in the world. Scores of buildings and fountains, hundreds of trees and great crowns, crosses and figures, besides miles of high walls, were covered with colored lamps. There were millions of lights, and it required a regiment of soldiers and hundreds of civilians weeks to put them in place. All was paid for from the public treasury, or rather a Czar's treasury repleted by the people.

At a time in the evening when the fountains and lights glistened most, the bands played the loudest, and the pyrotechnics and cannon from the men-of-war in the gulf glared and roared best, the royal family gave the assembled multitude a rare treat. It showed itself. Seldom it is that people in Russia see their Emperor, their Czar, because he suspects them of designs. I was making my way between two of the great blazing walls of colored lights, through one of the drives, when a detachment of Cossacks came dashing along, slashing their sabres and driving the people out of the way. In their wake came soldiers on foot and great detachments of men in citizen's clothing. The latter stationed themselves in front of the lines of the masses. A din of voices—lusty cheering is heard in the distance. It comes nearer, then nearer. More Cossacks, more soldiers, more men in citizens' clothing, and farther back we are crowded. The tier of officious citizens is re-enforced in our front and many linger in the driveway. Finally the caravan comes in view. More Cossacks, soldiers, citizens. Eight white horses, each one on the left bearing a liveryman, are next seen; then the royal equipage, an immense, gold-mounted chariot. The Czar, a great burly fellow, with full beard, crown and uniform, is on the left seat in front. The brother, the Crown Prince, the Czarina and grand dukes, etc., make up the load. On every hand of the carriage, four deep, are Cossacks, while the driveway in front and rear is blocked with soldiery, making a perfect shield against violent attack.

The "citizens" who were so very plentiful and officious were the most experienced detective and body-guards in the empire. There were thousands of them. It would have been impossible for one to raise his or her hand against the Czar or any member of his family. It is the boast of the Russian authorities that their detectives have eyes in every portion of their heads and bodies. The whole service of protecting the Crown and members of the family, and suppressing all thoughts of dissatisfaction with the present form of government, is in full charge of Gresser, chief of the secret service. The authority of this officer is appalling. He can order into exile or [redacted] execution yard any one suspected [redacted] lawful or disrespectful acts or [redacted] He attends t[redacted] to run all p[redacted] displeased w[redacted] and there is [redacted]



A Modest [redacted]

A very remarkable story is told in New York boarding school circles about Miss Nellie Arthur, the daughter of the late ex-President. She was at Mrs. Lockwood's school, and had been there a year when one day she was missed by her little chums, who crowded around the Principal after the opening exercises to ask where she had gone. "Where's Nell?" they said. "Why, don't you know?" said the lady. "Her father, Gen. Arthur, died last night." "Was her father Gen. Arthur?" all asked as with one voice; "was she the President's daughter?" Miss Nellie had never hinted at what most girls would have told before anything else.

Comfortable All Round.

"You want something to buy mamma a Christmas present, do you?" said papa; "and want to buy it yourselves, hey? Well, well, that is right, my children. You shall have it. She has been a good mother to you all these years. If you could only find something," continued papa, as his blue eyes filled with tears, "that would keep your mamma's feet warm this winter I wouldn't begrudge $50."—Chicago Tribune

Those Good Old Times.

Wife (on Christmas Eve)—"Whew! What a lot of money it costs to get Christmas presents for all these children!"

Husband—"Yes, it's a pity we didn't live in the days of Henry the Eighth."

"Why so?

"Because it was not until after his reign that stockings became fashionable. Christmas didn't bankrupt a man in those days.'

A Hidden Sting.

A little three-year-old Rocklander went into market last week, and, helping herself to a green pepper, tried to eat it. After she had failed the marketman asked her what the matter was with the fruit, and she replied, between sobs, "Vere was a bumble bee in it"—Middleboro News.

Commercial Item.

"Pa," asked a bright-faced boy of his parent, "what is reciprocity that I hear you talk about so much?"

"Reciprocity, my son, is the very life of trade—especially the Christmas gift trade."

A Religious Man.

First Citizen—What makes you think your neighbor, Towson, is a religious man? Second Citizen—He always sifts his ashes on a still day.

The study of Volapuk, the new universal language, is obligatory upon the students of the Royal Gymnasia of Munich. In Russia it is permitted to be used in telegraphic transmission.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, the philanthropist, never goes to the theatre, and has read but two novels, "Jane Eyre" and the "Scarlet Letter." Her tastes are perfectly simple. She has a great liking for bread, milk and apples. It is doubtful if society ever heard of her. But she is the only woman who has the freedom of the floor of the House of Representatives, at Washington, a right which even the President's wife does not have.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.
Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,
Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.
HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

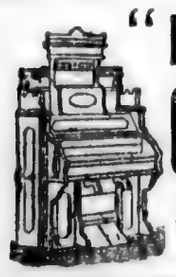
John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.
MY.
COMMISSIONER,
SURANCE ACT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

Flesherton Station Mill.
The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. GEORGE MOOREHOUSE, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this

J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,
FLESHERTON ONT.



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Overshoes and Rubbers selling off very cheap at Wm. Claytons. 2t.

Mr. Henry Cairns was re-elected Councillor for Eugenia Ward on Monday last by a majority of six votes. So that this leaves our Township Fathers "as you were."

Remember lecture by Rev. John Stuart, D.D., of Owen Sound, in the Baptist Chapel, Flesherton, to-morrow (Friday) evening at 7 o'clock. Collection to be taken up in aid of Building Fund.

Auction sale of Farm Stock and Implements at Lot 32, Con. 6, Artemesia, on Thursday next, Jan. 12th, at 1 o'clock p.m. Arch. McLean, proprietor; A. S. VanDusen, auctioneer. See bills.

PHYSICIANS are usually averse to proprietary medicines, Nasal Balm is a specific for cold in the head and catarrh and having faith and evidence that it will cure those troubles, we ask and court a fair trial of the discovery and a a full investigation at their hands.

Business at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, has increased so largly during the past year, they have had to add new nichol show cases, &c., to contain their magnificent stock of fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. We have also added a fine burglar proof safe from the well known firm of Goldie & McCullough.

A copy of "The Farmer's Advocate and Home Magaziue," of London, Ont., has come to hand—an agricultural journal which is excellent in all respects. It is well edited, and includes every subject of importance to the farmer or stockman, the truthful and independent tone of the paper enhancing the value of its information. It is handsomely printed on fine paper, and got up in library form. It is indeed a very comprehensive journal. We recommend it.

At the last regular meeting of L.O.L., No. 1118, the following were elected officers for the year 1888:

Jas. Brodie, W.M.
Robert Campbell, D.M.
Rev. J. S. Corcoran, Chap.
James Carson, Rec. Sec.
Henry Weber, Fin. Sec.
Ephraim Brodie, Treas.
John Williams, D. of C.
Thos. Crow, Sec.

Samuel Pedlar, Josiah Cooper, Joseph Williams, Robert Williams and Joseph Fenwick, committeemen. This lodge meets in the Orange Hall, Eugenia, on the Wednesday on or before the full of the moon in each month.

The brethren of L.O.L., No. 244, held their thirty-seventh annual meeting in their Hall on the evening of the 27th Dec., of which the following brethren were elected officer for the ensuing year:

Joseph A. Blakeley, W.M.
W. J. Henderson, D.M.
S. Sheardown, Chap.
T. J. Stinson, R.S.
Wm. Sharp, F.S.
Jas. Best, Treas.
J. Hales, Lec.
D. A. Stinson, Tyler.

Wesley Breen,	1st Com.
Jos. Watson,	2nd "
E. Lomos,	3rd "
R. Sample,	4th "
J. Lyons,	5th "

Rev. Mr. Green—now of Port Elgin and formerly pastor of the Methodist church here—has been visiting friends in this locality. He delivered a very sensible and practical sermon to the young people in the Methodist church on Sunday evening last, from the words found in Genesis 41c. 38v., "Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is." He spoke at length, reviewing the character of Joseph, his unswerving devotion to that which was right in the sight of God—suffering persecution rather than do that which was wrong—and drawing therefrom many practical and useful lessons, which should be a guide to the youth of the present day. There was a very large congregation, composed largely of Sabbath School children, to whom his remarks were more particularly addressed. Rev. Mr. Shilton delivered a short but most excellent address to the children in the morning.

Health is impossible when the blood is impure, thick and sluggish, or when it is thin and impoverished. Such conditions give rise to boils, neuralgia, rheumatism and other disorders. Ayer's Sarsaparilla purifies, invigorates, and vitalizes the blood.

We can easily lay claim to doing the business of this section for 25 miles around, having soldfrom Oct. 3rd, 1887, to Dec. 29th, 1887, eleven fine gold watches, thirty-two silver watches and twenty-nine clocks, against another dealer's blow of twelve watches and sixteen clocks. There is no doubt about it, that the people will come to us to buy as they know they can do far better than elsewhere at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Married.

GAMEY—CLARK.—On Wednesday, 28th ult., by Rev. W. F. Ferrier, Maxwell, Mr. Thos. Gamey, to Miss Frank Clark, both of Osprey.

PIPER—HILL.—On Monday, 26th ult., at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. A. Wilson, Markdale, Mr. Harry Piper, to Miss Leetie Hill, both of Artemesia.

Died.

WILKERSON.—In Flesherton, on Friday, Dec. 30th, Mrs. H. L. Wilkerson, aged 67 years, 8 months.

The funeral took place on Sunday last, the remains being interred in Flesherton cemetery. After which the occasion was improved by Rev. A. Wilson by an impressive and powerful sermon in the Presbyterian church.

Strange Occurence in Ward No. 4, Eugenia.

To the Editor of The Advance.

It is alleged that a Mr. Hogg of Eugenia, kept an open house, during the Municipal Election there for Mr. Henry Cairns, the member elect. If it be true, then there is a violation of Subsection one, two and six of Section 201 of the Municipal Institution Act—which Sections speak for themselves—and plainly would not only forfeit the Election, but disable the person from again holding any such position for two years—and the law is quite as binding, after having voted as before it. It is a pity that Mr. Cairns or his friend, should so far have forgot his or their duty to the Electorate, at large, as to cause a breach of the Statute, and do what is so clearly intended to be avoided, whether it be, giving of dinners or anything else, either to induce a man to vote, or as a thank gift for having voted. I shall be glad if the report is false.—LAW.

Attention.

Attention all, both great and small,
To what I'm about to say
The summer is gone and winter is on,
And the builder wants his pay.

Those who are indebted to me by book account will please call and settle the same by cash or note on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, as I must have my book acct. settled up. Thanking my friends for past patronage, I would solicit a continuance of the same. —JOHN WHITTEN.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is recommended by eminent physicians, on both sides of the Atlantic, as the most reliable remedy for colds, coughs, and all pulmonary disorders. Inquire of your druggist for Ayer's Almanac.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began takirg Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

Ayer's Pills,
PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists.

BOOTS & SHOES!
—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—
WINTER GOODS!
RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS AND FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.
WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

HEARD'S!
Carriage Works, Flesherton,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.
SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.
Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!
—THE WELL-KNOWN—
SPEIGHT WAGON!
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual
First-class value in every department.
Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.
STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,
Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.
Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT
THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.
THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS
Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.
Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.
Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

To the People
Of Artemesia, Osprey, and Surrounding District.
The undersigned respectfully tenders his sincere and grateful thanks to the general public for the excellent patronage extended to him since opening out in the Boot & Shoe Business in Flesherton, and trusts he has merited their continued support.
At the same time, he wishes to state that he has a good stock of Mens Long Boots, Ladies Boots & Shoes, &c., of his own make, which will be sold at Cost Prices. Must clear out the stock—come and get bargains! Wishing one and all a "Merry Christmas and a Happy new year."
Flesherton, Dec. 21st, 1887. JOS. SMITH.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton
Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Executor's Notice

IN pursuance of sect. 1, Chap. 9, 46 Vic., notice is hereby given that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of W. H. Colquett, deceased, late of the township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, and Province of Ontario, who died on or about the 26th day of May, 1886, are to sent by post prepaid or delivered to William S. Christoe, M.D., on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, a statement containing their names and addresses and full particulars of their claims and of the securities (if any) held by them and after the said, last mentioned date, the said W. S. Christoe, for the personal Estate and effects, rights and credits of the said W. H. Colquett—will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased amongst the parties entitled thereto, regard being had only to the claims of which notice has been given as above required, and Executors will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person or persons of whom claims have not been received by the said W. S. Christoe.

And further, all parties who are indebted to the said Estate of the said W. H. Colquett, deceased, are to pay as the same becomes due, to the said W. S. Christoe.

W. S. CHRISTOE,
for the Executors,
JAMES LOVE, SAMUEL COLQUETT, and MRS. COLQUETT.
Dated, Flesherton, this 20th day of Dec., 1887

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 342. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

HAMPDEN

WATCHES

I desire to extend best thanks for the continued confidence and support received from the public during 1887. I hope 1888 will bring to all many helps over hard places. Bear in mind my business principles which have been carried out for 6 years next March, in Grey Co., viz., Honest Goods in quality, Fair Profits, Reliable Warrants. I have the "only" Full Stock of Watches, Clocks, Etc. in this section to select from. My prices so close that small Jewellers doing a hand to mouth business are compelled to resort to big adjectives and fictitious discounts to draw sufficient trade to enable them to pay rents, taxes, etc. It will pay to do business with Jewellers who "have a reputation" to sustain for "reliability."

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

331-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Mrs. James Deens, of Dundalk, is the guest of Mrs. J. G. Russell.

Mr. Wm. Fawcett, ex-Deputy Reeve of Euphrasia, was in Flesherton on Monday, en route for Toronto.

ONE DOLLAR will buy a lady a nice Trimmed Hat now at M. Richardson & Co's discount sale of Millinery.

A curious coincidence in regard to the village election, is that all the elected councillors and reeve are members of the A.O.U.W.—Dundalk Herald.

Mr. Fred. Leitch, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, is home on a visit. His many friends were glad to see him well and happy.

TENDERS WANTED.—For Heating and Caretaking of the Public School building, Flesherton. Apply to M. Richardson, Sec.-Treas. School Board.

Remember the Grand Orange Soiree in Kimberly to-morrow evening. Splendid array of speakers, refreshments, &c. And a paltry 25 cents pays the bill.

Lieut. Field has the Flesherton Skating Rink in good running order. Go and have a slide on the ice. Its better than medicine when not overdone.

FOR SALE.—One bay Mare in foal to Lord Derby. Also one Colt rising 2 years, sired by Black Prince. C. EKINS, Flesherton.

M. Richardson & Co. are advertising bargains, clearing out balance of Winter Stock in their Millinery and Mantle department. Those calling early will find bargains.

Auction sale farm stock and implements at Lot 16, Con. 12, Osprey, on Friday, Jan. 20th, commencing at 1 o'clock p.m. John Speers, proprietor; John Speers & Co., Auctioneers. See bills for particulars.

If you want a first-class Gold or Silver Watch in Ladies' or Gents' sizes, Russell's, Flesherton, is the place to go. Warrants from three to five years covering all breakages at lower prices than elsewhere.

Now is the time to subscribe for THE ADVANCE and get the splendid New Story, which will shortly be published. THE ADVANCE stories are always pure in tone and of a high character generally. One Dollar foots the bill for one year. "Come one come all."

C. Treadgold, Flesherton, dealer in the best Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines, Washing Machines, Clothes Wringers, Churns, Fruit & Ornamental Trees. Three second-hand Sewing Machines on hand to sell for Wood or Hay.

A mistake occurred in setting up the names of the officers of L.O.L., No. 244 last week. The name of Mr. John Wright should have appeared as Lecturer, while Mr. John Hales should have had the words, "Director of Ceremonies" after his name.

We can easily lay claim to doing the business of this section for 25 miles around. having sold from Oct. 3rd, 1887, to Dec. 29th, 1887, eleven fine gold watches, thirty-two silver watches, and twenty-nine clocks, against another dealer's blow of twelve watches and sixteen clocks. There is no doubt about it, that the people will come to us to buy as they know they can do far better than elsewhere at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

REMOVES THE CAUSE.—Many persons suffer from a symptom of Catarrh that nausea, more especially after eating in the morning. Nasal Balm will cure by removing the cause.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fawcett, sr., are visiting friends and neighbors in Euphrasia and Collingwood Townships.

Members of the Royal Templars' Gospel Band will be in Flesherton next week, and from this point will proceed to make a tour of the County.

M. Richardson & Co's sale of Cheap Furs attracted the attention of a large number of purchasers. But a few lines are left: Muffs, Caps and Mantles, which will be cleared out at still lower prices. Come and see.

Our Township Fathers did not meet on Monday. Next Monday they will assemble for the transaction of business in the Town Hall. It seems that they always meet the third Monday in January but the first Monday in each and every other month during the year, except on special occasions.

Our Watch repair trade is increasing every day. Thirty-nine watches into repair at the present time and the people come over twenty miles around to get their work done at Russell's, Flesherton, as they have proved by experience that is the only place to get them done properly.

Discount sale of Millinery, Mantles & Fur Goods at Richardson & Co's. Come early and secure bargains.

WOOD WANTED.—Will exchange Sett of single Harness (new) for Green Stove Wood.—W. W. TRIMBLE.

The Toronto Trader of this month contains the following: "A live Winnipegger, Mr. W. F. Doll, our old Toronto friend, (who may now be considered a real Winnipegger) is decidedly making his mark in the commercial metropolis of the Northwest. Mr. Doll has shown a great deal of foresight in locating himself in Winnipeg, for there is no doubt that at no distant day the fertile prairies of Manitoba and the sister provinces westward to the Rockies will not only be the granary of the world, but support millions of people in easy circumstances. Mr. Doll has the go in him to make his business keep pace with the growth of the country."

Osprey Municipal Elections, 1888

Office	Candidates	Polling Sub-divisions 1	2	3	4	5	Totals
Reeve	Douglas John	29	48	60	42	86	274
"	Preston D. K.	49	84	27	51	26	237
Dep. Reeve	McIntyre A.	26	77	59	60	66	288
"	Potts Edward	48	42	17	30	47	184
Councillors	Brown Jos.	14	15	5	51	20	105
"	Hudson John	17	70	73	34	21	215
"	Monaghan Wm.	57	64	29	22	78	250
"	Speers John	18	64	60	21	12	170
"	Sprott Robt.	6	22	7	17	34	86
"	Taylor Jos.	36	69	27	55	61	248

Wm. Milne, R.O.

The following candidates at the December entrance examination in Flesherton, have been provisionally admitted by the Local Examiners:

Name	Marks	Where educated	Teacher
Annie Bemrose	381	9 Osprey	Mr. Drummond
Minnie Brander	528	12 Artemesia	Mr. Kerr
Lizzie Hale	428	7 Osprey	Geo. Mitchell
Grace Johnston	416	12 Artemesia	Mr. Kerr
Frances James	414	12 "	"
Mary E. Large	400	Markdale	Mr. Porter
Minnie McNea	381	Markdale	"
Minnie McKee	382	4 Osprey	Miss McIntyre
Etta Spotfard	419	9 Osprey	Mr. Drummond
Lizzie A. White	385	6 Glenelg	Miss White
Josiah Hudson	394	7 Osprey	Mr. Mitchell
Herbert Hull	439	Markdale	Mr. Porter
Robert Keefer	473	Flesherton	Mr. Irwin
John Knapp	370	Markdale	Mr. Porter
George Shore	476	Markdale	Mr. Porter
Wm. A. Sinclair	372	Flesherton	Mr. Irwin
Frank VanDusen	371	Flesherton	Mr. Irwin

THOMAS GORDON, Insp.

We can easily lay claim to doing the business of this section for 25 miles around, having sold from Oct. 3rd, 1887, to Dec. 29th, 1887, eleven fine gold watches, thirty-two silver watches and twenty-nine clocks, against another dealer's blow of twelve watches and sixteen clocks. There is no doubt about it that the people will come to us to buy as they know they can do far better than elsewhere at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

ASTHMA.—Persons who have suffered for years with Asthma will find a quick relief and cure in the double treatment of Southern Asthma Cure.

THIS SPACE

—Is Reserved for—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON,

The Place where the People of Grey get Genuine Bargains in

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, SPEX &C.

We are just Taking Stock so look out for Great Bargains in our New Ad. shortly, they will astonish you.

A Voice From the Farm.

You say that my life is a round of toil?
The stalwart farmer said,
That I scarce can wrest from the oft-tilled soil
My pittance of daily bread?
Well, what you tell me in part is true,
I am seldom an idle man,
But I value the blessing of rest, as you,
Who have much of it, never can.

And surely I have never worked in vain,
From the spring to the golden fall;
The harvest has ever brought waving grain,
Enough and to spare for all.
And when in the evening free from care,
I sit at my farm house door,
My wife and little ones waiting there,
Oh, what has the millionaire more?

My children may never have hoarded wealth;
Their lives may at times be rough;
But if in their homes they've love and health,
They will find these riches enough.
The only land they will ever own,
Is the land that the strong right arm
And the patient fearless heart alone
Can till to a fertile farm.

I have nothing beyond my simple wants,
And a little for cloudy days;
But no grim spectre my threshold haunts,
Such as silver and gold might raise,
Around me are eyes that with sparkling mirth
Or with placid contentment shine—
And no wealth-clogged lord upon all the earth
Has a lot more blessed than mine.

To-morrow.

Bind up a wreath and give it me
Before this dull day closes,
And in the garlands let there be
The thorns as well as roses;
Wreathe violets in and greenest bays,
Weave willow for my sorrow,
Sad flowers for the yesterday,
White lilies for to-morrow.

White lilies, for they tell of peace
Beyond the gates of even,
Where whispers of the soul's release
Seem mystic hints of Heaven.
And yesterday, but that has gone,
And so I needs must borrow
A hope of that swift coming dawn,
The promise of to-morrow.

Forever more to-morrow lends
Bright visions of completeness;
True lovers, and the steadfast friends
With faces full of sweetness;
That backward all seems dim and gray,
And vaguely touched with sorrow;
I care not for your yesterday
If I may have to-morrow.

The past is past—ah! dead indeed,
I weep not for its going,
Its phantoms weird no more I heed
Than west-winds wildly blowing;
Press outward, aye, and upward heart,
While I my gladness borrow,
For hope and I shall never part
While I can have to-morrow.

—Ernest McGaffney.

Mothers-in-Law as They Are.

I was young one't myself—and I think, like as not,
I was smart as the best of 'em then!
I knowed no blame much that I'm glad I've forgot
And can't recollect it again!
But as smart as I was—and I'm certain of that—
I was never so smart that folks saw
Any brains sproutin' up through the top of my hat,
When I laughed at the mother-in-law!

The mother-in-law was a woman—but we Didn't count that, and neither do you,—
One had a young daughter I use to go see,
And play the accordion to;
But that arctic old woman, half gloom and half glare,
That would neither freeze solid, n'er thaw,
Knowed what she was doin', and why she set there,
And 'ud not be my mother-in-law!

She was sound, like the most of 'em is, and she meant
Just a havin' full justice 'er none;
And as for this mother-in-law foolishness went,
She remembered her mother was one.
I remember, myself, doin' struck that way
At a gatherin' one't, where I saw
My wife weepin' over the clods and the clay
At the grave of her mother-in-law!

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

Hot Fomentations.

We all know the value of hot applications, but the mode of making and the applying differ in almost every house. An exchange gives the following: "Wring several thicknesses of flannel out of cold water, so it will not drip; place between two folds of paper, and lay it upon a hot register or top of a stove. Steam will generate and permeate the whole cloth, and thus the required temperature will be obtained. In this way there is no running long distances to a kitchen, no burning of the hands, no uncomfortable moisture in the bed and no ruffled tempers. A hot fomentation is beneficial in almost every acute disease accompanied by severe pain, and is often of great service in chronic inflammations. It is more effectual and more accessible than any other therapeutic agent. By quick, prompt and thorough use severe attacks of illness are often prevented."—Herald of Health.

A One-armed Ruler of Germany.

There is a prophecy which is widely believed in by the German people, who are somewhat superstitious. Germany is to be the greatest, it says, under a young ruler who has but one arm, and has four sons. He is to succeed an aged sovereign, carry on a great war successfully, and prove another Frederick the Great. The Germans see in this the destiny of Prince William, who was born with one arm partly deformed—short and stiff. And they see in his character all the requirements of the prophecy, even down to the four sons. But the power of Germany will wane after this ruler, and she will go down and become an insignificant nation. So runs the prophecy.—St. Stephen's Review.

Not a Parallel Case.

The minister was dining with the family, and he said to Bobby, with an amused smile:

"I'm afraid, Bobby, that you haven't the patience of Job."

"No, sir," responded Bobby, who was hungry, "but Job wasn't always helped last."

Another Great Living Curiosity.

"What is your specialty, my friend?' inquired the visitor of a dime museum freak.

"Phenomenal intelligence."

"In what direction does it lie?"

"I'm the man who always 'shuts the door.'"

A young German officer, rather new to his work, was drilling a squad of raw recruits and gave the word of command, "Lift the right leg." One of the soldiers by mistake raised his left leg, so that it joined closely to the right leg of his neighbor. "What jackanapes has lifted both legs?" exclaimed the officer.—Fliegende Blatter.

The old brick church at Smithfield, Va., built in 1632, is still in use for divine worship. It has recently been repaired and gives evidence of lasting a century or two longer.

CURRENT TOPICS.

From an examination of 100,000 persons, Prof. Erismann, of St. Petersburg, finds that those engaged in textile manufactures, especially spinners, are inferior to other workingmen in stature, chest measurement, bodily weight and muscular strength.

After more than a quarter of a century of active and distinguished service, James H. Stoddart, LL.D., retires from the editorship of the Glasgow Herald. He has made it the most widely circulated of North British newspapers.

Miss Frances E. Willard, the temperance orator, recently declared that she has "never known a single physically reasonable day since that sweet May morning" in her 16th year when she was first clothed upon with long petticoats, corsets, high heels, crinolines and the other instruments of female torture.

History repeats itself. President Grevy lost his position in France because he defended his son-in-law, and now King Kalakaua's crown is in danger because the Hawaiian monarch is sticking by his brother-in-law. He is the wise ruler who places his relations to the people above his relations by marriage.

As another of the many evidences we are now having of the revival of British shipbuilding, London cablegrams state that orders have recently been placed for new steamships of an aggregate of eighty thousand tons. This in itself is no inconsiderable fleet—say, twenty ships of 4,000 tons each, all of steel.

Dr. Charles Mackay has in hand a dictionary of Lowland Scotch, forming a vocabulary of leading words in the Scottish language, with etymological derivations. It is intended to be a volume of interest to readers of Burns, Sir Walter Scott, Allan Ramsay and others. The book will be published by Whittaker & Co., London.

A sewing-machine of solid silver and enriched with sapphires was recently received by the Empress of Russia. It was a present from the Society for Promoting the Use of Russian Materials. The Czarina has taken great interest in this organization. Her enthusiasm, however, will not cause her to use the sewing-machine in all probability.

Last Christmas ex-Gov. Alger, of Michigan, gave a suit of clothes to each of 500 Detroit newsboys. This year, he has supplied 1,500 boys of Detroit with a similar outfit, and in addition sent a ton of coal and a barrel of flour to each of 1,000 needy families in the same city. This is charity of a practical kind. Three cheers for Alger!

Alas for the big Nova Scotia lumber raft! The U. S. vessel Enterprise, which was sent out to cruise for the derelict, has returned to New London with the announcement that she encountered during her brief voyage no end of logs dancing around upon the agitated bosom of the wild and wasteful ocean. This seems to be conclusive as to the breaking up of the big raft.

A Chicago clothing manufacturer says that he is obliged to pay particular attention to the hip pockets which he puts in trousers destined for the Western trade. His Kansas and Iowa customers demand a pocket capable of holding a quart flask, but for the far West trade the pocket is made deep and narrow, with an unusually strong lining, so that a pistol will fit snugly in it.

John Benson, a friendless man living at Indianapolis, has asked the County Commissioners to allow him to pass the remainder of his days in the poorhouse, promising on his death to bequeath to the county $8,000 in 4 per cent. Government bonds. He says that he has lost all confidence in humanity and has concluded that he would be safer in the poorhouse than anywhere else.

A brick, says a technical paper, being about as porous as a lump of sugar, and having six sides, needs a careful filling for water-tight work in cess-pools, etc., and a thin grout or porridge of cement is commonly used. Heating the brick and soaking beforehand in thick coal-tar has been recommended. A man may lay common wall all his life without learning how to make brick water-tight.

Prof. Blackie, the well-known Scotchman, has raised an admiring laugh this week by his response to one of the numerous inquiries now going the rounds for opinions as to the best books. He was invited by an editor to name three of the best works for young men, and he picked out Green's "History of the English People," Nasmyth's "Autobiography," and Blackie's "Self-Culture." He adds a whimsical apology for naming his own book, but declares he honestly knows of no better.

The authorities of Dresden, Germany, will not allow a piano to be played in a private house after 10.30 at night, and they punish with a fine any person found throwing an article of refuse, however insignificant, into the street. Flagmen are stationed at the corners of streets intersected by horse-car lines to warn persons of the approach of a car. Drug stores are closed at sundown, and when a druggist is called up in the night he appears with all the politeness of a dancing-master to thank the customer for his courtesy in patronizing his store.

Prof. Warman, in his treatise on oaths, says: All forms of oath-taking are immaterial. The Jew ends with, "So help me, Jehovah." The Scotchman says, "I swear by Almighty God as I shall answer to God at the great day of judgment." A Mohammedan is sworn on the Koran; a Chinese witness is sworn by kneeling and breaking a china saucer against the witness box; the Quaker simply says he will tell the truth because he believes the command to be truthful is divine. The essential thing, however, is that the witness acknowledge some binding effect derived from his belief in a God or in a future state.

Col. George P. Bissell, of Hartford, Conn., spent last summer in Japan. The most remarkable feature of that country, he says, lies in the fact that its language contains no profane or blasphemous words. "I can readily understand," he remarks, "why the practice of 'hari-kari' is so common in Japan. When a man is abused or loses his collar button and is mad all the way through, so mad that his very soul boils within him, if at such time he is the victim of a language which will not let him vent his rage even in 'darn it' or 'by thunder,' why then I can readily see how suicide might be a soothing relief."

The chances of war in Europe may alter the plans of Madame Modjeska and her husband relative to a holiday in their Polish home. "Should the war come on," said the actress a few days ago, "the greater part of the fighting would be in our immediate neighborhood—where our home is, you see—and that would not be pleasant. Our residence is in Cracow, and Cracow is situated where the Russian, German and Austrian frontiers meet. Our residence is in the very midst of the fortifications. So, you see, we would be in trouble if we went there." Her countrymen like the Austrians much better than the Russians, she thinks, and for cause.

A memorial cairn has been raised at Aberfield, Scotland, to the deeds of the gallant "Forty-Twa," or "Black Watch," Highland regiment. The north panel bears the names of the engagements in which the corps has borne part as follows: Fontenoy, Prestonpans, Fort Sandberg, Ticonderoga, Martinique, Guadaloupe, Havannah, Busby Run, Brooklyn, Fort Washington, Charlestown, Aboukir, Alexandria, Egypt-1801, Corunna, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, Cindad Rodrigo, Burgos, Salamanca, Pyrenees, Vittoria, Niville, Nive, Toulouse, Orthez, Waterloo, Alma, Sebastopol, Lucknow, Egypt, Ashantee, Nile, Tel-el-Kebir, Kirbeckan.

According to one authority one pound of bananas contains more nutriment than three pounds of meal or as many pounds of potatoes, while as a food it is in every sense superior to the wheaten bread. Although it grows spontaneously throughout the tropics, when cultivated its yield is prodigious, for an acre of ground planted with bananas will return as much food material as thirty-three acres of wheat or over one hundred acres of potatoes. It is not generally understood that bananas—fried, baked or roasted—are very appetizing, and that sliced and placed in a dish with alternate slices of orange they make a most delicious dessert.

San Remo, where the German Crown Prince is staying, about 7 miles east of the frontier dividing Italy from France, 16 from Mentone, 31 from Nice and 85 from Genoa, is a town of 16,000 inhabitants. Its bay, protected at the western extremity by Cape Nero, 800 feet high, and by Cape Verde, 350 feet high, at the east end, is too shallow for a commercial harbor, but is perfectly sheltered, except to the south and southeast; while behind the town, a complete amphitheatre of hills, rising to 4,300 feet in Monte Bignone, and nowhere less than 3,500 feet, shuts out all northerly winds.

The famous Children's Christmas Club, of Washington, of which Miss Nellie A. Arthur was once President, supplied a Christmas dinner to be given to the children of the poor. The members wear badges of white ribbon, with a diminutive sleigh bell attached to each. The club is one which could well be imitated in other cities for its useful and charitable purposes. It might be added, says the Boston Journal, that one Christmas club organized in a neighboring city has grown from its first work of preparing a Christmas tree and dinner to a charitable organization covering the wide field of visiting and relieving the poor all the year round.

Euston Square, in London, England, is lighted by a new light which is believed to possess many advantages. Ordinary coal gas, mixed in about the proportion of one to eight of common air, is supplied under the usual gas-service pressure to burners over which are placed caps of platinum wire gauze. The mixture, when lighted, burns without flame around the cap, which is raised to a brilliant white heat by the combustion. The light is perfectly steady, there being no flame, and is not affected by wind or rain. More than twice as much light, it is said, is obtained, with a given consumption of gas, as by the old system. Twenty burners replace fifty of the old kind, and light a platform 900 feet in length.

Lord Brassey, who was one of the most prominent members of Mr. Gladstone's last administration, and who has just returned from a yachting expedition around the African and Australian coasts, is a great admirer of the colored race. In a letter to the London Times he writes: "The capabilities of the colored race are nowhere seen to greater advantage than at Sierra Leone. They supply the official staff of the Government. A colored barrister of marked ability is the leader of the Bar and makes a professional income of $15,000 a year. The day seems drawing near when it will no longer be necessary to send out Englishmen to administer the Government in a climate so often fatal to Europeans."

Leading men in the lumber trade have under consideration the necessity of an important reform. It is estimated that the reduction of a log to boards averages the turning of fully one-sixth of the whole into sawdust. For every 1,000 feet of lumber that are turned out by the mill 200 feet are now reduced to powder, which used to have no known value and now is employed only as fuel. This waste was of little consequence a few years ago, when the forests of pine seemed to be inexhaustible, but now that a scarcity of the raw material threatens the trade it is asked if a large part of this cannot be avoided. The economical views of the thinkers at present are turned to the bandsaw as the one which will save at least a quarter of the waste that is inseparable from the forms of saw now in use.

Can a man cough himself to pieces? At an inquest recently held on an inmate of the Borough Asylum, considerable interest was attached to the finding of a broken rib in the body of the patient. The doctor who gave evidence endeavored to point out that under some abnormal conditions bones may be broken during life by muscular efforts, or even by the act of violent coughing. The coroner, in commenting upon this, appeared to have much difficulty in recognizing the existence of such an unusual occurrence, and naively stated to the jury that they would doubtless have equal hesitation in appreciating the learned theory that it was possible for a man to cough himself to pieces! A perusal of the writings of Dr. Weir Mitchell and Professor Charcot will show that spontaneous fracture of the bones in locomotor ataxy is not uncommon; the importance of this in medico-legal inquiries is worth remembering, and throws much light upon questions affecting the treatment of the insane.

A most wonderful invention is reported from Vienna. An Austrian engineer has, it is said, designed a truck to run before every railway train, being maintained always at a fixed but adjustable distance in front by the force of an electric current transmitted along the metals from a dynamo on the engine. The current is conducted through mercury contained in glass tubes on the pilot truck. If, therefore, the truck comes into collision the tubes are broken and the contact consequently destroyed. The interruption of the current instantly and automatically applies the brakes on the following train. It is claimed by the inventor that two expresses, fitted with this system, might with impunity be set to run full tilt at each other. The collision of their pilot trucks would arrest the progress of both trains before they could meet. The element of human fallibility is accordingly entirely eliminated and drivers may dash through a whole series of danger signals without risk, being automatically arrested the moment they reach the spot that is really dangerous.

A Washington correspondent writes: Everybody knows the poem beginning, "'Twas the night before Christmas when all through the house," but very few know anything about its author or his family. The poem is brought to mind by the fact that Mrs. James H. Young, who died recently in Washington, was the widow of the gentleman who wrote the familiar lines. Mr. Young was born in Laurel, a little town in Maryland, about twenty miles from this city, and was first a doctor and then an artist. Finally he entered the Episcopal church and became a clergyman. He died in Washington some years ago. When his widow died recently she left all her husband's manuscripts to Dr. Noble Young, of this city, her brother-in-law, and they are being examined with the view of seeing what can be done with them. There are some unpublished poems among the papers, but none of them are likely to be as famous as the story of Santa Claus.

Mrs. Eliza J. Nicholson is the only woman in this country, probably the only woman in the world, who is proprietor and editor-in-chief of a daily newspaper. Mrs. Nicholson was the widow of Col. Holbrook, editor and proprietor of the New Orleans Picayune, who, at the time of his death, left that paper with a debt of $85,000. His wife had done regular editorial work on the paper during his lifetime, and as she was devoted to journalistic work she determined to continue it, contrary to the advice of all her friends, who wished her to take the $1,000 allowed her by law and abandon the paper. The business manager, Mr. Nicholson, alone counselled her to go on, and stood by her with the staff. Within two years her conduct of the paper not only put it on a paying basis but wiped out the $85,000 debt. She afterward married Mr. Nicholson, who became a widower shortly after her husband's death. She is a fragile little woman.

Latest from Scotland.

A girl named Glen residing at Cotton Row, Irvine, drank vitriol in mistake for medicine and died in agony.

The attempt to import Indian and Ceylon tea direct to Glasgow has proved very successful. London, up till now, has had the entire monopoly of the tea trade.

A man named Grieve died in the poorhouse at Glasgow. His friends agreed with an undertaker to bury him decently for £1 16s. 6d., and £1 was handed over in part payment. The undertaker did not bury Grieve because the rest of the money had not been paid, and declined to return the £1 on the ground that it was due for the unused coffin and coach. The case was brought up in the Small Debts Court in Glasgow and the Sheriff decided that the £1 must be returned.

One day recently while Samuel Cowan, brakeman, aged 26 years, residing in Glasgow, was working in the Steel Company of Scotland's Works at Blochairn at a weighing machine, one of the employees in a joke ignited the fuse of a detonating cap and threw it on the ground. Cowan, hearing a cry of "fire," and not knowing that the matter was a joke, picked up the cap, which exploded in his hand, blowing off a portion of several of the fingers of his right hand and cutting and scorching him about the eyes.

Fancy and Realism.

Little Nell—Mamma, I wish you'd let me read a novel.

Mamma—Don't mention such a thing.

"But novels tell things just as they are in life, don't they?"

"Yes. Now ask no more questions."

"Susie Minx has got such a lovely novel, and——"

"What? Did you read any of it?"

"Only the last line. It said: "And so they got married and were happy ever after."

"Oh! that isn't a novel, dear; it's a fairy story."

Why Don't You Advertise?

She was an editor's daughter and he was a young merchant whose business was not alarmingly great. Said he:

"Darling, my heart yearns for you. I dream of you by night, and think of you by day. Will you be mine, Nellie? You know the bible says it is not well for man to live alone."

"Then, why don't you advertise?"—Lincoln Journal.

It Was the Number He Thought Of.

Brown (with a sigh)—That Robinson is a lucky dog. He has been married eight years and has got two as handsome children as I ever saw.

Smith—You ought not to envy Robinson, Brown. Your children are as fine as his.

Brown (with another sigh)—Ah, yes; but there are seven of 'em.

Something Appropriate.

"I'm in search of a useful present for a literary gentleman," said a prim young lady entering a book-store.

"In what branch of literature is he interested?"

"He's a paragrapher on a religious paper."

"In that case," returned the bookseller, "I would suggest an almanac."—Judge.

A QUEER AMBITION.

A Rich California Girl Who Married a Consumptive to Gain Social Freedom.

The death at the little town of Mayfield, near the Stanford University, of a young and consumptive printer named Frank McKee, completes a curious story of a rich young girl's folly. Seven years ago Abram Brown, of Oakland, died, leaving property to his only daughter, Frankie, valued at $50,000. She attained her majority a little over a year ago, and then assumed control of the property, which brought in an annual income of about $5,000. She took a trip to Highland Springs, and there a lively widow persuaded her that she ought to become a widow herself in order to enjoy the social freedom that an unmarried woman can never hope to gain. Full of the project, she returned to Oakland and formed the acquaintance of Capt. and Mrs. K. M. Apgar. To them she confided her longing for social emancipation. She declared she was bound to become a widow, and thought if she could marry some man who was on his death-bed it would be about the right thing. Apgar agreed that if she was determined to marry, and for the purpose stated, it would be advisable to have the thing settled with as little publicity as possible. He accordingly introduced this peculiar young woman to Dr. Dupuy. Dr. Dupuy declared that he knew of just the man to suit Miss Brown's wish in the person of a poor printer named Frank McKee, who had a beautiful case of consumption, and who could not possibly live more than a month. Miss Brown thought that she had found just the man she wanted, and agreed to look at the subject. On the following day she and Apgar went to the office of Dr. Dupuy, where the medical man exhibited his consumptive. Miss Brown looked him over with a critical eye, thumped his chest vigorously, and made him cough several times for the purpose of ascertaining if the investment was a safe one. She finally concluded that she would take the chances of his living. McKee consented to marry the girl for a money consideration and the pair were wedded by Justice Wood. They did not depart together. It had been agreed that the husband should go and die by himself. The wife gave him $100 before the ceremony took place, and agreed to pay Dr. Dupuy $100 with which to defray the expenses of a comfortable death-bed for her husband. McKee failed to keep his promise, however, and strangely insisted on living. In fact, he grew alarmingly healthy. He met his wife a few months after and got some money from her. Dupuy received a liberal commission, and it is charged that Apgar got a fee. Finally Mrs. McKee refused to be bled any more and departed for the East. The story leaked out and created a great sensation in Oakland. McKee followed her to Indiana, but she refused to see him. She then departed this fall for Europe, and is said to be in Carlsbad. Another curious feature of the affair is that Apgar died on the same day as McKee.—San Francisco despatch to Chicago Herald.

How the Air Brake Works.

Said a railroad man to me to-day: "I'll bet not one in a hundred of the people who travel on railroad trains understand how the pressure of air is used to apply the brakes to a train. When the air brake was first invented the air was turned into the cylinder under each car when the car was to be stopped, and the pressure was exerted to force the brakes up against the wheels. But at the present day the brakes are held against the wheels by springs, and the air is turned into the cylinders to push the brakes away from the wheels as long as the train is in motion. When it is desired to stop the train the air is let out, and then the springs apply the brakes and stop the train. This last method of using air pressure has great advantage over the old way on the score of safety.

"Whenever an accident happens to a train, one of the first effects it is apt to have is to rupture the air pipes leading from the engine to the cylinders under the cars; and that of itself stops the train instantly. It is very important for everybody to understand this matter, because a child 5 years old can stop a train in thirty seconds from any car in the train, if he simply understands how. You will see, if you look for it, that there is a sort of rope projecting from the toilet-room of every car. That connects with the air pipes under the train. If you catch hold of it, and give it a little jerk, it will stop the train before it has gone 200 yards."—Chicago Journal.

One Woman Appreciated.

(Kansas City Times.)

In an unfrequented spot in Bellefontaine Cemetery, St. Louis, there are two graves, over one of which is a modest tombstone with the following inscription upon it:

Here rests that angel of a woman,
Isabella Graham Condit,
Wife of Thomas Brooks,
Born in New Jersey in 1825;
Died in St. Louis in 1865.
You were always satisfied, always content with what you had.
I did not have to rob my employers to keep you in extravagance.
How pleasant it was to meet you on returning home! God bless you! Your Husband.

How Glad.

Mr. Smith (with a sigh of relief) holding it aloft—Thank Heaven! the long agony is over! This asking for money every day or two—these whispered consultations—these mysterious looks—this running down town every day—this restraint in my presence has come to an end at last. Christmas and Santa Claus are here, and I am the proud recipient of—a pen-wiper!

The Petaluma (Cal.) Courier tells of a curious fight between an eagle and a coyote. The prize was a large hare, still alive, which had just been caught. The eagle would flap his wings and try to rise from the ground with his prey, but the coyote, which had hold of the other end, would pull him back every time. Then they would have a regular tussle and the feathers and fur would fly. There is no telling how the fight would have ended had not a pistol bullet frightened them both off.

A little Sunday-school girl, whose lesson had been about the story of the fiery furnace, was telling her mother about it. "And, mamma," she said, "that naughty king heated an oven just as hot as he could get it, put three good men in, and they wouldn't cook a bit!"

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

A Fat Woman's Complaint.

"There is a fortune for anybody who will start a 'Fat Woman's Journal,'" said a woman who weighed more than 200 pounds, "or if you want to be more euphemistic and euphonious, a fashion magazine, and christen it 'A la Jolie Embonpointe.' In this there shouldn't be a fashion or a fashion plate that did not pertain to a woman weighing at least 175 pounds—and upward, as they say in the cheap stores. At present you can't find a fashion plate that does not represent a slender, long-waisted woman. For this sylph everything is designed—gowns, wraps, bonnets. It is impossible to find anything intended for large women. Apparently nobody gives us any consideration, and we clothe ourselves, as it were, by faith. It is absurd," continued the lady, "for the fact is well-established that American women have lost the reproach of scrawniness. Go where you will, at least among the leisure classes, and you will find the large proportion of women broad shouldered, well-developed and a generous overflow of figure. And we are worth considering. There is a fortune in avoirdupois for whoever is far enough sighted to perceive it. Send out the prospectus 'A la Jolie Embonpointe' or the 'Fat Woman's Journal' and see how quickly we will rally to its support from every part of the land."
—New York Sun.

Cost of a "Coming Out" Dress.

Next to the bridal dress of a young girl, her "coming out" costume is the crucial test of taste and income. Miss Morgis' "sweet simplicity" of costume was an example. The foundation was a low-necked, no sleeved-slip of what one would call rose white. If yellow white be ivory, or cream, then pinkish white is rose white. The material was corded silk, heavy and lustrous. About the walking-length skirt was a box-plaited row of Valenciennes four inches deep at $5 a yard. In each plait of the lace hung pendant an artificial half-blown blush rose. Up one side like a panel went row after row of lace and buds. Draped over the silk was a mass of ethereal silk gauze, with satin stripes in pure white. Opposite the panel, on the right side, was a big pocket arrangement made of satin folds interlaced like basket work, and springing out of the top was a splendid cluster of blush roses, half-blown and buds. The girlish chest of the debutant admitted of the upper half the corsage being made of overlapping rows of Valenciennes and interminglingbuds, and a hip-corset of satin, laced behind, showing the slender waist. There were certainly fifty yards of lace on the dress, and 500 roses. The material that formed the overdress was $100 for [illegible] yards, the slip cost $50, the roses and the making were $100, and so the simple rosebud dress of a miss in her teens, without any jewellery or display, cost $500.—From Clara Belle's New York Letter.

Fashion Notes.

Pinked edges are becoming very popular on tailor gowns of heavy cloth.

Gloves with evening gowns are not worn much above the elbow, and they are not as heavily wrinkled, but pulled up plain and smooth if the arm is plump enough to admit of it.

Very many of the newest tailor gowns show two colors of the same cloth, the darker, strange to say, forming the accessories—collar, cuffs and so on—and the brighter the body of the gown

The dancing gown grows shorter, rather than longer, as the season advances, and there is more and more a tendency to make it full and undraped in the skirt, low or V-shaped in the neck and sleeveless. Debutantes, however, and brides wear their gowns high, or half-high in the neck, with half or three-quarter length sleeves, and debutantes, like brides, wear white, cream and ivory-tinted fabrics.

There is an effort being made to return to satin for evening wear. When it is rich nothing is so handsome, but its vulgarization a year or two since by cheap qualities made it fall into disfavor.

White and gold is the popular combination for evening wear. White tulles have their crisp voluminousness held in place by thick gold brai[illegible] that comes made up in patterns. White [illegible]s and silks are embroidered in gold upon the material and some charming London gowns of silky white cashmere are prettily edged above their hemmed borders with deep gold thread embroideries in arabesque designs. One handsome opera cloak is of a heavy white cloth brocaded with gold leaves. The border is of white curled Persian lamb, and it is lined with yellow silk. One of the most charming of these white and gold gowns has a foundation slip of golden yellow faille Francaise, and over it is draped many yards of white Indian tissue.

There is an ever-growing tendency to have everything to match in evening dresses. Gloves are shown in every possible tint, and of late in all the shoe shop windows have appeared satin shoes of varied colors. Women of a pronounced type have for a long time had a leaning toward scarlet satin shoes, but now they are quite universally worn with the poppy red tulle dresses that are so frequently seen this season. Beside these are Louis XV. slippers in pale blue, pink, bronze, copper, green and yellow satin, and silk stockings come to match them in every shade. The feather or gauze fan repeats the colors of the dress, shoes and gloves.

New and lustrous French failles are imported, striped or plaided, with fancy velours or plain velvet. These materials come in exquisite evening shades of Nile green, cameo, pale golden, terra cotta, apricot, baby blue and the rosy lilac that does not grow gray and dull by candle-light. There are others in deep, rich tones for dinner and carriage gowns in golden bronze, fawn color, shot with russet brown; olive, venetian green, "winter-sky" and heliotrope. Another novelty is an India silk broche, with pompadour designs in pale shaded velvet upon its rich surface, the patterns being borrowed from ancient Gobelin tapestries and from Oriental designs.

A young man named Swank, of Beaver Falls, Pa., a student at Geneva College, ran at full speed against a clothes-line while chasing a goat out of a yard. The line caught him just under the nose, tearing out his upper teeth and splitting the mouth from ear to ear.

THE WONDERFUL KOLA NUT.

It is Said to be Capable of Performing a Great Many Remarkable Things.

Planters in tropical climes are recommended to cultivate the kola tree, the nut of which seems to possess some marvellous qualities. If the prophecies regarding the beneficent services of certain preparations of it are realized an unspeakable boon will be conferred on millions of the human race. For many years it has been extensively used as an excellent beverage and sacred symbol in the interior of Africa, but now its properties have every reason to be far more entensively utilized. There is no doubt from what is already known that it has the extraordinary property of counteracting the influence of alcohol, of giving a stimulant in wasting diseases, of acting as a powerful tonic in cases of deep-seated injuries on the digestive organs, of purifying foul water, of overcoming the sense of fatigue, and of exciting to arduous work with the least injury to the frame. It appears that kola nuts were originally found in the western territories of Africa, and that soldiers stationed along the coast were the first white men who became aware of their peculiar property. They found, for instance, that the chewing of these nuts prevented a drunken headache. Not only so, but some who have used the nut paste as a "pick-me-up" assert that, while removing the nausea, it gives them quite a "skunner" at the smell of whiskey and removes the irritating desire for a "morning" to keep the stomach hearty. If the paste be mixed with cocoa paste, which it resembles closely, it produces a much finer and more nutritive chocolate. It has been shown by repeated experiments that the nerve energy produced by partaking of the chocolate made with kola paste is ten times greater than that produced by an equal quantity of ordinary cocoa chocolate. So nutritious is this kola that with a single cup of it a laborer can undergo a day's work without any sense of weariness. Though it may not directly feed the muscular system, it has the property of preventing the rapid waste of the tissues. So much have the manufacturers of chocolate, both in this country and abroad, become alive to the excellent properties of the new paste that they are making arrangements to procure it for mixing purposes as soon as its price becomes reasonable. The British Government, too, has gone the length of making experiments upon the paste in a pure state, so as to ascertain the saving which would be made in the transit of provisions in time of war by giving this beverage to the army. It is of great service for purifying the foul water which is so prevalent in hot climates; this will be the preventive of many diseases, especially to Europeans. It has also been found very useful in clarifying beer and spirits, acting much like the white of an egg or isinglass.—Scotsman.

The Canadian Northwest.

A partial settlement of Ryan & Haney's claims in connection with the Red River Valley Road has been effected, Haney receiving a cheque from the Government for $89,226 and immediately purchasing therewith Provincial bonds to the amount of $89,200.

Although the one-man-one-vote principle was passed last session it is claimed that it cannot come into effect till new voters' lists are prepared. The Government, fearing the outside votes would defeat their candidates in Assiniboia and St. Francois Xavier, are preparing new lists for those constituencies.

Hough & Campbell have been appointed city solicitors to succeed Solicitor D. Glass.

The sale of school lands throughout the Province, to commence January 10th, is already being advertised. Sales take place at Manitou, Winnipeg and Minnedosa.

Mrs. McBean, of Winnipeg, is one of the nearest heirs to the immense Weber estate, which comprises sixty acres in the heart of New York city, and which has been in litigation for the past fourteen years.

A sectionman named Nelson was stabbed in three places last night at Cassil's Station by a Hungarian.

A party to go to the Yukon next spring is being organized at Edmonton. The idea is to go down the Athabasca and Mackenzie and up either the Liard or the Peel River to reach the waters of the Yukon.

It was 40 below zero this morning.

The Bishop of Rupert's Land has appointed Rev. O. Fortin, rector of Holy Trinity Church, to the Archdeaconry of Winnipeg.

It is rumored that the new Government of Manitoba will ask the Legislature for power to expropriate Dominion lands.

Manitoba grain men propose sending a strong deputation to Toronto to uphold the new grain standard in the event of a meeting of the Dominion Grain Board being held before the new standard comes into force.

The municipalities and towns along the line of the Manitoba & Northwestern Railway have appointed a number of residents to visit points in Ontario with the view of assisting immigration to Manitoba.

Senator Schultz has been appointed to succeed Mr. Aikins as Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, on the expiration of the latter's term next May, and Mr. Royal, M. P. for Provencher, will succeed Mr. Dewdney as Lieutenant-Governor of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Richard Hardisty, Hudson's Bay factor at Edmonton, will be appointed to one of the two Northwest Senatorships.

Beginning the New Year.

Wife—"Here I've been sitting up till daylight for you, you wretch! Haven't slept a wink all night."

Husband (who has been seeing the old year out and the new wine in)—"Norri auther, my dear. Lesh go bed."

Pinned His Faith to the Directory.

Intoxicated Guest—Wai—waiter—look in the directory and see where (hic) I live.

Waiter—But your name, sir?

Guest—You must find that (hic) in the directory, too.

The Effect on St. Nicholas of "Highe Education."

American youth (aged 6)—Now if the effect of eighty bolts of electricity is equal in applied force to——

Santa Claus—Holy Grail! is this the youngster that I've brought a yellow monkey on a red stick for?

AN ODD MISTAKE.

The Man Who Attended His Own Funeral—A Fact.

A New Yorker writes to the Evening Post: One day, while I was in the country, I said to myself, as I dropped the newspaper: "Ah! my old friend Peter has gone at last." For I observed in the obituary notices the following: "Died at Milton, N.J., on the 5th inst., in the 50th year of his age, Peter Umfree, late of the city of New York. His funeral will take place on the 6th inst., at 10 o'clock a.m., at the Presbyterian church on Eleventh street, New York."

As the name of the deceased was an unusual one, and as his age and the church he attended were as above stated, and as I knew also that my friend was spending the summer and fall in that part of New Jersey, I was satisfied that the Peter Umfree above-named as having departed this life was my old acquaintance, and as I could not attend his funeral I determined to pay a visit to his widow and family as soon as I possibly could. Accordingly, on the 7th, I went to his place of business in this city, expecting to find it closed, but to my astonishment it was open and my friend Peter was busily engaged in it. "Why," said I, "Mr. Umfree, I thought you were dead." "Well," said he, "I almost thought so myself. You see, however, I am not. It happened to me that I attended my own funeral services; for, noticing the advertisement, I thought I would step over to the church, and when I walked up the middle aisle, the ceremonies being nearly over, my appearance seemed to frighten everybody. I took a seat in a pew where there was a young lady of my acquaintance, who tried to get away as far as she could from me, and I said: 'Mary, don't you know me?' 'Yes,' said she, 'but I thought you were in that coffin and that you must be a ghost.' However, she became satisfied of my vitality, but looked at me with wondering eyes."

As my friend Peter was generally known in this city and the neighboring places, quite a number of his acquaintances attended the obsequies, and three of them from Brooklyn went to the church, and, standing in the vestibule, heard the clergyman speak of the mother of the deceased, and one of them said: "There must be some mistake, as our friend lost his mother years ago; however, we will go in." As is usual, on such occasions, the congregation were informed that they could view the corpse, and on doing so one lady said to another, "Why, that is not the face of our departed friend," to which was replied: "Oh, you know, death makes a great change in the looks of a person."

The next day appeared in the religious paper of the denomination to which Mr. Umfree was attached a long and well deserved eulogy of him and his useful career, but our Peter is still among the living, and will be happy to see any one who wants articles in his "line."

The mistake occurred from the fact that a man of the same name died, and his friends, desiring to bury him in the city, asked the privilege of the trustees of said church to have the services performed in it. This was granted, but it led to the wonderful result of a man attending his own funeral.

The Society Girl.

He was an anomaly among his kind—a modest reporter. He had dropped into the Elite Club ball-room, to write a ten-line notice of the affair.

Suddenly he found himself confronted by a bejewelled and bedecked lady, who said sweetly:

"Ah, I know you; you're one of those horrid reporters, aren't you?"

"I'm a reporter, madam."

"I knew it. And you've come to write all sorts of horrid things about us poor ladies, who can't help ourselves!"

"Indeed, madam, I——"

"Oh, yes, you will! I just think you reporters are too horrid for anything!"

"I am not——"

"You go and put all sorts of things in the papers about us. It's just dreadful! I get real cross about it!"

"I assure you, madam, that——"

"Oh, well, I suppose it is your business to be so horribly awful! I suppose now you have come to write up all the costumes in your horrid way, and you'll have all our names in the paper, too!"

"No, madam, I——"

"Oh, I know you will! You always say you won't, and then you do! You're just so dreadful! I do think it's too provoking in you! We poor ladies can't do a thing that you don't put it in the paper!"

"I intend writing but a brief notice of this ball."

"Oh, well, I suppose you'll put in some names; so here is my card, so that the name won't be spelled wrong, as it was in your account of Mrs. De White's party. And there's a good description of my costume on the back of the card. Don't forget to write 'diamond ornaments.' I think I'm real good to take so much trouble for you when you are so perfectly horrid as to go and put it all in the papers. Oh, you wicked, naughty, horrid man! It makes me cross to look at you. Good-bye! Be sure you get my name right this time. You'll be more horrid than ever if you don't."—Puck.

A Child's Logic.

A little girl was teasing her mother for more indulgence, and was put off with "Wait till to-morrow."

The following day she renewed her teasing, and was reminded that she had said the same thing yesterday.

"But, mamma," said the child, earnestly, "this isn't yesterday; it's to-morrow."

This reasoning was successful.—Detroit Free Press.

Working Him Nicely.

Wife (at breakfast)—You came in very late last night, John."

Husband (who plays poker)—Yes, I was-er-er at the office.

Wife (anxiously)—Really, John, I'm afraid to have you work so hard. You are over-taxing your strength. Can you let me have twenty dollars this morning?

Husband—Certainly, my dear.

He Didn't Know.

"Say, Bigsby, do you know how to get rid of a bore?"

"No. I regret to say that I don't. If I knew a good plan I would utilize it immediately."

ADVICE TO TENDERFEET.

Some Points for Young Men Going West to Get Rich.

If we are to believe the highly colored reports sent out from Prescott, Arizona, a gold mine "richer by far than anything ever discovered in the world" has just been developed ten miles from that point. We are told that the pure gold clings to the rocks in scales and can be taken off by the handful, and that two men in less than an hour secured $800. And further, the report says that the ore averages $1,000 per ton. Before any young men of Wilmington pack their satchels and prepare to hasten to the Hassayampa River gold fields we would suggest that they await further developments and fuller particulars of the new Eldorado to which people are said to be flocking in great numbers. There are always two sides to the wonderful stories of gold and diamond fields that come from the far, far west. There are such things as salted mines and gold mining companies that sell thousands of stock not worth the paper on which their lying words are printed. Of course it is a great temptation for an ambitious young man to start out from home with a large gripsack containing his old clothes, with the expectation of throwing away the old clothes in a few weeks and returning with the gripsack so heavily laden with gold nuggets that an express car has to be chartered. Such dreams of gold have flitted through the head of every young man, and some old ones, too, and will as long as time is. But how many young men of your acquaintance have started west to make a fortune in a few months or years have succeeded except by hard work at some legitimate business? How many men do you suppose come from the gold mines laden down with the precious stuff? Not many. There are exceptions to the rule, but the chances of becoming a millionaire by rushing into every new gold field that is opened are just about as good as is the chance of drawing the capital prize in a lottery. If you want to hasten to the new gold fields of the Hassayampa River, young men, heed our advice. Take with you half a dozen pairs of good, stout comfortable walking shoes in addition to your regular equipment. When you reach the nearest settlement to the mines leave your extra shoes in the hands of some reliable person to be held until called for. Then, when you start to walk back home to the east and the firesides of your parents you will be prepared for the journey. Like Sherman's troops on their way through Georgia, you will have to depend upon the country along your route for supplies. Walking is very good exercise for the young. When you make up your mind to dig for gold, don't. There is just as much money in digging potatoes, if you dig enough of them.
—Wilmington News.

Old Father Time.

A new year! The old story over again. What a weird and wonderful enchanter is Time. Each of his years; yea, of his hours, though but a mote on the track of eternities, clasps our opportunities, and it may be our doom, and yet it springs forth as fair and welcome as though never an hour or a year had recorded a human wrong, or crime, or sorrow, or despair.

Weird and wonderful, and so priceless that not all the wealth, and eloquence, and power of the human race can bring back a moment gone nay, not though the lost opportunity buried with it were fraught with the salvation of the world.

Time! evanescent as a shadow, yet everlasting; briefer than a dream, yet eternal as the stars. A new year—what a mingled record each has borne, or shall bear, between the first of Adam and the last of the last man! What conquests and defeats—what progressions and decadences—what wailings and jubilees!

Now an age of light and now an age of darkness—wars, persecutions, pestilences and famines—tribes and nations, kingdoms and republics—all the griefs and gladness, all the misfortunes and propensities, all the crimes and heroisms of our race, are written on the brows of the dead six thousand years that lie out there in the damp and mould.

And thither must this new year quickly hie to the oblivion of its thousands of predecessors. God grant that it may be remembered by its virtues! God forbid that it should be remembered for its crimes and desolations! But whatever be the fate that awaits it in our "heart of hearts" we wish it may be a peaceful, prosperous and happy year to all mankind.

Fresh News Notes.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain arrived in Toronto from Ottawa last night, and is the guest of Sir David Macpherson at Chestnut Park.

Lord Lansdowne, while skating near Rideau Hall the other day, fell, inflicting painful injuries to his head. One eye was also unfortunately blackened.

A number of the employees in the Toronto Custom House have been granted increases of salaries, and two have retired on account of ill-health, receiving the usual gratuities.

The Government has commissioned Mr. Simeon Jones, ex-M.P., of St. John, N. B., to visit South America and the West Indies with a view to working up closer trade relations with Canada.

The dispute between the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways over the former's eastern entrance to Toronto has been decided by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in favor of the Canadian Pacific.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada was held in Toronto yesterday, when officers were elected for the ensuing year. A by-law to exempt transportation companies from liability for baggage was defeated.

Certain statements seriously reflecting upon the Toronto City Auditors, regarding grave irregularities in the Waterworks Department, were made by the Chairman of the Executive Committee yesterday, and a special committee is investigating the matter.

One Very Just Tax.

A few months ago a Pennsylvania girl married a bogus Count who has just been arrested for swindling. We pay a tax on imported noblemen, but it falls on the girls who marry them.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

SINGULAR CAPTURES.

Clews That Have Brought Criminals to Justice.

It is a curious fact that those who have committed crimes are very frequently arrested with the evidence upon them, writes a London correspondent. Lefroy, who killed Mr. Gold on the Brighton railway some years ago, was discovered with the old gentleman's watch in his boot. Often, too, is it some article of personal apparel which brings about a conviction.

Franz Muller, Lefroy's predecessor, who killed Mr. Briggs on the North London Railway, wore a straw hat with a lining having a broad blue strip edged with black and white. This he left in a railway carriage, and many of our readers will remember how, little by little, the structure of evidence, of which this straw hat was the foundation, was built up.

In a recent burglary in Dublin the thief was arrested on suspicion founded on one or two very small links. He had entered a library in which on a table was a small piece of wedding cake which happened to be wrapped in such a manner that it might reasonably have been suspected to be a packet of coin. When the room was opened the following morning the cake was found scattered on the carpet as though thrown down in rage. It was observed, too, that a chair had been used for assistance in reaching a despatch box from a not very tall article of furniture. The smart detective who had the case in hand put two and two together and came to the conclusion—first, that the burglar was not a young man or he probably would have eaten the cake, and, second, that he was of small stature and had been obliged to mount the chair in order to get at the box. Acting upon these hints, the detective boldly accused "a well-known character," who had been observed watching the house, and eventually traces of the stolen property were discovered in the burglar's possession and he was sentenced to five years' penal servitude. As the detective had surmised, he was a very short man indeed.

Rather more than sixty years ago the Red Barn mystery first aroused public attention. There was something so extraordinary in this strange story, and in the fact that the secret was unraveled by dreams, that for years it was a favorite fireside chapter of horrors among the poorer classes. A certain William Corder was engaged to a young woman of his own county, Suffolk, and they agreed to get married secretly on the 18th of May, 1824. The girl started forth disguised as a man, the arrangements being that she should resume her ordinary costume at a place on Corder's farm known as the Red Barn. Thence they were to proceed to Ipswich, where they were to be married.

Some time afterward Corder wrote from the Isle of Wight, saying that he and his wife were living very happily. But the girl's mother, not hearing personally from her daughter grew alarmed, and in March, 1828, dreamed on three successive nights that her daughter had been murdered and buried in the Red Barn. So convinced was she of the truth of the augury that she persuaded her husband to apply for permission to examine the spot. He did so, and on digging a few feet found the remains of his daughter enveloped in a sack. Corder was traced to Brantford, where he was found married to the proprietress of a ladies' school. The dreams of the girl's mother can scarcely be called a clew in the accepted sense of the word, but that they were instrumental in bringing about Corder's arrest is beyond a doubt.

Honesty the Best Policy.

We all know that honesty is the best policy. But I warrant you this if you knew a man whose honesty had no deeper foundation than a firm conviction of the truth of the proverb, you would count your silver spoons before you left him alone with them.—Dr. F. C. Colby.

No Use Asking Him.

"No; don't ask Robinson to say a good word for me. He wouldn't do it."

"Doesn't he like you?"

"No; he has owed me $10 borrowed money for more than six months."—Norwich Bulletin.

Comes Low, But She Must Have It.

Jiggs—Miss D'Bonair has grown considerably since I saw her last winter.

Wiggs—How so?

Jiggs—When I saw her last her dress came way up to her neck.—Detroit Free Press.

Visitor—Is the baby very sick, Bobby? Bobby—Yes, I guess she is, for such a little bit of a thing.

—A great many people who are crazy to get into the social swim are drowned before they can get out.

—In polite circles the word "drunk" or "intoxicated" is no longer used. "Overestimated his capacity" is the proper thing.

OUR EXPENSIVE LUXURIES.

She's a genuine New Year's fairy,
Just the kind that I would marry,
If I ever should select a wife;
Yet I cannot marry her,
For her dainty cloak of fur,
Cost more than I've earned in my whole life.

Without winning, I resign her,
Like the Emperor of China,
Who can't wed without three million dollars
Though it seems extremely funny,
Yet I think he'd need the money,
And have nothing left to buy his collars.

—Nature seems to have made one sorry mistake in not fixing things so that a people may grow in wisdom as rapidly as in numbers.

—It is understood that Col. Villiers, of Kingston, will succeed Col. LaMontagne as Deputy Adjutant General of the Ottawa Military District.

—The best New Year's gift which many men could make to their families would be a more amiable mood in themselves. The kind of curmudgeon who is affable to everybody outside but "cross as a bear" at home is altogether too common. Let him turn over a new leaf now and glue it down.

The wife of John Bradford, of Wilmington, Del., left her bed while fast asleep, walked from the chamber into the hall and fell downstairs, breaking her nose and sustaining other severe injuries. She had been dreaming at the time of a similar accident which had occurred to an acquaintance, a lady, a year ago.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, JAN. 12, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Empire is a splendid newspaper in every respect. Of course it ought to be Creight-on everything. Next!

The Thornbury News man has been devoting his spare moments to the discussion of bustles. The subject is a weighty one in some respects--especially if some bustle-wearer should chance to drop into the Editor's sanctum and proceed to interview him with a cordwood stick and an umbrella.

The incorporation scheme is likely to meet with a strong and spirited opposition. It has two sides, each with a following of enthusiastic disciples. THE ADVANCE occupies neutral ground, although it has opinions of its own and will give expression to them at the proper time. This is a matter in which it is well to sound public opinion before sounding one's own!

Bro. Mitchell, of the Durham Chronicle, combs down the fiery auburn locks of a recent proprietor of that journal in great shape. The r.p. lately visited Durham and painted the town red. It is needless to add that he did not do so at his own expense. And now the r.p. is after friend Mitchell with the jawbone of an ass, because the latter alluded to the r.p's peregrinations in his paper.

We received the names of the successful candidates at the recent entrance examinations just a few hours too late for last week's ADVANCE. But of course the County town newspapers stole a march on their contemporaries by publishing the lists a week in advance. There is no excuse whatever for this sort of thing. The gentleman or gentlemen, whose duty (or duties) it was to prepare the lists for the press, could just as easily have arranged to publish them simultaneously in all the papers as not.

Last week's Thornbury Standard gives an interesting account of the formation and destructiveness of those Yankee cyclones we hear so much about. Are cyclones among the benefits (?) likely to be conferred upon Canadians in case of annexation, friend Farewell? The Yankees seem to have an exclusive monopoly in cyclones. In case of annexation they would probably become less selfish and give us a few chunks! In that event we would generously donate our share to Bro. Farewell!!

Several towns and villages in Grey have been boasting pretty freely about their markets. It is about time this stale old Chestnut was dropped. The difference in prices at any of our County markets is not sufficient to warrant farmers driving from five to ten miles out of their way and away from their nearest place for doing business. Occasionally, of course, some buyer is foolish enough to pay a few cents higher than market price, in order to gain a little cheap notoriety. It does him no good in the end, for a buyer in a rival town can usually go him one better on the old Chestnut, and thereby leave things pretty much as they were before.

While in a neighboring village one day, a few weeks ago, we noticed two or three grain buyers performing a worn out old dodge, in order to pull wool over the eyes of innocent and unsuspecting grangers. A farmer is seen coming into the place, and while he is yet some rods from the business centre, the grain buyers suddenly dart forth from their several places of location and make a race for his load - yelling, gesticulating and hopping around the astonished agriculturist like so many jumping jacks. The object of all this forced acting is to impress the farmer with the idea that the buyers are terribly keen to purchase his produce, and ready to give "the very tip-top price." It is worthy of remark, that a very good understanding exists between these apparently keen rival buyers in the same village.

If there is one thing more than another, which jars upon the feelings of the earnest theological student, it is to hear a preacher speak of God as a loving Father, merciful and kind to the creatures of His Will, and then—almost in the same breath—speaking of Him as an awful Being, whose anger against the wicked is so terrible that He dooms them to the lake of brimstone and the pit of darkness for ever and ever! Would an earthly father—with all his weaknesses and infirmities—doom his child to such punishment, or anything approaching it, for similar offences? How much less our Heavenly Father, who is all perfect, wise and good?

The defeat of Mr. Elias Rogers, in the Toronto Mayoralty contest, was more than a gentle surprise to that gentleman's supporters in, and sympathizers outside, the Queen City. One lesson at least is to be learned from it and it is this: There is a point beyond which the public will not tolerate clerical interference. Ministers of the Gospel have no right to prostitute the pulpit, by converting it into a rostrum, for the purpose of dictating the course they would have their parishoners pursue in matters of a purely secular character. Their mission is one of "Peace and good-will toward men," but in many instances they forget the dignity of their high calling and cast in their lot with the Phillstines.

In Jerseys, Clouds and Knitted Wool Shawls, clearing out at a big discount at M. Richardson & Co's.

Business at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, has increased so largly during the past year, they have had to add new nichol show cases, &c., to contain their magnificent stock of fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. We have also added a fine burglar proof safe from the well known firm of Goldie & McCullough.

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give

Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVeau, 282 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

INVENTION has revolutionised the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

The Thornbury News has entered upon the third year of its existence in good shape.

The Grey Review has commenced Volume 11, and is in every sense a good local journal. Long may it flourish.

The Hanover Post has completed another year of its existence. The Post is always neatly printed and newsy.

Miller's liquor and provision store in Markdale was destroyed by fire on Sunday week.

A cow hooked Donald Cowan, of 6th line Erin, in the eye a week or two ago. It was found necessary to remove the injured optic.

Residents of Dundalk are after Bro. Spurr's scalp because he said the Public School building there was unsafe. Nevertheless Bro. Spurr told the truth, and told it like a gentleman.

On Christmas day a young lady at Matchett's Hotel, Creemore, struck a young man from Lavender on his nasal organ and made him see stars and feel as though a 40-tow blizzard had hit him.

The Owen Sound Times has passed under the magagement of Mr. Geo. D. Howell, who has been connected with the office for some time. Mr. Creighton still retains a proprietary interest in the paper.

On Monday afternoon a Walkerton brass band serenaded Hanover by telephone. All the subscribers here were switched on and called up by Walkerton, and when placing the 'phone to their ears the sweet strains of music were distinctly heard. Every note could be heard as plainly as though but a block away.—Hanover Post.

269 pupils of Public Schools wrote at the recent High Rchool Entrance Examinations in this county, of whom 111 were successful; at Flesherton 54, of whom 17 passed; at Neustadt 20, of whom 8 passed; at Thornbury 84, of whom 27 passed; and at Owen Sound 151, of whom 59 passed. Miss Minnie Brander, of Priceville, took the highest number of marks.

Mr. Wm. Allison was putting in a pump for an Owen Sounder named Boyd one day recently. Allison was working down at the bottom of the well and a young fellow named McCoy was engaged driving down the pump, when the latter accidentally let a shantling fall down on the former's head, which rendered him unconscious. A fur cap broke the force of the blow, and saved Allison's life. The well was 30 feet deep.

ESTEEMED.—When Mr. Samuel Clemes was about to leave his school at Inistioge, a social was got up by the people in the school house. A program consisting of readings, recitations, songs, &c. was gone through with and then the following address was presented to the teacher:—

Mr. Clemis,—

Most worthy and esteemed teacher, we your pupils of S.S. No. 4 here present you with this Album and Hymnal as a small token of our esteem not for their value but hoping they may recal to your memory some hours of pleasure and profit to both us and you while you have labored among us.

We are sorry to part with you. Since your coming amongst us one short year ago, you have by your amicable disposition so completely won our affections that we recognise with gratitude your ability and assiduity as an instructor of the youthful mind and moulder of youthful morals. Your deportment in social life has been a moral and Christian guide to the youth of our vicinity.

The admiration of parents and general companionship of manhood and youth.

Wishing you success in your new field of labor, we join in wishing you a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

Your Pupils.

Mr. Clemis, whose parents live in town has taken charge of the Eugenia School for 1888.—Collingwood Bulletin.

If you want a fine Wedding Ring, full 18k., you have to go to Russell's, Flesherton, for it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned in Flesherton, one spotted Heifer, on Monday night last. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses.

Jan. 11th, 1888. PETER HOLMAN.

WANTED!

A Quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

OWEN SOUND Collegiate Institute

WILL open on MONDAY, 9TH JANUARY, 1888. Excellent Staff of Teachers. Inspector officially reports it the

×—Best Equipped School in Ontario.—×

Classes for First, Second and Third Class Certificates, Junior and Senior Matriculation with honors, and Law and Medical Examinations.

At the Examinations, 1887, all the University Matriculation Candidates were successful, one obtaining honors in all departments, and a proficiency scholarship of $100. The Candidates from this School obtained

The Largest number of Teacher's Certificates in the Province.

FEES—Winter Term, $2; Spring Term, $2.

Apply to

F. W. MERCHANT, M. A., Principal,
or D. B. DOBIE, Sec. Board of Education.

Owen Sound, Dec. 15th, 1887.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For?
Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 74 to 0 78
Spring Wheat	0 74	0 78
Barley	0 55	0 72
Oats	0 37	0 37
Peas	0 57	0 57
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	6 40	6 50
Hay, per ton	7 00	8 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 50	1 00
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 25
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

W. BOOTH,
The Boss Barber,
FLESHERTON,
(Late of Shelburne)
Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

R. CRLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed; we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co. Portland, Maine.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—!—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

THE FLESHERTON

FURNITURE

Wareroom's

Last Announcement for 1887.

WE WISH A

Happy New Year To All,

And in order to make it so in every home in Artemesia and Surrounding Townships, we have decided to make still further

REDUCTIONS

In all the Leading Lines of Furniture.

For the New Year Festivities we have a most

COMPLETE STOCK

To select from notwithstanding the great rush of the past weeks. We were so fortified with reserves of stock that our Showrooms are again full and must be cleared (in order to make room for Undertakers Goods which will shortly arrive) at a

Very Small Advance on Cost.

We are satisfied with the policy upon which we have commenced Business and shall continue to use the same Motto, viz.,

Small Profits and Quick Returns.

Our Stock is all new and being almost daily replaced.

To Close, Cash Buyers we would say call and see us before purchasing elsewhere as

It Will Pay You.

We manufacture and buy close for money and

Sell Quick on a very small Margin.

COME AND GET PRICES.

SAW LOGS

—AND—

LUMBER

of all kinds Wanted for which highest price will be paid.

J. E. MOORE'S

Furniture Warerooms, Durham St. Flesherton.

Incorporation.

To the Editor of The Advance.

SIR,—One paragraph, or rather, sentence, in your "Incorporation" editorial last week, caught my eye and sent my "minds eye" revolving back into the past. The sentence suggested that incorporation was considered a kind of "panacea for all the ills Flesherton is heir to." Pardon me, sir, if I dispute that opinion as erroneous.

What are those "ills"? I know of but one, namely, the mile and a half of road that separates Flesherton from the railway station. And that "ill" has been talked about and magnified until outsiders begin to imagine we live near the North Pole, where there are no railroads at all, when the truth is we are only 1½ miles distant from the finest system in the world. Why don't Flesherton people talk up the straight road you have written so much about, and get it established without wasting so much senseless jabbering about railways, incorporation and other things? But no: they want a railway through the place, with a station at every man's front door! Then they grumble and abuse their business men, and run down everything and everybody in the place, and deal in other places, and then expect their neighbors to deal with them!

I tell you, Mr. Editor, it makes me sick to hear some of these poll parrots spinning their crazy yarns into the ears of ready listeners from rival places, and then bemoaning a lack of energy when they are the cause of it all and a good bit more. Why don't they shut up their clatter and unite with their neighbors in bettering the condition of things, by united action. Things are alright in Flesherton, and with a straight level road and a few minor improvements, we could soon distance all competitors, notwithstanding the growlers and snarlers. There are men in the world, who, if there were enough of them would kill the best town you ever saw. The reason they haven't killed this place is because it isn't of the killing kind and is bound to overleap all stumblingblocks. It can't help it. Its built that way, you know, sir.

Yours for the present,
"FLESHERTON FOR EVER."

We can easily lay claim to doing the business of this section for 25 miles around, having soldfrom Oct. 3rd, 1887, to Dec. 29th, 1887, eleven fine gold watches, thirty-two silver watches and twenty-nine clocks, against another dealer's blow of twelve watches and sixteen clocks. There is no doubt about it, that the people will come to us to buy as they know they can do far better than elsewhere at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

What Became of the Missing Shirts.

Man (to colored washerwoman)—"Look here, Aunt Millie, I gave you ten white shirts, but you have only brought back eight."

Aunt Millie—"Dat so, honey? W'y how come dat?"

Man—"You are the one to give the explanation."

Aunt Millie—"Yas, an' it's plain ernuff, too, sah. I washed de shirts dis week in rain water."

Man—"But why should the rain water cause two shirts to be missing?"

Aunt Millie—"W'y de shirts shrunk, dat's why. Ain't yer got jogerfy an' rifmertic an' edycation ernuff ter know de shirts shrink awful w'en yer washes 'em in rain water?

Business at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, has increased so largely during the past year they have had to add new nichol show cases, &c., to contain their magnificent stock of fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. We have also added a fine burglar proof safe from the well known firm of Goldie & McCullough.

Feversham.

From our own Correspondent.

Everything has quieted down after election.

Mr. Geo. Mitchell, school teacher, has left, and Mr. John Parks has taken his place and is giving complete satisfaction. So far the pupils all seem to like him.

Feversham L.O.L. met on Wednesday, 4th, inst when the following officers:—

Bro. James Elliott, W.M.
" Ira Perigo, D.M.
" C. E. Neil, Chaplain.
" S. Colquet, R.S.
" A. McGirr, F.S.
" R. Kernahan, Treasurer.
" R. T. McGirr, Lecturer.
" James Mullin, D. of C.
" C. Edwards, jr. First Com. Man.

Mat. Wood drove the stage a few days last week. It seems to make a man of him to get away from home.

By the way, Mr. Editor, you have a Boss Barber in your town if we should judge by the way he trimmed our post-office official.

Some of the Maids in this place are talking of making the best of leap year as if it were their only chance. I think Auntie will run her chance with the rest. Wishing them all a Happy New Year.

The dealer that only sells twelve watches and sixteen clocks in three months, must have large profits to be able to pay taxes, rent, &c. It is quite different at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Closing Exercises of S. S. No. 7, Artemesia, 1887.

It was the pleasing privilege of the writer to be present at the closing exercises of the school above mentioned, and presided over during the last three years by Mr. D. Currie, whose success in moulding the minds of his pupils according to a high moral standard, as well as imparting a rare fund of intellectual worth, stamps him as one of our foremost instructors. The examination of the different classes in the various branches of study exhibited that profound thought and the spirit of investigation were principles deeply implanted in their youthful minds.

As a token of esteem the pupils presented the teacher with a number of costly and appropriate presents as mementoes. Mr. Currie delivered a few well-timed remarks expressive of his sentiments toward his pupils, all of whom were visibly affected—even to tears. Such are the conditions which should exist between teacher and pupil the country over; and it is reasonable to believe that such a happy consummation is largely in the power of parents and guardians. Mr. Currie has given up the profession for a short time, in order to take a further course of study at the High School.

If you want a first class Gold or Silver Watch in Ladies' and gents' sizes, Russell's, Flesherton, is the place to go. Warrants from three to five years covering all breakages at lower prices than elsewhere.

Kimberley.

According to announcement, the Sabbath School Anniversary come off on Thursday evening, 5th and was a grand success. The speeches by Rev. Mr. Buggins, of Markdale; Rev. Mr. Corcoran, pastor in charge; Mr. D. R. Ellis and Mr. Wm. Stuart, J.P., short but interesting. Music by the children was good, under the leadership of Miss S. A. Thompson, as also were the recitations and dialogues by the children under the leadership of the superintendent, Mr. S. D. Gaudin. Mr. R. D. Carruthers roused the feeling of the audience in his farewell sermon. At the close of this very sociable meeting the school made a present to their superintendent, Mr. S. D. Gaudin, to which he replied with much feeling.

ADDRESS.

Whereas in the providence of God we are soon to part with you. You will be missed both in Sunday school and church work. And as a token of our esteem and gratitude and appreciation of your labors with us, we wish to present you this toilet set, as a token of our esteem and trusting that while you are absent in the body you will be present in mind. We bid you God speed.

Signed in behalf of S. S. Kimberley.
MRS. ELLIS,
H. J. ELLIS,
T. B. CARRUTHERS.

Stop that cough, by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral—the best specific for all throat and lung diseases. It will allay inflammation, aid respiration, and strengthen the vocal organs. Ayer's Almanacs are free to all. Ask for one.

Our Watch Repair trade in increasing every day. Thirty-nine watches in to repair at the present time, and the people over twenty miles around come to get their work done at Russell's Flesherton, as they have proved by experience that is the only place to get them done properly.

If you want a fine Wedding Ring, full 18k., you have to go to Russell's, Flesherton, for it.

No sufferer from any scrofulous disease, who will fairly try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, need despair of a cure. This remedy purges the blood of all impurities, destroys the germs of scrofula, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the physical organization.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

THE GLOBE

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED
AND THE LEADING NEWSPAPER OF CANADA

DAILY GLOBE, Morning Edition, -	$6.00	per annum.
" " 12 o'clock " - -	3.00	" "
" " 3 " " - -	3.00	" "
WEEKLY GLOBE, - - - - -	1.00	" "
SATURDAY DAILY GLOBE, - -	1.00	" "

The different editions of The Globe can be procured from all News Dealers throughout Canada.

--- THE GLOBE SPECIAL FAST TRAIN ---

between Toronto and London, which has been running daily since 3rd March last, will be continued throughout 1888. This train arrives at London at 6.40 a.m., making connection with all the early trains from that point, securing for The Globe a delivery throughout Western Ontario hours in advance of all Toronto papers.

--- TO ADVERTISERS ---

As an advertising medium, The Globe has no equal in Canada. Its circulation, which appears at head of its editorial columns daily, is far in advance of all other Canadian papers, and it is the intention of the management to always keep The Globe in its proud position as the LEADING NEWSPAPER OF CANADA, both in point of circulation and influence.

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO.
TORONTO

Commercial Union

—— Has nothing to do with the Big Sale of ——

FURNITURE!
— AT —
J. W. BATES'.

Is as Good Goods at Low Prices that tells and has told for the last seven years. This season I am in a position to give both old and new Customers Furniture of the Best Make and Latest Designs.

FROM TEN TO THIRTY PER CENT. CHEAPER THAN EVER.

Below I quote a few prices to show I mean business:

Parlor Suites in Hair Cloth, Sofa, Ladies Platform Rocker, Gents Easy and 4 small Chairs for $38.00.

Bedroom Suites $8.50 to $80.00. A beauty for $11.00.

Bureaus $5.00; Cupboards $5.00; Lounges with springs $3.00; Spring Beds $1.25 to $4.50; Perforated Seat Chairs 75c.; Perforated Seat and Back Rockers $1.25; Wood Seat Bent Arm Rocker $1.35.

My Hollow Seat 4 Spindle for 40c., cannot be beaten.

Hand Sleighs 35 to 75c., and in fact anything you want in the Furniture line, price and terms to suit you.

AGENT FOR THE KARN ORGAN!

See them at my Warerooms.

Picture Framing Neat and Cheap.

J. W. BATES,

FURNITURE DEALER, UNDERTAKER &c., FLESHERTON.

Photos,
Photos,
Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

AN IRISH MAID OF SARAGOSSA.

Scenes and Incidents in the Great Struggle Against Landlordism.

A LONDON JOURNALIST'S DISCOVERIES.

In walking over the battlefield of Bodyke the other day, and seeing its results everywhere in the form of breaches newly rebuilt, roofs propped up and fragments of broken furniture, I entered one house which was known as "the Castle," from the desperate defence it had made against the invading enemy. To my surprise I found among its inmates a stout young woman, with a comely, good-humored face, who was dressed in a new gown of plain blue cloth. I inquired how she got it, and was told that she was the girl who had animated the garrison in the defence of her father's house, and when it was breached and taken by assault had only succumbed after a hand-to-hand struggle with three crowbar men. She had undergone a month's imprisonment in jail, and on her liberation had received a donation of £5 and a silver medal, which she produced with as much pride as if it had been the Victoria Cross. For, strange to say, these hardened offenders are not in the least penitent, and any allusion to hot water invariably produces a broad grin. I asked this girl if it was true that she had thrown hot water over the bailiffs. She replied, "Shure, sir, I never threw a dhrop of water at all; it was the boiling meal." The priest suggested that, as she was bound over to keep the peace for twelve months, it was a fine chance for some young fellow to marry her, as he would be safe of a quiet life for the first nine months. She blushed up to the roots of her hair and disclaimed any matrimonial thoughts. But the blush changed into a smile that lightened up her whole face when I suggested that, as she was a redoubtable warrior, it would only be a prudent precaution for any young man to take. There were, perhaps, half a dozen other girls, with their new gowns and medals, and what impressed me was the utter imbecility of supposing that the population of two-thirds of Ireland could be converted or coerced by such proceedings. Why, there is hardly a girl in Ireland who is not envious of the fame of those heroines of Bodyke, and who would not be only too glad to imitate their example. Only last month I read the report of a case in which two little boys and a respectable young girl of 14 were tried before a resident magistrate for the crime of intimidating a man who swore that he was not a bit intimidated. The magistrate, who was evidently a kindly man, suggested that she should be discharged on giving security not to repeat the offence, so as to avoid what he called the stigma of having been sent to jail. But the little girl fired up, and said she would give no promise not to "boo" at an Emergency man, and would go to jail rather; and to jail she accordingly went as a common criminal for a fortnight. This illustrates not only the strength of the popular feeling, but also another thing which has greatly impressed me—the utter want of touch and sympathy of the justices and magistrates, which makes them blind to the most obvious facts going on before their eyes. Here was evidently a kindly man in the seat of justice, and yet he actually believed that being sent to prison in such a cause would affix a stigma on the little girl for life, whereas it was perfectly obvious to any outsider that the danger was all the other way—that the girl's head might be turned by being placed on a pedestal of fame by her admiring neighbors. I may recall an anecdote which made a great impression on me as illustrating the want of sympathy between the governing classes and the people, which is one of the worst evils in the administration of law in Ireland. I was talking to a resident magistrate who had been an officer in the army, and was a perfect gentleman and rather popular than otherwise in his district, and I happened to let fall some expressions which implied that I took him for an Irishman. He fired up at once, and said, "Surely you don't take me for Irish?" I replied, "Why, I thought you were one of an old Irish family." "No, sir," he said; "I am English. My ancestors came over with Cromwell." I could not help thinking how Scotchmen would feel if their resident sheriffs were taken from a class who, after their ancestors had lived in Scotland for more than two centuries, thought it an insult to be taken for Scotch. To return to the Homeric combat at Bodyke, it would not be complete without adding that our heroine was defending her father's house, built with his own money, and for which he paid more than its value to the landlord in the form of excessive rent beyond any fair valuation for twenty years. The only difference I see between her and the "Maid of Saragossa" is that the one was fighting against a writ of eviction served on her native city by the King of Spain, Joseph Buonaparte, backed by a French army, and the other in defence of her father's house against a writ backed by British soldiers and policemen. If the poor girl acted wrongly, I suppose it was because she had been taught the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," as it reads in the Bible, and not with the addition—"except in the case of an Irish tenant whose improvements a landlord may confiscate, and it is a sin to resist him."—London Society.

Goat Island being Washed Away.

A Buffalo despatch says: In his annual report Superintendent Welch, of the Niagara reservation at the Falls, says: "It has been found by examining the shores of Goat Island that the river has worn it away for a distance of 1,800 feet, and as the island is composed largely of gravel and quicksand a plan has been formed for saving the rest of the island. This protection consists of cribs filled with stone, the cost of which, exclusive of the stone, is estimated at $3.15 per running foot. The Three Sisters Islands are also found to be gradually wearing away."

An Irish paper mentions the general dimensions of the unmentionables that were smuggled to William O'Brien to show that a suspected friend of O'Brien's couldn't have been the man who wore them in, as he couldn't possibly inhabit them.

Husband—My dear, do you think that I am conceited about my personal appearance? Wife—Well, yes, John, a little. Most homely men are, you know.

BLINDED BY A COWHIDING.

A College Graduate Publicly Whipped by a Girl Whom he Traduced.

A Seneca Falls, N. Y., despatch says: For over a month the young people of Lodi have prepared for a grand Christmas celebration in the public hall. Marvin Phillips, a young school teacher in the place, a recent Harvard graduate and the son of Rev. W. P. Phillips, of Poughkeepsie, was chosen to conduct the exercises. On Saturday the young ladies of Lodi chose Miss Jennie Baxter, a prominent society young lady and daughter of the oldest physician in the place, to assist at the exercises. Phillips declined her assistance, and told several people she did not have a correct moral character. Miss Baxter heard of his words, but kept silent. At the Christmas tree exercises last night Phillips was the sole conductor. The hall was crowded and the scene was a merry one.

Phillips arose near the close of the exercises to address the Sunday School children, when Miss Baxter, who sat quietly a few feet away, suddenly rushed forward and, drawing a rawhide whip from beneath her cloak, beat Phillips unmercifully about the head and shoulders. One of the first blows was across his nose and eyes, and he stumbled forward blinded. Miss Baxter hit more severely then. Two men held her back and her cousin, Miss Lulu Young, snatched the whip from her hand only to beat Phillips the more. Phillips was led away by his friends. There was great excitement in the hall. Women and children screamed and everybody stood up. The Christmas tree was nearly overturned in the excitement. Phillips, who could not see because of the injury to his eyes, was led out to his room, where a physician applied liniment to the cuts and lacerations about his face and neck. Misses Baxter and Young were surrounded by the young women and left the hall in their company.

THE BERNHARDT WEDDING.

All Paris Present to See the Divine Sara's Son Marry the Princess.

A Paris cable says: Mme. Bernhardt constantly contrives to be the centre of a sensation, and to-day the slender, graceful lady, elegantly dressed, attracted more attention in the Church of St. Honore than a crowned head would have done. The occasion was the marriage of her son Maurice to Princess Jablonowski. From an early hour crowds surrounded the church, and when Mme. Bernhardt appeared she was given a grand ovation. The small church was filled to the doors, and had it been as large as the Place de la Concorde, the space would have been insufficient, as all Paris desired to be present.

The wedding cards were delicately engraved on parchment. On one Her Highness Princess Louise Jablonowski informs her friends of the marriage of her daughter Princess Zerka Jablonowski with M. Maurice Bernhardt, and begs them to assist at the marriage ceremony in the Church of St. Honore d'Eylau on the 28th December. This reading is surmounted by a ducal coronet. On the other card are the arms of Mme. Sara Bernhardt, the well-known mark of death crossed by a dagger and a jester's bauble, the initials "S. B." and the famous motto "Quand meme" and the same invitation. The envelope was of the same bis parchment, and it was sealed with Mme. Bernhardt's crest in red wax.

CUT IN TWO.

Mr. and Mrs. Grass Secures a Severance in Less Than Three Hours' Time.

A Chicago despatch says: When Detroit boasted of a divorce case where J. B. Book and his wife Alice were made two within 24 hours after filing the bill, society was aghast at the haste of the case; but a divorce case in Chicago, in which even quicker time was recorded, has been kept secret for several months. Although the divorce was granted some time ago it was never given out. John C. Grass, who had reached the age of 65 years, married a girl of 14 two or three years ago, but the union was inharmonious, and in a few months Mr. Grass was after a divorce. He retained ex-Judge Barnum, who filed his bill one morning, had a quiet hearing before Judge Sheppard, at which the bride said she was just as anxious for a divorce as Mr. Grass was, and that afternoon Mr. Grass was a free man. The actual time taken for the filing of the bill and getting the decree is said to have been between two and three hours.

The Prune in British Columbia.

The New Westminster British Columbian has the following: Mr. E. Greyell, one of Chilliwhack's most enterprising and wealthy farmers, called at this office and laid a package of prunes, grown by him, on our table. It is only a few days since the Columbian called the attention of fruit-growers in this Province to the fact that prunes could be successfully grown along the coast, and now the assertion has been practically demonstrated. The prunes grown by Mr. Greyell are of the Russian variety; they are large, well formed, fully ripened and equal in flavor to any cooking prunes on the market. The tree which bore them is eight years old, and stands the climate fully as well as the plum tree. A frost which occurred in the earlier part of the season damaged the plums on the neighboring trees, but did not injure the prunes in the least. Mr. Greyell is making arrangements to plant five acres of prunes next spring.

An Amateur French Scholar.

Two lads who were standing a few days ago before a store window, in which the sign "Ici on parle Francaise" was displayed, were overheard trying to decipher the legend. Finally the younger of the boys, with an accent that would make ordinary hotel menu French seem classic, read the line over aloud and said, in a superior conclusive way: "I tell you, Billy, it's a kinder French skatin' parlor they keep in there." Billy seemed entirely satisfied.

Boys to Look Up To.

August Shields, of Hunt county, Texas, is seven feet ten inches tall and is still growing as we go to press. He comes from a high bred family, having six brothers, two of whom are taller than August. There are about a mile of the boys, considered from a linear point of view.—Fargo Argus-Leader.

LATEST SCOTTISH NEWS.

Professor Blackie and "The Deil Ran Awa' Wi' the Exciseman"—Extraordinary Doings in Greenock—Death o a Daughter of Dr. Chalmers.

Lord Shand, one of the Judges of the Court of Session, has been seriously ill at his home in Edinburgh.

The Earl of Galloway, it is said, will probably receive the K. T. vacant by Lord Dalhousie's death. He is married to Lord Salisbury's sister.

Mr. H. E. Crum Ewing, late Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Dumbarton, has left personal estate amounting to upwards of £116,000.

The new railway station at Gilmour street, Paisley, Renfrewshire, was opened for traffic on the 5th instant. The cost is estimated at £100,000.

There died at 75 Leamington terrace, Edinburgh, on the 2nd inst., Helen, aged 61 years, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Chalmers, D.D., D.C.L. Three still survive.

The directors of the Clydesdale Bank in Scotland have appointed Mr. David Wilson general manager of the bank. Mr. Wilson has been assistant manager for the last seven years.

The accounts in connection with last year's International Exhibition at Edinburgh show that there remains on hand a surplus of £5,564 over the expenditure, which amounted to £104,803.

At Dunbar, Haddingtonshire, the captain of a Lowestoft vessel has been sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment for hoisting a boy to the mizzen-masthead and leaving him hang there for an hour.

Private Mulligan, of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, who shot two of his comrades at Rangoon recently—one of them being a son of the late Mr. James Christie, Saltcoats—has been sentenced to death.

A meeting of the subscribers to the memorial proposed to be erected to the memory of the late John Elder, of Fairfield shipyard, Glasgow, was held at Govan on the 5th inst., when it was agreed that the memorial should take the form of a statue by Boehm to be placed in Elder Park.

A newly placed country minister entered a bothy where a number of ploughmen were busily engaged at dinner, which consisted of brose. "What do you generally take for breakfast?" he inquired. "Brose," was the ready reply. "And for dinner?" "Brose, of course." "And for supper?" "Brose." "And do you never tire of brose?" he asked, kindly. "Goverdick, hear the man," exclaimed one of the ploughmen. "Does he think we tire o' oor meat?"

The strained relations that have existed between the Greenock School Board and some of their teachers culminated on the 5th inst. in a display of popular feeling against the majority of the Board, on the occasion of the formal opening of the new Highlanders' Academy. Mr. Wilson, the head teacher, who has been superseded, marched to the school at the head of his scholars headed by three Highland pipers and a kettle-drummer, and followed by an immense crowd (about 8,000) of the public. An attempt to keep the processionists from entering the school building was frustrated, and the crowd literally took possession, the majority of the School Board and the new head teacher they had appointed locking themselves into a side room, which was further guarded by a body of police. Subsequently an indignation meeting was held in the playground, when resolutions were passed protesting against the action of the School Board in wantonly disregarding the popular wish in regard to the transference of the teachers.

Some Banffshire folk having recently objected to Burns' song of "The Deil Ran Awa' wi' the Exciseman," the matter was brought under the notice of Professor Blackie, who then wrote to a gentleman there as follows: "I am sorry you should have people in your neighborhood so destitute of the Scotch virtue of humor as to call Burns' comic song about the Exciseman 'blasphemous.' Such language tends to make religion ridiculous and Scotsmen contemptible. As for persons in 'fashionable society,' who despise their native Scottish songs, and prefer to soak their stomachs with the sentimental syllabubs of the most recent London market, one can only pity them, and pray for their conversion to a better mind. It is a sad fact that the upper classes, whom the crowd are fond to imitate, are often the most denaturalized and denationized part of the community; but men of sense should know that the real value of Scottish national song, acknowledged by all the greatest poets and musicians of Europe, cannot be permanently affected by the squeamish conceits of a few provincial worshippers of the gilded idol called fashion."

The Latest Princess.

The Musical Herald furnishes a poem in honor of the recently arrived member of a royal family, the Princess of Battenberg. The last stanza is especially pathetic and realistic:

She has a dimple on each cheek,
And one below the chin.
At balmy eve she goes to bed;
The nurse then tucks her in.
Her little nose is some times pink,
Occasionally blue;
And who shall paint her tootsicums?
Oh, bless the baby now!

A Hoary Old Time Server.

"Ma," said Bobby, after a thoughtful silence, "do you know that I don't believe Santa Claus is really as good as he is cracked up to be?"

"Why, Bobby, what makes you think that?"

"Because he gives his nicest presents to little boys and girls that have rich pas."

The Retort Courteous.

Managing mamma to eligible bachelor—"Your parlors are beautiful, Mr. Balsaam, but your domestic melange, your—your—my dear, sir, who darns your stockings?" Old bachelor (emphatically)—"I do."—Boston Globe.

The Association of Grand Works of Panama has made a contract with a business house of Haiphong for the supply of 1,200 coolies, who will be put to work on the Panama Canal. They are to receive $20 a month and free board and lodging.

Judge to pickpocket—Who are your accomplices? "Your Honor, you would not have me divulge a professional secret!"

THE MINOR MISERY OF LONDON.

Some of the Hundreds who Spend Their Nights in London's Streets.

When they told me at the railway station the last train to the suburb where I lived had gone, I determined, mindful of the pleasures of night wandering in Paris, to seek shelter in no hotel, but to see what sights the streets of the sleeping city might afford. It lay in the gutter of that narrow street there, where any passing cab or yonder fruit-laden dray might, without blame to the driver, have crushed its life out. It was a little child, so light in my hand as I picked it up that for a moment I wondered whether indeed it was a living thing. Had it learned at so early an age to suffer and be still? It seemed so, for it made no cry. Not an abandoned babe, moreover; for there, coiled up asleep in a doorway, lay its mother. The child had dropped from her relaxing arms and had rolled into the kennel. In the Strand now, vacant of all traffic, save of the walking lepers of the street, insolent grown since a piqued police curtails not their so repulsive aggressions. "Our new instructions bid us leave them alone," said a constable to me; "and very glad we are to be relieved of the trouble of chivying them about." There is that danger in applying the rebuke of Talleyrand—that he to whom you forbid over-zeal will sink into inaction.

In every doorway of the side streets of the thoroughfare single misery has taken refuge. Misery in company is here in Trafalgar square. A curious sight, indeed, the "finest sight," as I then saw it. It was all dark, with a couchant mob of homeless vagabonds taking their rest on the stone. Not all in rags there, much black-coated misery was here. Such was he who presently tells me he was a city clerk, and who, to judge from his tongue and manner, may indeed have once done clerkly work. His pillow is a Daily Telegraph. This paper bedding affords a curious study. Most have such furniture to their resting place, and as I walk round I take notice what papers are most in use. The Echo pillows most of those who are in rags. Black-coated misery takes its bed-fittings from the Conservative press. One is a starving and homeless outcast, but one respects the institutions of one's country. Four hundred sleepers, men and women promiscuously side by side, I count in the shadows of the finest hotels in the world. High up on his column stands over all one who spoke once of England and her expectation. That 400 men and women and their children should thus be flung on the pavement—starving, abandoned in the very heart and centre of the luxury of the world—who has failed in his duty? Far off gleams the light high up that tells us that the people of England are even now being cared for. Her Majesty's Commons are at work, and provision is being made for the commonwealth. It is a sorry beacon, seen from a sorry sea.

Back to Covent Garden, where no misery is to be seen. No sleepers here, but men standing shivering under arches—a mother yonder munching some garbage picked from the refuse of the street. Hunger in the centre of the plethora of London! But one lives by contrast, and society loves the antithesis. "A penny, sir, for a cup of coffee. It's terribly cold." How often do I hear those words as I pass a now open coffee house, filled with prosperous marketmen. "Can one get soup anywhere here?" "No, sir—coffee, cocoa and ginger beer. "Are there no soup kitchens open now? "They don't have none, save in winter." It is true one is hungry in the winter only; the other nine months one is not, or should not be. In Paris one can always and at any hour buy for a penny a good bowl of soup, nourishing and comforting. Often at the Halles, where chiefly the soup merchants ply their trades, have I thus breakfasted. It is infinitely better than coffee, tea or cocoa, and it is a matter of wonder that the minor industries of London do not number soup stalls. In Paris these pay very well, and are greatly appreciated by the customers for whom they cater.

As the day dawns I am back in Trafalgar square, where the silent reveille of a cold wind has waked the sleepers. Some are sitting staring at the world; others are occupied over their sad toilets; a woman there with a needle and thread; and a man here with a tooth brush and the water of the fountain—it is my ex-city clerk. To what another day are these arising? As I stand on Westminster bridge the thought of that line comes to me which speaks of the lying still of all this mighty heart. Lie still, the warmly bedded and the well fed. As for the others? Well, for them

Still there clings
The old question: Will not God do right?

—Pall Mall Gazette.

Sisterhood Too Close.

She—I cannot marry you, George, but I will always be a sister to you.

He—Always?

She—Yes; always.

He—You are very kind, but I'm afraid it wouldn't do. The man you marry might object to it and make things disagreeable for both of us. I know I wouldn't like to have my wife playing the role of sister to an old beau of hers. Indeed I should decidedly object to her having any brothers of that kind. You can be a sort of second cousin to me or something like that, but a sister is out of the question; it is too risky, altogether too risky.—Boston Courier.

Rewarded.

"Why, how is this, Mr. Beat? I hear you've got the nerve to go around telling people that you're doing a better business that you ever did before; and yet you know you haven't paid me a cent of rent in the past six months."

"Well, I think that's doing pretty well. You're the first man I've struck who'd let me get into him more than three weeks. That's the reason I'm making such a long stay with you."—Puck.

A Youthful Financier.

Mother (to Bobby, who is slightly under the weather)—Papa will be sorry to hear that his little boy is sick, Bobby.

Bobby—Do you think he will give me anything, ma—a penny, perhaps?

Mother—I shouldn't be surprised.

Bobby—Then I hope I won't get well until he comes home.

—Wonder if a balloon would be more effective if it were made of fly-paper?

THE COMMON HEADACHE.

What Causes Them and the Only Way to Prevent Their Recurrence.

Probably one of the most common headaches, if not the most common, is that called nervous. The class of people who are most subject to it are certainly not your out-door workers. If ever my old friend and gardener had had a headache, it would have been one of this description. Nor does Darby, the ploughman, nor Jarvey, the 'busman, nor Greatfoot, the granger, suffer from nervous headache, nor any one else who leads an outdoor life, or who takes plenty of exercise in the open air. But poor Mattie, who slaves away her days in a stuffy draper's shop, and Jeannie in her lonesome attic, bending over her white seam—stitch, stitch, stitch—till far into the night, and thousands of others of the indoor working class, are martyrs to this form of headache. Are they alone in their misery? No; for my Lady Bonhomme, who comes to have her ball dress fitted on, has often a fellow-feeling with Jeannie and Mattie. Her, however, we cannot afford to pity so much, because she has the power to change her modus vivendi whenever she chooses.

What are the symptoms of this complaint that makes your head ache so? You will almost know it is coming from a dull, perhaps sleepy feeling. You have no heart and little hope, and you are restless at night. Still more restless, though, when it comes on in full force, and then for nights, perhaps, however much you may wish to, scarcely can you sleep at all.

"How my poor head does ache!" This you will say often enough; sadly to yourself, and hopelessly to those near you, from whom you expect no sympathy and get none. And yet the pain is bad to bear, although it is generally confined to only one part of the head.

The worst of this form of headache lies in the fact that it is periodic. Well, as it arises from unnatural habits of life or peculiarities of constitution, this periodicity is no more than we might expect.

Overwork indoors.

Overstudy.

Neglect of the ordinary rules that conduce to health.

Want of fresh air in bed-rooms.

Want of abundant skin-exciting exercise.

Neglect of the bath.

Over-indulgence in food, especially of a stimulating character.

Weakness or debility of body, however produced. This can only be remedied by proper nutriment.

Nervousness, however induced.

The excitement inseparable from fashionable life.

Exciting passion, anger and jealousy in particular.—Cassell's Magazine.

SIR THOMAS ESMONDE.

His Pedestrian Trips—The Baronet's Income and Views.

The eleventh baronet of the house of Esmonde (who spoke in Hamilton the other day) is a great pedestrian, and when at home walks eight Irish miles daily for his mail. He and Mr. O'Connor while in Buffalo refused utterly to have anything to do with hackmen. Sir Thomas represents Dublin county, and formerly received as high as £50,000 in rents. This year they have been so cut that he does not expect his income to exceed half that amount. He supports his two younger brothers, both of whom are now in school, and gets along nicely with his people, taking such amounts of rent as he can get, without turning the screws. He and Parnell are the only heavy land-owners of the Irish party, and it was considered a great victory when Sir Thomas chose his stand with the people. He says he believes that men should stand and fall with the people among whom they live at any sacrifice. If he had lived in the south he thinks he should have been a rebel in 1861, and if in the north he would have taken his musket in the ranks with the boys in blue. His mother was the great grand-daughter of Thomas Grattan, the tribune of the College Green Parliament. He says that the Irish party demands the return of the same Parliament, wrested from the people by force and bribery, and that if there are any improvements to be made they can be considered afterwards.—Buffalo Courier.

The Boy and the Big Bridge.

As I was ascending the bridge steps to take a train for New York the other afternoon, I noticed just ahead of me a woman leading a little boy by the hand. The boy, who appeared to be about 4 years old, was trying to hold back and crying bitterly. "I don't want to go on the bridge," he yelled, while he tugged away to get back to the street. It was with great difficulty that the woman got him on the train. When she sat down he climbed into her lap, and throwing his arms around her neck, moaned and cried most piteously. "I don't want to go on the bridge," he kept repeating all the way over. I asked the mother why the boy was afraid to go on the bridge, and she replied that there was only one way to account for it. "The boy," she said, "was born a few months after the great accident on the bridge just after the opening in 1883. My husband was killed in the crush that day. I was with him but by some miracle I escaped. Very early in life my son evinced great fear of the bridge, and always cried when crossing it. I generally use the ferry, as I hate to make a scene, but I am in a hurry to-day and so came over this way. I hope he will recover from this fear as he grows older, but I am beginning to think otherwise. He has no idea how his father died, and no one has ever spoken of the bridge accident in his hearing."—"Rambler" in Brooklyn Eagle.

Might Have Done Better.

"No, sir," said a pompous little merchant, "I can't be trifled with. I know the world; I've been through it."

"Yes, I suppose so," said the travelling man to whom these remarks were addressed.

"I'm a self-made man; entirely self-made. What do you think of that, sir?"

"It strikes me that you might have done a good deal better to let out the contract."

Timely Warning.

Persons intending to make New Year's calls will register their names at the Bureau of Police. This is to secure proper attention in case of accident or intoxication.—Philadelphia Times.

A Little Comedy.

Is the world the same, do you think, my dear,
As when we walked by the sea together,
And the white caps danced and the cliffs rose sheer,
And we were glad in the autumn weather?

You played at loving that day, my dear—
How well you told me that tender story—
And I made answer, with smile and tear,
While the sky was flushed with the sunset's glory.

Now I shut my eyes, and I see, my dear,
That far-off path by the surging ocean—
I shut my eyes, and I seem to hear
Your voice surmounting the tide's commotion.

It was a comedy slight, my dear—
Why should its memory come to vex me?
Can it be I am longing that you should appear
And play it again? My thoughts perplex me.

'Tis the sea and the shore that I miss, my dear—
The sea and the shore, and the sunset's glory—
Or would these be nothing without you near,
To murmur again that fond, old story?

I know you now but too well, my dear—
With your heart as light as a wind-blown feather—
Yet somehow the world seems cold and drear
Without your acting this autumn weather.

The Schoolmaster's "We."

Writing lines is the usual penance at Harrow for all offences committed in or out of school. There was one clever boy who escaped writing half the ordered quantity, and the masters tell the story of how he did it to this day. He was an untidy boy, and was often taken to task for his carelessness and disorder. One day his master, who had very dignified and impressive manners, and who always said "we" instead of "you" when talking to the boys, found occasion to reprove him.

"We do not look very clean," he said with severity. "We have not washed our hands this morning have we?"

"I don't know about yours," was the impudent boy's answer; "but I've washed mine."

"Ah," said the master, "we are very impertinent to-day. We will have to write a hundred lines before the next bill."

"Bill," at Harrow is the calling over of the boys' names during half holidays, in the high-walled yard in front of the old school building. Every boy must answer to his name.

When bill time came the master sent for the boy.

"Have we written our lines?" he asked.

"I've written my fifty," answered the boy very promptly, handing in his paper; "but I don't know whether you've done your half."—Liverpool Courier.

Good Advice for the New Year.

The beginning of the new year is an especially appropriate season in which to impart hints intended for the benefit of suffering humanity.

Perhaps there is no other habit that causes as much misery as that of worrying and fretting. It is true that we, ourselves, editorially speaking, have not given up worrying and fretting, but that is no reason why we should not advise our patrons to be calm and collected.

Don't fret. It is useless; it sets no broken bones, stops no leaks, gathers no spilt milk, repairs no broken glass, cures no spoilt hay, and has no effect whatever on the thermometer.

As regards the "career of small anxieties," one great art of mangling them is to cease thinking about them just at that point where thought becomes morbid. There comes a time when thought is wasted upon these anxieties.

Another method of avoiding worry and trouble is not to expect too much. There is a great deal of solid truth in the saying, "Blessed are those who don't expect much, for they are not liable to be disappointed."

Man doubles all the evils of his fate by pondering over them. A scratch becomes a wound, a slight an injury, a jest an insult, a small peril a great danger, and a slight sickness often ends in death by brooding apprehensions.

Unavailable Assets.

Johnnie, a bright boy of 6 years, while being fixed up for school, observing his little overcoat much the worse for wear and having more mended places than he admired, turned quickly to his mother and asked:

"Ma, is pa rich?"

"Yes, very rich, Johnnie; he is worth two millions and a-half."

"What in, ma?"

"Oh, he values you at one million, me at one million and baby at half a million."

Johnnie, after thinking a moment, said: "Ma, tell papa to sell the baby and buy us some clothes."

Better Late Than Never.

Mamma—Harry, you have taken a cake. Always ask mamma when you want a cake.

"Please, mamma," said the rogue meekly, pointing down his throat, "may I have dis one?"

At His Fingers' Ends.

"I suppose," said a quack, while feeling the pulse of his patient, "that you think me a humbug?" "Sir," replied the sick man, "I perceive that you can discover a man's thoughts by your touch."

A countryman who visited a New York theatre the other evening and went out between the acts, became greatly troubled on his return because he couldn't find his wife. He had lost his seat checks and didn't know what to do. Finally a sympathetic usher took pity on him and went through the house asking each lady he came to if she had lost a husband, until he discovered the rural gentleman's bride.

In one of the Sabbath schools in the "lang toun" of Kirkcaldy the other Sabbath, one of the teachers had occasion to refer to the posture at table the Jews assumed when partaking of food. He remarked that they reclined on couches instead of sitting upright as people in this country do; and concluded by asking the children what they thought of that? One little fellow promptly replied: "I think naething o't ava; I can lie on my belly and sup my parritch!"

The latest device of the London publican to aid his thirsty customers to drink wisely and well has just been exposed by the excise authorities. The beer is not diluted with water—that was a little too dangerous; but a little engine was found in connection with the beer pump by which water could be run into the pewter pots along with the beer. In all such cases the full penalty of £50 has been imposed.

EITHER BEAN OR BUTTON.

The Freiheit Family Disagree, but the Doctor Got the Case.

The question whether it was a bean or a button was the subject of conjugal polemics in which Sigismund Freiheit and his spouse were seriously involved last Monday. While Dr. Johnson, the assistant secretary of the health board, was sitting in his private office with a brother physician, they heard an energetic discussion in German between two persons on the stairway outside. Presently the door opened and a man and his wife, both approaching middle age, entered. The man had a child in his arms, and shared his wife's distress over something dreadful that had happened to it. Both started in at once to present the case to the kind-hearted doctor.

"One at a time, please," said the doctor.

"Yes, yes; now you just keep still, Meena," said the man to his wife, "and I will tell what is the matter. Why, you see this little child got a shoe button"——

"A bean," interrupted his spouse.

"Now you keep still, Meena," said the husband, with considerable acerbity. "Doctor, he's got a button up his nose."

"No, no, doctor," quickly broke in his wife; "it is not a button, it is a bean."

"Meena," shouted the man, "what are you talking about? I say it was a shoe-button."

"It wasn't a button, doctor; it was a big, blue bean," the woman replied with vigor.

"What do you kick up this row in the doctor's office for, Meena?" said the man in anger. "These women are all so stupid."

"Oh, you're stupid, Sigismund; you don't know anything," retorted the wife.

"Doctor, don't mind that fool; she don't know a cow from a head of cabbage."

"Come, come, my good people," interposed the doctor, "don't quarrel over it. The child has got something up its nose, has it?"

"Yes, doctor, a button," said the man.

"No, doctor, a bean, immediately broke from the woman, who was now thoroughly aroused.

"Well, bean or button, it must come out," said the doctor.

"Yes, the button," said the man.

"You lie, Sigismund; it's a bean," said the wife.

The doctor quelled the riot by asking the parents to place the child in a chair, and then laid out an array of about seventeen instruments, only one of which he had any use for. Selecting a bright delicate hook with a long shank, he advanced toward the infantile patient.

"What's that? What's that?" broke in the father. "I never had such a thing put into my body and I won't let such things be put into the body of my offspring," and seizing the child in his arms the couple left the office.

As they were going downstairs the young one sneezed, and out came the bone of contention—a little shoe button. The father picked it up and rushed back to the office.

"There, doctor, didn't I tell you it was a button?"

The woman being thus forced into acquiescence has nothing more to say, but the husband proceeded to explain to the doctor how the button got up the child's nose, and placing it in his own nostril by way of illustration he gave a sudden sniff and up went the button into his own nose. A spasmodic effort to blow it out failed in its purpose, and the man now became alarmed for himself.

"It must come out," said the doctor, "or it will be likely to produce a cancerous affection or cerebral inflammation."

"What's that? My God! Take it out, doctor, take it out!"

Once more the doctor produced his hook, and in a moment landed the little black button in the palm of his hand. Then he collected his fee, and the Freiheit family departed, wiser and happier for having the question, "bean or button?" settled.—San Francisco Call.

Knew His Verse.

"I know my verse," said a small Sunday school scholar to his teacher one Sabbath when it came to his turn to recite a verse from the Bible. "It is a bully one too; I was so afraid some other felle would say it before me."

"Let us hear it, then, James."

At the top of his voice the little boy shouted; "Meany, meany, tickel up his shin." (Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin.)—Bazar.

Unreliable Elephants.

Gent—"I believe you are the man of whom I bought this cane."

Proprietor—"Yes, I sold you that cane."

"And you said the handle was of genuine ivory, and I find that it is artificial."

"I can't help it, sir. I import my ivory direct from Ceylon, and the only explanation I can give is that the elephants have a ken to wearing false tusks."

A Valuable Communication.

Assistant Editor—Here is a letter from a correspondent, who writes regarding a matter of no earthly interest to anybody. He says: "While loath to encroach upon the very valuable space of your brilliant and widely influential journal —"

Editor-in-Chief—Let it go in.—From Epoch.

Heron Allen has just completed a novel entitled "Ashes of the Future." We warrant they will be just as hard to sift as the ashes of the present.

THE BELATED HUSBAND.

Oh, the beautiful snow—
Not the chestnut of old,
But the sort which, you know,
Amid bluster and blow,
Heaps up on the wold.

Its crystals invade
Every cranny in sight—
An excuse ready-made,
For the cars are delayed
Until late in the night.

Oh, the beautiful snow,
Piling up in a ridge!
Let it fall, let it blow,
For it serves us, you know,
In lieu of "The Bridge."

The London Zoological Gardens have received a new accession in the guise of a gorilla. The distinguished brute bears but one-half of a once distinguished name in zoonic circles, being labelled "Mumbo," instead of "Mumbo Jumbo."

Hon. Francis Brinley, the orator selected to deliver the address at the opening of the Boston Historical Society's new building, is over 90 years old.

RICH GROWING RICHER.

Colossal Fortunes of Men Who Reside in the States Metropolis.

Near the close of 1885 there died in New York city a citizen of that place who left to his children a fortune estimated at $182,000,000, besides making a number of minor bequests. It will help us to form an idea of the magnitude of this sum if we consider that it would have sufficed to give a Christmas present of $140 to every inhabitant of the city or at the rate of $700 to every family of five persons, supposing the population at that time to have been 1,300,000. A political committee of 100, appointed in the same city in October last, comprised eight members whose estimated wealth reached an aggregate of somewhat more than three hundred million dollars, and at least two of the most colossal fortunes were unrepresented in the number. Estates rising into the tens of millions are to be found in various other cities, and, taking the country through, one might designate 25 persons whose united wealth, according to current estimates, are not less than two thirds of $1,000,000,000, or about 1 per cent. of the total wealth of the United States, supposing this to have increased over 50 per cent. since the census of 1880. Were all the property in the country held in equally large amounts, the whole would barely suffice for 2,500 proprietors; or, supposing these to have families averaging four persons each beside themselves, it would supply a population a trifle larger than that of the little town of Yonkers, as stated in the last census. There are no authentic statistics showing the distribution of property among different portions of our people; but whatever the facts may be as to the comparative diffusion of such wealth as is held by the classes outside the circle of the extremely rich, it will hardly be disputed that the latter now hold a much larger proportion of the total wealth of the country than was held by a like percentage of people twenty-five or thirty years ago, for the proofs that this is the case lie upon the surface and thrust themselves upon general observation. Moreover, I see no reason to believe that the tendency to increasing accumulation at the upper end of the possessory scale has reached or is approaching its limit. A great fortune, with ordinary careful management, possesses an enormous power of accretion. Even when invested in good securities, at a very moderate rate of interest, a fortune that rises into the millions affords ample means of making yearly additions to the principal. If invested in real estate in any of our growing cities, it yields increasing income from decade to decade as the land advances in value, putting it in the power of the owner to lay aside an increasing surplus; while in the hands of a shrewd speculator, not over scrupulous in his dealings, its power of increase may be still greater. In January, 1880, the New York Commercial Advertiser reported the rumored additions during the preceding year to ten or twelve of "the great fortunes identified with Wall street" at $80,000,000.—Forum.

She Knew All About Peter.

It was a Sunday school exhibition, and the Superintendent was showing off the results of his labors. During the exercises he asked the children who could tell him anything about Peter. No one answered. The question was repeated several times, till finally a little girl held up her hand. "Well, my dear," said the Superintendent, "that's right; I am glad there is one little girl who will put these larger boys and girls to shame." The little girl came forward to the platform and was told to tell the audience all she knew about Peter. She put her finger in her mouth, and looking very smilingly, said:

Peter, Peter, pumpkin eater,
Had a wife and couldn't keep her;
Put her in a pumpkin shell,
And there he kept her very well.

Amid the roar that followed she hurried gayly to her seat.

Don't Give up the Ship.

You have been told that consumption is incurable; that when the lungs are attacked by this terrible malady, the sufferer is past all help, and the end is a mere question of time. You have noted with alarm the unmistakable symptoms of the disease; you have tried all manner of so-called cures in vain, and you are now despondent and preparing for the worst. But don't give up the ship while Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery remains untried. It is not a cure-all, nor will it perform miracles, but it has cured thousands of cases of consumption, in its earlier stages, where all other means have failed. Try it, and obtain a new lease of life.

Fallen From Its High Estate.

How swiftly degradation follows honor! How sad, oftimes, the mutability of worldly things! The stocking that erstwhile dangled haughtily from the glittering mantle to woo the touch of august St. Nicholas, now serves again in its humble capacity of protecting a motley crowd of corns, bunions and chilblains.

Doctoring a Cough.

Wife—I am so worried about that cough of yours, John, dear.

Husband (fondly)—Don't be foolish, little one. It is a mere nothing.

Wife—It may be a mere nothing, John, but I do wish you would see the—the insurance man to-day.

What is Needed.

To render marriage ceremonies more impressive the audience now remains standing until the minister concludes. What is needed very much in these days of divorces is something to make the marriage remain standing after the minister concludes.—Norwich Bulletin.

It Never Fails.

Marriageable young girls in Kansas make it a point to take up a land claim as the first step towards securing a husband. They have level heads. Any girl in the West with plenty of land can always land a husband.—New Orleans Picagune.

Honoring His Memory.

Caller—Isn't Carlo a curious name for a baby, Mrs. Hobson?

Mrs. Hobson (sadly)—Yes, but I had a little dog called Carlo, who died not long ago, and I've named the baby in his honor.—Harper's Bazar.

WHICH DO YOU BELIEVE?

Both Sides of an Absorbing Controversy Clearly Stated.

According to "Scribner's Statistical Atlas of the Census of 1880," there was not a single death from kidney disease in the entire United States from 1870 to 1880.

But can this be possible? If we are to believe the articles of one of our best advertisers, kidney disease, and diseases arising from kidney derangements, is actually responsible for the majority of deaths.

Why, then, such a discrepancy?

Fortunately for these people their statements are confirmed.

The suspicion is nourished by them, and we confess with good reason, that because the medical profession is not able to cure extreme kidney disorders, the profession officially disguises from the public the fact of their prevalence; meanwhile its journals are filled with regrets at this prevalence and the impotency of the profession to treat it successfully!

Why is the public misled?

These advertisers shrewdly say it is because the profession, if it concedes what they claim that kidney disease is universal, fears that the people will desert the powerless doctors and use the advertised preparation!

We do not know but they are right! But what should the people do?

Do? Read the evidence and guide themselves accordingly!

The advertisers claim to have cured hundreds of thousands of cases of Bright's disease and all lesser forms of kidney, liver and blood derangements. They offer $5,000 for proof that their statements of cures, in every quarter of the globe, are not true, so far as they know. These statements are from prominent men and women all over the world, and the closest scrutiny is invited!

If a physician cures a man and he knows it and says it, people believe him. If Warner's safe cure cures a man and he knows it and says it over his own signature, it is just as conclusive evidence in the latter case as in the former.

A few years ago, after having broken down prejudice in England, Canada, the United States, Australia, India and China, the owners of this great remedy applied for the privilege of its manufacture and sale in Germany. The laws of that great country are very stringent, and nothing can be manufactured or sold until it wins permission from the Government, and this will not be granted until the Government is satisfied that the best interests of the public and its individuals will be served by such a preparation

The medicine was chemically and microscopically analyzed (as accurately as possible), the formulæ were examined (with perhaps a secret prejudice against them) by the Government chemists, searching inquiry was everywhere made at home and abroad to verify its past record and reputation. Finally, it was triumphant even under the most critical examination, and full permission was given to make and sell Warner's safe cure in the Fatherland—the only life privilege of the kind ever granted to any American proprietary preparation.

Unprejudiced people will say that this favorable consideration of the merits of Warner's safe cure by the German Government was a very significant as well as a very distinguished compliment to its merits, and so it is.

The evidence is all in favor of these intelligent advertisers, who have certainly won universal public approval, because of their straight forward course in proclaiming the merits of their remedies.

New Year's Shopping.

Devoted Wife—Have you any embroidered slippers?

Dealer—Plenty of them. You wish handworked, I presume?

"Yes, I want a pair that will look as if it took all summer to do them."

"Yes, madam, we have that kind; they make a man almost weep when he thinks of the days and weeks and months of silent labor all for him."

"Well, here is my husband's measure. Don't send any bill except for the soles. Charge him a few dollars extra for his next pair of boots."

A Dish of New P's.

P stands for Pudding for Peach and for Pear
And likewise for Poetry and Prose;
The Parrot, the Pigeon that flies in the air,
The Pig with a ring in his nose;
For Paper and Pen, for Printer and Press,
For Physic, and People who sell it;
But when you are sick, to relieve your distress
Take at once Pierce's Purgative Pellet.

Oh, yes, indeed! These are the P's for you, poor, sick man or woman. Nothing like them for keeping the bowels and stomach regulated and in order—tiny, sugar-coated granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds. They work gently but thoroughly.

—"I was never exactly buried alive," said an old clerk, recounting his experience, "but I once worked a week in a store that did not advertise. When I came out my head was almost as white as you now see it. Solitary confinement did it."

She was Saved

From days of agony and discomfort, not by great interpositions, but by the use of the only sure-pop corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Tender, painful corns are removed by its use in a few days, without the slightest discomfort. Many substitutes in the market make it necessary that only "Putnam's" should be asked for and taken. Sure, safe, harmless.

Truthfully Said—and the Only Time.

Adam (just after getting acquainted with Eve)—Will you go with me to-night to see the animals?

Eve—I have nothing to wear.—Boston Courier.

The Man and the Petticoat.

A dress magazine says the petticoat must go. So be it, then; but if the petticoat goes so will man also and on the same train.—Chicago Herald.

That's What It's For.

Let people with heart affections beware of the toboggan slide.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Lady Granville Gordon, of London, is the only titled milliner of the metropolis.

ITCHING PILES.

Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. Swayne's Ointment can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

Earl Dunraven proposes to reform the British House of Lords by creating life instead of heritage peers and making the legislative body of the lords elective by the peerage for nine years. This would reduce the chamber of peers to 150.

Many imitators, but no equal, has Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

The Artless Child.

Mamie (6 years old to lady caller)—"Mamma said to ask you to sit down a few moments, and she would be right in. It isn't raining, is it?"

Lady Caller—"Why, no, Mamie. Why did you think it was?"

Mamie—"Because, when mamma saw you coming, she said, 'It never rains but it pours.'"

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DUNN'S

[illegible]

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES, free, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S
BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

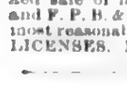
I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible Remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., Ont.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

Head Office, 761 Yonge St., Toronto.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office, Strain's Building, Flesherton
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore

P McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

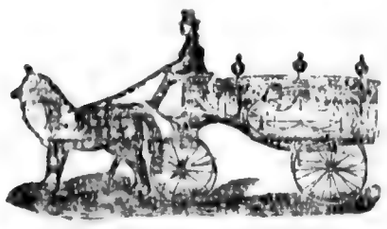
Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
Flesherton, Co. Grey.
Division Court Clerk, Commissioner in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. Issuer of MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

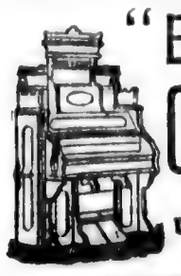
MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE ACT, &C
Deeds, Mortgages, Leases, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance affected in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.
Flesherton Station Mill.
The above mill is now in good running order for Chopping. George Moorehouse, proprietor, will be pleased to see all his old friends. Quantity of four feet Cedar Logs Wanted. Farmers will do well to make a note of this



J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,
FLESHERTON ONT.



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Another consignment this week of Choice New Season Tea, very cheap at M. Richardson & Co.

TENDERS, for the erection of a Brick Dwelling in the village of Flesherton will be received up to Saturday, January 21st 1888, by Joseph Blackburne, Esq. Plans and specifications may be seen at the office of M. Richardson & Co., Flesherton. Tenders may be given for the whole or part of the contract.

Rev. Dr. Stuart, of Owen Sound, lectured in the Baptist chapel here on Friday evening last. Unfortunately, a pressing engagement elsewhere prevented us attending what was, no doubt, a rich feast—intellectually speaking. Moreover the hour for commencing the lecture—7 o'clock—was too early to ensure a large attendance, especially on Friday evenings.

Rev. Mr. Shilton exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Burton, Methodist minister of Dundalk, on Sunday last. The latter gentleman is a fluent speaker, with a peculiar but rather striking style of delivery. His text on Sunday evening was, "All things work together for good to them that love God," from which he preached an interesting sermon to a large congregation.

Principal Irwin is to be congratulated upon the success of his pupils at the recent Entrance Examinations. Robt. Keefer, Willie Sinclair, and Frank VanDusen passed creditably—the first named standing high up on the list. This showing is all the more creditable when it is considered that Mr. Irwin has been actually doing the work of two teachers and had very little time to devote to the special work necessary to prepare pupils for such Exams.

We beg to congratulate Miss Minnie Brander, of Priceville, upon the brilliant success achieved by her at the recent Entrance Examinations, in obtaining the highest number of marks and thereby heading the list of 269 candidates, of whom 111 were successful in passing. We also congratulate her excellent teacher, Mr Kerr, as well as her esteemed parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Brander, who ought to be proud of their daughter's success, as no doubt they are.

A cow belonging to Mr. Samuel Pedlar, sr., of Artemesia, swallowed a broken piece of a whipstock about a year ago. The other day one end of the whipstock was noticed protruding from the cow's side, when it was pulled out. The animal is now none the worse for the remarkable transit of the piece of wood, which was twenty-three inches in length. Mr. Joseph Pedlar, a respectable farmer and brother to the owner of the cow, vouches for the truthfulness of this extraordinary occurrence.

In renewing his subscription to The Advance, Mr. T. E. McGirr, of Emerson, Manitoba, says:—"The year that has just closed has been one of prosperity in Manitoba. . . . Weather clear and cold at present (Jan. 3rd.) but very little snow, and what there is has been blown into heaps; so that there is scarcely either sleighing or wheeling. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, however, business has been good. Our cash receipts for the past three months amounts to about $7000."

Our young friend, Mr. W. J. Blakeston—a keen, smart and clever educator of Public School children in Proton—renews his subscription to The Advance, and adds;—"Could not do without your newsy and interesting paper." Scores speak in a similar strain, and, like friend Blakeston, they come forward with the needful every time. A large number of new subscribers have been added since New Year's, while a half dozen or so old subscribers have seen fit to discontinue their subscriptions, a fact we regret. An Editor cannot suit everybody, however, and we do not intend to try to do so.

Big Club Offer.—We will furnish that excellent religious paper, The Methodist Observer, and this journal for 1888, both papers for only $1.50. The Observer is an 8-page, 40-column, weekly paper and is cheap at $1.00 a year. Each issue contains a 5 to 6-column summary of Methodist Church news, and a great variety of choice reading matter. Send your address to James Publishing House, Bowmanville, Ont., for a free sample copy, or call at this office and see one.

Miss Mary Wright had a most miraculous escape from death in the woollen factory here, on Saturday afternoon last about four o'clock. She was stepping over a rapidly revolving shaft, when her dress caught on a projecting bolt. Instantly she was drawn around the shaft, and, as it was within a foot or so of the floor, the unfortunate young lady's head came with terrific force against it. A severe wound was inflicted on the back of her head, while there is a probability of internal injuries. The prompt stoppage of the machinery no doubt saved her life.

Our young friend, Mr. J. G. Keefer, of the Forest Free Press, writing to us under date of Jan. 2nd, says:—"The Advance is always a welcome visitor to me. I go to the post office every Friday evening and there find it always waiting for me. The people of Flesherton should feel proud that they are able to have a paper to represent their local, and not only local but outside interests. Some people will say to me, "Why, where is Flesherton; I never heard of it before." They pick up The Advance, look over its columns, and are quite surprised to find such a flourishing place and so well represented in your advertising columns."

Still at the Helm.

The "Old Man," according to to his own account, enters on his seventh-fourth year to-day, but those who claim to know him better say that he is really 76. We would not be surprised if the latter figure is the correct one. But still more surprising is the fact that Sir John is as young, indeed, appears younger, than he was ten years ago. Within the last five years, so his doctors say, he has acquired a new constitution, and the restrictions enforced in the matter of diet some years ago have been removed without injury. He attaches great store to a prophecy made by an old gipsy woman whose son he prosecuted in a horse case at Belleville some forty-five years ago. The old dame pointing her finger in anger at John A., exclaimed: "May the devil an' you go hunting together for sixty years to come."
—Toronto World.

Hon. C. Edwards Lester,
Late U. S. Consul to Italy, author of "The Glory and Shame of England," "America's Advancement," etc., etc., etc., writes as follows:—

New York, August 1, 1886.
122 E. 27th st.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.,
Gentlemen:—A sense of gratitude and the desire to render a service to the public impel me to make the following statements:
My college career, at New Haven, was interrupted by a severe cold which so enfeebled me that, for ten years, I had a hard struggle for life. Hemorrhage from the bronchial passages was the result of almost every fresh exposure. For years I was under treatment of the ablest practitioners without avail. At last I learned of which I used (moderately and in small doses) at the first recurrence of a cold or any chest difficulty, and from which I invariably found relief. This was over 25 years ago. With all sorts of exposure, in all sorts of climates, I have never, to this day, had any cold nor any affection of the throat or lungs which did not yield to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral within 24 hours.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Of course I have never allowed myself to be without this remedy in all my voyages and travels. Under my own observation, it has given relief to vast numbers of persons; while in acute cases of pulmonary inflammation, such as croup and diphtheria in children, life has been preserved through its effects. I recommend its use in light but frequent doses. Properly administered, in accordance with your directions, it is in any house. I speak earnestly because I feel earnestly. I have known many cases of apparently confirmed bronchitis and cough, with loss of voice, particularly among clergymen and other public speakers, perfectly cured by this medicine. Faithfully yours,

A Priceless Blessing

C. EDWARDS LESTER.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

GRIP
CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.
J. W. BENGOUGH, Artist and Editor.
ISSUED WEEKLY.
$2 a Year; $1 for 6 Months.
GRIP is increasing in influence and popularity every year! It is a supreme household favorite, while every Politician and Professional and Business Man enjoys the clever hits which appear in every issue. Subscribe now!
See our Premium and Clubbing List. Circulars giving full particulars sent free.
Look out for Grip's Comic Almanac for 1888. Price 10 cents.
Address,
GRIP PUBLISHING CO.
TORONTO, ONT.

BOOTS & SHOES!
—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—
WINTER GOODS!
RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS and FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.
WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

HEARD'S!
Carriage Works, Flesherton,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.
SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.
Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

CHEAP AND DURABLE!
—THE WELL-KNOWN—
SPEIGHT WAGON!
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual
First-class value in every department.
Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.
STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,
Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.
Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT
THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.
THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS
Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.
Manufactured only at Professor Holloway's Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.
Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

To the People
Of Artemesia, Osprey, and Surrounding District.
The undersigned respectfully tenders his sincere and grateful thanks to the general public for the excellent patronage extended to him since opening out in the Boot & Shoe Business in Flesherton, and trusts he has merited their continued support.
At the same time, he wishes to state that he has a good stock of Mens Long Boots, Ladies Boots & Shoes, &c., of his own make, which will be sold at Cost Prices. Must clear out the stock—come and get bargains! Wishing one and all a "Merry Christmas and a Happy new year."
Flesherton, Dec. 21st, 1887. JOS. SMITH.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton
Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Executor's Notice

In pursuance of sect. 1, Chap. 9, 46 Vic., notice is hereby given that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of W. H. Colquett, deceased, late of the township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, and Province of Ontario, who died on or about the 26th day of May, 1886, are to sent by post prepaid or delivered to William S. Christoe, M.D., on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, a statement containing their names and addresses and full particulars of their claims and of the securities (if any) held by them and after the said, last mentioned date, the said W. S. Christoe, for the personal Estate and effects, rights and credits of the said W. H. Colquett—will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased amongst the parties entitled thereto, regard being had only to the claims of which notice has been given as above required, and Executors will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person or persons of whom claims have been received by the said W. S. Christoe.
And further, all parties who are indebted to the said Estate of the said W. H. Colquett, deceased, are to pay as the same becomes due, to the said W. S. Christoe.
W. S. CHRISTOE,
for the Executors.
JAMES LOVE, SAMUEL COLQUETT, and MRS. COLQUETT.
Dated, Flesherton, this 20th day of Dec., 1887

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 343. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

HAMPDEN

WATCHES

I desire to extend best thanks for the continued confidence and support received from the public during 1887. I hope 1888 will bring to all many helps over hard places. Bear in mind my business principles which have been carried out for 6 years next March, in Grey Co., viz., Honest Goods in quality, Fair Profits, Reliable Warrants. I have the "only" Full Stock of Watches, Clocks, Etc. in this section to select from. My prices so close that small Jewellers doing a hand to mouth business are compelled to resort to big adjectives and fictitious discounts to draw sufficient trade to enable them to pay rents, taxes, etc. It will pay to do business with Jewellers who "have a reputation" to sustain for "reliability."

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, 331-41. Collingwood.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C

Opposite U.S. Patent Office

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE,

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Mr. James Beecroft is reported to be seriously ill.

Miss McKim, of Toronto, is the guest of Dr. Christoe.

County Council next week in Court House, Owen Sound.

District Council of Royal Templars meet in Flesherton to-morrow.

The Fighting Editor has already got his club on hand for Spring Poets.

The Flesherton Division Sons of Temperance meetings are increasing in interest every meeting.

FISH, FISH, FISH!—25 bbls. of No. 1 Salmon Trout and Labrador Herrings just received at R. Trimbles.

We want a good regular correspondent at Priceville. Write Editor of this paper for particulars.

"Shirley Ross; a Story of Woman's Faithfulness," is the name of the New Story commenced in this week's ADVANCE.

East Grey Agricultural Society's Annual Meeting was held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, yesterday afternoon. Particulars next week.

Grand clearing sale of Flannels, All wool. Grey Flannells 28 in. wide, 25c. per yd., White Flannelliextra wide only 12½ cents per yard at R. Trimble's.

A number of youths from Dundalk drove up to Flesherton skating rink on Saturday evening. The foreman of the Herald was amongst the number.

Orange Social in Kimberley to-night. Admission 10 cents only, and besides the refreshments there is a musical and literary program worth a quarter. Doors open at 7 o'clock.

Last week, Mr. D. L. White was driving swiftly around the corner of Mr. R. J. Sproule's store, when the hind part of his sleigh slid around on the ice and turned the horse and sleigh completely around.

C. Treadgold, Flesherton, dealer in the best Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines, Washing Machines, Clothes Wringers, Churns, Fruit & Ornamental Trees. Three second-hand Sewing Machines on hand to sell for Wood or Hay.

At the promotion examinations in the Flesherton Public Schools, on Friday, Jan. 6th, 1888, the following pupils were promoted to the third book;—Bert. Bellamy, Ida LeGard, Minnie LeGard, Annie Legate, Fred. Sproule, Lena Wright and Ethel Gordon.

We sell more watches in two weeks than the would-be honest and reliable dealer did in three months, which makes him feel very bad and and we still have any amount of watches left yet at 20% less than elsewhere in this section of Grey at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Mr. Claude W. Lawton, Editor of the Beeton World, got married last week. In his absence on the usual honeymoon trip, his satanic majesty of the printing office wielded the quill: so it is said. Strange and startling as this statement may seem, the World seemed to be edited quite as well as usual—notwithstanding Editor Lawton's absence—which leads us to infer that the "devil" is a rising youth in the journalistic world. Here's long life to the great and only original "Clawed," champion inkslinger of Simcoe!

TAMARAC—To effectually cure a bad Cough or Cold, and do it quick, use Tamarac Elixir. It strikes at the root of the trouble and gives immediate relief.

We are informed that Mr. McConnell, of Kimberley, has bought out Mr. S. Spirit's butchering business here.

All the new SCHOOL BOOKS and SCHOOL SUPPLIES at Richardson's Drug Store, Flesherton.

Crowds on Flesherton Skating Rink every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday night. Brass Band in attendance every Thursday and Saturday evenings.

Call at once and secure some of the Great Bargains now offering in Furs. My entire stock must be cleared out regardless of cost.—R. TRIMBLE.

As Mr. Wm. Milnor, a young man working for Mr. J. Gordon, was going into his employer's shop on Monday evening, he slipped and his arm went through one of the front windows and broke the pane. His arm wasn't hurt.

Mr. Thos. Osborne, who lives one mile east of Flesherton, is seventy-eight years of age, and still hale and hearty. As one of Artemesia's pioneers, he has seen much hard work; but his temperate habits and even disposition have successfully tided him over nearly all the diseases flesh is heir to. Mr. Osborne is also one of our oldest and most esteemed subscribers.

HARNESS FOR SALE.—1 sett single Harness, new, will exchange for Wood or Furniture at a bargain.—R. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton Skating Rink will be open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings. The Brass Band will be in attendance on Thursday and Saturday evenings. See bills for particulars.

Mr. Findlay, of the 12th concession of Osprey, left a monster turnip at Richardson's Drug Store that weighed 13½ lbs. It can be seen there yet. The turnip was grown from seeds purchased at Richardson's.

A handsome new Taylor Safe has been added to THE ADVANCE office outfit. We still keep our bull dog loose in the cellar for the enlightenment and edification of burglars, lightning rod men, book agents, peddlars, and spring poets!

The piece of whipstock that was taken from the side of Mr. Samuel Pedler's cow, has formed a theme for much wordy and learned discussion. But if you want to be charmed as well as astonished, just go to Booth the Boss Barber, of Flesherton, and get a hair cut, shave or shampoo. He downs them all.

The 5th Division Court is being held in the Town Hall here to-day.

Married.

GAUDIN.—BREEN.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. John Breen, on Tuesday, Jan. 16th inst., by Rev J. W. Shilton, Mr. H. V. Gaudin, late of Kimberley and now of Boston, U. S., to Miss Lizzie Breen, of Artemesia.

WRIGHT.—BREEN.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. John Breen, on Tuesday, Jan. 16th inst., by Rev. J. W. Shilton, Mr. John Wright, jr., to Miss Sarah Breen, both of Artemesia.

Died.

LEGARD.—At High Santon, Lincolnshire, England, on Dec. 21st, 1887, Mr. Wm. LeGard, aged 67 years.

Deceased was the youngest brother of Charles and Joseph LeGard, of Artemesia.

REDEEMING POINTS.—Nasal Balm does not irritate or cause sneezing, does not require any instrument for its use, does not have any ill effects, relieves from the first, and one 50 cent bottle will cure an ordinary case, with no other expense attached.

STOCK — TAKING — SALE!

Great Sweeping Reductions

AT

J. RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON.

We have decided to go out of the Fancy Goods business and for the future handle only

Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex &c.,

— SO WE WILL SELL FOR THE —

NEXT — SIXTY — DAYS

Our whole stock of Berlin and Zepher Wools at 8c. per oz. worth 12½; Filloselle 5c. a knot worth 10c.; Arrasen at 10c. now worth 15c.; Chinelle at 8c. yard worth 15c. Fancy Plush Goods &c. all below cost as we are bound to clear them out. Macraime Cord all colors at 10c. ball or 3 for 25c. We will also clear out our entire line of PIPES at away below cost. Your choice of 1 lot of Pipes worth from 50 to 85c. for 35c.; your choice of Pipes worth 30 to 50c. for 20c.; your choice of Pipes worth 20 to 30c. for 10c. A lot of PURSES ranging in price from 35 to 85c your choice for 25c. We have also decided to clear out some lines in Brooches, Earings, Cuff-Buttons. Your choice of 1 beautiful lot of Brooches valued from 25 to 40c. at 15c.; your choice of another beautiful lot valued from 40 to 60c. at 25c.; another lot valued from 60c. to $1.00 for 40c.; Earings and Cuff-Buttons at the same terrible Reductions.

Come along and get First Choice as they will go like Hot Cakes

As they are all Fine and Good, Warranted to Wear and Keep Color for years. Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. still 20 Per Cent. lower in prices than elsewhere in this section.

The dealer who tells the people so often about his honesty &c. must have come to the conclusion that they are very suspicious of him or he would not need to advertise his honesty instead of his goods.

— IF YOU WANT A GOOD ARTICLE AT LOW PRICES ALWAYS GO TO —

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELERY STORE, FLESHERTON.

Graphic Details of the Terrible Calamity in China.

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE HOMELESS,

And at Least 750,000 Drowned by the Mighty Waters.

HORRIBLE SUFFERINGS OF SURVIVORS.

Late details of the Chinese floods make the story one of the most terrible in history. What was a beautiful populous district of ten thousand square miles is now a rolling sea. At least three million people are homeless and absolutely destitute of the barest necessities of life, while it is thought that the loss of life will reach 750,000. Everything in the way of figures is as yet, however, pure speculation, with the chances of a total mortality far greater than the present estimate. Court and business circles in Pekin, Canton and other centres are doing all in human power to cope with the disaster.

The World has the following from London: The special correspondent of the Standard at Shanghai sends a graphic picture of the tremendous loss of life in China from the overflow of the Hoang Ho river and of the tremendous famine now threatened. About one-sixth of the entire area of the "Garden of China," as Honan is styled, is now converted into a vast lake, with here and there a pagoda top or the gable of some higher wall rising over the ever increasing waters, to mark the sites of what were a short time ago prosperous cities of many thousand inhabitants. The rest of the country is overrun with wretched refugees who were fortunate enough to escape with their lives, though with naught else. In hundreds of instances men who three months ago were men of wealth to-day sit gazing on the inland sea, stunned and hungry, stupid and dejected, without a rag to wear or a morsel of food to eat. The inundation commenced a little distance from Kaifung Fu, one of the largest cities of the Province, and in one instant some four miles of solid embankment of stone, brick, sand and clay were swept away with innumerable moles and fascines. In the districts of Ching Chow and Chen Chow no less than three thousand large villages are stated to have been engulfed in a very few moments and scarcely any of their ill-fated people had time to save themselves, as the breach occurred in the night time. An extent of country much larger than the whole principality of Wales and much more thickly populated is now a raging sea, and all the inhabitants are either drowned or have fled. The people so terribly visited cannot number far short of the whole population of Ireland, as the Province includes about twenty-five million inhabitants with an area of 65,000 square miles, and the waters of the river now cover between eight and ten thousand square miles. The accounts published in the native and foreign papers and in the Pekin Gazette reveal most horrible sufferings undergone by the survivors, who are perishing of famine. In hundreds of instances when the waters rushed into the cities, sweeping walls, houses and everything down before them, the people refused to stir and met their deaths with that wonderful indifference which characterizes the Chinese. According to the best authorities the loss of life will be numbered by hundreds of thousands, while there are millions of starving people who are now depending for subsistence upon the charity of others. The Emperor has already contributed 100,000 teals, besides ordering 2,000,000 teals out of the imperial treasury toward the relief of the sufferers.

FREE FISH.

The International Dispute May be Settled on Such a Basis.

A Washington despatch says: It is the general opinion among New England and Eastern members of the House that the Committee on Ways and Means, which has charge of all revenue legislation, will do what Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. Joseph Chamberlain have failed to do, that is to say, that this committee will report a Bill in favor of the admission of Canadian fish to American markets without payment of duty. The majority of the committee is made up of Democratic members from points remote from the seaboard, who have no interests at stake in connection with the fisheries. Free fish is a cry which meets a responsive echo in all sections of the United States away from the New England and lake ports, and a proposition looking to the cheapening of this article of food would certainly be well received. It is likely to come up in the General Tariff Bill. Mr. Cameron, official private secretary to Sir Charles Tupper, arrived in the city to-day. Sir Charles is expected to-morrow. Congressman Butterworth has been too ill to attend the sessions of the House lately, so that he had no opportunity to introduce his Commercial Union Bill. He will do so as soon as he is able to get out.

A VILLAINOUS ONSLAUGHT.

Murderous Attack Upon a Husband and Wife—The Woman Fatally Wounded.

A Brooklyn, N. Y., despatch says: C. Stiger entered the house of L. Cobert on Harmon street early yesterday morning and attempted to murder Cobert and his wife. Cobert got up at 6 o'clock and went down stairs to make a fire. Stiger, who had entered by the back door and secreted himself in the hallway stairs, then attacked Mrs. Cobert, who was in bed, with an iron bar. She screamed and called for her husband, but Stiger struck her several times and inflicted injuries which will probably cause her death. As Cobert entered the room Stiger struck him on the head with the iron bar, saying he would kill him so he could not tell the story. Stiger rained blow after blow upon Cobert's head until he fell senseless to the floor. Subsequently he revived, and gave information to the police, who arrested Stiger while he was removing his bloody clothes in his own house. Mrs. Cobert had on several occasions helped Stiger's family. Stiger says the Coberts were living on the money his wife had earned for them, and he was sorry he had not killed them outright.

ROMANTIC BREACH OF PROMISE CASE.

A Maiden Demands $100,000 Damages for a Broken Heart—The Defendant a Millionaire.

A New York telegram says: Miss Clara Campbell is plaintiff in the Supreme Court for $100,000 damages for breach of promise against Charles Arbuckle, the wealthy coffee merchant. The plaintiff's counsel in his address to the jury to-day stated that his client for twelve months prior to 1879 had studied music at Milan, Italy, with the expectation of going upon the operatic stage. On her return to this country she met Mr. Arbuckle by means of a letter of introduction. He soon showed that he was deeply smitten with the plaintiff. He professed the most ardent love and the result was an engagement. He gave her a $690 engagement ring and many other presents, and this engagement was not broken off until Mr. Arbuckle learned that the plaintiff's father had failed. Miss Campbell, being a non-resident, had to give security to bring this action. Having no money, she was compelled to pledge her diamond engagement ring for the costs. Mr. Arbuckle testified that he had promised to marry the lady on her asking him to do so. The witness stated that in addition to the diamond ring he gave Miss Campbell $500 because she asked for it. "That was in the summer of 1883," he added. "She wrote me a letter asking for it." On cross-examination he said he met Miss Campbell on a steamboat plying between Pittsburg and Cincinnati. The clerk introduced them. After an acquaintance of two weeks she asked him to marry her. At that time he was in very bad health and took a great deal of whiskey and quinine, so that he was not always himself. Counsel for the defendant read three letters from plaintiff to Arbuckle. They opened with "Dear Baby Bunting," and were signed "Bunnie" and "Bunnie C." In one of the letters she desires to know his purposes concerning herself. The plaintiff then took the stand and told her story. She said she was 39 years old and was born at Hanging Rock, Ohio. Her father was John Campbell, an iron manufacturer. She related at length her relations with the defendant.

Some of the letters were decidedly rich. Here is one from the defendant to the plaintiff:

"N. York, Feb. 17th, 1884.

"Dear Bunnie,—* * * My stomach with that of malaria and bronchial trouble has been all and more than I could bear for the past two years and makes me blue. I am not and have not for a long time been able to retain a good breakfast or dinner. * * *

"It has been my desire to go and pay you a visit. Bun, I did not have the nerve to meet those that I had never met, and look and feel blue. I am blue and have been blue, and I am completely broken down. Now, Bun, when am I to hear from you?

"If you were to feel as wretched as I am and have been for the past year I would write you more oftener than you write me. * * *

"Oh, Bunnie, I am worried. If I could rest my head on your lap and have a good cry I imagine I would feel better, but I know not.

"I do not want you to want for any comfort? Do you know that I have a heart? * * * I must close. I am blue and sick, and with h'gs and k'ss must close and remain your "K. M. Q."

KILLED WHILE COASTING.

Alarming Accident to a Gay Party of Thirteen A "Double Ripper" Wrecked.

A Holyoke, Mass., despatch says: In a coasting accident last evening Miss Eugenie Pentland, of Brooklyn, N.Y., was killed. The street through which the slide runs is fully a mile long and crosses at least twenty streets from the top to the end. The double ripper contained the unlucky number thirteen when the start was made from the top of the hill. The boys and girls on the slide were of all ages from 8 to 25. The boy who steered was about 11. When about half a mile down the hill he saw a team coming against him. He endeavored to avoid the team and ran right into a telegraph pole. He jumped off and escaped with a broken leg. The second seat on the sled was occupied by Miss Pentland. She was instantly killed. The occupants of the next six seats were bruised and scratched more or less, but it is thought now that all will recover.

Another Sad Coasting Collision.

A Torrington, Conn., despatch says: In a coasting accident last night Miss Kittie Miller had a hip broken and was probably internally injured, and Miss May Marian and Willie Cooper were painfully bruised. The victims were among a party who were on a "double ripper," when the steering apparatus became disarranged, causing a collision with a post.

The Rats Had a Bed of Greenbacks.

A Pittsburg, Pa., despatch says: John Beck, a druggist here, has been the victim from time to time during the past seven years of systematic and mysterious robberies. The thieves were discovered last Saturday. They were rats. At the back end of the money drawer an opening of about two inches from the top of the counter, and through which any small sized rat could climb, was found. In it was a bed or nest made of a pile of greenbacks and other small articles, and in it were eight small rats, which were too young to make their escape. Several hundred dollars are supposed to have been lost in this way.

Samaritans Taken In.

A Montreal telegram says: A woman named Parker, who came to Montreal from Boston, pretending to have been betrayed and deserted by a man she discovered to have been previously married, and substantiating this doleful tale by apparently authenticated letters, obtained the confidence of a good family in this city. She was given full charge by her too confiding friends, and yesterday while they were absent the lady from the Hub disappeared, taking with her $200 worth of jewellery and $20 in cash.

The mule has ground for a slander suit against the Louisiana orator who called him "the Mugwump of the animal kingdom."

OLD WORLD NEWS BY MAIL.

Latest Scottish Gossip.

There died at Edinburgh, on the 15th ult., suddenly, Prof. Wm. Robertson, Principal Royal Veterinary College, aged 56 years.

On the 11th ult. Widow Mary Brandy or Kennedy, Longacre, died, aged 101 years. Her sister Agnes died last year, aged 106 years.

Dr. Thomson, medical officer of health, Aberdeen, has been appointed medical officer of health for Sheffield. Salary, £500 per annum.

Mr. Alex. Anderson (known as a poet as "Surfaceman") has accepted the post as sub-librarian in the University Library, Edinburgh.

At a concert in the Trades' Hall, Glasgow, the other night some miscreants utterly destroyed several dozens of silk hats in the cloak room.

There were great rejoicings on the 14th ult. at Tillyfour, on the occasion of the marriage of Miss Begg to Mr. W. R. Reid, advocate, Aberdeen.

The Queen has intimated that the prerogative of mercy, so far as Scotland is concerned, should in future be exercised by the Secretary for Scotland.

Mr. Cochran-Patrick, ex-M. P. for North Ayrshire, has been appointed to the permanent Under-Secretaryship for Scotland in succession to Sir Francis Sandford.

Rev. J. Robertson, Stonehaven, continues to announce his sermons in a sensational way. On the 11th ult. his subjects were—"Have you had your photo taken?" and "A 1 at the Devils."

On Dec. 17th the remains of the late Sir Francis Grant, Bart. of Monymusk, Aberdeenshire, were interred in the family vault in the churchyard of Monymurk. The pall-bearers included the Earl of Aberdeen.

The other day, at Westerhall, Dumfriesshire, Sir F. J. W. Johnstone, Lord Dudley, Lord Gray de Wilton and Mr. Baring shot in five hours 1,000 pheasants, eight woodcock and seventy hares and rabbits—about one kill per minute to each gun.

Mr. Robert Inglis, of Gall & Inglis, publishers, Edinburgh, died at his residence in Dick Place on the 21st ult. Mr. Inglis took a great interest in the working classes, and for many years took a leading part in the work of the Canongate Institute.

The late Mr. James Smith, the poet and story writer, was a member of Buccleuch Church, Edinburgh. Dr. Adamson conducted the service at his funeral, which was largely attended by representatives of all classes. He was interred in the Grange Cemetery.

The result of the recent heavy orders for shipbuilding on the Clyde has been to stiffen the steel market, and an advance in the price of all classes of steel is now quoted. It is estimated that contracts are now in hand on the Clyde for 150,000 tons of new steel shipping.

Latest From Ireland.

Rev. Samuel Finlay, for thirty-seven years minister of Kilraughts, county Antrim, is dead.

The death is announced of Sir Robert Montgomery, K. C. B., formerly Chief Commissioner of Oude and Lieutenant Governor of the Punjaub. He was born in Londonderry in 1809.

The remains of the late Prof. Balfour Stewart, formerly professor of Natural Philosophy in Owen's College, Manchester, were on the 23rd ult. interred in Ballymagarvey, near Drogheda.

There has been a fatal outbreak of measles in the small population of the island of Cape Clear. In one family all have died but one, and in another all the male members have succumbed.

The trial of Dr. Philip Henry Eustace Cross, of Shandy Hall, for the murder, in June last, of his wife, closed in Cork on Dec. 17th. He had administered in successive doses arsenic and strychnine. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to be hung.

JUBILEE PRESENTS.

Odd Offerings Made to His Holiness—What the Pope Will do With Them.

A London despatch says: The catalogue of the offerings presented to the Pope on the occasion of his Jubilee is in course of preparation. It will include a list of articles that seem better fitted for the nursery than the Vatican. Babies' bassinettes, shoes, bundles of tiny garments, cots, cradles, bed clothing for children, etc., have come in large quantities. One offering takes the form of 16,000 pounds of suger from America. It must be remembered that the Pope expressed a wish to receive articles in kind that would enable him to give large alms and meet the various needs of the Church and missionary work all over the world. The offerings of babies' and children's belongings are to be distributed among lying-in hospitals, creches and orphans throughout Catholic Christendom; other presents, such as those of sacred vessels, will be given to churches in need of plate for their altars. Of these, thousands of gold chalices were sent to Leo XIII. from Vienna alone. The list of presents of gems, etc., which have come in profusion from heathen countries, as also from those within the pale of the Church, makes the pages of the catalogue glow as a chapter from the "Arabian Nights."

Death of Prof. Dickson.

An Edinburgh cable says: Very deep regret has been caused in Edinburgh by the terribly sudden death of Dr. Dickson, the well-known Professor of Botany, who died on Friday afternoon while engaged in "curling" on the ice at Hartree, his place in Peeblesshire. Prof. Dickson, who was only 52, has held the chair of botany at Edinburgh for nearly nine years, and he was also the Regius Keeper of the beautiful Botanical Gardens, which are one of the great sights of the city. He had attained to a first place among the practical botanists of the age, and few scientific men who are engaged in active and public work have been so universally popular. He was a most thorough worker, and his accomplishments were not confined to his own particular line, for he was an excellent draughtsman and a most skilful musician.

A private pet-cat show will be given shortly at New York for the benefit of charity.

TORN BY FIERCE MASTIFFS.

Their Owner, His Wife and a Child the Victims of the Savage Beasts.

A Camden despatch says: Two huge mastiffs, owned by Lawyer Thomas H. French, Col. Charles S. Garrison's partner, nearly killed three persons Sunday afternoon. Mr. French lives at 47 York street. Between 4 and 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon Jennie Young, the 8-year-old child of a neighbor, was playing in the kitchen with the dogs, as she had often done before. Suddenly Mrs. French, who was in the sitting-room, heard piercing screams from the child. There was no servant in the house, and Mrs. French ran quickly to the kitchen. Little Jennie had been knocked to the floor and the dogs had attacked her ferociously. Mrs. French endeavored to drive them off, but for the first time in the two years Mr. French has owned them they refused to obey her and instead sprung at her throat and bit viciously at her face. She was quickly knocked down, and both animals attacked her afresh. Her screams brought Mr. French downstairs, and he made for the dogs. No sooner did they see him than they sprang upon him, and despite all his efforts the fierce beasts knocked him down close behind his now unconscious wife and attacked him ferociously. He finally struggled to his feet, seized a poker and drove the beasts out of the kitchen and locked the door. Then he fell fainting to the floor covered with blood and his clothing torn in a dozen places. Drs. Godfrey, Pain and Walsh were summoned. The child was badly bitten about the throat, face and arms, and was one mass of torn flesh and blood from her shoulders up. Mrs. French's face was terribly lacerated, her right arm torn and one ear bitten half off. Mr. French was terribly cut and torn; part of his nose was gone, and it will be necessary to graft skin from his arm to preserve it. His face and neck were bodly torn and cut by the fangs and claws of the brutes, and he is suffering very much from the shock. Mrs. French is prostrated, and the physicians fear serious results in her case. The child has many spasms, and there are grave fears for her. The mastiffs have been in Mr. French's possession for two years and never before exhibited any tendency to harm any one. He thinks they must have frightened the child, who, becoming alarmed, caused them to lose their heads. He ordered them shot at once.

WHAT A FALL.

An English Scapegrace Comes to America to Swindle a Domestic Servant Out of $10.

A New York despatch says: A young Englishman, who is at present held in $500 bail on a charge of defrauding a servant of $10 and forging a cheque for $18 on a man named A. C. Couch, is—if his own account be true—a member of the highest circles of British aristocrocy. His name is Wm. J. Ritchie, and he represents himself as the son of the well-known member of Parliament of that name. He says that he was an officer in the First Life Guards, with which he served in Egypt, and bears numerous scars of the wounds he received in the Soudan campaign. According to his own account he quarrelled with his captain, the present Colonel Lockhart, and struck him in a discussion about a scandal connected with the name of Lady Lawrence. For this offence he was court-martialed and fled to this country to avoid the disgrace. He claims to have lost $125,000 in speculations which he was led into by the man Couch, whose name he forged, but says he will make it all right when his monthly allowance of $125 comes in February.

Will 1888 Be a Year of War?

The present year is the fifth year of modern times in which the aggregate of the figures is twenty-five, and there will be but five more years in which such a combination is possible prior to the year 2599. Probably but few have ever read of the old prophecy, which runs as follows:

In every future year of our Lord,
When the sum of the figures is twenty-five,
Some warlike kingdom will draw the sword,
But peaceful nations in peace shall thrive.

Students of modern history will readily recall how faithfully this prophecy has been fulfilled in the four previous years to which it applied.

In 1699 Russia, Denmark and Poland formed the coalition against Sweden which inaugurated the great war that ended in the disastrous defeat of Charles XII. at Pultowa.

The year 1789 will ever be memorable on account of the breaking out of the French Revolution.

1798 witnessed the campaign of Bonaparte in Egypt and the formation of the second European coalition against France.

In 1879 war broke out between England and Afghanistan, followed by the invasion of the latter country by British troops.

In what manner the prediction is to be verified in 1888 remains yet to be seen, but the present condition of Europe seems to promise an abundant fulfilment of the prophecy.

Latest Paris Fashion Notes.

A Paris cablegram says: Colored waistcoats are much worn at present by the "Copurchics." I saw one at one of the fashionable Boulevard tailors' a day or two ago. It was composed of alternate squares of red and blue plush. It was destined to be worn with pearl-gray trousers, a black cutaway and a box coat.

Long boas are at present all the vogue for adies, and are being made in every kind of fur, from beaver to rabbit, and of all kinds of feathers. Beaver is the favorite fur this winter.

What He Thought.

Fred—I am surprised at Brown's slanders, for I supposed he thought everything of me.

Ned—So he does—everything that's bad. —Tid-Bits.

The Liverpool Post is informed on the very highest authority that the Great Eastern has been purchased by a Liverpool firm of metal merchants, and that it is their intention to break her up in the course of the next few months and sell her as old metal. This magnificent vessel, whose gross registered tonnage is 18,915 tons, whose length is 692 feet, breadth 83 feet, and depth 60 feet, has been sold at the price of £16,100, or very little more than one-fourth of the sum it cost to launch her.

HYPNOTIC TEST.

Wonderful Experiments of a Parisian Doctor on His Subject.

The amphitheatre of the Charite Hospital in Paris was crowded the other day with persons who had been invited to witness the experiments of hypnotism made by Dr. Luys, member of the Academy of Medicine. Before introducing Mlle. Esther, his subject, the doctor showed his auditors photographs illustrating the effects produced on her in his laboratory. Mlle. Esther was then brought forward. By the means of magnetic passes the doctor throws her from a state of lethargy into a cataleptic condition, and then into a state of lucid somnambulism. Dr. Luys placed a tube containing hashish on her neck, and she seemed instantly to feel the effect of the narcotic preparation. She assumed a natural air and soon went straight toward Dr. Reclus, who was present, and proposed to perform the "Mascotte" with him. The doctor was rather annoyed by the preference shown him by Mlle. Esther, so Dr. Luys diverted her attention from him to Dr. Segond, who consented to play the part of Pippo, while Mlle. Esther took the part of the Mascotte. He sat down beside her, whereupon she promptly kissed him. "Now sing," said Dr. Luys, holding the tube to her neck, and she began at once, stopping short when the tube was withdrawn.

Dr. Luys then begged Dr. Reclus to place himself behind the young woman, and to put the tube on her neck and then gradually take it away. Mlle. Esther began again to sing; but in proportion as the tube was taken further and further from her her voice became fainter and fainter, till it died away entirely. She then fell, in a cataleptic condition, into the arms of the hospital assistants, who were behind her. Dr. Luys made other experiments upon Mlle. Esther. By looking at her he made her follow with her eyes an imaginary bird in the air, and at last she thought she had caught it in her hands. Then, by making her look down, the doctor frightened her by making her imagine there was a serpent at her feet. The most remarkable display was when Dr. Luys placed a tube containing 10 grammes of essence of thyme on Mlle. Esther's neck. In a few moments her face became purple, her arms and hands stiff, and the neck swelled out in a most extraordinary manner. From 31 centimetres it grew by the contraction on the muscles to 35. The suffering seemed to be intense, and when the tube was taken away the patient was two minutes at least before returning to a state of lethargy.—London Standard.

How the Western Editor Got Married.

Eagle Gulch Warwhoop: The good book has said that it is not well for man to be alone. It has been saying so for about 2,000 years, more or less, but it was only yesterday we conceded that such indeed was the case, and proceeded to get us a wife. Our readers are no doubt well acquainted with the Widow Plodger, who keeps the boarding-house just around the corner from this office—good clean bed and a square meal for 50 cents. There in that mansion it was that the shot from Cupid's bow was shot clean through our two tender hearts.

Yes, there we saw the Widow Plodger, and it was there we wooed and won and wedded her. It was a moonlight night; she approached us with a board-bill in her hand, but, all undaunted, we fell at her feet and poured forth the tale of affection that filled our bosom. Need we say that the moon looked down with watery eyes through the dark, swaying boughs of the oak? Need we say that the fair head nestled upon our editorial shoulders, and she said she would be ours? No; but such was the case, and to-night we are a married man.

The ceremony! Who can tell about it? There was the parson—we promised him $2; there was the bride, all white flubduds and veils and flowers and ribbons and smiles, and there was we—the whole is summed up in the confession that we hereby breathe forth to the brethren of the press—we are no longer we—we are us.

Cossacks Routed by Women.

A squadron of Cossacks were quartered at Tatio, near Yelisavetpol (Gendje), in Armenia, Russia. They said they had come to draft the whole male population of the village and make them soldiers. That was too much for the patience of the females to stand. They took up sticks, brooms, hoes, hatchets, pokers, anything they could lay hands on, and marched against these wholesale manufacturers of grass-widowhood. The Cossacks, declining to fight the women, were put to flight. The women, encouraged by their success, proceeded to lay siege to the Government building, and the Mayor was not able to appease their wrath. He telegraphed to the Governer, who despatched a few more quadrons of horse to restore peace. During the night, however, the excitement of the women had cooled down and there was no more fight in them.

He Was Put Down.

"I'm no vagrant!" he exclaimed, as he was being registered at police headquarters. "Do you know what a vagrant is?" asked the sergeant. "I—I guess so." "It is a gentleman out of work." "O-o-h! That's it! Then put me down. I thought you took me for a gentleman who didn't want to work." —Detroit Free Press.

Sufficient.

First Citizen—Do you know anything about Bullwinkle, the butcher, Brown, if he is a reliable man or not?

Second Citizen—Well, I say this much for Bullwinkle. I've bought sausages of him for over five years.—Atlanta Constitution.

The statement of the public debt of the Dominion on December 31st shows total liabilities of $274,710,702, with alleged assets of $47,290,792, leaving a total net debt of $227,419,910.

Barrels are made in Jersey for the use of the Channel Islands farmers which will fold up when empty, and thus, having been sent to market, can be packed into a small space on the return. The staves are fixed upon the hoops so that the heads being removed, they may be rolled up. They are made perfect cylinders, and therefore occupy less space for the same capacity than ordinary barrels.

—We have always pitied the calendar. It could never get a day off.

After the Day—Night.

Love knocked early at my door,—
  In the morn he came to find me,—
Saying, "Let me cross thy floor,
  And thy chains shall ever bind me."

But I turned away my heart,
  Who was Love that he should find me?—
Saying, "Well, thou play'st thy part,
  But perchance thy chain would bind me."

Noontide passed. He sought my door,
  "If thou wilt thou still may'st bind me,
And I will yet cross thy floor;
  Here again you never find me."

But I madly chose my part;
  What cared I to stay and find him?
Love should never win my heart;
  Wherefore should I pause to bind him?

Night is here, and at my door
  Vainly now I seek to find him;
Could he only cross my floor,
  I would give all else to bind him.

But again without my door
  I shall never waiting find him;
He will never cross my floor—
  No one thrice has power to bind him.

HER TERRIBLE PREDICAMENT.

Why a Young Lady Made Three Round Trips in the Street Car.

I heard a yarn yesterday that may or may not be true. If not, no harm in its relation; if it be true, however, will the heroine of my tale please forgive me? I do not know her name or I would apologize in advance. A sprightly lass, 18 perhaps, stood on the corner of Fifth and Wabash waiting for a University avenue car. Her face wore a pained expression, and there was an uncertainty, a sort of hesitancy in her movements as she advanced to the car that stopped at her hail. As she lifted her skirt and stepped on the rear platform, the cause of her uneasiness became apparent to a group of interested onlookers. About her ankle, almost hiding her boot, a silken stocking hung, and to it was attached a fragment of stocking support. She made her way to a seat, gracefully hoisted the foot so she could sit upon it, and waited patiently until the car should be emptied so that she could arrange her hosiery. But the passengers were obdurate and refused to leave the car. The end of the line was reached, but before the car was emptied two gentlemen entered to make the down trip. The lady paid her fare again and resigned herself to her fate. Believe it or not as you please, but my informant says that she made three round trips before the desired opportunity came, and then she was so lame from sitting in such a posture for so long a time that she had to ride a dozen blocks beyond her destination before she got the "sleep" out of her foot. The poor girl told her sister, and she told my sister, and my sister told me. Isn't that straight enough to be correct information? —St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

A Barbaric Amusement.

Annie Wakeham, writing to the Philadelphia Record from London, Eng., about prize-fighter Sullivan, adds:

Pugilism in the prize-ring is illegal in England, and has been for many years, hence the brutes have to go on the continent to train for their contests. Spanish bull-fights and prize-fights are regarded by refined people as barbaric amusements. Yet this creature Sullivan is feted as though worthy some great honor. His laurels are blood and bruises. A noble showing, is it not? War is bad enough in all conscience; at least, though, it is in a measure scientific. Norman Proctor, an ex-prize-fighter here in London, has suggested that when nations should quarrel the better way than to train armies to kill would be send two prize-fighters, one from each country, to fight it out, the victorious one to settle the issue. At least this method would rid the earth of these disgusting objects one at a time.

I appeal to the women of America to put down such degrading shows as Sullivan and his tribe are reviving this season. How can it be done? Well, let every woman refuse to speak to every man of her acquaintance who indorses these revolting "sports" or attends their public exhibition. Let her brand as a "coward" a man who presumes to call such sports courageous. Soon the prize-fighter would find his occupation gone. Let such men as Sullivan be hissed off the public streets and treated as outlaws, wild beasts or highway footpads. And as for the women of England, let them implore their gracious Queen to administer a public reprimand to her son, who has so far forgotten his princely training as to speak to professional prize-fighters save in terms of withering scorn. I am sure she is ashamed of her eldest son in this last exploit. Indeed, I almost hope she does not know of it.

'Lion?" I insult the proud beast of the jungle and desert when I call John L. Sullivan "London's Latest Lion."

An Adventure With Panthers.

It is an old saying, "what strange things a person sees when he hasn't got a gun," says the Columbian. This was exactly what Constable Carty said the day before yesterday when he met a couple of panthers. Mr. Carty was driving along the road leading from Clover Valley in the Serpentine Flats, and while passing through some timber was surprised to see two large beasts walk quietly out of the bushes and stop on the middle of the path. The panthers, for such they turned out to be, were only twenty paces ahead of the horse, and as the constable did not have a gun, he was puzzled for a moment as to the best course to adopt towards them. After a moment's thought he decided to keep right ahead, and if the panthers molested him in any way he would arrest them for obstructing the highway. The scheme proved successful, and although the beasts cast a longing eye at the nice fat horse, they saw it would be useless to make any attempt to devour it while the constable was on the ground. The panthers were both very large and appeared to be in good condition; they have been seen in the neighborhood several times of late and it is probable they will soon fall victims to their own temerity.

The Poor Man's Grievance.

Beggar—Oh, yes, the charitable association gave me a present for Christmas.

Charitable young lady—But you don't appear to be very grateful for it.

"To tell the truth, miss, I ain't very grateful. When I think of the fact that my legs are both cut off at the knees and then think of the present I got, I can't rake up much gratitude."

"What was your present?"

"A pair of roller skates."—Nebraska State Journal.

PEOPLES ON THE GOLD COAST.

Their Savagery Equals That of Any Known Community—Terrible Punishment.

Although a great portion of the Tshi-speaking peoples have for two centuries been under our rule we know comparatively little about them—a fact which is, no doubt, attributable to the deadly climate and impenetrable forests in which they live. Maj. Ellis tells us much concerning these peoples which will be found interesting; but he has gone so completely into the grosser customs of native life that his book is more suited to the anthropologist than the general reader. The low condition which they occupy in the intellectual scale is, we are told, probably owing to the enervating influences of the climate, which renders any great amount of mental labor out of the question, and to the readiness with which the necessaries of life can be produced. That the climate is unhealthy even to them there can be no doubt, as it is the cause of diseases unknown elsewhere.

Their religion is not allied with any moral ideas, sin being limited to insults offered to or neglect of the gods; murder, theft, etc., are merely offenses against the person, and in which the gods take no interest. The deities may be divided into four classes, viz.: 1. General, those worshipped by a whole tribe or several tribes. 2. Local, those worshipped by the inhabitants of certain towns or districts. 3. Family. 4. The tutelary deities of individuals. The priesthood forms a large and powerful class, without whose aid nobody can hold any intercourse with deities of the first, second or third class, large sums being frequently paid for their services; they have to take care, however, to make their communications ambiguous, as in case of their predictions being falsified they are not infrequently put to death.

In chapter 11 it is stated that the practices of sacrificing human beings at funerals does not arise from the bloodthirstiness of the people, but rather from affection for the dead. This may be true, but the frightful cruelty shown in their executions seem to contradict this theory. We quote the following as an example:

"On June 5th a murderer, with his hands bound behind him, a knife through his cheeks and two forks piercing his back, was dragged past our rooms. Commencing at midday, the punishment increased in intensity till 8 o'clock, when the poor wretch was gashed all over, his arms cut off, and himself compelled to dance for the amusement of the king before being taken to the place of execution. If he could not or would not dance lighted torches were applied to his wounds. To escape this excessive torture he made the greatest efforts to move, until the drum was beaten and the head cut off."

Strange to say, in spite of the frightful punishment, murder is more frequent in Ashanti than in the British protectorate.

The ceremonies at birth, marriage and death are, we think, rather too fully gone into. The criminal laws appear to be extremely severe, and the following ridiculously trivial offences are punishable by death: Whistling in Coomassie, suffering an egg to be broken in the town, looking at the king's wives, or not hiding when the king's eunuchs call to announce their approach, and picking up gold that has been dropped in the market place. From this it will be seen that every-day life in Coomassie must have its drawbacks.—London Light.

Winter Styles in Suicide.

"The winter styles of suicide for 1888," said Coroner Hertz, "will differ but little from that of last year. Hempen ties still continue in favor for neckwear, and throats will be cut a trifle deeper as spring approaches. This latter fashion, however, is far from popular, and is affected only by the outre, such persons, for instance, as try to make a sensation by the use of 'rough on rats.' These things, I need scarcely say, are not counted good form—in fact, are vulgar. The most fashionable modes are those of legitimate poisoning and by shooting. If you want to be in style, dear boy, just stick to those two fashions. They are affected by the elite, and you cannot go wrong in following them. There is nothing like a good reliable revolver for this sort of thing. By referring to my annual report, just handed in, you will find that exactly 33 per cent. of the suicides for the fiscal year adopted this mode of departing for the other shore. True, an equal number tried the poison route, but there are poisons and poisons. There are poisons that allow a man to slip quietly out in a gentlemanly way that excites the admiration of every man on the jury, and again there are others which cause a man to shuffle off his coil in a way that is decidedly bazarre, not to say fussy. I am sorry to see the growing tendency to use 'rough on rats' and paris green. These can never find devotees in the best circles, and you can safely set down those addicted to them as decidedly 'loud.' If you go in for poisons, try laudanum, or morphine, or pure strychnine."—Chicago Times.

A Pointed Rebuke.

"Georgey, behave yourself!" said the little girl, severely, to her younger brother who was throwing snowballs at people on the street, yelling like a young Indian, squaring off at imaginary foes, and otherwise conducting himself in a boisterous manner; "Behave yourself! Folks will think you're a member of the Board of Trade!"—Chicago Tribune.

Sleeping Car Gymnastics.

The Minnesota Railroad Commissioners have not yet got to that part of the sleeping car trouble by which a man travelling rents a lower berth only to be expected to give it up to a lady. Gander-legged gentlemen who have delicacy about displaying their limbs in mounting to the upper perch are still hoping for some sweeping reform.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Enterprise on the Prairies.

In the west they don't think that a town is enjoying much of a real estate boom unless people are wandering around with lanterns at night ready to close desirable bargains.—New York Sun.

An Official View.

Reporter—How many criminal cases have you for the next assizes?

Deputy Sheriff—None.

Reporter—That's good.

Deputy Sheriff—Well, not so very good.

ODD SIGHTS IN JAPAN.

What an American Traveller Saw That He Considered Curious.

A gentleman, who formerly resided in Washington, but who now lives in Japan, has recently written a letter giving some descriptions of odd sights to an American visitor. He says: "If you could go out with me in the morning I think the first thing to startle you would be the newsboy. The newsboy here is usually an old man. He trots around with wares that look as if he had torn the wrappers from a lot of tea chests. He rings a little bronze bell as he goes. The bell would be thought an art treasure at home, for it is chased, and has undoubtedly done service in some temple before now. Then the postman would surprise you, for you would hardly believe that the free 'delivery system' exists here, not as we have it at home, where it is confined to the large cities, but going to every little hamlet and isolated farm-house. Perhaps we would see a carpenter holding his work with his toes and drawing his plane and saw toward him. We would certainly see the 'false-hair reviver,' for our Japanese sisters are like the rest of the world, bound to be in fashion, and the elaborate style of coiffure compels them to supplement the natural growth. When the switch becomes rusty it is handed out to a peripatetic hair-dresser, who pushes a cart containing a small furnace, a covered kettle, and several bottles of dyes, and on the front of which, from a small gallows frame, hangs a switch as a sign of his trade. He boils the switch in his dye-kettle—goodness knows how many others have passed through it!—and returns it as good as new. Just now the children are playing with dolls, and every little girl who does not have a live baby tied to her back will have a toy one. I've often seen a mother carrying her own child pick-a-back and to the little one's back would be tied a dolly. The dolls are wonderfully cheap and, generally speaking, good ones. The Japanese boys spin tops, but, of course, differently from our American boys, for everything is done differently here. They usually put a bit of matting over a tub so as to form a shallow basin; then one little chap throws his top spinning into the centre. Immediately another sets his on, and whichever 'knocks the other out' wins, the successful spinner pocketing both. Mild gambling? Yes; but they always gamble here when they have anything with which to gamble. Travelling kitchens are plentiful, but not in the morning or during the day, when the cook shops are open. After dark you would see plenty of them, and I suppose they are going all night, for I have never been out too late for them. The linrickishas are legion, and one is importuned by them at every turn. The children all seem to live in the street, and the passers give way to them always. I have seen porters dragging heavily loaded trucks swing out of the way to avoid a little tot when it cost them no small effort to do so."—New York Times.

HE GOT HIS FEE.

How a Syracuse Bridegroom was Forced to Settle with the Sexton.

A novelty in law suits has been adjudicated in Syracuse as a sequel to a fashionable wedding. The parties to the suit were a church sexton and a physician who was a bridegroom not a great while ago. On the 23rd of September, Dr. Amos W. Jennings was married by Rev. Dr. George B. Spalding in the First Presbyterian Church and the elegant and stately edifice was elaborately decorated for the occasion with flowers. In order that the ceremony might pass off smoothly and impressively, there were two rehearsals before the actual ceremony. The groom and bride-elect, and bridesmaids, the groom's best men and the ushers all turned out to these full dress evening rehearsals for which the great church was heated and lighted by Sexton Henry A. Tompkins. The wedding ceremony was witnessed by a large throng, and the affair was a fashionable success. Sexton Tompkins himself thought it was a pretty nice wedding, and worth a fat fee. He waited for his fee for a month, and then began dunning the bridegroom. The second letter brought the reply that Dr. Jennings would pay when he "got good and ready." The sexton then referred the matter to a lawyer, and a lawyer to a justice of the peace. There was no defence, and the sexton got judgment for $40.

A Terrible Strain.

Omaha employer (anxiously)—Does Mr. De Goode drink?

Confidential clerk—Not a drop.

"He has been two hours late for three mornings and he looks as if he had been on a terrible spree."

"It's all right. On Christmas he gave his boy a drum."—Omaha World.

"THE EUROPEAN SITUATION."

Says France unto Bismarck
  "Morbleu!" and sacre!
For Alsace and Lorraine I'll Get even—some day!"
To Russia says Austria:
  "Hands off, and beware!
There's death on your borders.
  There's wrath in the air!"
Says the Czar with a bluster
  Of trumpet and lance:
"My Cossacks shall pipe and Young Ferdinand dance!"
Bulgaria's princeling,
  As still as you please,
Is courting the shade of Umbrageous trees.
And Bismarck, the crafty,
  Phlegmatic in mood,
As mum as an oyster,
  Keeps on sawing wood.

Recent experiments with thirty-six-pounder quick-firing guns showed that twenty-two rounds could be fired in two minutes and a half. Seventy pounders are now being made.

Dunley (at the supper table)—"Yes, I have spent most of the day at the dentist's." Mrs. Hendricks (the landlady)—"Are you having your teeth filled, Mr. Dumley?" Dumley (struggling with a steak)—"Yes, ma'am; filled and sharpened."—New York Sun.

A confectioner of Newport, England, having missed from the bakehouse time after time dainty morsels, set a watch, and a form resembling that of a boy was seen stealthily creeping along the roof of the adjoining bakehouse. No attention was paid to cries to come down, and a gun was fired. The aim was good and a dead monkey rolled from the roof into the road.

AN ENGLISHMAN INSULTED!

The Difficulty of Rooting Up Prejudices Learned at the Mother's Knee.

One bright June morning, some years ago, a party of travelling men were gazing out upon one of the most charming landscapes in the Susquehanna valley.

In the party was an English gentleman, whose prejudices were stirred by the laudatory tone of the conversation. He grew restless and exclaimed:

"This may seem to you rawther a pretty scene, but if you want to see really beautiful scenery you must go to England, where the air is softer, the grass greener and the flowers more fragrant than here."

As he finished, one of the party, whose ancestors were of good old revolutionary Yankee stock, turned to him, and, with more candor than politeness, said:

"My friend, in childhood, at my mother's knee, I was taught three things: First, to revere the great Creator; second, to love the stars and stripes; and third, to hate a Britisher. This is one of the many occasions when I fully realize the beneficial influences of early training."

Among the obstacles that obstruct a man's upward progress in this world are the prejudices which, planted in the character-forming period of early youth, he finds have become firmly fixed in his maturer nature.

It is difficult to root them out. Men may battle as they will; they can seldom entirely overcome their early impressions.

The progressive man discovers that he must leave his prejudices behind, if he would "keep step" in the ranks.

The barriers in the way of the truth-seeker have been broken.

Do you doubt it? Wend your way to the sanctuary some Sabbath morning, and behold! Universal and Methodist clergymen occupying the same pulpit!

Do you doubt it? See, as may now frequently be seen, physicians of different schools joining in consultation over their patients. See eminent members of the medical profession, like Dr. Rabson, of London, and Dr. Gunn, of the medical college, of New York, publicly recommending a proprietary medicine, like Warner's safe cure, the only sure specific for kidney disorders and the many diseases caused by such disorders, and their views attested by hundreds of regular practitioners of various schools.

Note the fact, too, that the leading clergymen, like Rev Dr. Rankin, ex-Chaplain of the U.S. Senate, and Rev. Dr. Kendrick, of the Rochester University, one of the international revisers of the New Testament, and thousands less well known, publicly recommend this remedy, because it not only cures kidney diseases, but the many common-named diseases caused directly by them.

When medical men and ministers unite in such a course, who can doubt that intolerance has ceased to rule in the learned professions at least?

She Had Heard of It.

First Omaha Lady—Have you seen the new crematory?

Second Omaha Lady—No, I haven't, but I hear they make lovely butter there.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

"Just Hear that Child Scream!"

said Mrs. Smith to her sister, Mrs. Davis, as the sound of a child's shrieks came across the garden from a neighbor's house. "What kind of a woman have you for a neighbor? Does she abuse her children?" "No, indeed," replied Mrs. Davis. "She is one of the most tender mothers in existence. But you see, she believes in the old-fashioned styles of doctoring. When a child needs physic, she fills a spoon with some nauseous dose, lays the little victim flat on her lap, holds his nose till he is forced to open his mouth for breath, when down goes the dreadful mess. Then come the yells." "No wonder," said Mrs. Smith, "Why doesn't she use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets? They are effective without being harsh, and are as easy to take as sugar plums. I always give them to my children." "And so do I," said Mrs. Davis.

Four Satisfy Them.

The sacred writings of the Chinese are called "Five Kings." A work of only four kings is sacred enough for a great many people in this country—though a man often wishes he had five kings when the other fellow holds four aces.—Norristown Herald.

The Little Seed.

A little seed lay in the carter's path
A little shoot bowed in the strong wind's wrath.
A little shrub grew, by its roots held fast.
Then a stout tree braved all the winter's blast.

A little cough started—twas only light
A little chill shivered the hours of night.
A little pain came and began to grow,
Then consumption laid all his brave strength low.

Be wise in time. Check the little cough, cure the little chill, dispel the little pain, ere the little ailment becomes the strong, unconquerable giant of disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, taken in time, is a remedy for these ills.

An English Sensation.

Cardinal Manning has astonished his friends by announcing himself a convert to the teachings of Anarchy. "Every man," he says, "has a right to life and a right to the food necessary to sustain life. Necessity has no law and a starving man has a natural right to his neighbor's bread."

A Startling Discovery.

A startling and important discovery was made when, after long and patient experiments, the combination of Nerviline was reached. A grand victory, indeed, for the suffering have an ever-ready, prompt, efficient and cheap remedy at hand. Do you know that for 10 cents you can buy a trial bottle of Polson's Nerviline and test its great power over pain of every description? Polson's Nerviline cures chills, pain in the stomach, side and back, rheumatism—in fact, all pain. Sold by druggists and country dealers.

Strong Evidence.

A Baltimore bookkeeper has committed suicide and left his accounts all straight. It is regarded as certain that he was insane.—Manchester Union.

The cleansing, antiseptic and healing qualities of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are unequalled.

Highly Recommended.

"How do you like your new typewriter?" inquired the agent.

"It's immense!" was the enthusiastic response. "I wonder how I ever got along without it?"

"Well, would you mind giving me a little testimonial to that effect?"

"Certainly not; do it gladly."

So he rolled up his sleeves and in an incredibly short time pounded out this:

"afted Using thee automatig Back-actionn atype writ,er for thre emonth$ an d Over, I unhesitattinggly pronounce it prono nce it to be al ad even more than the Manufacturs claim? for it. During the time been in our possessio n e. i. th ree monthz! id has more th an paid paid for it$elf in the Saveing oF time an d labrr"?

john ¶ Smith.

"There you are, sir"

"Thanks," said the agent, dubiously.

—The Mormon question—Will you be my second?

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-Joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

☞ Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 3 88

Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JAN. 19, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Will our esteemed Township Fathers pardon us if we assure them that two of their most faithful officers are not sufficiently remunerated for their services? In order to render him an independent as well as an efficient officer, would it not be wise to pay the Assessor a trifle more for his services? It would be money judiciously spent. Then there is the Treasurer—than whom there is no more careful nor efficient officer in the Province—are not the long and faithful services of this gentleman worthy of at least equal remuneration to that received by neighboring Township Treasurers? We certainly think they are. But some one might say, "Oh, I'll take the office for the same money?" Indeed; so would many others equally inexperienced and incapable. But it is right and proper to pay good officers well for their work, and what Township has better officers than Artemesia.

And now the Agricultural Editor is informed by his farmer friends that the shed accommodation is still inadequate. Dear brethren of the plow and self-binder, have patience and the business men of this town will provide ye with sheds and to spare. The busy hum of our manufacturing industries and the steady increase of business in all departments renders it somewhat difficult to keep pace in the matter of sheds; but our enterprising townsmen will do it, never fear. A little time, a little patience are all that is required. The Agricultural Editor will look after all your interests with parental solicitude.

People often ask the question, "What ought a Christian to do, or what should he not do?" Well, we can tell a few things he ought not to do: (1) He should not put the biggest apples on top of the bag or barrel, for that is deceitful. (2) He should not sell dozy, rotten wood, neatly mixed up with the genuine article, and say it is all good, for that would be a lie. (3) He should not make great big apertures in piling wood—"expanding" two cords into three, as it were—for that would be cheating, and a cheat can never hope to enter the pearly gates. (5) He should not sell you five-sixths of a yard of cloth and call it "full thirty-six inches," for that would be a measly falsehood. (5) He should not print a customer 400 bills and say there was 500 in the pile, for that would be just 100 bills short of the truth. (6) He should not accept an invitation to dine out with a neighbor, and then, because of some imaginary grievance, pretend he was sick, and make this an excuse for not going, for that would be what society calls a "polite fiction." (7) He should not invade his neighbors woodyard in the silent watches of the night and "borrow" a few sticks, for he has no guarantee that he will get off as easily as the "thief on the cross." And so forth, et cetra. More anon perhaps!

Markdale as a town would remind one of a boy who had got inside his father's pantaloons and coat. Draw your own inference, gentle reader.

Rev. Mr. Shilton preached a sermon in the Methodist Church last Sunday Morning of a very lofty and inspiring character, and one likely to create a lasting impression for good. It may be said without the slightest degree of flattery that Mr. Shilton is one of the most logical and original speakers in the Guelph conference. His delivery, too, is of that earnest, sincere and kindly character, which secures the close attention of the most thoughtless; leading them, perhaps, to elevate their thoughts above the sordid things of life and directing the whole current of their existence into newer and better channels.

J. G. Owen has disappeared from the financial circles of Streetsville, and now a cry has gone abroad throughout that district, "What must we do in order to force the truant to disgorge?" And darkness reigns over the country round about, and thick darkness around the village of Streetsville. The howl of the angry multitude can be heard even afar off. Let them howl and weep and wail, for verily Owen hath gone to the land of cyclones, fevers, agues, defaulting bank clerks, anarchists, &c., and will nevermore return to thy fair shores, O, Canada! He was a stranger and they took him in: they were soft and pliable fools, and he took them in.

The Toronto World has done a great work in smashing the Commercial Union business into little bits. The World has a big head and a mighty smart intellect.

Will some well-informed Flesherton politician or legislator tell us what advantage the citizens of this place derive from the fact that this is a Police Village?

Always talk up your town. You know how easily reputations are injured by adverse and cruelly unjust criticisms, in so far as individual character is concerned. Well, a town or village is equally susceptible to injury under similar circumstances. Be loyal to your town or village every time. It pays.

When the Port Hope railway company (now in futuro) has laid the rails through Flesherton and across the C.P.R. track at the station; when the straight road has been completed; when the Valley Road has been put in first class shape; when County Buildings have been erected on one of our many handsome sites; then will we make extensive preparations for absorbing surrounding suburbs, and will batter our swords into pruning hooks and scissors and smoke the pipe of peace. Then will we give up yanking the "Archimedian Lever" and squander money in purchasing a Webb perfecting press for printing thereon the Daily and Weekly editions of THE ADVANCE.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

The annual meeting for the purpose of appointing officers and teachers for the Sunday School was held in the Methodist Church on Wednesday evening, Jan. 4th, when the following officers were elected:

Mr. J. B. Sloan, Superintendent,
" E. Paul, Assnt. "
" S. Clemes, Secretary.
" R. McLean Purdy, Treas.
" W. Sloan, Librarian.

Messrs. R. J. Hogg, H. Fenwick, Leonard Latimer, Jonathan Latimer and Misses E. Paul, A. Smith and Eliza Crow were appointed teachers.

The Methodist congregation is contemplating building a new parsonage next summer. This is a move in the right direction.

When Mr. Sloan was going up into his stable loft the other day, the ladder broke and Mr. Sloan fell hurting his back severely.

A fine, large evergreen that stood in the school ground was blown down by the storm on Friday last.

When the eyes become weak or the lids inflamed and sore, a disordered system or a scrofulous condition of the blood is indicated, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best remedy. It invigorates and vitalizes the blood and expels all humors.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Markdale has a Mechanics Institute, with a membership of nearly one hundred.

His Honor, Judge Macpherson, celebrated the anniversary of his 24th year as Judge last week.

An old Collingwood man, named Gilbert McCaffery, dropped dead on Thursday week. He was buried by the town.

An old man, unknown, was run over by a Northern passenger train, near Angus, and killed, on Friday week.

Five Mt. Forest hotel keepers appeared before the Police Magistrate last Friday to answer to a charge of violating the Scott Act.

The barn of Mr. R. Irvine, near Varney in the Township of Normanby, was destroyed by fire one night last week. Loss $900. Insurance $6.25.

Mr. Wm. Brown has received his appointment as Division Court Clerk of the new D.C. at Markdale. Mr. W. G. Pickell has been appointed Bailiff.

It is alleged that a petition will be got up and forwarded to the License Commissioner, praying that license may not be renewed to the City Hotel, Markdale, owing to its disorderly character.

Geo. Jones accidently stepped off the sidewalk in front of the Seldon House, Owen Sound, the other day, dislocating his ankle and breaking the small bone of his left leg. George will probably be laid up for a few weeks.

Owen Sound, Jan. 14.—A heavy wind and snowstorm prevailed here yesterday. About 1 p.m. a terrific gust swept through the town and blew out the temporary battened fixtures of boards from one of the third storey windows of Butchart's new block, corner of Poulett and Baker streets. Mrs. George Fleming, of Sydenham, with her little girl, passing up Baker street at the time, were both knocked down by the falling boards. The child was unnjured, but the mother received a severe cut on the side of her head and her arm badly bruised. It is a wonder she was not killed, but she appears to have received but a glancing blow.

Pat Hefferman, the renowned Scott Act constable of Bruce County, was serving some papers in Chesley on Monday when he was ordered to leave the village by a livery stable keeper named Henry. Pat paid no attention to the order but went on with his work. Henry followed him around for some time and finally drew a revolver and fired at Hefferman at close quarters, but missed him. The constable was unarmed, but being an active and courageous man, he instantly jumped on Henry and downed him. In a few seconds he had his man handcuffed and took him to Walkerton, where he was lodged in jail.

The Flesherton Advance is advocating incorporation, and among the reasons given for advocating such a scheme, the first is, "The precedent established by our sister village to the South, Dundalk, and the energetic move now being made by our ambitious neighbor to the North, Markdale." While as a further inducement it says, "That a suitable lock-up—not a big box—would be provided for the accommodation of offenders against the majesty of the law." This is really a great inducement to the leaders of public thought in that place. They will no doubt go in for incorporation at once, even if it is for the honor of building a penitentiary. Toby is already looking to a future sketch.—Dundalk Herald.

Ayer's Hair Vigor Improves the beauty of the hair and promotes its growth. It prevents the accumulation of dandruff, cleanses the scalp, and restores a natural color to grey hair. Have you received Ayer's Almanac for the new year?

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned in Flesherton, one spotted Heifer, on Monday-night last. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses.

Jan. 11th, 1888. PETER HOLMAN.

WANTED!

A Quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & Co.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For? Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all SKin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00	to $ 4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	74	to 0	78
Spring Wheat	0	74	0	78
Barley	0	55	0	72
Oats	0	40	0	40
Peas	0	57	0	57
Butter	0	17	0	17
Eggs, fresh	0	17	0	17
Potatoes bush	0	40	0	40
Pork	6	40	6	50
Hay, per ton	7	00	8	00
Hides	4	50	5	50
Wool		18		21
Sheepskins	0	50	1	00
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	7	0	8
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	25
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	50

W. BOOTH,
The Boss Barber,
FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton"

REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person; many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed; we start you. Everything new. No special abilities required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY -- OUR NEW BOOK

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 400 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton, Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

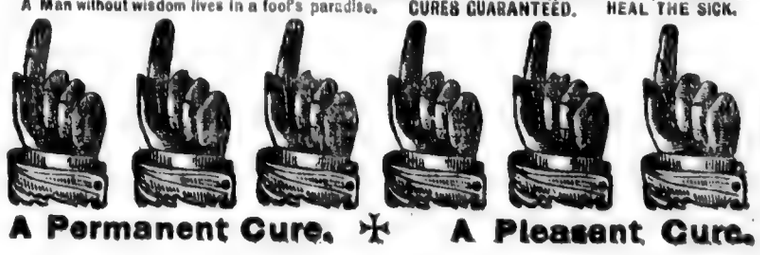
A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

A Consecration Hymn for the New Year.

BY REV. T. WATSON.

Dear Saviour reveal Thy great name unto me,
Accept a poor sinner that trusteth in Thee;
My hope is now fixed no more to remove,
Oh flood my whole life with Thy infinite love.

Henceforth for Thine honor my powers employ,
Thy Cross is my glory, Thy service my joy;
My time and my talents to Thee do I give,
My motto in life is "for Jesus to live."

Thy promise and presence shall banish my care,
And give me the strength each day's burden to bear,
Though lowly my lot I will never repine,
But "spend and be spent" in Thy service Divine.

Then seal me Thine own through each day of the year,
Through all its confusion my duty make clear,
Inspire by Thy Spirit and teach by Thy word,
And help me to tread in the steps of my Lord.

Flesherton, Jan. 9th, 1888.

Feversham.

From our own Correspondent.

The storms of the past week have made our usual lively town very quiet. Not many of the farmers putting in an appearance on account of the state of the roads which are badly drifted.

The L.O.D.L. of Osprey met at the village of Singhampton on Tuesday, 10th inst., and although the day was very stormy their was a good representation from the primary Lodges which compose the District.

Bro. James Stinson was re-elected W. Dis. Master.

Bro. C. E. Neil, Deputy Dis. Master.
" Joseph Stinson, Dis. Sec.
" A. McGirr. Dis. Treasurer.

The Lodge adjourned to meet at Maxwell on the 18th, to finish up the business of the year.

The annual meeting of the Osprey Agricultural Society met here on the 12th inst., when the Farmers turned out in mass there being about seventy-five voters present after the reading of the Auditors' Report by the Secretary. There was an exciting contest for President between Mr. W. Guy, S. Taylor and Mr. J. Stinson, which resulted in John Stinson, of Singhampton, being elected. Dr. Ottowell was elected 1st Vice-President, and Mr. Guy 2nd Vice-President. Afterward the usual number of Directors were elected and the meeting closed, nothing being done to mar the progress of the business.

Their Nichol Night Watch.

In the colored settlement of Timbuctoo, Mount Holly, N. J., an event occurred New Year's Eve that will long be remembered by the dusky worshippers in the little old meeting house there.

The occasion was the annual watch meeting service. It had long been the custom to hold service in the church on the last night of the year and welcome the advent of the new year with prayer and song. The church was crowded.

Owing to the absence of the regular preacher a stranger was invited to preside. He was a tall spare man, black as ebony, with gray eyebrows that hung like a dissipated whisker over his eyes. A Prince Albert coat reached down nearly to the tops of his shoes, and when he spoke the small children shivered at the deep tones of his voice.

At the appointed hour the service began with singing, after which the congregation listened to an exhortation that all admitted was the most powerful one ever heard within the walls of the church. Then the minister suddenly stopped. "Hadn't we better know how de time's agon'?" he said. "'Pears to me as if dar orter be a clock to run dis watch meetin' by."

"De church ain't got no clock," answered Elder Lewis Armstrong after a moment's pause. "but if you wants ter borrow my watch yer kin have it," at the same time holding up to the view of the audience a new nichel watch that Santa Claus had given him.

"Dat's all right, Brudder Armstrong" said the preacher, "yo' jess keep yer eye on de watch so we'll know how de time's a-goin'."

The meeting went on, and as often as the choir would become weary of singing the preacher would start in on a new sermon. He was inexhaustible. It seemed as if the meeting would never come to an end. At last even the preacher got weary.

"Elder Armstrong," he said with a slight shade of doubt in his voice, "please ter oblige de meetin' wid der time o' night. Hit seems like as if de new year orter be here by dis time."

At this Elder Armstrong again consulted his watch, "jess 'leven o'clock precisely" he said. "Don't yer worry about de time. Dis yer watch'll git you dar all right if you depends on it."

The doubters, silenced, listed to fresh exhortations which occupied nearly three quarters of an hour. At the expiration of that time the choir was asleep and the sitters on the back bouches were snoring loudly.

Then the preacher halted. As he did so the crowing of a number of neighboring roosters caught his ear.

"Elder Armstrong," he said, sternly, "what time is you now?"

"Ten minutes arter 'leven," responded the elder.

This rousen the ire of Elder Ben Deekin, who said, "Dat air watch ain't a-goin', dat's my opinion!"

Putting the timepiece to his ear, Elder Armstrong listened a moment. Doggone dese waterpower watches!" he said, "Hits stopped sure." In the silence of their deep indignation he tiptoed out.

As he opened the meeting-house door they saw that day was breaking. The elders watch had fooled them all, and the new year had stolen a march on them.

Elder Armstrong has lost the confidence of the community.

Artemesia Agricultural Society.

The annual meeting was held last Tuesday. The attendance was not as large as could be desired, but those present manifested a lively interest in the prosperity of the Society. The annual report showed that there had been raised from all sources, the plowing match included, the sum of $343.08. Of this amount $251.78 was expended leaving a balance to the credit of the Society of $91.30, of this $16.86 belong to the plowing match account.

The following were elected officers for the present year:

President, R. Olliver.

Vice President, Alex. Stewart.

Directors, John McArthur, James Brodie, Thos. A. Ferguson, Duncan Lamont, Geo. Stewart, John I. Graham, D. McMullen, Daniel McLean and David Harrow.

Auditors, Wm. Clayton and John Gordon.

At a meeting which followed, James Brodie was re-elected Sec. Treas.

Dundalk Jan. 11th, 1888.

The annual meeting of the County Grand Black Chapter of Grey was held here to-day, in the Orange Hall. There was a goodly number of the Sir Knights present. After the transaction of the usual routine business, the following were elected officers for 1888:

Sir Knight,	Jas. Brodie,	C. G. M.
"	Jas. Elliott,	D.C.G.M.
"	Thos. Hanbury,	C.G.Chap.
"	G. Hales,	D. C. G. Chap.
"	Thos. Elliott,	C.G. Reg.
"	Jas. Erskin,	D.C.G. Dr.
"	Jos. Gibson,	C.G. Treas.
"	Thos. Akitt,	D.C. G. Dr.
"	R. A. Parks,	C.G. Lect.
"	C. Little,	D.C.G. Dr.
"	J. H. Carson,	1st C.G. S.B.
"	A. R. Dodds,	2nd "
"	G. Rutherford,	1st C.G. C
"	T. McArthur,	2nC "
"	J. Little,	C.G. Pur.
"	W. Todd,	D.C.G. Dr.
"	T. Gilray,	1st C.G. Com.
"	W. Brady,	2nd "
"	W. S. Griffen,	3rd "
"	J. McFadden,	4th "
"	W. R. Madill,	5th "
"	W. Gott,	6th "
"	W. Rutledge,	7th "

The next meeting will be held in Markdale on the second Wednesday in January, 1889.

Reasoning from Observation.

"When will baby talk?" asked a three year old of his mother.

"When she gets her teeth," said his mother.

"All her teeth?"

"All."

"Well I don't think so," said the little fellow after reflection. "Grandfather has only one tooth and he talks you to death."

Economy is Wealth.

Little Ikey Schaumburg having fallen and raised a lump on his forehead, somebody suggested to his mother that she press a silver dollar on the bruised place, which would cause the swelling to subside.

"Rebecca," said Mose Schaumburg, "you don't need a whole tollar. Schoost press a haluf a tollar dot lump on. Vat for you vant to indulge in so many extravagance."

Wills.

Editor Advance: If a man wills his property, and does not leave any to his eldest son, can he (the son) claim anything? SAM.

[Ans.—He cannot claim anything legally.—Ed.]

Our Township Fathers.

Members of Council met before dinner in the Town Hall, subscribed their names to the declarations of office, and took their seats around the green table. The following gentlemen constitute the Council Board for 1887—there being no changes in the personnel since 1887:

Dr. Christoe, Reeve.
J. McArthur, Ward 1.
J. Boland, Ward 2.
W. Sharp, Ward 3.
H. Cairns, Ward 4.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Sharp, McArthur,—That Mr. McArthur and Mr. Boland be Deputy Reeves for 1888.—Carried.

Report of Arbitrators, re Graham vs. Township, read.

McArthur, Boland—That Ronald McPherson be refunded $1, being an overcharge in statute labor for 1887.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp—That the accounts of arbitrators in the matter in dispute between the Twp. of Artemesia and R. Graham, re Valley Road be paid.—Carried.

By-Laws 419, 420 and 421, were introduced, carried through the various stages and passed.

Accounts ordered to be paid:—John Rutherford, printing, $7.30; A. R. Fawcett, printing, &c. $4.15; John Noble fixing Scraper, $1; Ward No. 4, Election expenses, $7.50; C. Treadgold, hauling furnaces and brick to Town Hall, $1; R. J. Sproule, postage, $1.11.

Auditors,—Henry Meldrum and James Brodie.

Board of Health,—Dr. Christoe, W. J. Bellamy, Geo. Buskin, Wm. Ferguson, and Wm. Douglass.

Assessor,—Wm. McLaughry.

Sharp, Cairns—That this Council in view of the County Council at its first session in 1888 establishing High Schools in several parts of the County, do deem it expedient to ask, desire and request the County Council to set apart the Township of Artemesia as a High School District and for High School purposes.—Carried.

Council adjourned.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, Jan. 13th, 1888.

A conference between a number of republicans was held Wednesday night, at which there was a general discussion of the President's message and of the policy of the party. A member who was present expressed the opinion to your correspondent that they (except probably two or three members) would all act together and follow their leader. Both parties are feeling about them on all sides with great caution, and the individual members are keeping their own council more than usual. Generally the republicans have been able to find out about how Mr. Randall would stand, and could make their calculation accordingly. But he is entirely non-committal now and they can make nothing out of him. If the tariff debate is got up in the House early the democrats will get their opponents at a greater disadvantage than they would if they were given more time, and therefore it is the purpose of the ways and means committee to get ready for the fight as soon as possible. Their chances for getting a bill through depend much upon promptness.

The reason the resolution referring the President's message to the ways and means committee passed through the House yesterday without provoking the expected discussion of the message, was that the republicans were not prepared to enter into such a discussion.

It is believed by the leaders that they will be able before long to agree upon a line of policy which will enable them to meet the democrats with almost an unbroken front. As yet, however, they have accomplished no such agreement.

A bill introduced in the House this week by Representative Bliss, of New York, to dispose of the surplus in the Treasury of the United States and to prevent the accumulation thereof, provides that whenever and as often as there shall be an accumulation in the Treasury of the United States a sum exceeding the sum of $10,000,000 over the sum necessary to pay the regular and contingent expenses of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately report the fact and the exact amount of the surplus to the President. Within thirty days after the receipt of the report the President shall cause the Secretary of the Treasury to advertise in two or more newspapers in each city of the United States containing a population of over 200,000 inhabitants for the purchase of bonds of the United States to the full amount of the then existing and declared surplus; said advertisements to be made for the space of thirty days; said advertisements shall set forth the number and character of bonds required to be purchased, and shall invite sealed proposals for the purchase of said bonds under such ordinary regulations as the President may direct. Within ten days from the close of the thirty-day advertisement for proposals the Secretary of the Treasury and Controller of the Currency and Treasurer of the United States shall proceed to open and declare publicly all the bids received, with the names of the bidders, the amount of bonds offered and price, and they shall then adjudicate the purchase to the person or persons who have offered bonds at the lowest rate; provided, however, that the President of the United States shall have a right to reject proposals, if in his opinion their acceptance will be disadvantageous to the Government.

It is understood that there will be a strong effort made in the House to dispense with the rule which sets aside Friday evening sessions for private pension bills. At these night sessions but few members are present, and the bills passed do not by any means, receive the consideration of a quorum of the House. The result of this inconsiderate passage of bills by a few members was what led to the veto of so many private pension bills by President. There will probably be members who will attend these sessions and insist upon the presence of a quorum. In that event it would most likely be as it was in the latter part of last session, and no bills would be passed. It is thought by many to be better that these bills should take their chances with all the rest in the House.

The deficiency appropriation bill reported to the House Wednesday, is one made necessary by the failure of the deficiency bill of last year, making appropriations for deficiencies for 1887, and prior years. Owing to changed conditions the present bill omits or alters, in their terms, a number of items in last year's bill. The appropriation for printing silver certificates, and $1 and $2 notes is increased from $27,000 to $49,800, to meet the expenditure during the remainder of the fiscal year. The bill appropriates in all the sum of $2,952,303, while the last bill, as agreed upon in conference, carried a total appropriation of $4,275,023—L.

Notes.

Editor Advance: When a man holds a note against a person, is he bound to let the debtor know where it is? If not, how is the maker to know where to find the note? ENQUIRER.

[ANS.—The holder of the note should give the maker of it a week's notice, unless the latter made the note payable to the holder.—ED.]

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Luxuriant Hair

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, converted my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

Photos,
Photos,
Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

From Day to Day.

Only from day to day
We hold our way,
Uncertain ever,
Though hope and gay desire
Touch with their fire
Each fresh endeavor.

Only from day to day
We grope our way
Through hurrying hours;
But still our castles fair
Lift to the air
Their glistening towers.

And still from day to day
Along the way
Beckon us ever,
To follow, follow, follow,
O'er hill and hollow,
With fresh endeavor.

Sometimes, triumphant, gay,
The bugles play
And trumpets sound
From out those glistening towers,
And rainbow showers
Bedew the ground;

Then "sweet, oh, sweet the way,"
We smiling say,
And forward press
With swift, impatient feet
And hearts that beat
With eagerness

Yet still beyond, the gay
Sweet bugles play,
The trumpets blow,
How'e'er we flying haste,
Or lagging waste,
The hours that go;

Still far and far away,
Till comes the day
We gain that peak
In Darien; then, blind
No more, we find,
Perchance, what we do seek.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

CHAPTER I.

"What station was that, Shirley?"

"That was Amiens, dear; we are quite half way there now."

"Half way to Boulogne, perhaps, but our journey will not end there."

"I am afraid you are very tired, darling," the girl said, in a pitiful tender voice; and the invalid answered wearily—

"Yes, very tired—very, very tired."

They were the only occupants of a first-class railway compartment in the tidal train from Paris to Boulogne on a gray October afternoon in the year of grace 187—, and both were weary and sad. There was something besides fatigue and sadness on the elder woman's face, as she lay back half resting on her daughter's strong young arm, half upon the cushions which had been piled one upon another to give her support.

It was not pleasant weather for traveling; the sky was gray and forbidding, and a chill wind blew against the carriage windows, bringing with it occasionally a swift sharp shower of rain, which made Mrs. Ross shiver. Shirley drew her mother's wraps more closely around her, and pulled the blind over the window to keep out the draught, while the tender pity on her young face deepened as she watched the invalid resting with closed eyes and faintly drawn breath upon the cushions.

Such a lovely face it was! Years of sorrow and privation and months of suffering had not been able to rob it of its beauty; it was beautiful, and would be beautiful to the last. Delicately regular features, large lustrous eyes, and soft dark hair without a silver thread among its glossy braids, made up a tout ensemble of rare loveliness, even beside the fair young face near her. Mrs. Ross was still in the prime of her womanhood—she wanted yet three years of forty; but she was dying, and she knew it well—ay, and Shirley, although she tried to blind herself, knew it also—dying, and at a period when to many life is at its best and brightest, when the stormy troubles of youth are over, and calm settled sunshine has succeeded—at a time of life when many a happy mother sees her children growing up around her, able to appreciate her care and love, and to repay them by their own—when many years of health and happiness may be anticipated—dying, yes, and glad—oh, so glad to lay down the burden of life!

The gray October day wore on—the clock at the last station they had passed had pointed to the half hour after two. Mrs. Ross raised herself slightly, and opened her heavy eyes.

"Has it grown much colder, Shirley," she said, in her low faint tones, "or is it my imagination?"

"It always seems to grow colder traveling, I think, dear," answered Shirley, in her brave cheerful voice, although the question struck her painfully, "especially as one gets nearer the sea. Let me get the plaid, darling, and wrap it round you."

"But I am like a mummy already, little daughter," said Mrs. Ross, with a faint laugh.

"Never mind; there is no one to see you but me."

As she spoke, the young girl left her mother's side for a moment and moved to the other end of the carriage, where some supplementary rugs and shawls were strapped together. The straps were easy enough to unfasten, but somehow Shirley was a long time over the task, perhaps because her little fingers were so unsteady, and because her eyes were so full of great unshed tears, which she would not let fall. When she returned to her mother, the tears had been resolutely forced back, and there was a brave little smile on the sweet red lips. Mrs. Ross tried to smile also, struggling against the feeling of faintness which was stealing over her, and which made the closed carriage, into which no draught penetrated, seem so chilly. But her daughter's quick eyes saw the increasing pallor of her face, and she bent over her in grievous alarm.

"Mother darling, what is it? You are faint—let me give you something," she said hurriedly; but Mrs. Ross' gentle hand detained her.

"It is nothing," she returned faintly. "I am a little tired, a little faint. Don't be frightened, Shirley. See—I am better now."

She strove to smile into the loving anxious face; but the beautiful eyes were dim, and the faintness seemed to shut out the lovely startled face bending over her so tenderly, as she lay back almost breathless against the cushions.

With swift deft hands and the self-possession of an experienced nurse, Shirley applied restoratives, and presently Mrs. Ross was able to open her eyes and thank her smilingly; she was better—she was much better. And then Shirley sat down once more beside her, supporting her in her arms and resting the weary head upon her shoulder; and the train sped on through the chill gray October day, drawing nearer the sea momentarily, the sea which lay between them and England.

Mrs. Ross remained with closed eyes, her face resting against Shirley's shoulder, and looking deathly pale in the gray light against the dark brown sealskin of her daughter's coat; but her breathing was more even, and Shirley hoped that she slept.

It would have been a touching and pathetic sight to any one who could have seen it—the girl, frail and pale herself, with no color in her sweet face, save in the vivid red of her lips, bending with such tender protection and fostering love over the frail pale mother, who needed all her care and love, and who was totally unfit for the journey she had undertaken. Would she ever reach her destination? Would the spirit, which was so brave and high, support the weak body until she had performed the task she had appointed for herself? Looking down at the still face, with eyes sharpened by love and pain, Shirley thought that it was very likely, terribly likely, that her mother would not live to reach Scotland, that she would die before her eyes rested once more upon her native land.

They had left Paris at midday, having rested there for one week, which had seemed like months to the impatient woman, who felt that her days were numbered, and who wanted to leave her child in safety ere she passed away. The kindly old French physician, who had at length consented to their undertaking the journey, had only done so because he saw that the fever of unrest which burned in Mrs. Ross' veins was consuming what little strength she had, and his science told him that, even if the journey accelerated her end, it would only hasten what must be rapid and certain, no matter what care, or repose, or skill could do.

Very sad were Shirley's thoughts, as she sat holding her mother in her arms, and the train sped on through the grey uninteresting country; very heavy was the young heart which beat close to Mrs. Ross' pale cheek as it lay on her daughter's breast. Shirley had tasted the cup of sorrow many a time during her short life: but now it seemed to her as if she were draining it to the dregs. But, although her mother's death would leave her lonely and forlorn, would leave her and her brother dependent on the charity of their relatives, whom she had never seen, and who had treated them with but scant kindness hitherto, Shirley was too unselfish to wish to keep her. She knew that she longed, with a great unspeakable longing, to be at rest, and that she was weary—oh, so weary!—of her life. For Marian Ross had known suffering such as falls to the lot of few.

As she sat watching her mother's face with loving pitiful eyes, Shirley Ross was thinking that she could never remember it without the look of suffering and resignation which it wore now. Even during her father's life-time—although husband and wife had loved each other with a great love when the beautiful face had brightened visibly when he entered the room suddenly, in repose it had always been grave and sorrowful; there had been no frequent smile on the sweet lips, no brightness in the lustrous eyes, no gay music in the low sweet voice. It seemed to Shirley that her mother could never have been happy, even when she loved her husband and lived in perfect harmony with him.

And yet what could have been the cause of her sorrow? Looking back into the time which preceded her father's death, Shirley could think of nothing to bring that troubled look to the beautiful eyes, that droop to the sweet lips.

They had loved each other—ah, how deeply and truly! Never in the ideal of books could husband and wife have been dearer to each other than these two; but the shadow had always been there, and Shirley even in her childhood had felt it, dim and impalpable.

It was not want of means. Roland Ross had been an artist, and he had earned more than sufficient money to support them in their simple unpretentious mode of living. They had had every comfort, every luxury even, in the old foreign towns in which they had lived, and the life had been a pleasant and picturesque one. Shirley and her brother had had first-rate professors and every educational advantage, and they had never been denied any reasonable enjoyment; but, although they had had many foreign friends in their wanderings, they had never settled in any place where there had been many English residents. They had seemed to avoid their own country-people—and Shirley was not sorry; for, if English people at home were like English people abroad, she could very well dispense with any further knowledge of them. As a rule, such specimens of her country-people as Shirley saw at hotels and railway-stations were noisy, ill-bred, and badly dressed; and this girl, English though she was, had never passed an hour on English soil during all her seventeen years of life.

Three years before she had lost her father; and then Mrs Ross had obtained, through the interest of her brother, Sir Gilbert Fairholme, a situation for her son, who was two years his sister's senior, in the counting-house of a wealthy English merchant; and there Jack Ross had spent two long years, seeing his mother and sister only during the fortnight's holiday which he was allowed, and which he spent with them at the little German town where Mrs. Ross had settled for economy's sake, for her own income was but small, and it would die with her.

Thus it happened that, though Shirley was going home to England, it was a strange land to her—although she was far too absorded in her care of her mother now to give that a thought; besides, Jack was to meet them at Charing Cross, and it would be so good to see him again—dear Jack, with his sunshiny blue eyes and curly yellow locks, who had always a jest and a merry word ready! Shirley thought that the sight of him would be the best cordial her mother could have; she loved Jack so dearly, she was so fond of her "dear boy."

Paler and paler grew the beautiful still face, darker and darker the shadows under the long-lashed eyes, heavier and heavier the weight on Shirley's shoulder. Once or twice the invalid moved slightly, but she did not speak; and for a time Shirley hoped that she was sleeping; then, as the train sped on, the white lids were slowly lifted, and her dark eyes—lovely eyes still, and the counterpart of Shirley's—went straight to her daughter's face, with a look of unutterable anguish and pity in their depths.

"You have been asleep, dear?" said Shirley tenderly.

"No," came from the faint pale lips. "But I have been thinking, Shirley."

"Pleasant thoughts of home and Jack, I hope, darling?" Shirley said tremulously, for she had read the look in the beautiful eyes, and guessed its meaning.

"Oh, Jack, Shirley—I cannot die until I have seen Jack," she said, with sudden eagerness, as she raised her head from the girl's shoulder. "Heaven would not be so cruel; I must see Jack."

"Of course, mother darling! Don't you remember? Jack is to meet us at Charing Cross when we arrive."

"Yes—I have not forgotten; but, Shirley, I am so cold and faint and tired," said the invalid wearily, as she sunk back upon the cushions, gasping for breath; and Shirley hastened to pour out some of the restorative which the doctor in Paris had given her, and held it to the pale parched lips, watching anxiously for a shade of color, which stole into them as the restorative took effect.

"It was cruel to let you come with me alone," Mrs. Ross sighed faintly. "Poor little girl, what a terrible journey for you!"

"Don't, mother darling!" the girl said pitifully. "You feel tired and languid now, because you have been traveling; but when you have had a rest you will feel better and more cheerful."

"Do you think it is merely the fatigue of travelling, Shirley?" was the feeble answer, given with a sorrowful smile, which went to her daughter's heart. "I hope it is; because I have so many things to tell you, dear, before I go."

"You will tell me when we are in Scotland, mother?" Shirley said cheerfully, choking back a sob which rose in her throat.

"When we are in Scotland! I wonder if I shall ever see Scotland again?" the elder woman said faintly. "My ain countrie! How I loved it! How I love it even now, although it was so cruel to me—so cruel!" she repeated drearily, with a terrible anguish in her dark eyes.

"Is it wise for you to talk, dear?" Shirley, whispered fondly, bending down to the sweet pale face.

"I think it is," answered her mother, smiling. "It prevents thought, and it does not tire me much. Your uncle's letters are quite safe, Shirley"

"Quite safe, dear."

"And you will take great care of them, Shirley? I think he will be good to you, my child."

"He writes very kindly, mother," Shirley faltered; "and Aunt Geraldine, he says, sends her love. Did you know her, mother?"

"Yes, dear," Mrs. Ross answered, the pain deepening about her lips and in her dark eyes; "I knew her a little, years ago, before she was married."

"Is she nice, mother?"

"She was very beautiful then, Shirley," said her mother wistfully, with a far-away look in her eyes and a quiver of the lips—"very beautiful."

"Were you married first, mother, or Uncle Gilbert?" Shirley asked innocently, encouraging her mother's wish to talk and unconscious of the pain her questions might give.

"I—I was married first," her mother answered.

"Then Cousin Gracie is about my age, madre?" Shirley asked.

"No, your cousin is a year older than Jack," said Mrs. Ross steadily; but the effort to speak without showing her daughter the emotion it caused her made her slight frame tremble: and Shirley took alarm

"You are cold still, darling," she said tenderly drawing her wraps round her, when her hand came in contact with her mother's, and she felt the burning heat of the slender attenuated fingers. "Indeed you must not talk, mother," she added hurriedly. "Let me make you more comfortable."

"I am quite comfortable, Shirley, and resting nicely. What a careful little nurse you are!"

"But, if you were to lie down, mother, and place your head here upon my lap, you would be more at rest. There—is not that better?"

"It is very nice, dear," the invalid answered gratefully, guessing that Shirley had suggested the change of posture so that her own face might be hidden.

For a short distance they went on thus; Shirley's hazel eyes, blinded with tears, looked steadily out of the window, seeing nothing of the country through which she was passing, only picturing to herself the pale still face at which she dared not look, while her mother lay with closed eyes thinking of the past and wondering dimly if life, which had been so cruel to her, especially the fair young daughter who possessed, even as she had possessed, the "fatal dower of beauty."

Presently Shirley was aroused by a quick gasping sob from her mother.

"Lift me up, lift me up!" she said faintly. "I cannot breathe."

Shirley obeyed instantly. Startled as she was at the terrible change which had passed over her mother, she did not lose her presence of mind. She dropped the window to let the chill wind blow upon the pale pinched face, and forced some of the cordial through the white lips. For a moment she thought that this must be death, and became ill and faint herself at the thought of her mother's condition and the impossibility of obtaining assistance; but in a few minutes the death-like pallor vanished, and the invalid's breathing became more regular.

"It is nothing," she said feebly, and tried to smile into the startled anxious face bending over her. "I am better, Shirley."

Trembling now in every limb, and almost entirely unnerved, Shirley sunk upon her knees by her mother's side, half supporting her; and Mrs. Ross put both her feeble arms around the girl's head and drew it close to her breast.

"Mother—oh, mother!" Shirley said, trying to stifle the great choking sobs which rose in her throat; and Mrs. Ross drew her closer and rested her own wan cheek on the girl's soft chestnut hair.

"Shirley—my darling!" her mother whispered tenderly. "No—do not move, childie. Let me hold your head upon my breast a little while. It does not tire me. It makes me think of the day when you were a happy little baby, with big eyes and such rings of curly hair, Shirley!"

"Yes, dear," the girl said firmly enough, although even her lips whitened in the effort to retain her calmness.

"Can you be very brave, dear, and let me tell you now what I have to tell?"

"But, mother, it will tire you!" the girl opposed. "And you need all your strength now. Let us wait."

"Dear, I dare not wait," Mrs. Ross said tremulously. "There may not be time."

"Mother"—there was no mistaking the heart-broken anguish in the girl's voice—"mother, not now—I can not bear it—not now. We will rest at Boulogne."

"No—I must go on. Shirley, I insist"—and in her eagerness the dying woman lifted herself up and stood resting her hand upon her daughter's shoulder—"I insist on going on. You hear me? I will not stay—I will not rest anywhere until I reach London. Shirley, you promise?" she added, as she sunk back again exhausted.

"Yes, yes, mother, I promise," the girl said earnestly; and once more she drew her mother's head upon her shoulder and supported her tenderly in her arms.

The train sped on. The gray October twilight would soon spread over the face of the earth; in the stations through which they passed lights were beginning to glimmer, while the trees on the road side now stood up grim and ghost-like. There was a lamp in the carriage, and Shirley closed the blinds to shut out the gloomy landscape, which looked so dreary under the falling rain and lowering sky.

"We shall soon be there now, mother," Shirley said cheerfully. "It seems absurd to say so, shut up in this carriage, but I think I can smell the sea already."

"Do you, dear?" her mother said with a faint smile, remembering how often she had fancied that she could smell the heather and wild thyme of the Scotch moors when the sea and land lay between her and them.

"It is wet, but there is not much wind," Shirley continued. "We shall not have it rough, dear."

"I dare say not, Shirley. Darling"—and Mrs. Ross' eyes went wistfully to her daughter's face—"will you listen now?" I feel much stronger. Let me tell you what I have to tell."

"There is not time for anything now," Shirley said cheerfully. "These lights mean Boulogne station, dear. We stop here for a few minutes, you know, to set down any travellers for Boulogne; then this nice good-natured train takes us right down to the boat. Do you really feel stronger, mother?"

"Really, Shirley. The sea air, you know!" Mrs. Ross replied, smiling a little. "Will you collect the wraps, dear? And don't you think you had better give me a dose of that nice mixture of Doctor Lejeune's before we get out?"

The train glided into the Boulogne station and set down some of its passengers there. There were a cheerful sound of voices, a bright glimmer of lights, and quick footsteps hurrying by; then the train left the station again, and went slowly along the quay to the boat, the masts of the ships in the docks and harbor rising grim and ghostlike in the gray autumnal twilight, the lights glimmering feebly through a haze of fog and mist.

(To be continued.)

Imaginary Ills.

Physicians are just now having a crush of patients who have, or think they have, throat troubles and are afraid of cancer. The trouble of Germany's Crown Prince has started up a regular cancer scare, and physicians are profiting thereby. Some years ago, just after the death of Charley Backus, Ricardo, and Floyd, all from kidney troubles, there was a similar scare among theatrical people about kidney diseases. They went to the doctors in flocks, many of them possessed with the idea that they too had kidney troubles. A singular fact in the experience of one physician was that of the scores of actors who visited him none of those who were sure they were afflicted had any trouble. Three actors there were, however, who submitted to the customary examination in a spirit of fun. Every one of them had the trouble they hadn't expected to find, and two of them have since died of Bright's disease. The physician in question does not know what became of the third.—N. Y. Times.

An Artist's Dilemma.

Henry Sharstein, the artist employed to make the life-size emblematic figures over the boxes in the new Music Hall at Buffalo, N.Y., has been surrounded by grave difficulties since he began the work. He wished to make designs for certain nude figures and advertised for female models. Modest Buffalo did not seem to comprehend his requirements. Various women answered his advertisement, but when they finally comprehended the full duty of an artist's model they were shocked and angered. The unlucky Sharstein was nearly thrashed by the elder brother of a young woman who wished to be a model only so far as her face was concerned. A maiden lady of an uncertain age went into hysterics when she realized what was required of her. One enraged mother threatened to have Sharstein arrested for insulting her daughter. Finally the perplexed artist was obliged to send to New York city for models.

A Great Lodge Man.

First Dame—Mrs. Crossly, my husband tells me that Mr. Crossly is very popular among the society gentlemen.

Second Dame—Yes, he is. If I do say it, my husband is a great lodge man.

"Indeed.'

"Oh, yes, he goes downtown to lodge about 7 o'clock every night and comes home to lodge about the same time every morning."

It is said that early in the war a woman from Virginia appealed to Mr. Lincoln to return her slaves to her on the ground that she was a Christian and had always treated them with great kindness, and that he replied: "I have a poor idea of religion that gets one's bread out of the sweat of another man's brow."

FUNNY BREACH OF PROMISE SUIT.

A Bachelor, Aged 74, Sued by a Maiden Schoolmarm of 38 for $5,000 Damages.

Miss Sarah H. Chellis, 38 years of age, and a teacher in one of the public schools of Watertown, New York, has sued John B. Chapman, aged 74, for $5,000 damages, alleged to have been sustained by reason of his refusal to make her his bride. Miss Chellis is a rather prepossessing lady and quite prominent in social circles. She alleges that her aged lover agreed to marry her in June, 1886. Afterward it was arranged between them that the affair be postponed until Sept. 15th. From that date it was again set down for the 22nd day of the same month. Then she learned that he had taken it upon himself to break off the match entirely. So she sued him. Mr. Chapman is a bachelor, and lives with a maiden sister, on a farm in the town of Rodman, 12 miles from the abode of Miss Cnellis. He has got lots of land and plenty of money, yet he has the reputation of being the most parsimonious individual in his town. He is afflicted with rheumatism, bowed with age, and his dress on most occasions would stamp him as an inmate of the county house. Altogether, he is one of the most unattractive and ungainly lovers that Cupid has ever tackled. The people of Watertown are quite familiar with the face and figure of Mr. Chapman. His custom in years past has been to come to town in summer barefooted and ragged. When the cold blasts of winter swept down from the Adirondacks he did not surprise those who knew him because he put in an appearance without an overcoat, and wearing a straw hat. While courting Miss Chellis he thought a new suit of clothes was necessary to help along his little affair of the heart, so he bought or hired them. As the new outfit was only for the eyes of the lady in question, very few people saw him well-dressed. His custom was to come to town in his old and tattered clothing, which he exchanged for the new only long enough to pay his respects to his lady love; so Miss Chellis saw him in one garb and the people saw him in another. These are only a few peculiarities of the aged wooer. In his answer to the complaint of Miss Chellis, Mr. Chapman denies the promise to marry, and says he is afflicted with rheumatism, disease of the kidneys, has fits, falls down unconscious, remaining so several minutes at a time. In spite of all these alarming symptoms it is believed that the defendant will be on hand and make a vigorous defence when the case comes to trial at the March term of the Supreme Court.

The Queen's Message to the Pope.

The following is the address of the Duke of Norfolk, the head of the Queen's Special Mission to the Pope, His Holiness' reply to which has been published:

"Holy Father,—Her Majesty the Queen, my Most Gracious Sovereign, having been pleased to select me as Her Majesty's special Envoy to express to your Holiness, in a public and formal manner, her sense of the courtesy shown by the mission of Monsignor Ruffo Scilla to convey your Holiness' congratulations on the fiftieth anniversary of her reign, I have the honor to present to your Holiness Her Majesty's letter accrediting me for that purpose. Her Majesty has commanded me to say that, in confiding to me this high mission, she has been moved not only by a desire to acknowledge this proof of your Holiness's good-will towards her, but also to give expression to her feeling of deep respect for the elevated character and Christian wisdom which you have displayed in your high position. The temperate sagacity with which your Holiness has corrected errors and assuaged differences from which much evil might otherwise have arisen inspires Her Majesty with the earnest hope that life and health may long be granted to you, and that your beneficent action may be long continued. In conclusion, I beg leave to be permitted to express to your Holiness how very sensible I am of the honor which has been conferred upon me by my gracious Sovereign in selecting me for this high mission and in making me the interpreter of Her Majesty's sentiments on this occasion."

How Modesty is Produced.

At a ball the following conversation between mother and daughter was overheard:

Mother—Just look at Miss Smithers, Caroline,

Daughter—I see her.

"Just see how modest she manages to look. Why don't you look that way?"

"How simple you are, mother! Her modest look is owing to her long eye-lashes. That's the secret of it. You can't look demure when you have got short eye-lashes. I've tried it too often not to know."

A Georgia Society Item.

We learn, in a semi-reliable way, that Miss Katie Lee, formerly of this place, was married in Monticello last Sunday to a Mr. Ezell. Whether Miss Katie was married or not she is a beautiful young lady of rare accomplishments and would make a charming companion. We wish Miss Katie, or Mrs. Ezell, as the facts may warrant, a merry Christmas and many, many happy New Years.—Canton Advance.

Excess of Politeness.

"I declare," exclaimed Mrs. Fogg, as she vainly endeavored to dissect the turkey, "if you aren't the poorest man to do marketing. This turkey's old as Methuselah." "Possibly," said Fogg, unabashed, "but my dear, it is a female bird and courtesy to the sex prevented me from inquiring about her age."—Manchester Union.

Girlish Arithmetic.

Laura—So you are really engaged to him, dear? He is 40, you say, and you are 20—just twice as old as you, love. Dear me, when you are 40 he will be 80!

Clara—Good gracious! I hadn't thought of that.

Expert Testimony.

"Do you think the night air is unhealthy?" asked Mrs. Cumso of her husband.

"People who have been on a night tear tell me it is," was the reply.—New York Sun.

Miss Skeen—"Where did you graduate from, Mr. Gill?" Mr. Gill—"From the School of Pharmacy." Miss Skeen (with surprise)—"Is it possible? What a strange choice for a young man brought up in the city! But, if I remember rightly, your grandfather was a farmer, too."

Her Life.

A little corner with its crib,
A little mug, a spoon, a bib,
A little tooth so pearly white,
A little rubber ring to bite.

A little plate all lettered round,
A little rattle to resound;
A little creeping—see, she stands!
A little step 'twixt outstretched hands.

A little doll with flaxen hair,
A little willow rocking-chair,
A little dress of richest hue,
A little pair of gaiters blue.

A little school day after day,
A little "school ma'am" to obey,
A little study—soon 'tis past,
A little graduate at last.

A little muff for wintry weather,
A little jockey-hat and feather,
A little sac with funny pockets,
A little chain, a ring and lockets.

A little while to dance and bow,
A little escort homeward now,
A little party somewhat late,
A little lingering at the gate.

A little walk in leafy June,
A little talk while shines the moon,
A little reference to papa,
A little planning with mamma.

A little ceremony grave,
A little struggle to be brave,
A little cottage on the lawn,
A little kiss—my girl is gone!

A CHICAGO CYNIC.

The Gush which Greets the Giddy Debutante.

This is about the time of the year when debutantes make their appearance in Washington society and ensnare the affections of the young men who write for the western papers. One of the buds is described this way in a morning journal today: "A trifle over medium height, she has a slender, willowy form, and her cheeks are full of the warm, red blood of the western plains. She has beautiful dark-brown eyes and her rich growth of hair hangs down in fluffy waves above a forehead intellectual in its cast. She has a beautiful mouth and her face is full of soul. She thinks 'The Marble Faun' is one of the prettiest things in literature. She likes both Shelley and Longfellow very much," etc. O paragon of female loveliness and intellectuality! Stately girl, with lissome figure! Are your cheeks full of the "warm, red blood of the western plains" because your papa quenches his thirst in that liquid? Or is the blood of the western plains redder or warmer than any other blood? Where did your face acquire the soul it is full of? Is it pleasanter to have one's face full of soul than full of gum? At what foundry was your intellectual forehead cast? Do you really think "The Marble Faun" is "pretty?" And isn't "Paradise Lost" nice? And did you ever read a lovelier poem than the "Odyssey?" No wonder you like Longfellow and Shelley. They so much resemble each other. And how does the "Children of the Abbey" strike you for classical prose? And what do you think of the young genius who gave you the above-mentioned startling send-off, if we may use a term which is popular among your father's constituents in far-away Kansas, who know more about warm-blooded, red-blooded steers, grasshoppers, drug stores and cyclones than they do about Shelley, Longfellow and the "pretty" works of Hawthorne?—Chicago News.

Origin of Natural Gas.

A correspondent sends the following notes from which, he explains, a possible explanation of the formation of natural gas might be elaborated:

1st. A temperature of about 960 degrees F. will convert water into oxygen and hydrogen gases.

2nd. The temperature of the earth increases at the rate of one degree F. to every fifty feet downward from the surface.

3rd. At a depth of less than 10 miles the temperature will be sufficiently high to decompose water.

4th. The difference in composition of natural gas (from that of decomposed water) may be accounted for by its coming in contact with a variety of different elements after formation.

This theory is not new but is still held by many, though rejected by some of its old-time adherents. Our correspondent says: "It may be difficult to show that water reaches that depth," and he adds: "Would the pressure of surrounding elements prevent the decomposition of water?" Has any one any explanation to offer?

Sausage a Cure for Dyspepsia.

"Everything I eat in the morning disagrees with me, doctor," remarked a patient a few days ago. "It has come to a point at last when, if I take any solid food before noon, it becomes a source of heavy discomfort." "Have you ever tried any home-made sausage?" "No, why I could never digest that, doctor, it is too greasy." "Well, perhaps so," was my answer, "but, as some really good results have shown up lately, I would like you to try it." And, sure enough, the highly seasoned fatty food was quietly digested, and proved just the required morning meal. It is worth trying in every case of forenoon dyspepsia when ordinary diet fails.—Dr. Richardson, in American Magazine.

An $800 Egg.

At Mr. J. C. Stevens auction rooms, in King street, Covent Garden, this week, a large number of ornithologists assembled to witness the sale of an egg of the great auk. Before offering the lot Mr. Stevens remarked that in 1880 two eggs of this bird, both of which had been broken, were sold by him, and that they fetched 100 and 102 guineas respectively. Of the recorded eggs twenty-five were in eighteen museums and forty-one in nineteen private collections—forty-three out of sixty-six being in Great Britain. The first bid of 50 guineas was made by a well-known ornithologist, and this was followed by 60 guineas from Mr. L. Field, to whom the egg was eventually knocked down at 160 guineas.—London Times.

Dr. Gross, of Geneva, has lately experimented with himself in hanging. His experiments established that the sensations were only warmth and a burning in the head, without convulsions. Of course, his experiments didn't go very far.

Big Lake, near Osceola, Ark., usually forty miles long and eleven wide, has shrunk, in consequence of a protracted draught, to dimensions of less than two miles, and the water is so shallow that men wade in and kill the fish, which are very numerous, by means of clubs.

THE LITTLE VIDETTE.

In 1859, during the war for the liberation of Lombardy, a few days after the battle of Solferino and San Martino, won by the French and Italians over the Austrians, on a beautiful morning in the month of June, a little band of cavalry of Saluzzo was proceeding at a slow pace along a retired path in the direction of the enemy, and exploring the country attentively. The troop was commanded by an officer and a sergeant, and all were gazing into the distance ahead of them with eyes fixed, silent and prepared at any moment to see the uniforms of the enemies' advance posts gleam white before them through the trees. In this order they arrived at a rustic cabin surrounded by ash trees, in front of which stood a solitary boy, about 12 years old, who was removing the bark from a small branch with a knife, in order to make himself a stick of it. From one window of the little house floated a large tri-colored flag. There was no one inside. The peasant had fled after hanging out the flag, for fear of the Austrians. As soon as the lad saw the cavalry he flung aside his stick and raised the flag. He was a handsome boy, with a bold face and large, blue eyes and long golden hair. He was in his shirt sleeves and his breast was bare.

"What are you doing here?" the officer asked him, reining in his horse. "Why did you not flee with your family?"

"I have no family," said the boy, "I am a foundling. I do a little work for everybody. I remained here to see the war."

"Have you seen any Austrians pass?"

"No, not for these three days."

The officer paused a while and thought. Then he leaped from his horse, and leaving his soldiers there with their faces turned toward their foe, he mounted to the roof. The house was low. From the roof only a small tract of country was visible. "It will be necessary to climb the trees," said the officer, and descended. Just in front of the garden plot rose a very slender and lofty ash tree, which was rocking its crest in the azure. The officer stood a brief space in thought, gazing now at the tree and then at the soldiers. Then suddenly he asked the lad, "Is your sight good, you monkey?"

"Mine?" replied the boy. "I can spy a young sparrow a mile away."

"Are you good for a climb to the top of this tree?"

"To the top of this tree, I? I will be up there in half a minute."

"And will you be able to tell me what you see up there, if there are Austrian soldiers in that direction, clouds of dust, gleaming guns, horses?"

"Certainly I shall."

"What do you demand for this service?"

"What do I demand?" said the lad, smiling. "Nothing. A fine thing that would be, indeed! And then, if it were for the Germans, I would not do it on any terms. But for our men! I am a Lombard!"

"Good! Then up with you!"

"Wait a moment till I take off my shoes."

He pulled off his shoes, tightened the girth of his trousers, flung his cap on the grass and clasped the trunk of the ash.

"Take care now," exclaimed the officer, making a movement to hold him back, as though seized with a sudden terror.

The boy turned to look at him, with his handsome blue eyes, as though interrogating him.

"No matter," said the officer. "Up with you!"

Up went the lad like a cat.

"Keep watch ahead," shouted the officer to the soldiers.

In a few moments the boy was at the top of the tree twined round the trunk, with his legs among the leaves, but his body displayed to view, and the sun beating down on his blonde head, which seemed to be of gold. The officer could hardly see him, so small did he seem up there.

"Look straight ahead and far away," shouted the officer.

The lad, in order to see better, removed his right hand from the tree, and shaded his eyes with it.

"What do you see?" said the officer.

The boy inclined his head toward him, and making a speaking trumpet of his hand, replied, "Two men on horseback on the white road."

"At what distance from here?"

"Half a mile."

"Are they moving?"

"They are standing still."

"What else do you see?" asked the officer, after a momentary silence. "Look to the right."

The boy looked to the right. Then he said, "Near the cemetery, among the trees, there is something glittering. It seems to be bayonets."

"Do you see men?"

"No; they must be concealed in the grain."

At that moment the sharp whizz of a bullet passed high up in the air and died away in the distance behind the house.

"Come down, my lad," shouted the officer; "they have seen you. I do not want anything more. Come down."

"I am not afraid," replied the boy.

"Come down," repeated the officer. "What else do you see to the left?"

"To the left?"

"Yes, to the left."

The lad turned his head to the left. At that moment another whistle, more acute and lower than the first, cut the air. The boy was thoroughly aroused.

"They are actually aiming at me!" he exclaimed. The bullet had passed at a short distance from him.

"Down!" shouted the officer, imperious and irritated.

"I will come down presently, but the tree shelters me. Do not fear. You want o know what there is to the left?"

"Yes, to the left," answered the officer, "but come down."

"To the left," shouted the lad, thrusting his body out in that direction, "yonder, where there is a chapel, I think I see"——

A short, fierce whistle passed through the air; and, almost instantaneously the boy was seen to descend, catchin for a moment at the trunk and branches, and then falling headlong, with arms outspread. The officer ran up. The boy lay stretched upon his back, with arms outspread. A stream of blood flowed from his breast on the left. The sergeant and two soldiers leaped from their horses. The officer bent over and opened his shirt. The ball had entered his left lung. "He is dead!" exclaimed the officer.

"No, he still lives," replied the sergeant.

"Ah, poor boy, brave boy!" cried the officer. "Courage, courage!" But while he was saying "courage" he was pressing his handkerchief on the wound. The boy rolled his eyes and dropped his head back. He was dead. The officer turned pale, and stood for a moment gazing at him. Then he laid him down carefully on his cloak upon the grass, then rose and stood looking at him. The sergeant and two soldiers also stood motionless, gazing upon him. The rest were facing in the direction of the enemy.

"Poor boy," repeated the officer, "poor, brave boy!"

Then he approached the house, removed the tri-color from the window and spread it in guise of a funeral pall over the little dead boy, leaving his face uncovered. The sergeant collected the dead boy's shoes, cap, his little stick and his knife and placed them beside him.

They stood for a few moments longer in silence. Then the officer turned to the sergeant and said to him: "We will send the ambulance for him. He died as a soldier, and soldiers shall bury him." Having said this, he wafted a kiss with his hand to the dead boy and shouted, "To horse!" All sprang into the saddle. The troop drew together and resumed its route. A few hours later the little dead boy received the honors of war.

At sunset the whole line of Italian advance posts marched forward toward the foe. Along the same road which had been traversed in the morning by the detachment of cavalry there proceeded in two files a heavy battalion of sharpshooters, who a few days before had valiantly watered the hill of San Martino with blood. The news of the boy's death had already spread among the soldiers when they left the encampment. The path flanked by a rivulet, ran a few paces distant from the house. When the first officers of the battalion caught sight of the little body stretched at the foot of the ash tree and covered with the tri-colored banner, they made a salute to it with their swords; and one of them bent over the bank of the streamlet, which was covered with flowers at that spot, plucked a couple of blossoms and threw them on it. Then all the sharpshooters, as they passed, plucked flowers and threw them on the body. In a few moments the boy was covered with flowers, and officers and soldiers all saluted him as they passed by: "Bravo, little Lombard!" "Farewell, my lad!" "I salute thee, gold locks!" "Hurrah!" "Glory!" "Farewell!" One officer tossed him his medal for valor, another went and kissed his brow; and flowers continued to rain down on his bare feet, on his blood-stained breast, on his golden head. And there he lay asleep on the grass, enveloped in his flag, with a white and almost smiling face, poor boy, as though he heard these salutes and was glad he had given his life for his Lombardy.—Cuore.

Pleasure Is Cheap.

Did you ever study the cheapness of some pleasures? Do you know how little it takes to make a multitude happy? Such trifles as a penny, a word, or a smile do the work. You employ a man—pay him cheerfully, and speak a pleasant word to him, and he leaves your house with a contented heart, to light up his own hearth with smiles of gladness. As you pass along the street you meet a familiar face—say, "Good morning," as though you felt happy, and it will work admirably in the heart of your neighbor. Pleasure is cheap—who will not bestow it liberally? If there are smiles, sunshine and flowers all about us, let us not grasp them with a miser's fist and lock them up in our hearts. No. Rather let us take them and scatter them about us, in the cot of the widow, among the groups of children, in the crowded mart where the men of business congregate, in our families and everywhere. We can make the wretched happy, the discontented cheerful, the afflicted resigned, at an extremely cheap rate. Who will refuse to do it?

Men's Belongings.

Deerskins are in demand among glove-makers, who find the glove made of this material very popular just now. These skins when made up look like undressed kids, but are extremely soft and pliable.

White vests are growing numerous in full dress evening assemblies of men, and while most of them are plain, many are elaborately embroidered in white. They are cut very wide and low, so as to amount to little else than a frame around the shirt bosom.

Umbrellas are not the most abused of man's belongings, after all. They are not mislaid or lost half as often as goloshes are, if the statements of those who keep public resorts be true. Men leave their rubbers and arctics everywhere that they stay any length of time, in the theatres, hotels, cafes, barber shops, and even the railroad waiting rooms. For every umbrella left in such places many pairs of foot covering are gathered up on every day that it rains.

Late Church Notes.

In the Irish Presbyterian Church the Rev. Dr. Carson, Keady, commenced his jubilee year in September, Rev. Thomas Beare in February, Rev. Alexander Canning in October; Rev. James Budd completed his jubilee in February, and Rev. James White, Carrickfergus, entered his on the last day of December, 1887.

Application was made recently on behalf of Rev. Henry Bartram, vicar of St. George's, Ramsgate, for a license to perform stage plays at a theatre which has been transformed into a parish hall. The exits being good, a provisional license for three months was granted. The vicar has this week commenced his career as a responsible theatrical manager.

Personal.

Jay Gould has left Rome and will go to Palestine on his yacht.

The Princess Metternich, famous in Paris for her magnificent attire, is now astonishing the French capital by her shabby dress.

John Jacob Astor has given his son, the ex-Minister to Italy, a magnificent summer residence at Newport, facing the ocean. The gift is valued at $400,000.

The city of Santa Barbara, Cal., is paving State street with bituminous rock at cost of $160,000.

FLUSH TIMES IN "FRISCO."

When Hack Drivers Made $50 a Day an Theatre Boxes Were $1,200.

Col. Mike Brannigan, the celebrated guide and hackman of El Paso, Tex., is on a visit to this city, Mr. Brannigan said yesterday:

"I have come back to San Francisco for the purpose of seeing some of my old friends of the Argonaut days of 1849, that is, as many of them as are alive. I can tell you some interesting things about early times in this city. I owned and drove the first hack that ever rumbled over the streets of San Francisco. In 1851 I got $50 a night to drive Catherine Hayes, the famous singer, and her mother, between the Razette House and Tom Maguire's Theatre, which was then situated on Washington street, between Montgomery and Kearney. I also got the same sum from several others at the time for the same trip. Those were good old days, and I as well, I suppose, as very many others, would wish to see them back again. I saw $1,200 paid for a box in Maguire's theatre on the opening night of Catherine Hayes' season. A Limerick butcher at Sacramento paid $1,300 for a box when she went to the capital city to sing. Dollars in those days were more plentiful than nickles are now. When the mail steamers would arrive I have seen a gambler give a man an ounce of dust (that is $16) for his place in the long line of anxious people waiting their turn outside the old post office, which was then at the corner of Brenham place and Clay street. Then you would have to pay $12 a dozen for articles to be laundered, and men used to throw soiled underclothing away and buy new articles rather than pay for washing.

"I remember when Lotta Crabtree first appeared in this city. She used to play a banjo and dance jigs at Gilbert's Melodeon at the corner of Kearny and Clay streets, and got $6 a week. I think that was in 1854 or 1855. She went to Virginia City in 1860, and made a hit. Twenty dollar gold pieces were showered on the stage for her benefit. My charges then as a hack-driver were $50 a day and all expenses paid. I would like to see that state of things again, and we would have less complaints about capitalists and the like. Everybody was a capitalist in the old days, and if only a few of the wealthiest exist now I don't know why they ought to be blamed. We all had a chance to become millionaires, and if we did not, it cannot be helped, and there is no use repining.—San Francisco Examiner.

A ROYAL SILVER WEDDING.

The Approaching Anniversary of the Marriage of England's Heir Apparent.

How fast the world does run away with one! It seems as if it were only yesterday that the Prince of Wales brought his charming bride home from Denmark, and yet, on the 10th of March next, they will celebrate their silver wedding—the 25th anniversary of their marriage. It was in the darkest days of our civil war, the 10th of March, 1863, that they married; yet America took pleasant cognizance of it. Tennyson, too, the poet laureate, writing to order and to measure, did grandly—one of the finest productions of his powerful days. The very opening of his greeting ode was a study of rhythm and of beauty

Sea Kings daughter from over the sea,
Alexandra!
Saxon and Norman and Dane are we,
But all of us Danes in our welcome of thee,
Alexandra!

She was lonely then, and is lonely now, though the mother of many children. She is, and deservedly, the most popular of all the royal family, and her silver wedding will meet with warm applause from all English-speaking people.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Lady's Dilemma.

New York Letter

It's all very well to go on discovering new tricks in electricity, and new laws in political economy, and new cures for dyspepsia and things like that, but science has to turn its attention to finding out some new kind of patent which will enable a woman to tell when she has her hat fixed on her hair or her cloak fixed to her figure. It's a good thing women are not absent-minded about dress, or many of them would go home looking like guys. It was in a fashionable restaurant last week. A lady was sitting eating lunch, and the place was full. Suddenly there was a commotion. The waiter came up. The lady was looking under the chair, and the table, and at all the hats and cloaks hanging up. She had lost something.

"Waiter, where is my cloak?"

"Your cloak, madam? I do not know."

"I took my cloak off when I sat down. It has been stolen. I have been robbed."

Everybody was attracted to the scene. Everybody looked up and down, all over the house. No cloak! The lady was in a rage. Suddenly somebody happened to catch hold of something on the back of her dress. It was her cloak, and it was tied around her waist, and hung where she had thrown it off, gracefully on her bustle. There's an awful lot of human nature in very small episodes.

How to Treat Frost Bites.

A doctor in the Kansas City Star says: During the past two days I have treated several people for frozen hands and feet. In one or two cases I have found it very difficult to treat them on account of their plunging their frozen members in hot water or holding them in close proximity to a red-hot stove. The best possible way to draw out cold from frozen parts is to plunge them into ice or snow-water containing a liberal supply of saltpetre or common salt, and then submitting them to a rigorous rubbing with a coarse towel or slapping with the hands to restore circulation. In many cases amputation has been found necessary where the patient has foolishly applied hot water.

An Amended Verdict.

In a Kentucky court of justice: Judge—"Do you find the prisoner guilty or not guilty?"

Foreman of the jury—"Gui——"

Prisoner—"Hold on a minute, Judge. I simply want to state that there are fourteen barrels of apple-jack down at my place and a darn big straw-stack, and——"

Foreman—"We find the prisoner not guilty, your honor."—Detroit Free Press.

—The Grand Trunk Railway Company have donated $400 to the Montreal General Hospital.

A BUCKETFUL OF TARANTULAS.

A Fearful Fight Between Two Bull Reptiles Near Pomona.

"Talking about centipedes, tarantulas and all the poisonous bugs and reptiles that infest the southern deserts," said Henry Carmello, of Pomona, at the Grand yesterday, "I never did see so many things of this sort as I did late one evening just east of Pomona, in Los Angeles county, last August. It beats anything I ever read about. Myself and three or four others were coming from Silverton Creek, where we had been fishing. We were passing over the sandy plain, where small vineyards here and there dotted the surface. Suddenly, as we drove along, one of the boys uttered an exclamation of surprise and let his gun go at something. Then he leaped out, and crack went his gun again, as though straight into the ground. Again he shot, and, to our exclamation of surprise—for we could not divine what he was shooting at—said:

"'Why, there! Don't you see! Tarantulas?'

"And, sure enough, there they were, thick and fast upon the ground, crawling hither and thither, as though an army of them were loose, and devastating the country. Now, this sounds to you like a fish story, but it is true. That section was just swarming with these poisonous reptiles. Every one of us began firing. We shot and shot, and must have killed scores of them. Then, by deftly using some sticks we had, we got about sixty of them into a bucket. Fight? You ought to have seen them. At first they wouldn't fight. We put two or three of them together and tried to egg them on. No go. They seemed slow about beginning to use the poison on each other. Then we put in some more and began stirring them up with a stick. You ought to have seen them launch into each other. The more we put in the more they fought until when we had put in the three score I have told you about, and had the bucket half full, we had just a writhing mass of poison. Sting and fight! My land, how they did do it, though. They kept it up for quite a long time, until we got tired of watching them. The little ones died the soonest, and sunk to the bottom amidst a mass of blood, while the old and big ones stayed on top.

"At length two old bull tarantulas held the field. All else had sunk down. These were two veritable Napoleons. Fight? You ought to have seen the blood fly now. Such awful and vindictive thrusts, and such merciless belligerents I shall never see again if I live a thousand years. The battle lasted about five minutes more, and then they went down together. Which was the stronger, more enduring or gamier it would be hard to say. When they got through we just had a bucketful of dead spiders. That was all.—San Francisco Examiner.

Chronological Curios.

Paisley handkerchiefs were first made in 1743.

The first public school for the blind was established at Paris, by Valentine Haug, in 1784.

The first sea fight on record was that between the Corinthians and the inhabitants of Corcyra, 664 B. C.

Before the middle of the seventeenth century tea was not used in England, and was entirely unknown to the Greeks and Romans.

Deeds in England were formerly written in Latin or French; the earliest known instance in English is the indenture between the Abbot of Whitby and Robert Bustard, dated at York in 1343.

What is known in English history as the "short-lived" administration, was the ministry which William Poultenay, Earl of Bath, undertook to form Feb. 10th, 1746, and whose term of office closed in two days.

England obtained formal possession of Gibraltar by the treaty of Utrecht, April 11th, 1713. The great fortress had been taken from the Spaniards by the English nine years before, and held in spite of repeated attempts at recapture.

An Educated Cat.

Said Mr. Bowditch, the druggist, with a merry twinkle in his eye: "I've got some knowing cats. A fellow was giving me some pretty stiff talk about a trained dog of his, so I told him I had a cat that could tell the different denominations of money. He didn't believe it, so I took a dollar bill and a five dollar bill, and unbeknown to him scented the five with catnip. I then laid them on the floor and said to the cat: 'Now, Tom, take your choice, but you are a fool if you don't take the five.' That cat jumped down and smelled the bills, and finally with his paw poked out to one side the one with the catnip on it. Well, sir, that fellow hasn't recovered yet from the surprise that cat's sagacity gave him."—Augusta Me. Journal.

Worse than Volapuk.

The eyes were made to read from right to left. Try it and see how much more easy it is. It is natural, and the mode of writing and reading should be changed back to the ancient practice that conforms to nature.—Oakland Tribune.

At the Zoo.

The keeper gave the lion a large piece of meat. Poet—Does he get that often? Keeper—He gets it regularly twice a day. Poet (with clasped hands)—What a boon it would be if I could only get a position as lion here.

Answered from Experience.

"Papa," said little Johnny McSwilligen, "when is a person in his dotage?"

"A man is in his dote age, Johnny, when he is going with his first girl," replied McSwilligen.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

A Holiday Tragedy.

The song that the snowbirds sing just at present is:

A little boy, a pair of skates,
A hole in the ice and golden gates.
Pittsburg Commercial.

Among the men who promised to turn over a new leaf on New Year's Day was "Black Bart," the hero of more than a score of stage robberies on the Pacific coast. His term of imprisonment at San Quentin, Cal., expired on Sunday. In spite of "Bart's" promises, California stage drivers will not be surprised to hear his familiar voice again.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block, Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.
Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,
Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.
HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON
V. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as hereto fore

P McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

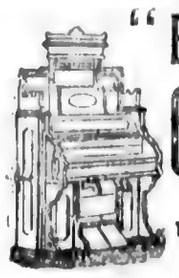
MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rate.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,
FLESHERTON ONT.



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

THE ADVANCE and Toronto Daily World one year for $2.50.

THE ADVANCE and Weekly Empire one year for $1.65.

THE ADVANCE and Hamilton Weekly Spectator one year for $1.65.

THE ADVANCE and Methodist Observer one year for $1.50.

Somebody left a load of wood at the ADVANCE office and forgot to leave his name and address, so that we do not know whom to credit. Always call at the office when you bring wood and get a receipt, when the proper credit cannot fail to be given.

We sell more watches in two weeks than the would be honest and reliable dealer did in three months which makes him feel very bad, and we still have any amount of Watches left yet at 20% less than elsewhere in this section of Grey at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

The following names were omitted from the list of successful pupils published in last week's ADVANCE, through some mistake of the Examiner's:—Lizzie Mason, 380 marks, S.S. 11, Artemesia, Miss Ford, Teacher; Lizzie Martin, 379 marks, S.S. 12, Artemesia, Mr. Kerr, Teacher.

The celebrated Emerald Duett, Royal Templars of Temperance, Revival Band, will commence a series of Christian Temperance Revival Meetings in the Methodist church, Flesherton, Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock, and in the Presbyterian church on Friday evening at the same hour. Further announcements will be made of future meetings.

B.B.B. Everybody says he is more deserving of the title than the patent medicine quack nostrum vendors who have appropriated it. We mean Booth the Boss Barber, of Flesherton, of course. He is no quack as he gives full value for your money every time. Shop next to Clayton's shoe store.

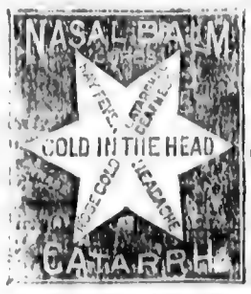
A motion was passed at last meeting of our Township Council, requesting the County Council to set apart Artemesia for High School purposes. This is a move in the right direction, for which our Fathers deserve credit. Some day we will have a flourishing High School in our midst, when we will appreciate their considerate action at its true value.

Mr. S. D. Gaudin, who has for some years most acceptably filled the position as principal of Kimberly Public School, is attending High School at Listowell. Mr. Gaudin purposes entering the Methodist ministry. He is a pious son of pious parents, and, intellectually, is one of the brightest of the many bright and promising young men, who have commenced careers of usefulness in the county of Grey. We wish him God-speed.

Those who have promised, or who intend to bring wood to this office in exchange for THE ADVANCE, will please do so now, while the good sleighing lasts. Remember we accept one cord of first-class green or dry wood—green wood preferred—solidly and honestly piled, for THE ADVANCE for one year. Dozy or partially rotten wood will only be received by us at the rate of 75 cents per cord. We are giving more than market price, and must insist on good quality and honest measurement.

At the open meeting of the Inistioge Division, Sons of Temperance held there on the 6th of January, the following officers were publicly installed:

J. F. Hutchinson, W.P.
N. Duncan, W.A.
C. Atcheson, R.S.
C. Russell, A. R.S.
W. Hutchinson, F.S.
W. Reddie, Treas.
H. Gardiner, Chap.
S. Atcheson, Con.
R. " A. "
Geo. Johnson, I.S.
Geo. Bannon, O.S.



POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH.
GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER.
EASY TO USE.
Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price [illegible] and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address [illegible]LFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

The officers of Flesherton Lodge No. 142, A.O.U.W., were installed at the last regular meeting of that lodge, by Deputy Grand Master Workman, S. Damude, Esq. The Lodge is in excellent working order, growing steadily in membership, with the following staff of officers, duly elected and installed, for the year 1888:

Wm. Irwin, Master Workman.
C. W. Bellamy, Foreman.
Jas. McMullen, Overseer.
W. J. Bellamy, Recorder.
S. Damude (D.G.M.W.) Financier.
John Whitten, Receiver.
W. P. Crossley, Guide.
J. W. Large, Inside Watchman.
A. R. Fawcett, Outside Watchman.
J. W. Bates, Esq., Past Master Workman was duly elected at a previous meeting Representative to the Grand Lodge.

Little Mills.

Many readers of THE ADVANCE are possibly not aware of the fact that the far-famed "Little Mill"—near Flesherton—has passed into the hands of P. Loucks, but such is the case. Further, Mr. Loucks has greatly improved the milling facilities and now turns out the most beautiful Flour. Graham Flour is one of his specialities. Chopping done every day. Farmers come in from all directions and are loud in their praises of the splendid work done in every department. Mr. Loucks is a first-class miller, and courteous and fair in his treatment of customers. Give him a trial and you will be convinced. Remember place: LITTLE MILL, or sometimes called "Speeton Mill."

A Hotel Owner's Illicit Still Seized

Owen Sound, Jan 16.—On Saturday afternoon W. J. Graham, collector of Inland Revenue, at this port, made a raid on an illicit distillery in the township of Amabel, county of Bruce, run by a man named Thomas Martin. He arrested Martin and seized his still, two fermenting tubs and a quantity of molasses. Martin was tried at Allenford before Justices James Allen and John Devard today, and was fined $100 and sentenced to one month in Walkerton jail. Martin hails from the county of Waterloo, where he owns considerable hotel property, and appears to have conceived the idea of getting whiskey at first cost and evading the duty.

An Elgin Centenarian's Death.

ST. THOMAS, Jan. 16.—Ewen Cameron, the oldest resident in Elgin county, died on Sunday. Deceased was born in Scotland in 1787 and is consequently 101 years old. He came to this country in 1821 and taught school in Elgin for three or four years. He then settled on lot 13, 1st range, North Lake road, Southwold, and there resided until his death. He was a full grown man when the British troops returned from Waterloo and was personally acquainted with the historic Lochiel of Culloden, deceased's brother having been a member of Lochiel's regiment and presented with the hero's sword on its disbandment. Four sons and one daughter survive the centenarian.

Falling Trees Again.

Wallaceburg, Jan. 16.—Edward Benoit, while engaged with a companion in sawing down a tree, met with an accident which resulted fatally. The tree began to fall, and Mr. Benoit, noticing that his dog was in danger of being struck, ran after him to drive him out of the way. In doing so he was struck on the head by a branch, which killed him instantly. Deceased was a young man about 21 years of age, and resided two and a half miles from Port Lampton.

Marshall Benn, while loading wood on Thursday morning in Mr. F. McLennan's bush, about four miles from Wallaceburg, was struck by a falling tree blown down by the high wind. He was knocked insensible and his face badly cut. His companions drove him to town and a physician sewed up the cuts, and he is now doing well.

G·R·I·P
CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.
J. W. BENGOUGH, Artist and Editor.
ISSUED WEEKLY.
$2 a Year; $1 for 6 Months.

GRIP is increasing in influence and popularity every year! It is a supreme household favorite, while every Politician and Professional and Business Man enjoys the clever hits which appear in every issue. Subscribe now!
See our Premium and Clubbing List. Circulars giving full particulars sent free.
Look out for Grip's Comic Almanac for 1888. Price 10 cents.
ADDRESS,
GRIP PUBLISHING CO.
TORONTO, ONT.

BOOTS & SHOES!
—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—
WINTER GOODS!
RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS AND FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.
WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

HEARD'S!
Carriage Works, Flesherton,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.
SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.
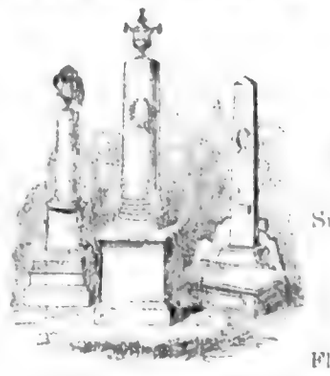
Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!
—THE WELL-KNOWN—
SPEIGHT WAGON!
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual
First-class value in every department.
Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.
STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,


ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,
Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.
Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT
THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.
THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS
Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.
Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.
Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

To the People

Of Artemesia, Osprey, and Surrounding District.

The undersigned respectfully tenders his sincere and grateful thanks to the general public for the excellent patronage extended to him since opening out in the Boot & Shoe Business in Flesherton, and trusts he has merited their continued support.

At the same time, he wishes to state that he has a good stock of Mens Long Boots, Ladies Boots & Shoes, &c., of his own make, which will be sold at Cost Prices. Must clear out the stock—come and get bargains! Wishing one and all a "Merry Christmas and a Happy new year."

Flesherton, Dec. 21st, 1887. JOS. SMITH.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton
Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Executor's Notice

IN pursuance of sect. 1, Chap. 9, 46 Vic., notice is hereby given that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of W. H. Colquett, deceased, late of the township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, and Province of Ontario, who died on or about the 20th day of May, 1886, are to sent by post prepaid or delivered to William S. Christoe, M.D., on or before the 15th day of January, 1888, a statement containing their names and addresses and full particulars of their claims and of the securities (if any) held by them and after the said, last mentioned date, the said W. S. Christoe, for the personal Estate and effects, rights and credits of the said W. H. Colquett—will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased amongst the parties entitled thereto, regard being had only to the claims of which notice has been given as above required, and Executors will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person or persons of whom claims have not been received by the said W. S. Christoe.

And further, all parties who are indebted to the said Estate of the said W. H. Colquett, deceased, are to pay as the same becomes due, to the said W. S. Christoe.

W. S. CHRISTOE,
for the Executors,
JAMES LOVE, SAMUEL COLQUETT, and MRS. COLQUETT.

Dated, Flesherton, this 20th day of Dec., 1887

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 345. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

1ST

Clearing ✱ Sale!

1,100

In Fine Goods to select from. Must be reduced to $1,000 if possible by March 1st. The sale will be "genuine" and carried out on the following basis: One-Fifth of all grades Watches and Clocks, ¼ of Silverware, Hollow and Flat, ⅓ of Chains, Jewelery, Pins, Buttons, Spex and Rings, 18 k., plain excepted. Unchanged prices in plain figures. If you ever intend investing in any of above mentioned goods, this opportunity to get them near cost, at cost and below cost is the best ever given in this section. No foolish blowing. Adjectives very small. By calling you will find prices so low as to lead you to buy. TERMS CASH. Warrants as usual, signed W.A.Brown. My watch work gives satisfation.

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.
731-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D. C
Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Miss Leek, of Toronto, is visiting friends in this locality.

Quarterly meeting services in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, next Sunday forenoon.

WOOD WANTED.—In exchange for Harness at Clayton's Harness Shop, Flesherton. Apply early—first come first served.

"Have a smoke, Simson?"

"No, thank you; I've sworn off."

"Well, put one in your pocket for to-morrow."—Hartford Post.

Mr. Climo, Flesherton's new general merchant, is opening out a fine stock of goods in Wright's old stand. Look out for announcement next week.

FOR SALE.—Fine Hotel Property in the County of Grey. For further particulars apply to "R. S. C.," ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. 8t.

Grand Masquerade Carnival on Flesherton Skating Rink to-night (Thursday). Under auspices of the Brass Band. Good prizes, good ice, good music, good everything, Come!

Booth the Boss Barber has moved into his new shop and premises in Strain's block, (next door to Mr. Barnhouse's boot and shoe shop) where his customers will find him in future.

C. Treadgold, Flesherton, dealer in the best Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines, Washing Machines, Clothes Wringers, Churns, Fruit & Ornamental Trees. Three second-hand Sewing Machines on hand to sell for Wood or Hay.

Mr. Thos. Bates—an old Flesherton boy—started a clothing and boot and shoe store at the Sault last fall. He is doing well. Speaking of THE ADVANCE, he says:—"THE ADVANCE is always a welcome visitor to me, and I assure you that I would willingly pay thrice the amount rather than be without it."

Several Fleshertonians have given up the use of tobacco during the past week or two. Most of them are prepared to acknowledge that a man actually does require a couple of backbones to successfully quit the habit. Nevertheless they are all holding out bravely. Few people understand or know anything about the power of habit.

Special attention is directed to the 5th page of this week's ADVANCE, where a very important communication to the public—from the popular firm of M. Richardson & Co.—is made. It is only necessary to draw attention to the fact, as ADVANCE readers know from experience that the enterprising mercantile firm named always publish something of interest and profit to the entire community.

Croup, whooping cough, sore throat sudden cold and the lung troubles peculiar to children, are easily controlled by promptly administering Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This remedy is safe to take and certain in its action.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

Master George LeGard, of THE ADVANCE office, goes to Uxbridge this week to take a position on the Guardian newspaper, which is probably the best appointed office in Ontario County. We wish our bright young apprentice all success and have no doubt but that he will achieve it.

A steady wave of prosperity has set in for Flesherton. Our population, also, is rapidly increasing. As a gentleman said to us the other day—"I tell you what it is, sir, everything in and about Flesherton denotes thrift and business activity. Morally and physically you have a clean town, sir."

There is some talk of organizing a Forester's Lodge and a Y.M.P.B.A. in Flesherton. Our devil says he thinks it would'nt be a bad idea to start an "Anti-Tobacco Society, an Anti-Chewing Gum Club, an Anti-Bustle—Paint-Powder—Tight-Lacing Combination, and various other kinds too numerous to mention."

I N. Marshall, Barrister, Brockville, Ont., states:—I was so troubled with cold in the head that I could not speak plainly. One application of Nasal Balm gave immediate relief, and thoroughly cleaned out my head.

FOR SALE.—Two Houses—one Brick and the other frame—and Lots on Beechel Street, Flesherton. Will be sold cheap for cash or on time. Good fruit bearing Orchard; well located. Good commodious Baker's Oven in connection with frame house. For particulars and terms, apply to GEO. GLASSFORD, on the premises.

Sons of Temperance, Flesherton Division, meet next Wednesday evening in their Hall, Christoe's block, at the usual hour. Literary and musical program. N. B.—The meetings are now held every other Wednesday evening. The one held last week was the most interesting and edifying meeting we had for the past eighteen months. WALTER LEITCH, Recording Scribe. 1t

The average attendance at the Flesherton Public Schools for the month of January was 110. The following names appear in the Visitor's Book for the same month:—Messrs. S. Damude, M. Richardson, J. Gordon, and A. R. Fawcett, Rev. T. Watson, Mrs. Gjerdrum, Mrs. Keefer, and Miss Katie Bellamy, of Flesherton; Messrs. James Smith and Charles Irish, of Hamilton; Mr. Harry Iredale, of Burlington; and Mr. Fred Leitch, of Winnipeg.

Do you smoke? If not, do you chew gum?

Council meets on Monday. It is also Cattle Fair day.

Carnival on Flesherton Rink to-night. Go! The Band will be there and everybody else.

Trains have been slightly delayed on the C.P.R.—T.G. & B. line—during the past week.

ADVANCE and Toronto Daily World one year for $2.50. Two papers for less than the price of one!

The Central Bank affairs are in a terrible state; but Booth the Boss Barber, of Flesherton, never was in better shape for doing business.

See Jos. McConnell's announcement in our advertising columns. He has bought out S. Spirit's butchering business in Flesherton.

We thank our subscribers for the hearty and prompt manner in which they have renewed their subscriptions to THE ADVANCE for 1888. At no time in the history of this paper have there been so many cash-in-advance subscribers.

STOCK = TAKING = SALE!

Great Sweeping Reductions

AT

J. RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON.

We have decided to go out of the Fancy Goods business and for the future handle only

Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex &c.,

SO WE WILL SELL FOR THE

NEXT = SIXTY = DAYS

Our whole stock of Berlin and Zepher Wools at 8c. per. oz. worth 12½; Filloselle 5c. a knot worth 10c.; Arrasene at 10c now worth 15c.; Chinelle at 8c. yard worth 15c. Fancy Plush Goods &c. all below cost as we are bound to clear them out. Macrame Cord all colors at 10c. ball or 3 for 25c. We will also clear out our entire line of PIPES at away below cost. Your choice of 1 lot of Pipes worth from 50 to 85c. for 25c.; your choice of Pipes worth 30 to 50c. for 20c.; your choice of Pipes worth 20 to 30c for 10c. A lot of PURSES ranging in price from 35 to 85c. your choice for 25c. We have also decided to clear out some lines in Brooches, Earings, Cuff-Buttons. Your choice of 1 beautiful lot of Brooches valued from 25 to 40c. at 15c.; your choice of another beautiful lot valued from 40 to 60c. at 25c.; another lot valued from 60c. to $1.00 for 50c.; Earings and Cuff-Buttons at the same terrible Reductions.

Come along and get First Choice as they will go like Hot Cakes

As they are all Fine and Good, Warranted to Wear and Keep Color for years. Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. still 20 Per Cent. lower in prices than elsewhere in this section.

The dealer who tells the people so often about his honesty, &c., must have come to the conclusion that they are very suspicious of him or he would not need to advertise his honest instead of his goods.

IF YOU WANT A GOOD ARTICLE AT A LOW PRICE ALWAYS GO TO

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELERY STORE, FLESHERTON.

PRAYING FOR HEALTH.

Scenes of Excitement at a Faith Cure Convention.

A Reading (Pa.) despatch says: Believers in the faith cure created strange scenes in the handsome new Mennonite Church on North Tenth street to-day. The church was packed to suffocation. The excitement was of a character that might cause onlookers to imagine themselves living in the days of miracle. There probably was not greater faith, even in Isreal, than was manifested by some of the people in attendance upon the faith cure convention.

A sermon by Rev. F. W. Berkheiser opened the proceedings. Then Rev. Mr. Musselman, of Bethlehem, delivered a stirring address u ging reliance upon the Lord instead of upon doctors in times of sickness.

SEEKING DIVINE AID.

In the midst of an appeal to the people to have greater faith, coupled with an assurance that prayer can heal all ills, a young man named Mahlon Neischwender, from Auburn, rushed to the altar, which was now surrounded by half a dozen clergymen. The young man exclaimed:

"I am suffering from consumption. I gave up medicines, and now I rely on the Lord to cure me. I want your prayers, all of you."

Sobbing aloud he sank on his knees, and the clergyman called for prayers. Then three women left their seats and went forward. A woman named Mrs. Breniser said:

"I have suffered twenty years in my head. I believe in prayer. I have faith and I believe Jesus will cure me."

She, too, fell upon her knees in prayer, while the people sang a hymn.

AN EMOTIONAL SCENE.

Mr. Musselman made another appeal to the audience and a number of clergymen offered fervent prayers. Strong men wept, women swooned and the congregation was excited. The ministers gathered about the sick and laying hands upon their heads implored the Spirit of God to descend and heal the afflicted, penitently kneeling at the altar.

During this time strong personal appeals were made by other ministers to sick people in the audience to come forward and be healed.

"Here's one who cannot get through the crowd!" exclaimed a voice in the rear of the church.

The deacons at once responded and carried a young woman suffering with spinal disease to the excited, weeping, praying throng about the altar.

Meanwhile the choir sang, the consumptive young man was overcome under his great mental strain, and he fell prostrate on the floor. A half-hour of prayer service was kept up while the clergymen urged the applicants for cure to continue strong in their faith. Several women testified to their renewed strength and expressed belief that they would be cured.

For an hour at least this exciting service was continued. At its close the sufferers departed with light hearts and were told to come again to-morrow. The convention will be in session all the week.

"RUN FOR YOUR LIFE."

A Heroic Miner's Daring Act Saves Hundreds of Lives

A Halifax despatch says: At the Mount Uniacke gold mines yesterday Minre Reseigh performed a most heroic act. The night men were startled by a cry, "Run for your life, the dynamite stores are on fire." Knowing there were 200 men in the shaft a few feet distant, Reseigh ran back and at the imminent risk of his own life extinguished the flames. He was not a moment too soon as a box containing detonators was scorched.

Latest Northwest News.

A Winnipeg telegram says: It was announced late to-night that Mr. J. A. Prendergast had been decided upon as the fifth and French member of the new Greenway Cabinet.

Mr. Thomas Mitchell, keeper of the stopping place at the Swift Current trail, has been found dead. Cause unknown.

Another Winnipeg pastor has received a call—Rev. Mr. Cameron, of the Baptist Church—but has declined it.

The inquiry into the alleged irregularities in connection with the 91st Battalion drags along. Several officers have been examined and more remain to give evidence. The commissioners are very reticent about expressing an opinion.

The body of Edward Meers, who strayed from Saskatoon during the recent storm, was found yesterday, four miles east of the village.

A man named Thos. Mitchell was found dead on the roadside near Battleford. He was employed as a teacher on the Indian reserve.

A Crystal City, Man., special says: Lewis Torsie, who resided in Dakota, twelve miles south of this place, has been missing since the 9th inst., and is supposed to have been frozen to death. He left here for home on that date, and has not arrived home. Torsie was a Frenchman, 60 years of age, and came from Elmwood, Ont., last spring.

The Tragic in Real Life.

A really dramatic incident is reported from Newark. A ruffian named Leary cut the throat of a boy 18 years old last Saturday night because he refused him money to buy beer. Leary fled, and in a distant part of the city knocked at the door of a house where he was unacquainted, and asked permission to wash his hands, which were stained with blood from his victim's wound. The permission was granted him, and, when he was afterward arrested, it was discovered that the woman who assisted him to wash away the traces of his crime was the mother of his victim.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Civil Engineer Weissmantel took a bath in the sea at Trieste, Austria, on the 21st of September, and, being a good swimmer, ventured far out into the sea. Suddenly a shark came upon him. He turned and swam as rapidly as possible toward the shore. But the fish was quicker, and before the boat which, in answer to his cries for help, had been immediately started for his assistance had reached him, the monster had bitten off his right leg. He is now lying in the hospital, and there is little hope of saving his life.

THE IRISHMEN'S CONTENTIONS.

Mr. O'Brien's Strong Opinions—A Couple of Arrests—Proclaimed Meetings.

A Dublin cable gives the conclusion of Mr. O'Brien's speech as follows: Having paid a warm tribute to the prison chaplain, Father MacElroy, Mr. O'Brien continued: I dare say Mr. Balfour has not changed his mind. I know that I have not changed mine. We are a pair of highly obstinate persons, and it is possible, nay, more, it is more than probable, that there may be no alternative except that Mr. Balfour should go out or that I should go in. However, all that is written in the decrees of a higher power than Mr. Balfour's. But be that as it may, whether we return to Tullamore now as prisoners or hereafter as victors, of one thing I feel assured, that the days are coming when Irishmen, aye, and Englishmen, even those who distrust and hate us at the present moment, will look back with astonishment and shame upon the fact that in this year of grace 1888, after seven centuries of British rule, the highest place of honor that the State can offer to an Irishman who loves his people and his land is a plank bed in the historic jail of Tullamore. (Prolonged cheers.)

Mr. O'Brien, who is almost prostrated with emotion, intends to attend the banquet to be given in his honor by his constituents, and then to rest for a few weeks, in accordance with his doctor's advice. In spite of the endeavor to prevent his whereabouts from becoming generally known, every mail brings him congratulatory letters. He is residing with a friend in Dublin. In an interview to-day he says: "I felt so well on leaving prison that I have overtaxed my strength, and as a result I am sleepless and worn out. There was a portmanteau full of letters awaiting me at the prison on leaving and the number I have received since is so great that I am quite unable to deal with them. Those I have read affected me more than I can describe, but it is surprising that I have received not one threatening letter. I have formed no plans for future action yet, but it matters little, because the spirit of the country among all classes has amounted to a degree altogether beyond former experience. The National League, he continued, instead of being effaced, as the Coercionists prophesied, was more firmly rooted than ever. The action of the Land Commissioners has been equivalent to censuring the moderation of the Plan of Campaign. Mr. Balfour had found that the League could only be suppressed by suppressing society. The action of the Government in prosecuting priests showed that the hopes of muzzling them by means of intrigues at Rome had been frustrated. It was an attempt to outrage the people into an exhibition of violence as a set-off against Mr. Balfour's wanton brutality. If Mr. Blunt had never revealed Mr. Balfour's intentions toward the Parnellites, the course pursued by the Chief Secretary was evidence enough. He believed that Mr. Balfour would push matters to extremities until public opinion daunted him.

Patrick O'Brien was arrested at Athlone yesterday charged with having made a seditious speech on New Year's day. He was bailed. Bail was refused for Father McFeggan.

Thomas Byrne, President of the Ballinasloe Branch of the National League, has been arrested for inciting tenants to refuse to pay rent.

The authorities have proclaimed a number of meetings of the National League which it was proposed to hold at Kilrush, county Clare, and in the vicinity.

Kilrush was illuminated this evening and the streets were crowded with people. The Government's proclamation, prohibiting the meeting announced to be held there to day, was publicly burned. All the bonfires and blazing tar barrels were extinguished by the police. There was a conflict at Kilkee between the police and the people, and one policeman was severely injured.

Why Angelina Will Not Become Engaged During Leap Year.

"I have long wished for this opportunity."

Such were the words of Adelbert Margaraway, the young entry clerk in the great establishment of Fitzsimmons & Flanderson. "I have long wished for this opportunity, he said, dropping recklessly upon the sofa that was now beautified by the presence of the lovely Angelina Vane, "and now must I hear the answer which is to raise me to the pinnacle of bliss or to sink me to the very dregs of despair! Angelina, dearest, will you——"

"Adelbert!" and the voice sounded like entrancing music, notwithstanding its sad, sad undertone; "Adelbert, it has been the dream of my life to be able to place my hand in yours and say, "Adelbert, take me; I am wholly yours; but it cannot be, it cannot, cannot be."

"And why not, dearest?"

"Because, Adelbert, this is leap year, and everybody would declare that I asked you. No, dear Adelbert, I must not, I will not, be compromised."—Boston Transcript.

A Social Dilemma.

In society:

Fashionable daughter to plain mother—Oh, mamma, my fiancee has caused me much pain to-day.

Plain Mother—Well, why don't you take something for it? I'll make you a mustard plaster. It won't never do to be gettin' sick right as the society season opens.—Washington Critic.

At the Police Station.

Lieutenant to officer—What have you got?

Officer—Plain drunk.

Lieutenant—How many does this make

Officer—Only ten for to-night.

Lieutenant—Who is he?

Officer—Another one that swore off on New Year's.

The British Parliament will be opened, not by Her Majesty, but by Royal Commission in eighteen days. The interval, it is said by good authorities, will show whether or not the peace of Europe is to be broken this year. Except the visit of Mr. Morley and Lord Ripon to Dublin, which still stands as a promise for this interval, there are no political demonstrations of peculiar importance to be expected.

Henry Markle, of Welland, who made such a determined attempt to take his life on Wednesday by cutting open his abdomen with his pocket knife, died at 11 o'clock on Friday night.

ASLEEP FOR ELEVEN YEARS.

A Wisconsin Rip Van Winkle Goes to Bed in 1877 and is Still Napping.

A Milwaukee, Wis., despatch says: The case of Herman Harms, a Buffalo County farmer, who has enjoyed a Rip Van Winkle sleep of eleven years, completely puzzles the physicians. In 1877 Harms moved to this State from Illinois, taking a farm on the Mississippi River, opposite Winona, in Utica Township. While attending his sick wife one day he suddenly fell asleep and dropped to the floor. He was picked up by his friends and placed upon the bed, and has not since been off it. He sleeps soundly all day, and at 9 or 10 o'clock in the evening rises, takes a little nourishment and at once lies down and goes to sleep again. During the time he is awake he pays no attention to anybody, but drinks a little soup or coffee without making any remarks, and at once goes sound to sleep. His sleep is quiet and without any apparent pain or discomfort.

When he first fell asleep he weighed 180 pounds, but he has now dwindled down to ninety pounds. His pulse is regular and very strong, rather more vigorous than the pulse of the average wideawake man. His head is very warm, while the flesh of his body is cold and has the appearance of a dead man's flesh. While he sleeps one hand is closed tightly in front of him, and the other presses firmly against the right temple, and he invariably sleeps in the same position. His eyelids are seen to blink very fast at times as if the light hurt him.

The opinions of physicians as to his trouble are very various. Some say it is kidney trouble, some say he is crazy, and others assert that his heart is in a dormant state, and that he will never recover from his present condition. Mr. Harms is 49 years old, and, up to the time he was taken in 1877, had not been sick a day in his life. He has five children.

When the story of his peculiar ailment was first published it was so ridiculed that no one took the trouble to investigate the case. It is a fact that this man has slept eleven years, and only once has he dressed himself and gone out of the house. The doctors say he will soon die, because he is losing flesh so fast. At the time he awoke in 1882 he was told he had been asleep for four years, but he would not believe it. He was led to the mirror, and when he saw his gray whiskers and long hair his surprise was very great. His hair, which has not been cut, is now over two feet long and very black. His flesh is of a yellow color and is very flabby. Harms came to this country from Hanover in 1869.

SEEN IN THE SPIRIT.

A Charlottetown Servant Girl's Vision of the Fate of a Missing Man.

A Charlottetown, P. E. I., despatch says: Eighteen months ago Charles H. Yeo returned from Winnipeg to visit his relatives in Prince Edward Island. On New Year's day, a year ago, he was in Charlottetown on his return to Winnipeg. While here he visited the house of a relative, and after leaving it disappeared as mysteriously and completely as if the earth had swallowed him. He had several hundred dollars on his person, and, no trace being obtainable, his parents offered $500 for information of his whereabouts, dead or alive. That was last summer. Nothing more was heard of it till this week when the Grand Jury met, and Miss Tuck, a domestic, appeared and told a most extraordinary story. Upon hearing of the reward offered for Yeo's whereabouts she prayed that she might discover the secret. In aswer to her prayer she had a vision. In the spirit she saw a man walking up and down in front of a certain house. Her description of the man tallies completely with that of Yeo. A man, whom she minutely describes, came out of that house and asked Yeo to go to the rear stable to see a horse. The two were joined by two others while there. The first-mentioned stranger drew a knife and stabbed Yeo to the heart. The murdered man's pockets were searched and a large amount of money obtained and divided among the three men. The body was stowed in an oatbin, and subsequently the bin and the body were taken some distance away in a sleigh, a hole cut in the ice by the same three men and the body thrown in, when the men returned to the city. This story of her vision has produced a profound sensation. The investigation is still proceeding.

The Man Who Swore Off.

Wife—John, I suppose you have some money saved up, haven't you?

John—Not a cent.

"Why, John! It is a year since you stopped drinking, and you have worked like a slave every day since."

"That's true."

"Where is your money, then?"

"The money I saved by swearing off I had to loan to old friends who didn't swear off."

The Woes of the Bachelor.

A married man earning from eight hundred to twelve hundred dollars a year has no place in this city. He has either to live in very unsuitable parts of the city, in two or three rooms, or in a house far beyond his means. In this fact lies very largely the reason why the young men do not marry.—Montreal Witness.

What Kept Him Out Late.

Two Mormon Wives (speaking together)—Husband, what in the world has kept you out so late?

Mormon Husband—I have just been proposing to a few of Elder Jones' daughters. I tell you, that little Kittie Jones is a daisy.—Texas Siftings.

"Marriage is the salvation of a car-driver," said one of that brotherhood. "I average about $12 or $14 a week, and when I was single I never had a cent after I paid each week's debts. I had nowhere to go when I laid off, and so I would loaf in a beer saloon and spend 50 cents or $1 at a time. Now I go home, chuck myself on a lounge, have a cup of hot coffee always ready and a good woman to talk to, and I get along on less than $10 a week."—New York Sun.

A report has reached Scotland Yard of a horrible murder and suicide. Richard Glaister discovered his wife faithless and chopped off her head, then killed himself. Their 2-year-old child was found half smothered with blood, playing with and caressing the head of its mother.

MR. BUCHANAN'S LOST LOVE.

A Pathetic Chapter in the History of the Late President.

A St. Paul, Minn., despatch says: The Globe publishes a dozen letters from the late President Buchanan to Letitia Duncan, the sweetheart of his youth, who died here a week ago in her 94th year. The letters are accompanied by a sketch of the late President's love affair. Miss Duncan was born at Erie, Pa., on August 29th, 1794. Her father was a tavern keeper and she was the belle of the place. Buchanan, who was an apprentice in a printing office across the street, boarded at the tavern, and fell in love with Letitia. Her father objected and forbade him the house. The lovers met in secret until the handsome person and showy uniform of Second Lieut. Daniel Turner, of the United States navy, appeared on the scene and charmed the fair one's affections away from the future President.

After being repulsed by the girl's father Buchanan stumbled to his room and wrote to Letitia the following letter:

MY DEAR LETITIA,—I shall never link my fortunes with any one, my dearest girl, unless they are with you. Your father's cruelty is measured by the depth of my pocket. I shall never marry, Letty dearest, so fare thee well until death.

BUCHANAN.

But a few days before penning this letter Buchanan dedicated the following lines to Miss Duncan:

Her lovely hair in rings wave, and hanging over her shoulders.
She was fit to entice the heart of any man who'd behold her.
Her teeth were white as the ivory showed,
And her breath was spice wherever it flowed.
Her father was cruel, a sight of me he couldn't endure:
The reason why, because I was poor.
I dare not enter the dwelling where dwells my lovely jewel.

Finally Buchanan desired to go away and wrote this farewell letter:

MY DEAR LETITIA.—I can no longer endure a sight of the place that held my happy hours, as even the budding flowers remind me of you, whom I shall never see again. The place is blest to contain a flower like you, dear Letty, but weeds like I must seek some other habitation, so, dear girl, I send you this time-piece as a remembrance that poor Jemis loved you and never shall love another.

Good-bye, my love may you be blessed by God is the wish of your heartbroken

JAMES BUCHANAN.

With the letter was an elegant gold watch, the cases of which were set with ten amethysts and one turquoise. This watch, the above letters and verses and a dozen letters from young Turner are among the effects of Miss Duncan.

SAD BUT ROMANTIC.

The Vicissitudes of the Once Wealthy Dr. Gordon, who Died in Poverty.

A Texarkana (Ark.) special says: Dr. John Gordon died on Monday night in a little box cabin which charitable neighbors here had provided for him. His life was sad but romantic. He was born in Scotland in 1813. George Hamilton Gordon, the fourth Earl of Aberdeen, was his cousin. In the year of his birth his cousin was created a British peer, with the title of Viscount Gordon, for the successful negotiation of the treaty of Toplitz, by which he induced the Austrian Emperor to join the alliance against his son-in-law, Napoleon.

Dr. John Gordon came to America in 1843 and engaged in business for a short time successfully in New York, and then moved to St. Louis. He was an intimate personal friend of Senator Thomas H. Benton and an influential factor in the politics of St. Louis. Here he was also prosperous, and he became wealthy in the management of a wholesale business. Reverses finally overtook him, and he surrendered all to the liquidation of claims against him.

The doctor then came to Texarkana, and hoped to make a living for himself by the sale of medicine which he manufactured, but was harassed by persecutions on account of not having a license. The old gentleman struggled along bravely and held the respect of those who knew him to the last.

The doctor's claim to the earldom of Aberdeen he never discussed, but others assert that the obstacle to the succession was a refusal to take the "burgess oath," a requirement growing out of the establishment of the state church of Scotland.

Lord Byron's father, "Mad Jack Byron," married Katharine Gordon, of Aberdeen, and the doctor was therefore related to the poet Byron.

Take It Easy.

Chambers' Journal makes the sensible suggestion that it is always advisable to hear the end of a sentence. A literary man, for instance, once said to one of his lady friends: "Will you accept my hand"—Gushing maiden: Why, er—so sudden—so unexpected." Literary man (proceeding, unmoved)—"book on political economy?" Somewhat similar is a story told of another couple. He—"How bright the stars are to-night! They are almost as bright as"— She (expecting "your eyes")—"Oh, you flatter me!" He (proceeding)—"they were last night."

Death of a Famous Quoiter.

Mr. John Rennie, who for a series of years held the champion quoiter's belt for Scotland against all comers, died at Alva on the 2nd inst. Mr. Rennie (who was a weaver to trade) did not indulge much in his favorite game for about twenty years back. Deceased (who was about 66 years of age) died in the same house in which he was born.

At the Church Sociable.

Vivacious young lady—Guess what we are going to have to-night, Mrs. Bascom—charades.

Mrs. Bascom—I knowed it! I smelt 'em clear out to the gate.—Burlington Free Press.

The husband of a woman who left him to follow the so-called Latter Day Saints in Bruce district, near Morley, Mich., organized a tar and feather brigade to decorate the missionary. He appealed to the Howard City officials for protection. While the brigade were awaiting developments the blind teacher having already folded his tent, a notice was served on Leader Smith, advising him to leave the district within twenty-four hours or take the consequences. He left on Wednesday. It is understood tar and feathers were ready for application, and would have been used on Wednesday night had the missionary remained.

TWENTY YEARS IN BED.

Heart Disease Produces One of the Most Remarkable Cases in Medical History.

A gentleman resides in Cleveland, who is afflicted with a heart disease which is probably the most remarkable in the annals of medical history. Dr. J. G. Smith, a prominent physician, has for twenty years been compelled to retain a recumbent position. His case has attracted much attention in medical circles, both in this country and in Europe.

Thirty years ago Dr. Smith was an active practitioner in Cleveland. About that time he was prostrated by overwork, and in 1867 he was taken to his bed with a peculiar trouble of the heart. Since then he has never been on his feet or for any length of time sat in an upright position. His trouble lay in a peculiarity of the valves of his heart, which refuse to act when he is in an upright position, but which organ performs its functions perfectly when he is recumbent.

Though for the best part of his life confined to his bed, Dr. Smith has wonderfully improved his time, devoting himself to literary work, mastering foreign languages and perfecting several inventions, which latter have proved sources of large incomes to himself and associates in their manufacture.

Dr. Smith is a large and robust appearing man, and aside from the peculiar action of his heart, is in perfect health. He occupies the remarkable position of being able to commit suicide by simply standing upright.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Latest Scottish News.

It is stated that Col. Murdoch Smith, R. E., Director of the Museum of Science and Arts, Edinburgh, has been created a K. C. B.

On the 31st ult. the foundation stone of the new Jubilee Town Hall at Linlithgow, was laid with Masonic honors by Mr. Peter McLagan, M. P.

The managers of the Royal Edinburgh Asylum for the Insane have resolved to erect on their Craig House estate a new asylum at a cost of £60,000.

It is understood that the succession to the Lovat Peerage is again to be contested. Mr. John Fraser, Carnarvon, Wales, the claimant, is at present in Scotland arranging about his case.

A St. Andrew's Club is to be established in South London. The object of it is to give opportunity to Scotsmen to meet and engage in debates which are opportune to Scottish interests politically and socially.

At the British War Office it is understood that the Seaforth Highlanders on their departure for Ireland some time this year will be succeeded at Edinburgh by the Cameron Highlanders, now at Devonport.

The death is announced at Montrose on the 1st inst. of Mr. James Ross, Sheriff-Clerk of Forfarshire, in the 67th year of his age. He had been intimately connected, professionally and otherwise, with public affairs in Montrose for forty years.

While digging a grave in the churchyard of Coupar Angus the sexton came upon a portion of the floor of the ancient Abbey of Coupar. Underneath the pavement were found two stone coffins, each containing skeletons, the bones being entire.

There has just been completed the erection of a stained glass window in St. Cuthbert's Free Church, Edinburgh, to the memory of the late Rev. Sir Henry Wellwood Moncrieff, who for thirty-one years discharged the pastoral duties of the congregation.

Rev. Donald Mackenzie, D. D., minister of the parish of Strath, Inverness shire, died suddenly at Kilbride Manse on the 3rd inst., in the 71st year of his age. The father and grandfather of the deceased clergyman preceded him as ministers of the same parish.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Savings Bank, stated to be the largest savings bank in the world, took place on the 6th inst. The Lord Provost, who presided, said the total funds were £4,680,000, and the liabilities due to depositors £4,622,000, leaving a balance of £58,000. The depositors number 137,204, being an increase of 3,541 for the year.

Elgin boasts of a centenarian of the name of Peter Laing, who on Thursday last entered upon his 104th year, and was on that day entertained to a dinner by his fellow-citizens. Peter is still hale and hearty, and during the evening he sang several songs. The following resolution was adopted: "That this meeting of the citizens of Elgin warmly congratulate Peter Laing upon the attainment of his 104th year, and that a committee be appointed to obtain funds in order to maintain the venerable gentleman in comfortable circumstances during the remainder of his life." A considerable sum has already been collected.

On Monday of last week passed away Mr. John Smith, farmer, Holnapiat, Glenlivet, at the venerable age of 79 years. The deceased was a bachelor, and, aided by his sister, his senior, and a brother, who is also verging on fourscore, wrought away most industriously on the upland and exposed holding until severe illness laid him aside for the last four or five years from active work. Of a genial and obliging disposition, John was held in high esteem by old and young, and many a friendly meeting took place at his ingle neuk, especially in the celebration of rural social customs now seemingly doomed to pass away. It is worthy of remark how closely the deceased kept to his native heath, for in all his long life only three nights did he spend from home, and never put foot on the iron horse.—Elgin Courant Courier.

Dr. John Gordon, who died at Texarkana, Ark., on Sunday, was a native of Scotland, who went to St. Louis in 1843. His friends claim that he was the rightful heir to the Earldom of Aberdeen, Scotland, to which he failed to succeed because his father refused to take the burgess oath. He was a second cousin to Lord Byron and Miss Millbanke, whom Lord Byron married, and from whom he was afterwards divorced. Deceased was a remarkable-looking man, having a massive head and fine features and possessing wonderful vitality and fortitude.

The Emir of Afghanistan has fallen in love with bagpipes and has ordered 200 of them for Cabul. The Shah of Persia has also ordered a brass band. Thus music soothes the savage breast.

The Present Days are Best.

The past is dead and buried, and I have locked the door
Upon its joys and sorrows, to open nevermore;
He key is safely hidden on memory's faithful breast,
And to my heart I whisper, "The present days are best."

Think not I have forgotten the cherished friends of yore;
Call them not lost, my loved ones—they're just within the door;
And often, when I'm lonely, they share my evening rest,
And their dear voices whisper, "The present days are best."

O golden days of childhood! O girlhood's sunny hours!
When in the fragrant wildwood I plucked the summer flowers,
Your very memory cheers me like some dear, welcome guest;
Yet chide me not for saying, "The present days are best."

Dear are the friendly faces that meet me on the way,
Sweet are the roadside blossems that smile on me to-day;
A few bright sprays I'll gather and wear them on my breast,
For they will softly whisper, "The present days are best."

To do the work appointed by Him who rules my life;
To face, with dauntless spirit, the world's opposing strife;
Or if, in utter weakness, o'er noonday I must rest,
God wills it and I answer, "The present days are best."

O friends! who count your dearest among the silent dead,
Sit not within the shadows, mourning the joys now fled;
The living claim your service, and they indeed are blest:
Who help to make for others the present days the best.

ANGELIQUE DE LANDS.

Railroading in a Blizzard.

I talked with the engineer as I came down, and he told me that the storm in Dakota was the fiercest ever known. He had seen several of the train hands as they came into St. Paul, and they gave a terrible account of the state of affairs. All freight trains had been abandoned, as it was utterly impossible to find men to man them. It is hard to see how any one could stand the exposure to which the freight brakemen are now subjected. The brakes must be put on constantly, which involves crawling along the narrow footboards on top of the cars, which are coated with ice and snow and exceedingly slippery. With the wind blowing at fifty miles an hour, and the train butting its way through the snow, it is impossible for the brakemen to maintain an upright position, and they are obliged to crawl from car to car on their hands and knees, handle the cold iron, with the thermometer 40 degrees below zero, and remain exposed to the storm for hours, as they never have time to go to the caboose. The men have no shelter beyond what they can find by clinging to the ladders between the cars, and suffer fearfully. The engineer told me that dozens of men had frozen their hands and feet, and that finally several crews had refused to work longer and had taken shelter in the caboose. It is a well known fact in the Northwest that scarcely a freight brakeman works more than a year, as the experience of one winter is such as to make them prefer anything to repeating it.—Interview in St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Neighboring Wit.

Whereas, we spell jail with a j, an a, an i and an l, the Canadians perversely make it gaol—but they get there all the same.—Buffalo Courier.

Whiskey lowers the man and raises the devil.—Whitehall Times.

How to give cats the typhoid fever is the latest medical discovery. What next?—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette. How to keep them from running around nights.—Chicago Inter-Ocean. And to keep them from singing.

Copper, gold and lead are found in the wells of Wolfe county, East Kentucky. Lead can be found almost anywhere in that region, though we do not like the way they have of passing it around.—Jacksonville Herald.

A man who wanted to advertise in the Worcester Spy for a "fawn-colored bull terrier pup" was surprised to find that the compositor had made him advertise for a "fire alarm bell tower key."

Shaving While Asleep.

A barber who keeps a shop in Palace Road, Lambeth, London, is reported to have performed a rather clever feat on Tuesday night. The shop was full of customers, and one of them was undergoing the operation of shaving, when it was noticed that the barber had his eyes closed, though he still kept passing the razor over the face of his visitor. After some time, and when the operation was finished, what was the surprise of those in the shop to hear the barber exclaim, "Oh, no; not yet," at the same time opening his eyes. It then became evident that he had been fast asleep, and had shaved the man while in that condition. He explained that he had been up the two previous nights, and that that would account for his sleepiness, but the practice in shaving had so grown upon him that he was even able to perform his duty while asleep.—London Letter.

The Letter, but Not the Spirit.

Hotel porter (to countryman)—See here sir, don't you see that notice?

Countryman—Yes; "Gentlemen not spit on the floor." I ain't spittin' on the floor, mister; I'm spittin' agin the wall.

A Hunter's Ill-Luck.

First city sportsman—Just back from a hunting trip, I see. Get any game?

Second city sportsman (who did considerable unintentional killing)—N—o, I had to come home; ran out of dogs.

The ten most successful race horses in United States, England and France last year won the following amounts respectively: $306,770, $304,050, $218,450. The largest winners were Hanover $89,770, Reve d' Or $51,800 and Tenebreuse $59,000.

"So you always manage to put up with your Tartar of a wife!" "Oh, yes! We have lots of fun together." "How is that?" "Well, you see, my wife, when she gets into a passion, is in the habit of throwing at me anything that comes in her way. Every time she hits me, she is pleased, and every time she misses, I am pleased; and thus we are never short of amusement."

LATEST FASHIONS FOR LADIES.

Novelties of the Season Now Favored in Female Circles.

A fashion now is to veil the front of decollete bodices with a fichu; this is caught in a sharp point at the back, making the opening V-shaped. It does not cover much of the shoulders, and crossing at the front fastens at the waist in another point.

Many of these fichus are made with the two sides differing. Some have one side of plain gauze and the other of gauze dotted with tinsel. Another fancy is to have one side plain and the other striped with the narrowest width of picot-edged ribbon. Some of them, made of silk mull, have one side of the fichu elaborately embroidered in gold.

The new sashes displayed in the windows of the shops are extremely rich and gorgeously colored. They show large designs, brocaded in velvet upon gros grain, of fruits, flowers, feathers and birds. The flower designs are the prettiest; one has big shaded scarlet poppies in their foliage, brocaded on a corn-colored ribbon twenty inches wide. Another beauty shows bluettes upon a sash of the palest blue. Silken spears of wheat upon pale green, and masses of pink, cream and crimson roses upon coral color are among those most admired.

One of the prettiest of the new French long cloaks, and one eminently becoming to young faces, is of smooth gray cloth bordered with a deep band of gray astrakhan. It fits smoothly and closely to the figure in the back, the fulness over the tournure being so deftly plaited in underneath that the smooth lines are not broken. In front it is slightly full over the bust, this fulness being gathered in at the waist low down and concealed under the astrakhan, giving a slim, long-waisted effect to the figure. It buttons down to this point and from there falls open, bordered on either side with the astrakhan. The sleeves, quite full below the elbow, are gathered into a broad band of the fur at the wrist. A silver clasp and high fur collar complete it at the throat.

On nearly all handsome gowns is to be more and ever-increasing application of tinsel braid of some sort. Some have the whole front of the bodice covered with it.

These tinsel braids so much in use are usually in the form of flat half-inch-wide galloon, of the color of the dress upon which it is applied, into which is woven the tinsel threads—either gold, bronze, copper or silver—so thickly that the original color is hinted at rather than seen.

All evening dresses this winter have sleeves. Those of black lace and gauze for matrons have generally a little arrangement of the gauze, puffed and be-ribboned and called by courtesy a sleeve, which comes down half way between the shoulder and the elbow. Others have a puff of the material for the sleeve which is caught up to the shoulder-strap on the outer side of the arm, of which member they conceal but a very small portion.

Fur-trimmed bonnets make their appearance at this season of the year, and for this purpose sable, beaver and black Persian lamb are much used in borders, in loops for trimming, in tabs on the crown and in miniature heads set about in the trimming. These are seen alike in both bonnets and turbans of velvet or of the soft piece felt. A green embroidered felt turban has a soft crown edged with sable; the back of the crown has white ribbon loops coming up towards the front. A shirred round turban of brown velvet has a natural beaver band, while one of green velvet, with two rows of gathers on cords around the middle of the crown, is edged with black Persian. A black watered bow in front has gilt pins thrust through it.

Redfern is making tailor gowns of dark blue diagonal cloth, with a vest, collar and cuffs and border to the plain underskirt of the same material, striped with narrow diagonal lines of white. The draperies of these gowns are much less voluminous than has been common in the last season's tailor suits and with them comes a walking-jacket of blue cloth with a rough finish. These jackets have a vest that is elaborately braided with blue and silver tinsel braid, a little of it showing on the collar, and the muff worn with it is of blue fox fur, which harmonizes charmingly with the blue and white gown.

A pretty toilet made recently for a debutante had a petticoat of white moire. Over this was a drapery of copper-colored cashmere of very fine quality, caught up on the right hip with a big mother-of-pearl buckle, which held multitudinous loops and ends of broad watered ribbon of the same shade, with a picot edge that fell to the hem of a white petticoat. The bodice had a V-shaped front of the moire, without an opening, the fastenings being concealed under the folds of the cashmere, which was gathered on the shoulders and drawn to a sharp, shirred point below the waist, where a smaller buckle confined more flots of ribbon. A broad sash of copper-colored watered ribbon was fastened to the back of the basque, and the sleeves and throat were filled in with thickly plaited frills of lace.

An economical way of disposing of old wrappers of silk or cashmere, when they do not happen to be of pale colors and are worn out in the waist, is to cut off the body and set the skirts upon a yoke, making them serve for a petticoat to wear in bad weather when white skirts cannot preserve their purity for ten minutes. Pale colored wrappers are nearly always extravagant, as they fade and soil so easily, and there are now so many beautiful and becoming shades among the darker tints that any complexion can be suited.

A charming and not very expensive tea gown is of tearose Indian cashmere, cut in princesse shape, with a long train and rather a big dress improver in the back. The front is cut out square, but only about three inches down from the throat, and a high rolling collar of the Medici shape is set on to this square, which is filled in with delicate ivory-colored lace. To the lower edge of this square is set on two very wide scarfs of the same shade of china crape, the fulness held in place by a band of silver tinsel braid. These scarfs fall to the foot of the gown and are held at the waist by a loose silver girdle, such as is much worn now. The elbow sleeves of the cashmere are finished by a puff of lace tied half way between elbow and wrist by narrow picot-edged ribbon.

Bonnets grow every day more and more shapeless, crumpled masses of velvet that convey no distinct impression to even the feminine mind, and no man even attempts to comprehend them. Their progress is ever downward also, and the reproach of the theatre-goer by next season will be a thing of the past. Nearly all are edged with narrow, curling bands of ostrich feathers, which are infinitely becoming. Those who can dispense with strings do so, but it is only broader faces that look well without them. Oval outlines are greatly aided by the little narrow velvet straps, held with fancy jewelled pins under each ear. For fresh young faces are crisp little bonnets, made of shirred pink China crape, adorned with erect and multitudinous loops and ends of picot-edged ribbon, pink roses and algrettes, and tied daintily under the chin. They are worn to concerts, late teas and for evening calls.

A handsome imported gown is of shot moire in white and gold. The dress is cut in princesse fashion, the skirt gored closely in front and very full in the back, this fulness being held in many narrow thick plaits over the tournure. The bodice is sleeveless and is veiled by an odd fichu, one side of which is of point applique lace lapped diagonally from the right side to the left, while the other is of loops of gold satin and white moire ribbon laid one above another, terminating low on the right hip in a point to which is fastened long loops and ends of both sorts of ribbon which reach to the end of the moire skirt. The lace side of the fichu widens into two ends a yard in width and three yards long. These ends are drawn on each side into long loose panniers that fall to the skirt's edge, the ends being concealed under the plaits in the back.

The very nicest and most stylish wear in the way of cloaks for bad January weather are the long, close-fitting garments that cover the entire figure. These are made of black, dark blue and green diagonal cloth, lined in waist and sleeves with chamois skins, which gives warmth without bulk, and faced throughout with a good quality of satin. These coats must be very carefully and smoothly fitted, and are usually trimmed either by being braided, the braid set upon edge and stitched to the cloth, or silk passementerie is set on all the way down the front. This latter trimming is made of smooth silk cords worked into round designs, and is very rich in effect. The wrap covers the entire skirt, and, while plain in front, is very full in the back below the waist. The collar is plain and high and is covered with braid. The braided sleeves flare a good deal at the wrist, but there are inner sleeves below the elbow which fit close for the sake of warmth.

They Went Out.

"I think the rooms are exactly what we want, don't you, my dear?" said a gentleman to his wife after they had looked at a suite of rooms in a fashionable house.

"Yes, indeed," replied the wife with great enthusiasm, "they are just what I want."

"Then we'll take them?"

"Oh, yes, do; I'm so tired of dragging around looking at apartments."

"I'm sure you'll like them," said the landlady, blandly, "and I'll make it as pleasant as possible for you."

"Oh, thank you!"

"Yes; they are really very desirable and it isn't everybody I let them to, but—I suppose you'll call it mere flattery—the moment you asked to look at them I hoped you'd take the rooms. I—I—really I was so pleased with your appearance and I'm delighted that the rooms please you."

"Our references are satisfactory?"

"Oh, perfectly. I hope the terms are quite satisfactory to you?"

"Quite—very reasonable, indeed."

"Ah, I think so myself. I've been geeting sixty-five for the rooms and they have rented for seventy, but to you I——"

"You're very kind, I'm sure," murmurs the lady. "O, George, what a sunny, cosy corner for the baby's crib!"

"The—baby's—crib!" gasps the landlady.

"Yes, indeed; we have the dearest, sweetest, cunningest, loveliest little darling, only 6 months old and"—

The landlady's bell rings sharply, a white-capped maid appears.

"Sally," says her offended and insulted mistress, "show these persons out!"

"Why, madam, we—we——"

"Show them out, Sally! A baby indeed! Thank heaven I found you out in time! How could I have been so deceived and imposed upon? Good day, sir; Sally, show them out!"—Zenas Dane in Detroit Free Press.

Dan Rice Entrapped.

Dan Rice, the veteran showman, was nicely fooled one day, as he was engaged announcing the wonders of his circus outside the tent. A man standing with a little boy in the crowd near by cried out: "I'll bet you a dollar you cannot let me see a lion." "Done!" said the showman, eagerly; "put down the money." The man placed a dollar in the hand of a bystander, and Dan did the same. "Now walk this way," said the showman, "and I'll soon convince you. There you are," said he triumphantly; "look in that corner at the beautiful Numidian lion." "I don't see any," responded the man. "What's the matter with you?" asked the showman. "I'm blind," was the grinning reply, and in a few minutes the man pocketed the two dollars and went away.

Stiff and Proud.

Wife—Well, our new girl is going to leave, John.

Husband—Why?

"She says your manner toward her on the street is entirely too cool; that we haven't our family arms on the kitchen stove lids and broom handles, and that on the whole we're not of her set."

All It Was Worth.

Young Man (to editor)—What do you think I ought to get for the poem, sir?

Editor—You ought to get $10.

Young Man (overjoyed)—Oh, that is fully as much as I expected.

Editor—Yes, $10 or thirty days.

That was more than he expected.

Influential citizens of Sydney have raised a valuable testimonial for Beach, the retired champion.

Hanlan's race with Edward Trickett in Australia does not take place till the 3rd of May.

"ALL NATIONS WITNESSES."

The Wonderful Mistakes of Scientists and Educators.

"Prove all things" seems to be the guiding maxim of the people of this age.

This would be all right, were it not for the "know-alls" in every community, who are sure that every introducer of a new idea is a "crank," and that every new invention is "utterly impracticable."

The astonishing fact is that in this class educated men and scientists are found. In the days of George Stephenson, the perfector of the locomotive engine, the scientists proved conclusively that a railway train could never be driven by steam-power successfully without peril; but the rushing express trains all over the world show how mistaken they were. There went up a guffaw of laughter at Professor Morse's proposition to make the lightning of heaven his errand boy, and it was proved conclusively that the thing could never be done; but now all the news of the wide world by Associated Press, put in your hands every morning and night, has made all nations witnesses.

Rev. Dr. Talmage in one of his sermons says: "If ten men should come to you when you are sick with appalling sickness, and say they had the same sickness and took a certain medicine, and it cured them, you would probably take it. Now, suppose ten other men should come up and say, "We don't believe there is anything in that medicine." "Well," I say, "have you tried it?" "No, I never tried it; but I don't believe there is anything in it." Of course you discredit their testimony. The sceptic may come and say "There is no power in your religion." "Have you ever tried it?" "No, no." "Then avaunt!" "Let me take the testimony of the millions of souls that have been converted to God, and comforted in trial, and solaced in the last hour. We will take their testimony as they cry "We are witnesses!"

The proprietors of Warner's safe cure have received over 10,000 voluntary testimonials to the efficacy of that medicine. These have come from almost every civilized country, and they may fairly claim "it has made all nations witnesses."

The evidence comes from all classes. The highest medical authorities, like Dr. Robson, late surgeon in the English navy, and Dr. Wilson, editor of "Health," of London, Eng.; and clergymen of the highest reputation like Rev. Dr. Rankin, ex-chaplain of the U. S. Senate, and Dr. Kendrick, of the Rochester University, one of the international revisers of the New Testament, are among the published witnesses.

Hundreds of these testimonials have been and are being published. They can be easily verified. A standing offer of $5,000 for proof that any one of them is not true, so far as the proprietors know, is a fair guarantee of their genuineness.

If a man suffering from any one of the ailments, of which there are so many, growing out of kidney derangement, is it not more than foolish for him to refuse to try Warner's safe cure when thousands testify they have been cured by it?

Think of it!

The men who refuse to believe that anything can be valuable because it is in conflict with old ideas and methods are the men who "get left" in this world and go before their time to try another.

Her Two Sets.

Mr. Featherly—What beautiful teeth Miss Smith has!

Miss Sharptongue—Yes, I think this set much prettier than her other.

"I am weary of living," moaned poor Mrs. Black. "For I'm fairly worn out with the ache in my back."

My nerves are a chain
Of weakness and pain,
And my poor head aching as if it would crack."

"Now, don't be discouraged," cried good Mrs White.

"It is never so dark but there's promise of light:
I can tell you, in brief,
What will give you relief—
Pierce's Favorite Prescription will soon set you right."

It is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case or money will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper. Large bottle (100 doses) $1. Six for $5.

The Lady in the Horse-Car.

Woman with satchel enters car, sits down; enters conductor, asks fare; woman opens satchel, takes out purse, shuts satchel, opens purse, takes out dime, shuts purse, opens satchel, puts in purse, shuts satchel, offers dime, receives nickel, opens satchel, takes out purse, shuts satchel, opens purse, puts in nickel, closes purse, opens satchel, puts in purse, closes satchel; stop the car, please.—Philadelphia Record.

Don't You Know

that you cannot afford to neglect that catarrh? Don't you know that it may lead to consumption, to insanity, to death? Don't you know that it can be easily cured? Don't you know that while the thousand and one nostrums you have tried have utterly failed that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a certain cure? It has stood the test of years, and there are hundreds of thousands of grateful men and women in all parts of the country who can testify to its efficacy. All druggists.

Pocket Phlebotomy.

Dr. Bigbill—You may thank your stars, sir, that physicians in these days don't bleed patients afflicted with your malady as they used to. Patient (dubiously)—I'm not so sure that they don't, doctor.—Boston Transcript.

The Boundary Line

Between comfort and discomfort is often very slight. Have you rheumatism or neuralgia? or are you a sufferer from obscure nervous pains? Why suffer longer? You can purchase for 10 cents a bottle of that king of pain—Polson's Nerviline, or you can get a large bottle for 25 cents. It cures promptly. It is sure, pleasant to take, and never fails to cure all kinds of pain. Don't wait an hour, but send to any drug store and get a trial bottle. Nerviline, the sure pain cure.

At the Restaurant.

Guest—These eggs remind me of the miracle of the raising of Lazarus.

Waiter—Well, eggs four days old are fresh enough, ain't they?

Guest—I'm not complaining of the eggs; it's the odor that accompanies them.

Can a Man Swallow a Cannon-ball?

Well, "that depends." He can if his throat is large enough and the cannon-ball not too large. The question really seems worthy of some consideration in view of the size of some of the pills that are prescribed for suffering humanity. Why not throw them to "the dogs," and take Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets? Small sugar-coated, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, in glass, and always fresh.

It is rumored in British society that the Queen's health is much less satisfactory than is commonly supposed, and that if an improvement is not visible after her forthcoming visit to the continent her physician will feel much anxiety concerning her. It is said, indeed, that Her Majesty's health has been breaking up for the past three years, and that accordingly she has been compelled to give up all the occupations in which she used to delight.

—There are 10,548 more men than women in Manitoba.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DUNL. 5 18

Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer who will give me their P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, FEB. 2, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Our contemporary, the Dundalk Herald, gets off some good things every week under the heading, "among our Exchanges." Last week it contained the following pungent and sensible paragraph:—

"The Markdale Standard of last week contains a letter from "A Granger" in answer to the Flesherton paper's insinuation regarding "the buyers in a neighboring village." He gives the Advance man no opportunity for disclaiming the insinuation, but positively takes to heart that Markdale is the intended show ground and circus where these hopping clowns and jumping jacks referred to by the Advance are to be seen. Well, we have no wish to dispute their claim, though we did dispute the insinuation and whilst we congratulate the Markdale buyers on their acrobatic performances, we desire to take a back seat for the future merely looking on at the remainder of the "shin-dig." An item in regard to a Granger's letter worthy of notice is that he attempts to speak with authority under a nomme de plume, he says: "If an editor or town considers they are raising themselves by speaking evil of or ridiculing others, I consider their judgement exceedingly faulty." Who is I? A Granger. Who is a Granger? Nobody. Then what weight does he suppose his judgement and consideration can have? Verily none. The Advance man is known and respected; his utterances have weight in proportion to the circulation of his paper. But a Granger, who is he? It may be the editor in disguise, it may be Tom Tootle or Bill Tinker. No one knows and no one cares. But let us here inform a Granger that if he desires to speak with authority he must disclose his name so that people may at least know whose ideas they are following, otherwise his articles can have no weight, and the Advance man may turn the tables and say that your "article in itself is not worthy of attention."

Dundalk has a District Grand Council of "Ancient Order of Redmen." Some people may imagine, when they read this, that Dundalk is located somewhere on one of the late "Big Bear's" plantations, away out in the "great lone land, beyond the setting sun." As a matter of fact it is situated within ten or eleven miles of civilization!! [N.B.—That last word is a delicate allusion to Flesherton.

Dominion Councillor Buchanan, of Hamilton, strongly advocates the union of the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, and Royal Templars, on the principle that "union is strength." We like the idea very much, and hope the scheme will be put into practical shape at an early date. It seems the chief objections come from the Good Templars. We have heard objections from other sources, but they can readily be met. If the more important obstacles can be as successfully dealt with, the union will only be a question of time. But, in this age of innovation, what guarantee have we that other temperance organizations would not spring into existence in case of the contemplated amalgamation taking place?

The Dundalk Herald has a sensible editorial, in its last week's issue, anent "Religious Instruction in Schools." We quite agree with the Herald that politicians indulged in a senseless warefare, when they introduced the question at the last provinciale lections. Whether the Ross Bible, or the one more particularly identified with the reign of that illustrious monarch, good King James I of England and VIth of Scotland, be used in our schools, the Teacher will be obliged—if he consults his own safety—to avoid comment for fear of giving a coloring to his interpretation which might be at variance with that of some of the pupil's parents. And to avoid explaining the Scripture would defeat the very object of their introduction into our common school curriculum. It would soon become a mere matter of form. Unless taught in a more practical manner than at present, we cannot see what good it will do.

The following item has appeared in the Collingwood Bulletin for over two months in succession—never missing a week—

"Flesherton's new Roller Mill is expected to be in operation about New Years."

Of course we have no very strong objections to seeing it in the familiar old "Select paragraphs" column, sandwiched among patent medicine locals; but really a news item two months old is rather stale reading. If our friend of the Bulletin wishes to use it any longer to separate the "soothing syrup" item from the "Asthma" one, will he kindly change the wording somewhat. It would brighten those "select paragraphs," and would also help to boom us in better style.

Maxwell School Matters.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—I noticed in the ADVANCE of last week, an epistle over the signature of James Buckingham regarding school matters in this place, and, only that people unacquainted with the circumstances of the matter might be led to think there was some foundation for his attack, I would treat his effusion with silent contempt which is the only merit it deserves. But in the first place he says he never did nor does not wish to say anything disrespectful of any of the Trustees. But what was his language one year ago? Why, that the Trustees were only a nest of rotten eggs, and other equally as bad names, and when called to task through THE ADVANCE he was not manly enough to even attempt a defence. I would like to know if there is any one who will say that his statements and actions are not disrespectful.

He only wished to know why the Trustees did not keep the late Teacher who gave such good satisfaction. Well in the first place Mr. B. never asked such a question either of the Trustees, nor at the annual school meeting. Neither did he ask any other question nor find fault in any way with the actions of the Trustees. But when he gets away privately with some of his kind there is nothing done to suit him. The question referred to was asked by another person at the annual meeting and answered to the satisfaction of all present, or at least such appeared to be the case as there was not a dissenting voice. He also says we had a ring formed. Well this is only another of his false insinuations got up to suit his evil mind. But if there was a ring formed I would like to know who was more anxious to join it than James Buckingham as he got himself set up as a candidate for Trustee and done his own canvassing and got beaten about 3 to 1, and even some of those who voted for him are ashamed of it. He does not want the school closed nor a cheap teacher employed, and so on; well, I am pleased to hear that he has become partially converted, as it is only two years ago since he took me to task as being guilty of giving a teacher too much salary when a much cheaper one would do just as well. But further comment is unnecessary although much more might be said. But in conclusion I would say to James Buckingham that if in the future he has any grievance in school matters to go to the trustees like a man, and I am satisfied that the gentlemen now composing the school board will give him justice every time, and if he has anything to say or write, to at least try and be truthful. Unless something of more importance comes up I shall in future treat his sayings by being silent.

W. LONG,
Ex-Trustee.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Our mails from the east did not arrive between Wednesday of last week until Monday of this week owing to the bad roads which were never in a worse condition.

The mails between here and Flesherton were delayed two days, but this should be enquired into as the roads between Feversham and Flesherton were passable every day.

The Gospel Temperance Workers have been holding meetings here but owing to the stormy weather the attendance was small until Saturday night when it began to improve. The proceedings were much appreciated but talking to a scanty audience seemed discouraging.

A letter by Jas. Buckingham appeared in your paper criticising some remarks made by your correspondent a few weeks ago, but as your cor. only gave what appeared at the time to be public sentiment it was not injustice to any one.

It is reported that our Township Clerk has resigned his position on account of too low salary.

Miss Ella Kerr, who has been attending the Collegiate Institute at Collingwood, is home, being ill, it is said, from overstudy.

Mr. Smith, one of the Gospel Temperance Workers gave one of his feet a severe cut on Monday last, having gone to the bush to enjoy a little exercise. He will likely be laid up for a few days.

You Carry

A whole medicine chest in your pocket, with one box of Ayer's Pills. As they operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all that any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

A Physician

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrison, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost in crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of the profession."

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists.

Photos, Photos, Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For? Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to 0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 65	0 72
Oats	0 39	0 39
Peas	0 57	0 58
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	6 70	6 80
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 50	1 00
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 7	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 30	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

Change in Business!

The undersigned having bought out S. Spirit's Butchering business in Flesherton, has opened up with a fine stock of Oysters, Salmon, Sardines, Fresh & Dried Meats, Fresh & Salt Fish, Sausage, Bologna, &c., and invites the people to call and get acquainted and leave a trial order for anything in the above lines.

JOS. McCONNELL.
Flesherton, Feb. 1st, 1888.

W. BOOTH,
The Boss Barber,
FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

RICHLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed; we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—|—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines.

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression, of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. Lubon's Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

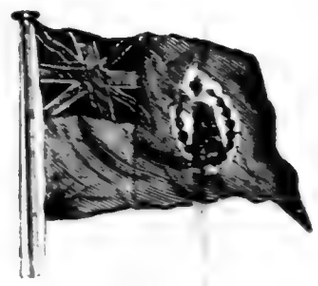
FEBRUARY

Stock Taking

AND



Annual Clearing Sales

AT

M. RICHARDSON & CO'S.

Our Customers who have taken the advantage of patronizing our Annual Sales in past seasons need not be told that they offer rare opportunities for purchasing Cheap Goods. We are now offering every description of

Winter Clothing and Dry Goods

at Prices that are worthy the attention of the closest buyers.

Mens' Overcoats from $3.95 — Mens' Tweed Suits from $4.50

FUR CAPS, PLUSH CAPS, LAMB CAPS at any price, LADIES' FUR MANTLES, CAPES, MUFFS and CAPS; LADIES' CLOTH MANTLES and ULSTERS all at Cut Prices to clear balance of Seasons Stock.

In every other line of Dry Goods Special Offerings will be made During This Month.

A few Lines of Winter BOOTS including Mens and Boys Felt Boots at very Low Prices. See them.

MILLINERY.

Clearing out balance. Some very nice stock in HATS and BONNETS at less than half regular price.

WE HAVE IMPORTED SOME

Fine Japan Teas for this season which we think the Finest Value we have yet offered. Call and get Sample.

Cordially inviting all our Friends to pay us a visit this Month.

M. RICHARDSON & CO.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

"Shame touching our mother? That is absurd, Shirley!" the lad said, flushing to the roots of his curly yellow hair.

"Not touching her, I trust, Jack, but touching something we ought to know," she whispered low. "I hope she may be able to tell us."

"Is she asleep?"

"No; she is in a stupor, I think."

"You have Uncle Gilbert's letter," Jack Ross said, after a pause. "Does he say nothing, Shirley?"

"There is much that I do not understand," the girl replied. "And I have a long letter for him which mother wrote before we left Heidelberg—a very long letter, Jack. It seemed almost as if she had a presentiment. Oh, I wish—I wish she had not come!"

The hot burning tears rose quickly to her eyes; but she ohocked them back. Jack put his arm around her and drew her fondly to him.

"Poor little Shirley, it has been terrible for you; but, dear, Dr. Graham tells me that the travelling has made no difference, or very, very little."

"And she was so anxious to come."

"Could you let me see Uncle Gilbert's letter?" said Jack, presently. "There may be something in it which would help us to understand what our mother tells us."

Shirley took some letters from the inner pocket of her sealskin coat, which she was still wearing, and, selecting one, handed it to her brother. As he took it from her she showed him mutely another letter, or rather a thick, weighty packet addressed in his mother's handwriting to her brother, Sir Gilbert Fairholme, Fairholme Court, Dumfife. Jack's lip quivered slightly as he saw the pretty, graceful Italian handwriting; then, turning away, he carried his uncle's letter to the mantle-piece, where a dim light was burning, and read as follows:

MY DEAR MARIAN,—I have received both your letters; and I did not answer the first because it required consideration; and, before I had thought over it sufficiently, your second letter came. When your husband died—three years ago, I think—I made you a proposal to return to Scotland and live there quietly; but your reply was decided, and you shrunk so unmistakably from my proposal, that I did not repeat it. Even when your son settled in London you did not seem to see the necessity of making a home for him there by settling there with Shirley; but that was no affair of mine. You preferred living abroad, and perhaps, in all the circumstances, it was just as well. You might have met persons who knew your history, you said. I should have fancied that you were far more likely to do so wandering about the Continent than living quietly at home in England or Scotland. But you said Scotland had been cruel to you; well, of that I cannot judge. You have been cruel to yourself, I think; but you were always wilful, and it is too late now to alter or regret the past. You wish to return home, your health is failing, you tell me; but you are so young that I hope your weakness is only temporary, and that our more bracing air will set you up again. Should you not wish to come to Fairholme Court, where, however, you shall be made very welcome, I will take a small house for you and my niece at Dumfife. Your story is well-nigh forgotten now, and, even if it were not so, the fact that Lady Fairholme and myself consent to forget it will be sufficent. We are still the Fairholmes of Fairholme, my dear Marian; although you have been so long absent, that you may have almost forgotten that fact.

"My son Oswald is with his regiment at Chatham. Gracie is now at home, but she has been spending some weeks at Edinburgh, where she has been much admired. The two younger girls, Maud and Jean, are still in the school-room; and Shirley is, I suppose, still young enough to share their studies. You may rest assured that all that can be done to make you comfortable in your old home, or a new one if you prefer it, will be done. Happiness, perhaps, you cannot expect—wrong-doing always brings its own punishment; but you may find quiet and peace here. You tell me that your children do not know your story; nor is it necessary that they should, so far as I can see. Let it die now, and be buried and forgotten. We will not disinter it.

"I inclose a check for your travelling expenses, as I wish you to have every possible comfort. Do not spare expense. Lady Fairholme joins me in love to you and Shirley. I have very good accounts of your son, and at my request Mr. Burnett is going to give him a post in the Glasgow branch of his establishment.

"Your affectionate brother,

"GILBERT FAIRHOLME."

It was not an unkind letter, but somehow, as he read it, a hot feeling of anger rose in Jack's heart against his uncle. What did he mean by his cruel sentences that it was too late to regret or alter the past? His mother's married life had been a happy ones why should she regret? What did he mean, too, by the phrase that wrong-doing must always bring its own punishment? What wrong had his mother done—his dear mother? There was something strange and incomprehensible about it all, something which made Jack anxious and uneasy, and made him wish with as great an earnestness as Shirley's own that his mother would awake from her stupor and find strength to tell them herself what they so much wished to know.

He folded up the letter and gave it back to his sister in silence. Perhaps Sir Gilbert meant kindly; but he had an unfortunate way of showing kindness. The letter was like his uncle, Jack thought. He had seen him only once, in London; but he had felt that there was no sympathy between them. Sir Gilbert was many years older than his mother, tall and grave and pompous and dry, and Jack could not guess how much he had loved his beautiful young sister in the days gone by, before she had caused him such grief.

"He calls Aunt Geraldine 'Lady Fairholme,'" said Shirley, huskily. "Is it not strange and cold, Jack?"

"Perhaps they don't get on very well", Jack answered, bitterly. "Or perhaps he wanted to impress our mother with the thought that it was not a sister she was going to, but only a sister-in-law."

"But he meant to be kind, Jack," Shirley whispered, softly. "He sent the cheque, you know, and he would have come himself to London if he had not been laid up with the gout."

"I dare say he meant to be kind, dear," said Jack, sorrowfully. "But I wish—oh, how I wish, Shirley, that we had no need to accept his kindness!"

"Hush, hush, Jack!" the girl said, quickly, thinking that she saw her mother move; but it was only the flickering shade cast by the lamp upon her face. There was no change in her death-like calm.

All was very still now. The city was sleeping; its great passionate heart was stilled for a brief space. Not a sound was to be heard, not the wheels of a passing vehicle or the echo of a hurrying footstep; and the stillness fell heavily upon Shirley's heart like the calm which comes before a storm.

So, minute by minute, the long night hours passed away, and the time crept on toward the dawn. The night seemed to have grown suddenly chill and even yet more quiet. It was as if an icy breath passed over the quiet earth for a moment. Any one who has watched by a sick bed knows that the moment when the one day seems to breathe its last, and there is a strange tremulous pause before the new day dawns upon the world. Shirley had read a description of it, and had been struck with it. It came back to her now, and she felt its truth:

"Do you know that moment in the night—the passage, as it were, from day to day—when a chill breath seems to pass over the earth, and for a space all the world is hushed as if in death? You may feel it by sea or by land. I have shivered and trembled under its spell while gasping for breath in the sulphurous Red Sea. Or in the heart of London, should you be awake, you lie and feel that yesterday is dead indeed, and the new day not yet fully born. This is the time when feeble old men and children, and death seems most terrible."

For this moment Shirley had been waiting with a strange thrill of superstitious dread. Would her mother die then—die without giving them a word or sign—die without telling them that secret in her past life, which, unless she told them, they would not know? As the "chill breath" swept over the room Shirley leant forward eagerly. The long lashes on the sunken marble cheeks flickered slightly, and the girl held her breath in agony. No, it was not the shade of the lamp now; the white lids were lifted slowly and heavily, and

Unto the dying eyes
The casement slowly grew a glimmering square.

At the same moment, even as the white lips parted to speak, the gray dawn of another October day stole slowly and stealthily over the east.

"Shirley," Marian Ross said, faintly, in a voice so low that it hardly reached the girl's quick ears, "where am I?"

"We are in London, dear, and Jack is with us," the brave girl answered, in her calm, brave, gentle voice.

"Jack!"

A glimmer of joy flashed into the dying eyes as they fell upon her son. Jack bent down and put his lips to hers in silence. Shirley, kneeling, lifted the beautiful head upon his arm.

"Have I been very ill?" said Mrs. Ross, feebly. "I think it must be near the end now, Shirley; but—I can not—I can not—"

Her voice died away upon her lips; but the dying eyes, growing wild in their intense eagerness, went from one young face to the other in piteous entreaty; and Shirley brought some of the restorative and held it to her lips. She could hardly swallow, but she drank it eagerly, and it seemed to give her a momentary strength.

"Lift me, Shirley—lift me higher," she said, in a somewhat stronger voice. "I can breathe more easily so. And I must tell you both, because you will hear it better from me; but it is a long story," she added faintly, "and the time is so short. Oh, Shirley, why did you not let me tell you in the train?"

"Tell us now mother," the girl said, through her tears. "Is it anything about Uncle Gilbert?"

"Oh, no—oh, no! But it is a long story, and I am so tired!" wailed the dying woman, with bitter anguish, almost as keen as if she could see into the future and know what misery ignorance of her story would bring upon her daughter.

"Never mind, mother darling," Jack said, soothingly. "Uncle Gilbert will tell us."

"Ah, but he will tell it so differently!" she moaned. "I must—I must—tell you—"

She struggled to a sitting posture again, resting on Shirley's shoulder and supported in her arms, and began to speak hurriedly, yet faintly, making pitiful efforts to gather her strength.

"It was so long ago—in Scotland—and I was so young," she said, brokenly. "I did not know—who could have guessed?—it was all like a play—and—no church—and—" Her voice failed, her head fell back wearily. "I can not—I can not!" she said piteously, as her eyes went from one to the other wildly; and Shirley bent down, tears falling as she did so, to utter some soothing words.

"Never mind dear; we shall know by and by. Meanwhile lie still and rest; you are so weary."

"So weary—yes. We have travelled a long way, you know; but we can rest now," murmured the dying lips, with the ghost of a smile passing over them. "Rest—you know the doctor said I was to rest. There was some one who—who was very kind, Shirley. I could not walk, you know."

"You mean the gentleman who carried you into the boat, mother. Am I to thank him for you?"

"Yes—thank him and the doctor."

The painful eager look was fading from her face now; she seemed to have forgotten the story which but a few minutes before she was so anxious to tell them. She lay back on her pillows calmly enough, and the smile which had crept to her lips crept up yet further into the depths of her dark eyes.

"I can smell the heather," she said clearly and sweetly. "Cannot you, Roland? How sweet it is! Listen—how prettily the book murmurs among the stones!"

There was a silence; the dawn crept higher over the eastern sky, and a faint roseate tingle stole into the dark gray. Over the beautiful face on the pillows the shadow of death crept slowly and darkly.

"They say that I am his wife," she said then, with a sudden pitiful cry of pain; "but that is impossible. I was not married, Roland—tell me I am not his wife."

The two pairs of watching eyes met across the pillows, the blue ones dim with tears, the hazel eyes wide and startled and miserable.

"What does she mean?" Shirley whispered.

"Nothing dear—she wanders," Jack answered, a new gravity and tenderness on his handsom boyish face.

"Not his wife—oh, no, we never went to church!" continued Marian Ross, in her low feeble tones. "But you are my husband, Roland!"

"She thinks she is talking to father," Jack said tumulously. "Mother, don't you know us Don't you know Shirley and Jack?"

"Shirley!" she repeated vacantly. "Little Shirley and Jack! Jack, take care of your sister or she will fall."

She had gone back to their childhood Shirley guessed, as the great hot tears fell on the soft dark hair, and the girl's whole frame trembled with the violence of her emotion.

The minutes slipped by. Jack went to the window and drew back the curtain; a streak of morning sunshine, the herald of a fine day, fell across the carpet and touched the foot of the bed.

Suddenly the large dark eyes opened; the painful, eager, puzzled look had faded from them, and they had become dim and glassy; but they smiled.

"Never mind," she said, in a faint clear happy tone. "Shirley will not judge her mother. I do not mind Shirley. It is getting dark now, and I am—going home. It is dark—so dark!"

Dark! And the sun-rays were streaming into the room in a flood of golden light! But she could not see it, for she had gone home.

Gone home without telling the secret which had weighed upon her for a score of years, without warning her daughter against the fate which had fallen upon her! Ah, if she could have seen into the future, she could not have gone home with that peaceful smile upon her face!

CHAPTER IV.

To go, or not to go—that is the question; and, upon my word, it seems such a kindly hospitable invitation that I should not hesitate about accepting it!"

As he spoke Guy Stuart poured out a second cup of coffee, sugared and creamed it with due deliberation, and proceeded to discuss his breakfast, as if it were of far more importance than the subject under consideration while the other man, his friend and host, Sir Hugh Glynn, sitting opposite him at the long dining-table, looked meditatively at a note lying before him.

"Of course it is very civil and all that," he said, in rather a plaintive tone; "but we are quite strangers in this part of the world, and we do not know what we should be committing ourselves to by accepting."

"At the most to a few days of uncongenial society," Major Stuart answered carelessly—"and perhaps bad dinners."

"The last is a very serious condition. My predecessor here had evidently some notion of comfort and good cooking. The cook has been at Maxwell for twenty years, the butler tells me, and I hope she may remain here for twenty more. Those outlets she gave us last night," continued Sir Hugh, in his languid, rather drawling voice, "made mutton seem like meat from some other sphere."

Major Stuart laughed; he did not possess his friend's delicate appreciation of the art of cookery, and to him Brillat-Savarin was nothing more or less than a rather contemptible gourmand.

"The cutlets were very good, and so is this game pie," he said carelessly, still devoting himself to the fortification of his inner man. "Will the answer to Sir Gilbert's note, then, hinge on the abilities of his cook?"

"I am afraid we shall not be able to ascertain what his or her abilities may be," replied Sir Hugh, laughing. "It is more likely to hinge on his womankind, if one could find out anything about them."

"I should think that was pretty easy. They must be people of some consequence about here—and your servants are old stagers; I have no doubt they know all about them."

"Fairholme is about seven miles from here," Sir Hugh said meditatively; "so that I could ride over and see how things went on here—and certainly it would be a change. Aren't you getting just a little bit tired of my society, Guy?"

"Not a bit," Major Stuart answered heartily. "I have not had a glimpse of you for nearly three years, remember, until that lucky meet at King's Cross."

"A lucky meeting for me!" said Sir Hugh cordially. "To think that you had returned, and that you had been in England for nearly three months without giving me a notice of your existence! It was too bad, Stuart!"

"My dear fellow"—and Major Stuart's dark gray eyes, with a warm kindly light in their depths, went over across the breakfast-table to Sir Hugh's handsome face—"I could not discover your whereabouts. You were to be heard of everywhere; but, whenever I followed you up, you had disappeared like a meteor. Sir Hugo Glynn is evidently a person of some importance in the world of fashion and distinction."

Sir Hugh laughed carelessly. He was a singularly handsome man, with a complexion as fair as any girl's, wide sleepy blue eyes, a heavy fair mustache, and soft fair hair. His movements were slow, listless and languid, and, had he been a man of less size and presence, the charge of effeminacy might have been laid at his door.

"Well, what are we to do about this invitation?" he said, reverting to the subject once more. "Sir Gilbert evidently takes it for granted that we are tired of our own society, and should like a change. He says he would call if he were not laid up with the gout, but that his son called a day or two since. I don't remember the circumstance."

"Don't you? I do. It was the day we went into Dumfife. On our return we found his card in the hall, and Martin said he had ridden over. He is in the —th Hussars."

"Oh, well, I wish her ladyship would let us have her menu and a list of the members of her household!" said the young baronet, laughing. "I find that ladies who have marriageable daughters are generally very civil to me, Stuart, and I dare say you have found the same."

"I? Hugo mio, you forget. I am not a baronet with an unlimited rent roll," answered Major Stuart, laughing.

"Unlimited! I find mine limited enough," Sir Hugh said lightly. "I assure you that I did not find old Uncle Robert's legacy come at all amiss. It added this place and nearly five thousand a year to my possessions, and I needed it."

"Not a legacy to be despised," observed Guy Stuart. "At the same time, you could have done quite well without it! However, you'll be able to give me some good grouse-shooting here in the season, and you must be content to submit to the feminine maternal persecution which invariably follows such an eligible unmarried man as yourself." And again Guy Stuart's eyes, with a laugh in their depths, sought his friend's face, and Sir Hugh, meeting the glance laughed also.

As they sat opposite to each other in the dining-room of Maxwell House, no greater contrast could have been found than these two men, and yet they had been friends for many a year. Sir Hugh was exceedingly handsome, and he had used his great wealth to add to his prestige which his good looks gave him in the fashionable world. He kept a first-rate stud, lived in the most luxurious manner, gave the best dinners and the most charming entertainments of the London season; his horses and carriages were the best appointed in the Park, his drag the cynosure of all eyes at Epsom. It was no wonder that all men spoke well of him, that the great ladies of his set smiled upon him, and that a shower of invitations poured down upon him all through the season. He was such a charming flirt, the great ladies said languidly—and, his waltzing was as near perfection as waltzing could be; and his taste was so unexceptionable that no belle would have deemed her court complete unless he formed one of her courtiers, and "Handsome Hugo" was a household word in many a dainty boudoir.

Life had always been a very pleasant thing to this petted prosperous favorite of fortune; he had never known a care or a sorrow; but the thirty years he had lived had not fitted him to bear the storm which breaks almost inevitably, and more or less heavily, over every life, and which broke over Hugh Glynn with additional fury.

The friendship which had existed for so many years between Sir Hugh and Major Stuart had been a source of surprise to more than one of their acquaintances. The young baronet's life and tastes seemed so directly opposed in their luxurious indolence to the brave, simple, self-denying life of the soldier. But those who wondered did not know that the foundation of that friendship had been laid in their school days, when Guy, a few months the elder and considerably the stronger, had defended the more delicate boy from the bullying which seems inseparable from a public school. Nor did they know that the friendship thus begun had been cemented by a life saved. The occurrence had taken place many years previously, but Hugh Glynn's gratitude was warm and living still. He had not forgotten that at the risk of his life Guy had thrown himself into the angry waves which were hungering to make Hugh their victim, and had brought him with great difficulty safely to land.

The passionate gratitude which had welled up in the boy's heart as he lay, faint and bruised, watching the endeavors of two or three rough sailors to restore his friend to consciousness had never died away. Even when, later on, both men were dazzled by one woman's face and the death-blow to their friendship was struck, even when one of them stooped to the blackest treachery, the basest betrayal, that gratitude did not quite fade; it lived to add the bitterest sting to the remorse of the betrayer, the most poignant anguish to the traitor's suffering.

Very different in physique were the two men. Beside Guy Stuart, Sir Hugh, although by no means a short man, became almost insignificant, for Guy was unusually tall and strong, towering, like Saul of old, above all his fellows. For the rest, his features were irregular and almost rugged, and, if they were not plain, it was because his eyes were unusually beautiful—dark deep gray, with long lashes, which gave them at times almost a feminine softness.

"It is not such a very severe penalty after all," Major Stuart said, laughing. "I'm not an eligible, so I have never been obliged to submit to it; but we had one or two rich fellows in the regiment, and it used to be very amusing to see how sweetly the mothers used to smile upon them—ah, and the daughters likewise! There was a handsome young 'detrimental' amongst us too, and one or two of the girls were inclined to favor him; but—"

"The mammas were too wise," put in Sir Hugh, laughing. "I wish you'd decide about this, Guy. You're my guest, and I am at you disposal. Go or stay, just as you like best."

"I'm perfectly happy here," said Guy Stuart, laughing—"excellent quarters, and commissariat department perfectly managed."

"Then we'll stay at home."

"But," Major Stuart said thoughtfully, as he pushed his chair from the table and sauntered over to the mantel-piece, where he had left his cigar-case, "perhaps Sir Gilbert might be huffed; and it will not do for the new master of Maxwell to get into bad repute in the neighborhood."

"No, perhaps not; but even that would be better than being bored."

"Of two evils choose the lesser," said Major Stuart laughingly, as he selected a cheroot. "Suppose you toss up, Hugo?"

"Not a bad idea!" responded Sir Hugh, looking up eagerly. "Upon my word, I have a mind to adopt your suggestion!"

"Do," said Major Stuart carelessly. "Let chance decide it."

Sir Hugh took half-a-crown from his pocket and looked at it meditatively; then, meeting his friend's glance, he laughed lightly.

"I don't suppose it is the first time in our lives that we have let chance decide for us," he said gaily. "What will it do for us now, do you think? Will the fates be propitious?"

"I wonder if there is such a thing as chance?" said Major Stuart, coming to the table, cigar in hand, with some interest lighting up his dark face.

"We won't discuss that question," answered Sir Hugh, laughing, as he played with the coin between his fingers. "It is far too deep for you or for me. But"—he lifted his eyes for a moment to his friend's face—"you are strangely in earnest, Guy!"

"Am I?" said the other, turning away with a laugh and a flush on his cheek. "Well, perhaps I was. For a moment I had a kind of feeling that something serious would come of it; but it's all nonsense of course!" he added, as he lighted his cheroot; then, suddenly coming back to the table, he went on with a strange earnestness. "Put back the half-crown, Hugh, and let us discuss the pros and cons dispassionately, and decide accordingly."

Sir Hugh looked at him for a moment in silence.

"No," he said quietly, "we'll trust to chance. 'Heads'—we will accept Sir Gilbert Fairholme's invitation. 'Tails'—we will refuse it!"

"Come in," said Sir Hugh sharply, covering the coin with his hand as he turned toward the intruder.

The door opened quietly, and a servant out of livery came in and walked slowly up the long room toward his master.

Major Stuart glanced at him indifferently, but, almost as he looked, the indifference faded out of his gray eyes, and something like interest replaced it.

He was a man of Sir Hugh's height, and very much the same build, a trifle narrower across the chest perhaps, but with no material difference. He was fair, too, like his master, but with no pretensions to good looks; and altogether between the two men there was a faux air or resemblance which might easily exist between two persons of the same height and complexion, and having the same colored hair. For a moment the resemblance struck Guy Stuart, but the impression was a fleeting one.

"What is it, Latreille?" demanded Sir Hugh, with some impatience.

"The stud-groom is here, Sir Hugh," said the man, quietly. "He is just leaving for town, and he desired me to ask if you had any directions for him."

"For Willis? No—tell him to let me hear from him on arrival," Sir Hugh answered quietly. "That is all."

The man bowed low, with an air of extreme respect which had something foreign in its courtesy, and turned to leave the room. But Sir Hugh recalled him.

"Latreille!"

"Yes, Sir Hugh."

"I suppose you know nothing about Fairholme Court?"

"Only that it is a fine building, Sir Hugh, with handsome grounds, situated about eight miles from here."

"I know all that; but you know nothing of the family?"

"No, Sir Hugh."

"Do you think the butler could give you any information?"

"I have no doubt on the subject, Sir Hugh," the man answered, a slight fleeting smile crossing his face.

"Then go and make inquiries," said his master quietly, "and come back here and tell me the result."

"Yes, Sir Hugh."

With another low bow, Latreille turned away and left the room. Sir Hugh, with a laugh, selected a cigar.

"That fellow bows like Beau Brummel," said Major Stuart, laughing, "and moves like a prince."

"He is an odd fellow," Sir Hugh answered lightly—"Claude Melnotte style, you know."

"Where did you pick him up? He was not in your service when I went to India."

"No, I got him on the continent last year."

"And you find him trustworthy?"

"As trustworthy as most men in his position," said Sir Hugh carelessly. "I dare say that he robs me, but I have not succeeded in finding it out. He told me a long story when I met him first, which may or may not be true."

"What is it? Will it bore you to repeat it?" asked Major Stuart, who had been struck by the valet's appearance and unusual air of refinement.

"Not at all. You are welcome to as much of his history as I can remember. He has knocked about, and seen a good deal of the world, and is an amusing fellow enough."

"He is a Frenchman, of course?"

"Not a bit of it. He is a Scotchman. Yes, you may well look surprised, but it is nevertheless quite true. His father was a hair-dresser in Edinburgh, who was, I believe, unfortunate, as many men are, in his domestic relations. He left Edinburgh and settled in Paris, where he had not much success apparently, for, when he died, he left his son for a legacy some wigs, hair brushes, razors and some bad debts."

"Not much of a capital to begin the world upon," said Major Stuart, laughing.

"So our friend soon discovered. However, he converted his stock in trade into money and joined a circus, where for some months he distinguished himself by standing on his head and contorting his limbs; then he became a public singer—comic, of course—and went the round of the cafes chantants. When that failed, he was 'general utility' at a minor provincial theatre," Sir Hugh continued; "and I am convinced the stage is his vocation. He is a first-rate actor, and makes up capitally. It was at Poitiers that I first made his acquaintance. I was travelling, and had met at a cafe the manager of the theatre there, a pleasant gentlemanly fellow enough. There were one or two pretty actresses belonging to the company, and one night I invited the troupe to supper. Latreille was among them, and I confess he attracted me. He was so frankly insolent, so amusing, and so independent that I found him irresistible. The next morning, to my surprise, he called upon me, said he was sick of the stage, and offered his services as valet and courier; and I engaged him."

"And you have not repented?"

"Not once. He is a most useful servant; his only fault is an occasionally slight freedom of manner, which never approaches insolence, but at times is somewhat familiar. But he is far too valuable an acquisition to dismiss for so trifling a fault. I dare say he robs me, for we are of the same size and build, and my clothes fit him perfectly; but he is perfect in his own line and he never chatters."

"And he entertains a profound admiration for his master."

(To be continued.)

—Deputy-Reeve McEvoy, of Amherstburg, weighs 390 pounds.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

Major E. G. Prior, Conservative, was elected by acclamation yesterday to represent Victoria, B. C., in the House of Commons.

The Brantford Burns' Society will celebrate Burns' anniversary by a supper on Wednesday. Dr. Cochrane will deliver an address on the poet.

During the past three months there were 124 prisoners in the county jail at Brantford, showing an increase of 26 over the same period last year.

Customs Officer Stayner made a seizure yesterday at Brockville of $160 worth of goods that were being smuggled across the river by a local merchant.

The preliminary trial of Henry Taylor at London came to an abrupt termination yesterday, owing to the Mayor's refusal to have it conducted in open court.

Preparations are being made for the removal of the National Picture Gallery from the Supreme Court building at Ottawa to its new quarters in the old Orange Hall.

The first commitment to the county jail at Kingston on account of the Scott Act has occurred, the prisoner being a Verona hotelkeeper who persistently violated the law and would not pay a fine.

According to the official statement, the total number of persons in Montreal entitled to vote at the next municipal elections is 31,505, an increase of 4,160 over last year.

During the month of December last the amount deposited in the Government savings banks was $314,967. The amount withdrawn during the same period was $366,920, thus showing a decline of $41,953 in savings bank deposits during the month.

The charges against Detective Naegele and Constable Plante, of Montreal, of robbing Dufresne of his diamond ring and of the Lefebvre robbery have been dropped. Without Wilson's evidence nothing was proved, and the only charge against Naegele now is the Grand Trunk robbery.

Mr. Len Smith, who lately started a tobacconist's store on St. Paul street, St. Catharines, is reported missing from that city since last Friday afternoon, with no definite knowledge of his whereabouts. Mr. Smith was last seen at the Falls, inquiring regarding a train for Buffalo.

A rumor was in circulation in St. Catharines yesterday that Mr. Frank Phelps, who for the past two years has been secretary to the board of water commissioners, has left the city under a financial cloud. His duties were to keep the books of the commission, collect the water rates and pay them to the city treasurer. It is reported that he has not made any payment since Thursday 1 st, and the extent of his defalcation cannot be estimated until his books and vouches are examined.

Reports from San Remo say that bits of dead cartilage are coming away from the Crown Prince's larynx.

The movements of Russian troops in Galicia have been suspended owing to the snow impeding railway traffic.

The Spanish Government have given orders to English houses for camp equipage, hospital and other stores, sufficient for a force of 25,000 men.

The debenture capital on the reconstruction of the Bass Brewing Company of nearly a million pounds is reported to have been subscribed fifteen times over.

A story is being revived in diplomatic circles of the Czar's intention to have himself proclaimed Emperor of Asia, and, it is said, the ceremony is to take place shortly at Merv.

It is whispered in Munich that the mad King Otho has become suspicious of his attendants, refuses to eat or drink, and is dying fast. Simultaneously the ghost of his late insane brother and predecessor is reported abroad nightly.

Advices from the Samoan Islands say that the Germans are enforcing the payment of taxes, and that a German judge is soon to arrive at Apia. The proclamation of a German protectorate is expected.

An explosion of gas occurred yesterday in the Bankruptcy Court, Dublin. The force of the explosion was so great that the roof of the building was hoisted from the walls and the windows were smashed. One workman was killed and another was injured.

It is reported that the Russian legation at Bucharest has ruptured its relations with Roumania, owing to a series of insults to which it has been subjected, and which was crowned by the recent arrest of a legation official, who was subsequently released without explanation.

A naval force has been organized at Cherbourg for the protection of the French interests on the Banks of Newfoundland. This intelligence is important to British vessels engaged in the Newfoundland fishing, as significant of the determination of the French Government to disregard the provisions of the Baits Bill.

Antiquarians exploring Canterbury Cathedral, by permission of the Archbishop, on Friday unearthed the long lost coffin of Archbishop Profundus, who reigned and said mass just 200 years before the Reformation. Nothing is sacred to antiquarians, so they opened the coffin. Five hundred years had played less havoc with the mighty Archbishop's remains than might have been expected. The skull was perfect, and also some of the bones. Sad to say, the tomb had been rifled of the many valuables it must have contained.

Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, in a speech before the Bradford Chamber of Commerce last evening, said that the wave of protection which had passed over Europe during recent years had not yet spent its force. Its movement was coincident with and dependent on the increase of military feeling, which represents an exaggerated notion of nationality. He was confident that before long the world would see serious conflicts between the various Powers. The fact that German manufacturers were trenching upon British trade was due to their being better informed and having a closer connection with their customers. It was needful, he said, for England to remedy this state of things.

The President has nominated Marshal McDonald, of the District of Columbia, to be Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The doors of the First National Bank of Auburn were closed yesterday morning until further notice, pending an examination of the affairs of the bank in the absence of the cashier.

The sentence of death passed on Brooks, alias Maxwell, for the murder of Preller at the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, on April 5th 1885, was confirmed yesterday by the United States Supreme Court.

W. W. Lawson, ex-sheriff, formerly member of the State Legislature, a prominent political and business man of Buffalo, was instantly killed by falling down a flight of stairs into a cellar yesterday afternoon.

Charles F. Tonjas, of Brooklyn, N.Y., after having run through a fortune of $200,000 in speculation, is said to have forged his mother's name to a number of notes, borrowed largely from friends and departed for parts unknown.

The explosion of a blast of powder in a sewer being constructed on Dewitt street, Buffalo, at noon yesterday, seriously, if not fatally, injured two workmen. One of them had both arms broken in several places and one leg broken. The other was seriously cut and bruised.

At the meeting of the Methodist preachers at Baltimore yesterday, the resolutions offered at a previous meeting censuring President Cleveland for sending a copy of the constitution of the United States to Pope Leo came up after the regular business. There was much discussion, but the resolutions were finally adopted by a vote of 19 for to 10 against.

SOME ODD SIGHTS IN CHINA.

Where Black Cats and Dogs Are for Sale in the Markets.

A traveller, in writing from Canton, China, about that city, says: "The streets are paved with stone and narrow, not more than six or seven feet wide at the most, with just room enough for two chairs to squeeze by each other. The foot-passers were jammed against the wall without ceremony and stared at us, muttering: 'Fanqual! Fanqual!' We went down the street of 'One Hundred Grandsons' and up the street of 'Everlasting Love' and through the street of 'Refreshing Breezes,' which is certainly a misnomer, for Canton beats the world in abominable odors. Both sides of the streets are crowded with shops and stalls.

"Restaurants abound where cats and dogs, dried rats and black cats' eyes are served up to all who can afford to pay for these luxuries. They are expensive. The flesh of black cats and dogs is much more highly prized than that of cats and dogs of any other color, and the unskinned tail is left on the animal to prevent any deception being practiced upon the purchaser. I had a black chow dog, to which I had become much attached, but the hungry glances cast by the coolies upon that unoffending quadruped whenever we took our walks abroad compelled me to part with it. In the fish market the fish swim about in little tanks. I saw a Chinaman select one, from the side of which the vendor cut a pound or two and then returned the poor, bleeding, gasping object to the tank to swim about until some other customer bought the rest of it, or death relieved its sufferings. During our ramble we met Mr. Howqua, one of the richest mandarins in China, and he took us to his house and introduced us to his wives. They were much powdered and rouged. Their feet were about three inches in length and their finger-nails from five to seven inches longer. In order to keep the nails from breaking they are slipped into gold sheaths, which dangle aimlessly from the little, skinny fingers. Howqua's wives are not things of beauty, though I am quite prepared to believe that they may be joys forever.—Philadelphia Ledger.

DEATH ON THE RAIL.

Shocking Disaster on the Delaware & Hudson Railway—Four Men Fatally Injured —Several Passengers Seriously Hurt.

A Troy, N.Y., despatch says: A terrible railway accident occurred yesterday afternoon on the Salem branch of the Delaware & Hudson Railroad, from the results of which four men will probably die. Many others are seriously injured. The accident occurred on a curve about a mile west of Baxterville, between Shushan and Salem. The train was 45 minutes late leaving Salem, and an attempt was being made to make up some of this before reaching Eagle Bridge, where it connects for Troy. The train was composed of the engine, one baggage and mail car and two passenger coaches. As the train rounded the curve the coach which was next to the last car of the train left the track, and bumped over the ties for about eight feet before leaving the track altogether. This it did in a wild series of somersaults, turning over at least three times before reaching the bottom. The car behind followed and the scene was one of horror, in which the frightful cries of the injured women and men were mingled with the crashing of glass and timbers. In the car first mentioned were seated about sixteen passengers. When the plunge occurred they were all injured. David Owens, a Western Union lineman, was fatally injured; the recovery of Conductor Charles Frost is impossible; and Clark Rice, of Cambridge, N.Y.; Clarence Stoddard, of Granville, and Martin H. Stevens, of Shushan, are seriously and perhaps fatally injured. John H. Shields, Miss Annie Shields, Nellie Tierney and several others whose names were not ascertained are seriously cut and bruised.

Striving After the Ideal.

Grandpapa—Ah, Johnny! There are few better things than Irish stew! Johnny—What are the few better things, grandpa? —Punch.

After a Club Dinner.

At all events our stomachs seem to be full of all sorts of terrible possibilities.—Rome Sentinel.

The Sydney Morning Herald quotes an official report relative to attempts to suppress the rabbit plague in Australia and says: "The evidence goes to show that the present system for the destruction of the rabbits has been a complete failure. There has been £361,493 spent and 7,858,787 rabbits have been killed. That is, every rabbit has cost nearly a shilling to kill, while the lamentable fact remains that the rabbits have not decreased in numbers, but have rather increased."

PAPA'S CONSENT.

How it Happened that Mamma Obtained it.

Scene I.—Place, parlor. Time, 12 midnight. She is in her arms. He hugging her with an elaborate intensity damaging to the strings of her upholstery.

He—Darling, I love you better than life. Be mine, sweet one, forever. Be my wife, angel of my existence—will you, pet?

She (softly murmuring)—Yes, dear Johnnie.

Nineteen double esthetic distilled kisses in one minute by the clock. Grand tableau. The cats sing in joyful unison on the fences in the rear.

Scene II.—Place, family sitting-room. Time, 12.45 a. m. She blushing by the stove. Her mother, rather wrathy, sitting in the straightest back chair in the apartment.

Mother — Good gracious, Clara, what made him stay so late? I have been sitting up waiting for you until I am half dead for sleep. Why, it's nearly 1 o'clock.

She—Well, ma, don't blame him. It was all my fault. (Ah! the dear girls; they always defend the men they love—until they legally get them.)

Mother—Why, Clara, what makes you look so funny? So you love this young man?

She (blushing more so, and speaking with the verbal difficulty of heartfelt emotion)—Yes, dear ma, and he loves me, and I promised to-night to be his wife.

Mother — Good gracious sakes alive, child! Why, he is too poor to marry you. What does he make a week now?

She—Twelve dollars, ma; but, oh! his prospects are so bright, and we are both young and can wait, and will, ma.

Mother—Well, you can never marry him. He is too poor, Clara.

She weeps, not only in a wholesome manner, but with elaborate hysterical ornaments.

Mother (relenting a little)—Well, go to bed now, my child. I will talk to your father about this matter.

The cats sobs in painful harmony on the roof of the extension.

* * * * *

Scene 3.—Place, bedroom of the head of the family. Time, 1.15 a. m. The mother in bed and husband asleep deeply snoring musically.

Mother (to husband)—Say, father, John Denny has proposed to our Clara.

Old man stands the assault for a few moments, and then, waking up, exclaims profanely, "Oh, it's you, is it? Pretty time to get in bed with cold feet. What the mischief do you want now?"

The mother—Ain't you ashamed of yourself to talk that way to me? I say that John Denny has proposed to our Clara, and she loves him, too.

Old man—You don't tell me so, Sarah. He's too poor. Do you know what he makes a week now?

The mother—Only $12.

Old man—Oh! he's too hanged poor. She can't marry that church mouse.

The mother (now taking sides with her daughter)—Daniel Webster Jones, I want to ask you what salary you were getting when you cried and blubbered for me some twenty odd years ago?

Old man (in a November tone of voice)—You know, Sarah Jane, I told you then, and you have not forgotten it.

The mother—Well, tell me now, Daniel. You hear me?

Old man—Oh, $8 per week.

The mother—Well, you got me in time, and I guess our Clara can have the young man she loves. He now beats you by $4 a week. We give our consent. You hear me, Daniel?

Old man—Yes, yes, dear. All right. Now go to sleep. It's late. Good night, dear.

The cats executed a regular breakdown of hilarity on the outer window ledge of the bath-room.—Chicago Tribune.

Painlessness of Drowning.

A medical book entitled "Euthanasia," recently published in England, thus discusses the sensations of drowning: "Even in death by drowning, where the mind is keenly alive and active throughout there is an entire absence of suffering of any kind. The famous letter of Admiral Beaufort, describing his symptoms when more nearly drowned than probably any living man has ever been, is quoted from Sir John Barrow's memoir. 'I no longer thought of being rescued,' he writes; 'nor was I in any bodily pain. On the contrary, my sensations were now of rather a pleasurable sort, partaking of that dull, but contented sort of feeling which precedes the sleep produced by fatigue.' It is on this letter, though there is much evidence of the same kind, that the popular idea is based that drowning persons, within a minute or two, seem to have presented to them every incident of their lives. 'The whole period of my existence,' says the admiral, 'seemed to be placed before me in a panoramic review, and each act of it accompanied by a consciousness of the right or wrong, or by some reflections as to the consequences;' though two minutes did not elapse between the moment of suffocation and his being hauled up, and, according to the lookers-on, he was very quickly restored to animation. On the other hand, I have myself known half-drowned men, who tell me they have had no consciousness of any thing save the agony of being restored to life."

A Slap at Six-Footers.

It isn't the tree with the loftiest head that throws the most shade.—Philadelphia Call.

Advices this week from Scotland show the strong feeling of the crofters against the emigration scheme. A series of meetings was held under the auspices of the Highland Land League. Emigration was generally disapproved till all the good lands are occupied. The Government was urged to spend money in trenching and draining the straths and glens at home and assisting crofters to stock the land when they get it.

As a consequence of the recent turf scandals the London (England) Jockey Club has refused to renew the license of Jockey Wood, who rode for Sir George Chetwynd, and who was charged by Lord Durham with selling races. The club has also refused to renew the license of George Barrett, another well known jockey, on the ground that he had been guilty of foul riding in the races at Brighton.

A SALESMAN'S MISTAKE.

Courts of Law Not Established to Enforce Sharp Contracts.

A case of interest to the proprietors of large retail stores is related by the Philadelphia Record. It was tried last week before Judge Gordon in the Common Pleas Court. It appeared that Ella Goodrich entered the store of Strawbridge & Clothier and found a notice placarded offering buttons at 60 cents a gross. She was directed to the wholesale department of the store and picked out fifty gross, for which she was to pay $30. After she left the store it was ascertained that the goods she picked out contained mostly goods worth more than $4 a gross. A letter was written her informing her of this discovery, which was the result of a mistake of the clerk, and an offer was made to deliver such buttons worth 60 cents a gross as were selected, and the balance at the proper market price. Mrs. Goodrich refused to accept any of the goods, went into the market and bought others at a greater advance, and sued Strawbridge & Clothier to recover $245, the amount which she claimed she was obliged to pay for buttons equally as good as those offered to her by Strawbridge & Clothier for $30. When these facts were submitted yesterday Judge Gordon nonsuited the lady's claim for damages, holding that the firm could not be held for the glaring mistake made by the clerk. The Judge said:

When a salesman makes a mistake and sells goods at an extremely low figure, and at a price nine-tenths below the market value, and far below the real value, the employer, upon discovering the fact, may rescind the sale, and is not obliged to deliver the goods. In this case the plaintiff knew she was getting the buttons far below the market value. There was no unanimity of mind between the buyer and seller in the making of the contract, and courts of law are not established to enforce any such sharp contract as this.

The Kilt Threatened Again.

It is believed that the British army officials, having nothing better to do, have turned their attention again to the kilt worn by the Highland regiments, and the lace which adorns the scarlet jackets of the Horse Guards. Lord Wolseley, it is said, regards the Highland and Guard uniforms as being absurd and theatrical, and unfit for active service. The uniform of the Guards is probably too conspicuous for the operations of the field, but if Lord Wolseley proposes to abolish the kilt he will get into difficulties. In India, at any rate, the kilt is not an unsuitable dress, and it has been so long associated with the fame and name of the Highland regiments that any proposal to do away with it would lead to much opposition. A good deal may be said in favor of toning down the showy uniforms of the Guards, but there is no reason why the kilts should be sacrificed. A tartan uniform need not necessarily be glaring in color.—Scottish-American.

The Biggest Locomotive Yet.

The largest passenger engine ever constructed is now being built in the Schenectady Locomotive Works for the Michigan Central Railroad, and is calculated for express and passenger purposes. It is almost completed, and will be sent out in a few days. It is a ten-wheel engine, having three pairs of coupled driving wheels and a four-wheeled truck. The drivers are 68 inches in diameter. The cylinders are 19 inches in diameter, with 24-inch stroke. The boiler, which is of Ohio steel, is 58 inches in diameter, and has 147 two-inch semi-steel flues. The fire box is 8 feet long by 48½ inches wide, and, like many recently built, is placed above the frames, which gives increased width. The tank is carried on two four-wheel channel iron trucks. The capacity of the tank is 3,800 gallons, and the tender has a capacity of eight tons of coal.

Not Altogether Inexcusable.

A young clergyman in a western town preached the other day on "The Relation of Ministers to their Parishes." The local paper the next morning had it: "The Relation of Ministers to their Pharisees."—N. Y. Tribune.

His Wife Took Him.

"I tell you these leap-year dances are a fine thing—my wife took me and paid all the expenses herself."

"Where'd your wife get the money?"

"Oh, I let her have it."—Whiteside (Ill.) Herald.

Speed the Parting Guest

Host (who has trod on the lady's skirt)—Oh! Forgive me! You see, it's my natural instinct to detain you!—Punch.

Feminine Titles.

The degree of M. A. is one that any learned female may be proud of, but many true women have probably found as much comfort in the plain title of ma.—Scranton Truth.

Miss Katie Ambherst, a former resident of St. Catharines, while coasting with a party of young people in the vicinity of Ridgeville met with an accident which may terminate fatally. The sleigh upon which Miss Ambherst was seated in company with two lady friends was coming down hill at full speed when it slewed, striking a barbed wire fence, and throwing the party off. The faces of her two friends were badly scratched, but they were otherwise unhurt.

Arthur J. Sharman, of the township of Oakley, about 12 miles from Bracebridge, committed suicide on Tuesday by blowing his brains out with a revolver. He went into the bush about half a mile with a looking glass and a revolver, placed the looking glass on a stump to see what he was doing, and deliberately shot himself through the head. His body was found three days afterwards frozen stiff, with the revolver still in his hand. Sharman was about 36 years of age and unmarried.

The wife of Henry Stennett, a prominent farmer and beekeeper of the township of Blanchard, was killed on Main street, St. Marys, yesterday by being thrown from a sleigh while returning home from church. The horse became unmanageable and Mr. Stennett losing control was first thrown out. The horse then ran away and Mrs. Stennett was thrown against a post. She lived a very few minutes after the accident.

Our Minister's Sermon.

(New York Star.)

The minister said one night, said he,
"Don't be afraid of givin';
For your life ain't worth no more'n 'tother fellar,
Why, what's the use of livin'?"
And that's what I says to my wife, says I,
"There's Brown, the miser ble sinner,
He'd sooner a beggar would starve than give
A cent toward buyin' a dinner."

I tell you our minister is prime, he is,
But I couldn't quite determine,
When I heard him a givin' to right and left
Just who was hi. by his sermon
Of course there couldn't be any mistake
When he talked of long winded prayin',
For Peters and Johnson they sat and scowled
At every word he was sayin'.

An' the minister he went on to say,
"There's various kinds of cheatin',
And religion's as good for every day
As it is to bring to the meetin'.
I don't think much of the man that gives
The loud amen at preachin',
And spends his time the follow'in' week
In cheatin' and overreachin'.

I guess that dose was bitter enough
For a man like Jones to swallow.
But I noticed that he didn't open his mouth
But once after that to holler
"Hurrah," said I, "for the minister,"
Of course I said it quiet—
"Give us a me more of this open talk,
It's very refreshin' diet.

The minister hit 'em every time,
And when he spoke of fashion,
And riggin's out in bows and things
As woman's ruling passion,
And coming to church to see the styles,
I couldn't help a winkin
And a nudgin' my wife, and says I, "That's you,"
And I guess it set her thinkin'.

Says I to myself, "That sermon's pat,
But man's a queer creation,
And I'm much afraid that most of the folks
Won't take the application."
Now, if he had said a word about
My personal mode of sinnin',
I'd gone to work to right myself,
And not set there a grinnin'.

Just then the minister, says he,
"And now I've come to the fellers
Who've lost this shower by usin' their friends
As a sort o' moral umbrellas;
Go home," says he, "and find your faults,
Instead of hunting your brothers',
Go home," says he, "and wear the coats
You tried to fit for others."

My wife she nudged, and Brown he winked,
And there was lots o' smilin',
And lots o' looking at our pew,
It set my blood to bilin';
Says I to myself, "Our minister
Is gittin' a little bitter,
I'll tell him when the meetin's out that
I'm not that kind of a critter."

Weary.

Yes, the mother's arm is weary
Where the baby's head has lain,
And the daily round of duty
Ceases, to begin again.
But if you your lives could fashion,
Or could alter at your will,
Would you choose the tired aching
Or the empty arms and still?

Better noise and healthy clatter
Than an echo in the room
Better floors beyond suspicion
Of the housemaid's brush and broom,
Than to have the nest all empty,
All the darling nestlings flown,
And to sit in idle quiet,
But to sit and muse alone.

Angel forms that watch above us,
O'er our lives that vigil keep,
Often look in pitying wonder—
Wonder that we sit and weep;
Knowing that our Father gives us
Barest treasures, richest joys,
Much of earth and some of heaven—
In our baby girls and boys.

—Elizabeth Schirmer

Jack and I.

I was so tired of Jack poor boy,
And Jack was tired of me;
Most longed for sweets will soonest cloy,
Fate had been kind, and we,
Two foolish spendthrift hearts, made waste
Or life's best gifts with eager haste.

Oh! tired we were. Time seems so long
When everything goes well!
The walls of home rose grim and strong;
Like prisoners in a cell
We clanked our marriage chain, and pined
For freedom we had left behind.

Tired, tired of love and peace were we,
Of every day's calm bliss;
We had no goal to win since he
Was mine, and I was his;
And so we sighed in mute despair,
And wished each other anywhere.

But sorrow came one day—the pain
Of death's dark, awful fear.
Oh, then our hearts beat warm again,
Then each to each was dear.
It seemed that life could nothing lack,
While Jack had me and I had Jack!

—Madeline S. Bridges in Frank Leslie's

Ice Bridge at the Falls.

The Niagara Falls, N. Y., Courier says: The ice bridge that formed in the lower river, at the ferry, last week, Friday night, is a fixture evidently for some time to come. The masses of ice constantly coming over the falls cause changes in the contour of the upper line of the bridge but the main mass remains undisturbed. Six "shanties" have already been erected in the centre of the river, where anything from a lunch to a photograph may be procured. Great numbers of people visit the bridge daily to see the magnificent spectacle.

An Epigram.

Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, while trying a case recently, experienced great difficulty in swallowing a lozenge, but a young member of the bar experienced no trouble in composing off-hand the following epigram:

His lordship's a little unhappy
In what enters and comes from his jaw;
For he cannot swallow his lozenge,
And we cannot swallow his law.

—Boston Evening Transcript.

Both of the Same Mind.

Mrs. Chargeitplease—Good morning, Mr. Tapemeasure; I should like to see something in the way of a small check. Mr Tapemeasure (fervently)—So should I.

An Enterprising Undertaker.

Rochester, Pa., has an enterprising undertaker who distributes cards at his rivals' funerals, announcing that he is prepared to furnish coffins, hearses, carriages and bearers at the very lowest rates. This is a case of running a business to the ground.

Had Sized Her Up.

Madame is scolding her cook.

"It really seems impossible nowadays to get decent help."

"Quite true; and if madame herself were a servant she'd be discharged even quicker nor me."

A little boy was told that Rev. Mr. Goforth, the missionary to China, would be the only Christian minister in charge of a district having as many people as are in the whole of Canada. "My!" he said, "won't he have to holler."

FARM for SALE

BEING Lot 6, Con. 7, Osprey, half mile from Maxwell, 100 acres, 60 acres cleared, well watered, and under good state of cultivation. Well fenced. Large frame barn and stable, frame house. For further particulars apply to JOSEPH RADLEY, 179 Spadina Avenue, Toronto.

345-371.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., Ont.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

Head Office, 761 Yonge St., Toronto.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, Flesherton.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

Flesherton, Co. Grey.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. Issuer of MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.

FLESHERTON ONT.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Auction sale farm stock, &c,. at Lot 34, Con. 7 Artemesia, on Wednesday next, Feb. 8, commencing at 1 o'clock p. m. sharp. John Kinghorn, proprietor; A. S. VanDusen, auctioneer. For particulars see bills.

TAMARAC.—When so hoarse your voice seems unatural. Get thee to your druggist for a bottle of Tamarac Elixir. It never fails to cure Hoarseness, Coughs, Colds, etc.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Colonel W. D. Pollard, of Meaford, is recovering from a severe illness.

Mr. Patrick Ryan. of Kingscote, was found dead in his bed Tuesday morning of last week.

Mr. John Clark, deputy reeve of Keppel, has been elected Warden of Grey County for 1888.

School matters in Chatsworth are being vigorously ventilated through the columns of the News.

Mr. Neil A. McLean, the well-known Osprey township auctioneer, died on Tuesday week, after a short illness.

Two sons of Mr. Wm. Madill of Craigleith (near Thornbury) died last week from diptheria.—Union Standard.

The Union Standard of last week says:—"Mr. Overland, formerly of Euphrasia, perished in the late great blizzard in Dakota."

A continued story on Mormonism is now distracting readers of the Dundalk Herald, as well as the Editor of that journal.

A county exchange thinks THE ADVANCE has struck a gold mine. True, O scribe! but it is the kind of a mine which comes of hard work and a considerable quantity of stick-to-ativeness.

They are agitating for the formation of a "Gun Club" in Collingwood. Wonder what kind of a thing it is. Say, Bro. Brady, what kind of an article would it be for hashing up Spring Poets with?

They put a fire on in the Dundalk penitentiary stove one night a week or two ago for the benefit of a prisoner. The Herald does not state whether the prisoner slept under the stove or just above it.

Robert Million and family, of Owen Sound, were nearly suffocated by gas recently. It was thought the gas escaped through some old rotten drains laid down on Water street some twenty years ago, but this is only conjecture.

The Corbetton young ladies are to hold their leap year meeting shortly. So says the Dundalk Herald. We advise the young and handsome Editor to send some unsuspecting red-haired, freckled-faced reporter to write up the affair.

The Editor of the Collingwood Enterprise says the Editor of the Bulletin "throws in a speech with every set of tea meeting bills" printed at the latter office. A good deal depends upon the kind of a speech one "throws in." It would pay to give some people a bonus to keep off the platform altogether.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. McLean, of Kimberley, celebrated their "golden wedding" on the 18th ult. 31 children and grandchildren, including the venerable couple, sat down to dinner. Mr. and Mrs. McLean have been residents of Kimberley for the past 35 years. THE ADVANCE extends congratulations.

Rev. E. Roberts announced the following subjects in the Meaford Mirror of last week, as being the themes of the discourses he purposed delivering in the Methodist church there the Sabbath following:—"Weather probabilities and some others that are more significant;" also "Ironical permission and soul-stirring declaration."

"It is worth its weight in gold," is a common expression. But, while the value of gold is easily affected, the worth of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, as a blood purifier, deprecates. It will eradicate scrofula from the system when everything else fails.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, Jan. 27th, 1888.

The democrats of the ways and means committee have almost completed their tariff bill. They have reached a point now where they are in perfect agreement and the bill in a general form is completed. There remains now little for them to do beyond the manual labor of getting the bill in form, and some "missionary work" to strengthen the bill. They are advancing in a way that is more satisfactory than they had hoped for. The "missionary work" to be done is simply the yielding of little points here and there, when they can thus gain strength for the bill without making any serious sacrifice. The bill as reported will put wool on the free list, will, by way of compromise, make a material reduction in the tax on tobacco and fruit brandies, and will make a reduction of 20% on sugar. Salt, lumber and other raw materials will go on the free list. There will be a general revision and adjustment of the tariff schedule and the administrative features of the bill will be practically that formerly advanced by Mr. Hewitt.

At every step they have consulted expediency to a great extent and have so managed as to gain strength in many directions. They have perfect confidence that they will be able to pass the bill almost as reported. An exception may be made as to the wool clause. After a fight they may compromise on this by putting coarse wools only on the free list, if they can gain some decided advantage by so doing. They appear, however, to think that they will not have to make any change in the bill in this respect.

A few days ago a face which still retained traces of great former beauty was pointed out to me upon the Avenue, and the following story was told me of its possessor. During the war her betrothed lover, while serving as an officer under the banner of Confederacy, learned incidentally of her serious illness in Albany, N.Y. Nothing daunted by the dangers which encompassed such an undertaking he obtained a leave of absence, passed through the lines and after almost incredible escapes and hardships, succeeded in reaching her side in her Northern home. Upon her recovery, he attempted to retrace his steps, but was seen and recognized in New York City and arrested as a spy. After due trial before a competent tribunal he was found guilty and condemned to be shot. The lady in question was a niece of Cardinal, then Archbishop, Manning, and the whole force of the Catholic clergy was brought to bear upon Mr. Lincoln in order to secure a commutation of the sentence. This was done in effect, for the unfortunate lover was permitted to marry the woman of his choice, and then both were banished to Paris, where they lived under the surveillance of the American Minister until the close of the war. Such, indeed, was the condition upon which his life was spared by the President. The brave Confederate's wife is now a widow and her eldest son, through the assistance of Mr. Cleveland to whom he is said to have told his mother's story in an accidental meeting which happened in the grounds in the rear of the White House, is a cadet at West Point.—L.

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give

Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVeau, 262 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

BOOTS & SHOES!

—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—

WINTER GOODS!

RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS AND FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

HEARD'S!

Carriage Works, Flesherton,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.

SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.

Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

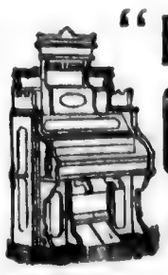
WANTED!

A Quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs for which CASH will be paid on delivery.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 346. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

18'T

Clearing ❋ Sale!

1,400

In Fine Goods to select from. Must be reduced to $1,000 if possible by March 1st. The sale will be "genuine" and carried out on the following basis: One-Fifth of all grades Watches and Clocks, ¼ of Silverware, Hollow and Flat, ⅓ of Chains, Jewelery, Pins, Buttons, Spex and Rings, 18 k., plain excepted. Unchanged prices in plain figures. If you ever intend investing in any of above mentioned goods, this opportunity to get them near cost, at cost and below cost is the best ever given in this section. No foolish blowing. Adjectives very small. By calling you will find prices so low as to lead you to buy. TERMS CASH. Warrants as usual, signed W.A.Brown. My watch work gives satisfation.

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

c741.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D.C

Opposite U S Patent Office

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Mr. Purdy, of the Station, is still seriously ill.

A few Robes and Mens Fur Coats left at Richardson & Co's.

Miss M. Wright, is visiting her parents in Flesherton.

Mr. Jas. Brander, merchant of Priceville, was in town on Monday.

Mr. James Beecroft has much improved in health, although still unwell.

Ladies Furs are specially low at Richardson & Co's clearing sale.

Mr. Ephraim Shaw, of Collingwood Township, was in town on Monday.

A lot of Overcoats and complete Suits from $3.95 up at Richardson & Co's.

HARNESS FOR SALE.—1 set new Single Harness for sale. Will exchange for wood or furniture. R. TRIMBLE.

FOR SALE.—Fine Hotel Property in the County of Grey. For further particulars apply to "R. S. C.," ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. 8t.

The cattle fair on Monday was a fizzle. Not much more than half a dozen bovines were offered. There were lots of buyers.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Just received a consignment of No. 1 Salmon Trout. Fresh Water Herring, Labrador Herring, at R. Trimble's.

SOMETHING NEW IN [illegible] specialty by Miss Edith B. VanDusen, Owen Sound, for sale at Richardson's Drug Store, Flesherton.

Don't forget Richardson & Co's sale. It is not an auction but a sale for one month, or while stock lasts, of Winter goods at whatever prices they will bring.

As a result of the efforts of the Royal Templars Gospel Temperance Band in Flesherton, forty-three names were added to the membership of Fountain Council.

NOTICE.—All persons indebted to S. Spirit are requested to call and settle their accounts with W. J. Bellamy, Esq., in whose hands they have been placed for collection.

An esteemed patron of THE ADVANCE, who lives at Kimberley, speaks thus of some work done for him recently in our Job Department:—"I like them (bills) well. They are neat, attractive, and artistic." We may add, that our Job Department has long enjoyed an enviable reputation for artistic work.

Just look at J. E. Moore's column this week. He has another common sense chat with his patrons and the public generally. He is determined to give the public full and honest value for their money, and he uses THE ADVANCE as a medium to let the people know all about it. He believes in using printer's ink.

"My little son, three years of age, was terribly afflicted with scrofula. His head was entirely covered with scrofulous sores, and his body showed many marks of the disease. A few bottles of Ayer's Sasaparilla cured him."—W. J. Beckett, Hymera, Ind.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

Sweeping reductions in Furs. My entire stock of Furs must be cleared out regardless of cost. R. Trimble.

The Band Concert in Priceville last week was not so largely attended as the first one, owing to a counter attraction in the neighborhood.

I have 50 pairs Boots, which I will exchange for wood. Come right along as this chance will not be open long.

WM. BARRETT, Flesherton.

Any bargains in Dress Goods at Richardson & Co's sale? Well, yes, I should say so; what would you think of a nice fine Cashmere, black or colors, at 25 cts. and down as low as 15 cents per yard. How's that for h—ahem!—low!

The Business Educator gets better with each succeeding number. Bro. Fleming of the Northern Business College, Owen Sound, is not in the habit of letting the grass grow under his feet. His College is now the largest and most complete of its kind in Canada: its growth has been something phenomenal.

James H. Gilmour, of T. Gilmour & Co., Wholesale Grocers, Brockville, says—I have used Tamarac Elixir for a severe cold and cough, which it immediately relieved and cured.

Wide-awake buyers are picking up some bargains at M. Richardson & Co's. One Fur Mantle left—who'll have it?

25,000 lbs. of Corn Meal, Roller Oatmeal, Standard Oatmeal, just received at R. Trimble's.

WANTED.—The name of any purchaser of Richardson's Japan Tea at 5 lbs. for a dollar, who is dissatisfied with the purchase: money will be refunded.

A social will be held in connection with the Union Sunday School, Eugenia on Wednesday evening next, 15th inst. Tea served 5 to 7 o'clock, entertainment to commence at 8 sharp. Admission 15 cents. See bills for particulars.

A handsome gold watch belonging to Mr. R. McGill, the popular C. P. R. station agent here, passed through the fiery ordeal during the recent fire. The works were rendered useless, but the fine 18k. gold cases are little if any the worse for their "baptism by fire."

No other medicine is so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, for the cure of coughs, colds, and all derangements of the respiratory organs. It relieves the asthmatic and consumptive, even in advanced stages of disease.

Mr. Milburn and Mr. Armour, of the township of Sullivan, paid a brief visit to their sons—Mr. W. A. Milburn and Mr. William Armour respectively—this week. Both gentlemen called at THE ADVANCE office. They spoke highly of Flesherton, being very favorably impressed with its general appearance.

If there is anybody visiting at your place, quietly inform the Editor of the fact; he cannot find out about everybody that may be visiting in the neighborhood without being told. So if the name of your [illegible] does not appear among the personals, just remember that it was your own mistake in not casually or otherwise informing the Editor of the fact. These little personal items are interesting to hundreds of readers.

Mr. C. Treadgold is agent for the best Lamp ever introduced into this section of country. It gives a very brilliant and steady light, requires no lamp glass burns the same amount of oil an ordinary lamp will, gives forth no offensive odor, and is simply invaluable in a sick room or where there are children. We bought one from Mr. Treadgold and found it just as represented.

STOCK = TAKING = SALE!

Great Sweeping Reductions

[illegible] will be patiently [illegible] each here MUST be attended if they will be [illegible] and have [illegible] ing. Sales [illegible] Sabbath [illegible]

AT

J. RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON.

We have decided to go out of the Fancy Goods business and for the future handle only

Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex &c.,

SO WE WILL SELL FOR THE

NEXT = SIXTY = DAYS

Our whole stock of Berlin and Zepher Wools at 8c. per. oz. worth 12½; Filloselle 5c. a knot worth 10c.; Arrasene at 10c now worth 15c.; Chinelle at 8c. yard worth 15c. Fancy Plush Goods &c. all below cost as we are bound to clear them out. Macrame Cord all colors at 10c. ball or 3 for 25c. We will also clear out our entire line of PIPES at away below cost. Your choice of 1 lot of Pipes worth from 50 to 85c. for 25c.; your choice of Pipes worth 30 to 50c. for 20c.; your choice of Pipes worth 20 to 30c for 10c. A lot of PURSES ranging in price from 35 to 85c. your choice for 25c. We have also decided to clear out some lines in Brooches, Earings, Cuff-Buttons. Your choice of 1 beautiful lot of Brooches valued from 25 to 40c. at 15c.; your choice of another beautiful lot valued from 40 to 60c. at 25c.; another lot valued from 60c. to $1.00 for 50c.; Earings and Cuff-Buttons at the same terrible Reductions.

Come along and get First Choice as they will go like Hot Cakes

As they are all Fine and Good, Warranted to Wear and Keep Color for years. Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. still 20 Per Cent. lower in prices than elsewhere in this section.

The dealer who tells the people so often about his honesty, &c., must have come to the conclusion that they are very suspicious of him or he would not need to advertise his honesty instead of his goods.

IF YOU WANT A GOOD ARTICLE AT A LOW PRICE ALWAYS GO TO

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELERY STORE, FLESHERTON.

Her Title Deeds.

Inside the cottage door she sits
  Just where the sunlight, softest there,
Slants down on snowy kerchief's bands,
  On folded hands and silvered hair.

The garden pale her world shuts in,
  A simple world, made sweet with thyme,
Where life, soft lulled by droning bees,
  Flows to the mill-stream's lapsing rhyme.

Poor are her cottage walls, and bare,
  Too mean and small to harbor pride,
Yet with a musing gaze she sees
  Her broad domains extending wide.

Green slopes of hills, and waving fields,
  With blooming hedges set between,
Through shifting veils of tender mist
  Smiles, half revealed, a mingled scene.

All hers—for lovingly she holds
  A yellow packet in her hand,
Whose ancient, faded script proclaims
  Her title to this spreading land.

Old letters! On the trembling page
  Drop unawares, unheeded tears,
These are her title deeds; her lands
  Spread through the realms of bygone days.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

"You have noticed that, have you?" Sir Hugh laughed. "Yes—I believe he flatters himself that we are somewhat alike, and indeed so we are, so far as complexion and size and the color of hair go—and he has particularly good feet. This resemblance, light as it is, proved very useful once. I had made an engagement to meet a man at the Bal de l'Opera, in Paris, but, when the time came, I was more agreeably engaged," Sir Hugh continued, with a laugh at the recollection, which Guy Stuart recalled long afterward. "I made Latreille don my costume and sent him to the masked ball where he personated me with perfect success."

"And without detection?" Major Stuart, asked, in surprise.

"Quite so. He did not unmask, but he managed to lose three hundred francs at ecarte afterward, at my expense, of course, and he told me that he had enjoyed himself most thoroughly. He is the coolest, most self opinionated fellow in existence—quite amusingly so."

"He is rather a character, evidently," remarked Guy, laughing. "But here he is," he added, as the door opened and Latreille came quietly, with his usual noiseless step.

"Well, Latreille," said his master, from his place on the hearth-rug, and without removing his cigar from between his lips, "what have you gleaned?"

"The family is one of the most ancient and distinguished in this part of Scotland, Sir Hugh," Latreille answered quietly, not at all intimidated by the scrutiny with which his master's friend was honoring him. "Sir Gilbert has one son, the gentleman who, Martin says, called upon you on Tuesday, and who is in the army, and three daughters."

"Three daughters," repeated Sir Hugh, with a swift glance at his friend, who hid a smile under his heavy, dark moustache.

"Are they grown up, Latreille, or children?"

"Miss Fairholme is grown up and very beautiful, Sir Hugh, quite a belle in the county; but the other two young ladies are in the school-room."

"That will do," said Sir Hugh slowly. "Is there anything else?" he asked, seeing that the man lingered.

"There is another young lady at Fairholme Court, Sir Hugh."

"Another young lady!" repeated Sir Hugh, with a laugh. Who is she—the governess?"

"Oh, no, Sir Hugh. She is Miss Rose, a niece of Sir Gilbert's; and she is as beautiful, Martin says, as Miss Fairholme herself."

"Oh, very well. We will ride this morning. Order the horses for twelve, Latreille. What did I tell you, Stuart?" he added, when the man had disappeared. "Two marriageable young ladies—a daughter and a niece."

"But both equally charming. I feel rather curious to see the Scotch belles."

"I know the style reddish hair and freckles, high cheek-bones and thick waists," said Sir Hugh contemptuously. "However, we'll trust to chance. Guy, are you ready?"

As Sir Hugh spoke he came up to the table with a little laugh and held out the half-crown.

"Still harping on that nonsense?" said the soldier, with a smile.

"It was your own proposal," answered Sir Hugh. "You said 'Let us toss up,' and I am quite willing to do so, and trust to chance."

"If there is such a thing," supplemented Major Stuart lightly. "Well, go on and let us see what chance will decide."

"How did we say?" Sir Hugh asked, with the coin suspended between his forefinger and thumb. "If it is 'heads,' Fairholme Court carries the day; if 'tails,' we remain here."

"Very well. Fire away."

Sir Hugh spun the coin, and simultaneously both young men leaned forward to see the result. The silver glittered as the winter sunlight fell upon it, spun round rapidly for the space of a few seconds and then settled down.

"Head!" exclaimed Sir Hugh.

"Head!" echoed Guy Stuart. "Fairholme Court has carried the day. Who knows, Hugo mio, but that you may meet your fate, one of the two sandy-haired, freckled damsels you described so eloquently."

"Who knows?" echoed Sir Hugh. "I'll write the acceptance at once so that there may be no drawing back."

Light words, lightly spoken, and forgotten almost as soon as said. And yet, if they could have foreseen the events which were to grow out of such a trivial occurrence as the spinning of a coin Sir Hugh's hand would have fallen powerless to his side before it twirled the silver, and Guy Stuart would have never suggested to trusting to chance. Ah, with what useless regrets they recalled the occurrence in after years.

CHAPTER V.

"Shirley, did you know that Sir Hugh Glynn is coming to-day?"

"I heard Aunt Geraldine say so," Shirley Ross answered indifferently, without lifting her head from her drawing.

"Aren't you curious to see him?" Jean Fairholme asked, in her clear, childish treble.

"Not a bit. Why should I be? He is not unlike anybody else, I suppose?"

"I suppose not," Jeanie said dubiously—she had heard so much of the new master of Maxwell that she was not quite certain but that he was very unlike anybody else.

"He hasn't got two heads, I presume," said Maud, the elder of Sir Gilbert Fairholme's two younger daughters, with a touch of contempt, "nor four arms, nor any other peculiarity of that kind; has he?"

"Of course not, Maud," said Jean indignantly. "How can you say such silly things?" But Alice was so curious to see him that I thought Shirley would be sure to be curious also."

"I don't see what reason you have for thinking so," said Maud Fairholme, with a toss of her pretty fair head. "Alice is generally curious about men, if they're rich; but I have never seen Shirley similarly afflicted. The only men she ever feels any interest in are Jack and Oswald."

"Probably because they are the only men who take any interest in me," Shirley remarked laughingly, turning her face with a bright glance to Maud. "Jack is my brother and Oswald is a very kind cousin."

"Pray had you ever a cousin, Tom?
  Did your cousin happen to sing?
Sisters we have by the dozen, Tom,
  But a cousin's a different thing!"

Quoted Maud saucily. "Did you ever hear those lines, Mistress Ross?"

"Fortunately for you, Miss Martin is not within hearing," said Shirley, laughing. "I wonder how she would reprove such flippancy."

"Miss Martin is at present in the bosom of her family," rejoined Maud, laughing; "at least I hope so. She intended to get there by this time when she started this morning, and she is welcome to remain there as long as she wishes."

"I am afraid that would not suit Aunt Geraldine."

"I am afraid not; but it would suit me. Jean, will you race me down the covered walk before it gets dark?"

"Yes!" exclaimed Jean; and the two children vanished out of the glass door.

The wintry twilight was filling the room, but the fire burned red and clear, and threw a warm pleasant glow over the rather bare, bald-looking apartment. Shirley liked the fire-light; she put away her drawing carefully—it was a sketch she was doing for Jack—and, leaving the table, went and sat down on the rug before the fire, such a weary tired face it was, with such great yearning hazel eyes, and such tender sorrowful crimson lips.

Crouching there upon the rug, looking into the red glow of the burning coals, she saw no pleasant "fire-castles" to brighten the cheerless room; she was too dispirited for that, she felt too sick at heart and desolate. And yet a casual observer would have thought that there was no excuse for her depression. Outwardly Shirley's life at Fairholme Court was pleasant enough. She was neither starved, nor beaten, nor ill-treated; she had food to eat—the same luxurious living to which Sir Gilbert and Lady Fairholme were accustomed; she had clothes to wear—not quite so costly and pretty perhaps as her Cousin Alice's, but then Alice was a grown up young lady who had been presented to Her Majesty, and was "out," and Shirley had not long been emancipated from the school-room, and was but young yet; she h[illegible] the sch[illegible] service when Miss Martin [illegible] girls did not want it for a music lesson or for practicing purposes, and she could take her walks abroad with the governess and her pupils whenever it pleased her so to do.

What more could any reasonable being want? Many a girl not half so comfortably circumstanced was perfectly happy and contented with her lot, while Shirley's great sorrowful haunting eyes seemed so mutely, yet so eloquently, reproachful that Lady Fairholme often felt a very strong inclination to box her ears.

And Shirley herself would have eaten dry bread with a sunshiny countenance and laughing, happy hazel eyes if that dry bread could have been eaten in the society of one person who loved her. She would have worn the shabbiest of garments if loving eyes had told her that the dingy setting did not matter, that the picture was as pleasant in its tarnished frame as it could have been in one gorgeous with gilding and carving. She was a contented little mortal naturally; she was not conceited, or ambitious, or anxious to outdress or outvie her neighbors, and a very little sunshine would have sufficed her—but even that little seemed to be denied to her.

They were not actively unkind to her at Fairholme Court; no one, except perhaps Alice Fairholme, disliked the beautiful girl who was so gentle and quiet and unobtrusive, and never in the way; but they did not care for her, and in that lay the sting. No one cared whether she was glad or sorry, well or ill, rested or tired; no one sympathized, no one heeded. She was so lonely in the great cheerful bustling household; she was neither useful nor ornamental, as Alice had told her one day. It would make very little difference to any one's comfort and happiness if she were to fade away and die. No one would care much but Jack.

And even Jack would not miss her very much, Shirley thought pitifully, if she were to die. He had many friends and companions in London now; and, though when he came to Scotland for the short annual visit which was all Sir Gilbert would allow, he was kind and tender as of old, Shirley felt that she was no longer necessary to him, as she had been in the past. Jack was a man now, a tall handsome fellow with a smart little mustache and particular as to the cut of his coat. What foolish nonsense people talked when they said women were older than men for their years! Jack was only a year or two Shirley's senior, but he had left her far behind, and while he was a man, she was a child.

Nobody at Fairholme Court wanted her—that was evident. Her uncle treated her with careless kindness, her aunt gave her a smooth fair cheek to kiss night and morning, and occasionally reproved her for some trifling fault of deportment or manner. Alice snubbed her perpetually, and the children were fond of her in their fashion—a rather selfish, cruel fashion, for they tyrannized over her unmercifully. Her Cousin Oswald was kind to her when he was at home, which was but rarely, for he did not care to ask for much leave. Even Miss Martin, the children's governess, was cold and distant, while the servants neglected or patronized her—and the patronage was infinitely harder to bear than the neglect.

Altogether Shirley Ross felt herself a very lonely, sorrowful little waif upon the wide, wide world, and already, at the very outset of her voyage, she was tired and worn and longing for its end.

When Shirley came first into her new home, fresh from her mother's funeral, she was far too miserable to heed any of her surroundings. All her faculties seemed to be dulled by the terrible grief which had fallen upon her. She could think of nothing but the sorrowful journey and its end, of the dear gentle mother who had always been so careful and tender over her. But youth is very elastic, and it soon recovers even from the bitterest grief; and, as the first numbed deadness of despair wore off, she began to feel the want of some sympathy, some affection from those around her; but she found her timid advances ignored or repulsed, and she was thrown back upon herself, chilled and dispirited, and during the two long years she had lived at Fairholme Court she had lived as solitary a life as it was possible to lead.

Fairholme Court was a stately and commodious mansion built in the end of the last century, but fitted up with every modern convenience. It possessed no haunted passages, no secret chambers. All was bright, cheerful, and modern within; the small windows had been removed and wide panes of plate glass substituted; the rooms were spacious and well ventilated, the drawing-rooms extremely handsome. To Shirley the house was neither so beautiful or so interesting as a humbler but more antique and less pretentious abode would have been; but the grounds were lovely, and the view from the upper windows was so beautiful that it often made Shirley forget her troubles.

The school-room, the only sitting-room really free to the little dependent, and that only out of lesson hours, was a lofty square room, lighted by two long windows which opened on to a lawn; round this side of the house there was a veranda, and Maud and Jean Fairholme were fond of taking their lessons out there on the hot summer days. Within, the room gave most unmistakable signs of the use to which it was put. There were a long-enduring Broadwood piano, the most uncompromising-looking sofa in one corner, and a reclining board in another; the carpet showed signs of hard service, and there was many an ink-plash on the red cloth table cover. Two recesses were filled with book shelves, and on the walls were hung some simply-framed water-color pictures, Oswald's and Alice's productions, and some few of Shirley's own. It was neither a picturesque nor a pretty room, nor a fitting background for the little figure sitting alone in the fading fire-light in an attitude of unconscious grace, and so still that it was quite possible for any one to enter the room without being aware of her presence.

Presently the door was pushed open noisily, and a young man entered, a slight dark man, with a black mustache and something of Shirley's own regularity of feature. He was handsome and graceful and rather foreign looking, and Shirley's affection for her Cousin Oswald had partly originated in the fact that there was much resemblance between him and her [illegible]

"Is that you, Oswald?" Shirley said, turning round from the fire and speaking in such a pretty pathetic thrilling voice. "Do you want me?"

"Want you? Of course I want you!" he replied, as he advanced towards the fire. "What do you mean by moping there in the dark when there are two delightful eligible young men having afternoon tea with Alice and her ladyship in the oak parlor?"

Shirley laughed lightly, turning her face toward him as he threw himself into the low chair by the fire, which was Miss Martin's favorite seat, and, bending forward, looked at her by the light of the fire.

"They don't want me, and I don't want them," she said carelessly. "Who are the delightful eligible young men, Oswald?"

"Not to know them argues yourself unknown, little coz.," he rejoined lightly. "I am sure their names have been household words here for the last twenty-four hours. At first it was 'Will they come or won't they come?' Then it was 'Oh, here they are'—'No, it isn't'—'Yes, it is!' I am sure I should think Alice has lost considerably in weight since the morning, she has undergone such an agony of expectation."

"I wish Alice could hear you," Shirley remarked lightly.

"I am glad she can't. What an awful wigging I should get. But, little woman, look here; there are two young men, I tell you, and you are welcome to one—not to 'the one,' you know, but to the other; so I have come to fetch you."

"Hadn't you better tell me which is the one and which is the other?" said the girl merrily—"or I may be inclined to appropriate what was not intended for me."

"You would soon be enlightened," Oswald Fairholme said laughingly. "If you were in the oak parlor for five minutes, you would have no need to ask that question. To the one we are all sweetness and smiles and empressement, to the other we are merely civil and gracious. Shirley, when are you going to fall down and worship the golden calf?"

"Whenever I get the chance," she replied, with sudden earnestness.

"Do you mean to say that you, Shirley Ross, would marry for money?" said her cousin lifting up his hands with affected horror

"I do, most certainly."

"You mercenary little wretch!" he said, laughing. "I thought you were above such a thing. But you're just like the rest of the sex. I shall never find a woman to marry me because I am the best looking fellow in Her Majesty's —th Hussars, but because I am heir to Fairholme Court and Sir Gilbert's only son. So says the world."

"Poor Oswald! What a misfortune it must be to be an only son and heir!" Shirley said, laughing. "But you have not yet told me who the eligibles are."

"One, my dear and curious cousin, true daughter of mother Eve, and 'the one' is Sir Hugh Glynn, the new owner of Maxwell, who has come to Scotland to see about the alteration and restoration of his mansion; the other is his friend Major Stuart, of the Royal Bluffs, at your service."

"Hugh Glynn—what a pretty name!" said Shirley dreamily.

And an awfully good-looking man—as handsome for a man as you are for a girl, Shirley—and you are unusually lovely, you know. Stuart is a sabreur of the Guy Livingston style, just the fellow to fetch a romantic lassie like yourself."

"Am I tidy?" Shirley asked, as she rose slowly and stood upright, turning to her cousin to be inspected; and Oswald Fairholme, as he looked up at her, thought in his heart that no lovelier vision than his Cousin Shirley had poet ever dreamed of or artist painted.

She was a slim slight girl, whose every movement was rarely graceful, who walked as few Englishwomen ever walk, who carried herself with an unconscious grace which had she been less beautiful, would have made her remarkable anywhere. When her cousin spoke of her as unusually lovely, he did her no more than justice. She was pale, with the beautiful marble-like pallor which is as far removed from the sallowness of ill health as light from darkness; her hair curling over her brow and gathered into a soft wavy knot on the nape of her neck, was of a fair chestnut brown, golden where the sun kissed it; her eyes were of the purest, darkest hazel, shaded by long eyelashes which, like her straight clear eyebrows, were many shades darker than her hair, being almost black; and the sweet mouth with its pouting tender crimson lips was as perfect a mouth as lover ever kissed. She was dressed in a black, closely fitting serge dress, with a plain linen collar round her throat and a bunch of mountain ash berries at her breast.

"I don't think there is much amiss with you," said the young officer, surveying her critically. "I like your gown much better than that elaborately made garment which Alice has donned in honor of Sir Hugh. I say, Shirley" he added, as he rose also, and they stood for a moment side by side on the hearth-rug, "is it not an awful nuisance? I can't get my leave renewed; so that I shall have to be off on Friday."

"Oh, Oswald"—and Shirley's face, as she raised it to his, was full of unfeigned distress—"what a pity!"

"Yes, it is a nuisance. I was looking forward to a waltz with you at the ball on New Year's eve. But it can't be helped. The regiment cannot get on without me."

"Oswald, I am very sorry," the girl said, in a regretful tone. "Your mother will be so disappointed—and so will some one else," she added, smiling.

A slight color rose in Oswald Fairholme's clear dark cheek.

"Do you think so?" he said, eagerly. "Well, that is some consolation; and, Shirley, if you get an opportunity, don't let her forget me."

"Ruby is not likely to forget you, Oswald," the girl answered gravely. "You know that."

"I don't," he answered moodily. "She is so young, and I don't get a chance, you see. However it can't be helped," he added, philosophically; "so I must grin and bear it. Come along, coz, and make an impression on Major Stuart and cut Alice out if [illegible]"

[illegible] Geraldine does not like you to talk in that manner." Shirley said severely, as they went out of the school-room together, Oswald's hand through his cousin's arm."

"But she can't hear it, child, so it does not matter," he returned carelessly. "Now prepare to make your entree in style."

They both paused for a moment at the door, and the young man looked down laughingly at his cousin.

"Oswald, you will not be foolish?" she said entreatingly. "Aunt Geraldine will be vexed, you know."

"I will behave with all due decorum, mignonne; don't be afraid," he answered, laughing. "Go in, little coz, and meet your fate."

And Shirley went in quietly, in her soft unrustling serge, with her sweet innocent hazel eyes, to meet her fate.

To Shirley's artistic eyes the oak parlor was by far the prettiest and pleasantest room at Fairholme Court. The ceiling was of oak, and its elaborate carving would have delighted a connoisseur. The walls were paneled and wainscoted in the same wood, and the mantel-piece was high and equally elaborately carved. Just now the room presented an aspect both comfortable and picturesque. It was lighted only by the great blazing fire; but its flames as they roared up the wide old chimney were quite sufficient to make it light, and not even the furthest corners were in shadow.

The curtains were of deep crimson damask, and here and there about the room were placed Bohemian glass vases, the deep rich hues of which harmonized with the hangings. Lady Fairholme, a tall, slender graceful woman, was sitting on a low chair near the fire, sipping her tea, while Alice, a beautiful blonde, very unlike Sir Hugh's picture of a Scotch belle, was presiding over a dainty tea-equippage of Sevres china and silver, which stood on a gypsy table by her side. Near her, in an attitude of easy, careless grace, stood Sir Hugh Glynn, bending slightly toward her as he spoke, and smiling with that air of devotion that he habitually wore when speaking to a pretty woman; while leaning against the carved support of the mantel stood Guy Stuart, looking with amused yet admiring eyes at Alice, as she sat in her coquettish Watteau tea gown of pale blue and pink, pouring out tea and flirting with Sir Hugh.

It was a pretty picture, Shirley thought, as she stood for a minute at the door, Oswald's handsome smiling face peering over her shoulder—the quaint fire-lit room, the graceful women, the high-bred-looking men, Alice's white hands moving so deftly among the delicate cups and shining silver, Sir Hugh bending over her, with the fire-light falling full upon his handsome face and fair hair.

As the door opened, however, both men glanced toward it, and into Sir Hugh's handsome blue eyes there came a sudden swift glance of admiration, while on Guy Stuart's face grew a look of bewildered recognition and surprise and pleasure.

Surely he had seen that lovely girl's face before! Surely those great lustrous eyes were familiar to him! Had they not haunted him during the first part of his voyage to India two long years before? Did they not bring before him a grey October evening, with light shining upon the water and a steamer ready to leave her moorings, a steep ladder, and another beautiful face, wan, and pale, and haggard, which had rested for a few moments against his shoulder as he carried the slight form in his strong arms?

Did those soft, haunting, sorrowful eyes not remind him of other things—of a crowded railway station, with passengers hurrying to and fro, and porters shouting and guards bustling by, and of a young man's eager sorrowful face, which had lighted up suddenly, and then shadowed again? Did he not seem to hear a quick joyful cry, echoed by one equally quick, but low and terrified, and to see again the group which so promptly surrounded the motionless figure and bore it away?

All these things he saw again and heard, as in a waking dream, as his eyes dwelt for a moment on the lovely shy face and graceful figure framed in the oaken doorway; then Lady Fairholme's quiet voice aroused him.

"Ah, Shirley!" she said, languidly. "Have you come at last? Where have you been hiding yourself? I thought you would give us some music."

Shirley came forward, coloring slightly, with her beautiful eyes downcast. Oswald Fairholme, glancing from one man to the other, saw the same look of eager admiration on both faces, and smiled to himself. Alice went on indifferently pouring out the tea, and measuring the cream and sugar daintily into the delicate cups.

"Sir Hugh Glynn—my niece, Miss Ross," continued Lady Fairholme, in her low, soft languid tones; and Sir Hugh bowed low, while Shirley inclined her pretty head, shyly it might be, yet with a grace and self-possession any other woman might have envied.

"Major Stuart—Miss Ross," continued Lady Fairholme; and the young man made a step or two forward.

Shirley raised her graceful head, and their eyes met. There was a moment's silence. Alice glanced up anxiously. Was Major Stuart petrified at sight of her cousin's beauty, she wondered.

"I think we have met before," he then said, gently, in those grave rich tones which Shirley remembered so well; and, without a word, but with her lips quivering at the remembrance, the girl put her hand in his.

CHAPTER VI.

A week passed, and a second week was entered into, and Sir Hugh Glynn and Guy Stuart were still at Fairholme Court, and apparently so well satisfied with their quarters that they were in no haste to leave them. They had gladly accepted Sir Gilbert's cordial invitation to remain with them over the Christmas and New Year weeks, when several other guests were to assemble at the court.

Oswald Fairholme had gone back to his regiment, grumbling not a little at his hard lot, and leaving many a parting injunction with his cousin that she was not to encourage Major Stuart if she saw that Sir Hugh Glynn was attainable; and Shirley had laughed and crimsoned, with a sudden conscious light flashing into her eyes, which were half glad and half sorry just then—sorry because Oswald was going, yet glad with a gladness new and strange to her, poor child, the source of which she did not try to discover.

Life was very pleasant at Fairholme Court just then; and even a letter from Jack, saying that he could not get the week's holiday he had wished for, hardly marred Shirley's pleasure for longer than a few minutes. Never had the Court seemed such a kindly, friendly place to her as it did now. Lady Fairholme, pleased at the impression that her daughter had made on Sir Hugh, was gracious and kindly to her husband's niece, and Alice was too much occupied by her endeavors to make a conquest of Sir Hugh Glynn to take much heed of Shirley during those short December days.

Thus Shirley was left free to follow her own devices; and the use she made of her leisure time was—to fall in love. Poor lonely Shirley! Not that she had any idea that it was so with her. She only knew that the world seemed to have grown far more beautiful during these days than it had ever seemed before. Her life had become suddenly filled with a great golden light which touched and glorified everything. She did not know whence or how it came, she did not know what she felt or what had come to her. She knew dimly that she was not the same Shirley, and that she could never be the same again; strange new thoughts came to her, wishes and aspirations and longings. She felt sometimes that her eyes filled with tears which were not tears of sorrow, and that there was a strange stir, half pain, half pleasure at her heart which she could not analyze.

If the girl had had a mother or sister or any woman who cared for her then, she might have guessed what had befallen Shirley. Never in all her life which was past and never in all her life to come had she been or would she be so lovely as she was during those brief winter days. There was a bright, shy light in her hazel eyes, a sweet, soft color flickering in the creamy pallor of her cheeks; a step in the corridors would make her start and tremble, a deep rich voice would make her eyes droop and her lips quiver.

She was glad and sorry, happy and miserable at once. Shirley's capacities for happiness were great, and her capacities for misery were equally large. The earth seemed a paradise of sunshine and music and joy to her; the roses of her life were all in blossom, strong and fragrant and sweet; and they reached their fullest bloom one fine day before Christmas, when Guy Stuart came into the oak parlor where she was sitting alone and told her that he loved her and asked her to be his wife. Shirley—tremulous and startled, but oh, so happy!—put both her hands into his without a word, as she had done on that afternoon when they had met again. But this time the little hands were not empty; they were full of the riches of a great, deep, passionate enduring love; and, with a tender "My darling!" Guy took her to his heart.

(To be continued.)

Wife—"John, the doctor is downstairs with his bill." Husband—"Tell him I'm not well enough to see him."

The Spanish Senate yesterday voted in favor of the principle of trial by jury.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Oscar Wilde on Dressmaking as a Fine Art.

PHILOSOPHY OF GOOD CLOTHES.

Some Plain Talk to Husbands—Latest General Fashion Notes.

(Cousin Kate's Weekly Budget.)

Costumes for the Princess of Wales.

A Birmingham firm has received an order for tailor-made costumes, etc., from the Princess of Wales. Among these costumes is one of navy-blue faced cloth, the bodice being habit-shaped, with a waistcoat of tan Swede leather, elaborately embroidered in blue and silver. An outdoor jacket of the same cloth is made to button diagonally with military buttons and loop, the edges being trimmed with black Astrachan fur. There is also a costume made plainly of faced cloth in a new shade of bright red, specially dyed for the Princess. The outdoor jacket to this costume is trimmed with otter fur. A shooting-gown is made of soft long-wool vienna cloth, in fawn and brown check, with a loose fronted overjacket. Another gown is made of black-faced cloth, the skirt having revers of black corded silk; the bodice, of a Zouave shape, has a full waistcoat of striped grey silk, the collar and cuffs being trimmed to match the skirt. For outdoor wear a dolmanette of the black cloth, braided and trimmed with Astrachan fur, has been made. There is also a boating jacket, in navy blue, the edges being piped with red cloth.

A Pretty Corner.

You can make a corner in washstands thus: Have an enameled board, with hole cut for the basin, fitted in at a convenient height; above on one side put a small shelf for bottles and so on, on the other the towel-rail, and in the corner a basket for sponges; then at about seven feet from the floor fix a brass rod, on which hang two cretonne curtains that will hide the fixtures when not in use. Above that, and it please you, can be a bracket of light wood holding a clay statuette, and your corner becomes a thing of beauty as well as of use.

The Philosophy of Good Clothes.

It is curious what an influence good clothes have upon a man and especially a woman. A man with his Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes on won't do questionable things that he would do in his everydays. And as for a woman she is nobody if she is not dressed neat and clean. Just let her get sloven and her ears be dirty and she will go to abusing the neighbors right straight. I don't allude to finery and frills and flowers and furs and tomfooleries, for all the women can't afford them, but every woman can look neat. A snow white colea sets off a woman more than a whimadeedle hump in the background. We can see the one and admire its surroundings, but the other is a terra incognita.

Dressmaking as a Fine Art.

I am sorry to see that Mrs. Fawcett deprecates the engagement of ladies of education as dressmakers and milliners, and speaks of it as being detrimental to those who have fewer educational advantages. I myself would like to see dressmaking regarded not merely as a learned profession, but as a fine art. To construct a costume that will be at once rational and beautiful requires an accurate knowledge of the principles of proportion, a thorough sense of color and a quick appreciation of the proper use of materials, and the proper qualities of pattern and design. The health of a nation depends very largely on its mode of dress; the artistic feeling of a nation should find expression in its costume quite as much as in its architecture, and just as the upholstering tradesman has had to give place to the decorative artist, so the ordinary milliner, with her lack of taste and her lack of knowledge, her foolish fashions and her lack of inventions, will have to make way for the scientific and artistic dress-designer. Indeed, so far from it being wise to discourage women of education from taking up the profession of dressmakers, it is exactly women of education who are needed, and I am glad to see in the new technical college for women at Bedford millinery and dressmaking are to be taught as part of the ordinary curriculum. There has also been a Society of Lady Dressmakers started in London, for the purpose of teaching educated girls and women, and the Scientific Dress Association is, I hear, doing very good work in the same direction.—Oscar Wilde, in the "Woman's World" for February.

Plain Talk for Husbands.

(From the Chicago Journal.)

Then there is another thing, sir! Often and often have I marked you turning to watch a pretty face, or commenting with your men companions upon the outlines of a handsome form or slender foot. Have you any more business to do this than she has? What a rumpus there would be about the family hearthstone if you were to catch her flirting with a man or following a bearded face through the streets to see where its owner belonged! What particular blazes would play about the walls of "Home, Sweet Home," if she indulged in such harmless foibles. Yet I say unto you, yea and verily, her latitude in that direction is just as wide as yours.

What if the wife you married is getting faded, like a fabric that has been often washed; what if the lines have come where he smile in its dimplement was, and the ugly crow tracks, like birds' feet on the wet and shining sands, have traced the skin that once was softer than a rose leaf; what if the graceful shoulders are bent a little and the laughter has left her eyes! If you have the chivalry of a true man in your soul, you will revere and honor that wife with greater and increasing tenderness as she grows old and wan and faded; for what is it that has aged her? What has stolen away her bloom and robbed her glance of its sunny light? What but ministering to you, and toiling for you, and serving you? Your children have stolen the rose tint from her cheeks and lips, and tending to their wants by night and day, ministering to them in sickness and health, if she be a fond mother, has deprived her of the grace and bloom of youth.

Something About "Made" Dishes.

"It's all very well to talk of 'made dishes,'" broke out a woman one day in a council of housekeepers, "but what is one going to do if her family won't touch them? Now, there's my husband; he won't eat hashes or stews or made-overs of any kind. He always wants steaks or chops or veal cutlets for his breakfast, and the boys are just like him. If I were to put a scallop on the table, he'd call it baked hash or boarding-house fare, and it would be just the same with croquettes or anything else of the kind. He says he wants something solid for his meals."

Undoubtedly many women have to battle with this sort of opposition in their endeavors to raise the standard of cookery in their homes. Still there are many men who relish made dishes, and there are others who can be brought to do so by a little innocent diplomacy. It is not worth while to advertise by blowing trumpets before it that the ragout or plate that presents such an attractive appearance is composed of scraps from yesterday's roast, the gravy made of the bones and a little boiled rice or macaroni. It would be no gratification to most men to know that the whole dish cost just 37½ cents. With the woman, on the other hand, the knowledge of the fact causes her to thrill with mild exultation and imparts a flavor to the food that wou'd be quite missing in a meal three times as expensive.

TOBACCO AND RELIGION.

How the Virginia Weed Helped to Support and Spread the Gospel.

A later vestry-book extending from 1723 to 1771 is still carefully preserved, having been rescued from some old county records by Mr. Young. From this chronicle one can get a glimpse of the state of society and its economic condition. Ecclesiastical currency, as is well-known, was tobacco. For the service of the church, each "tithable" was assessed every year so many pounds. We find such entries as these:

To Mr. Barlow for 17 sermons at 450 lbs. tobacco	7,950 lbs.
To Rev. John Reid salary	16,000 "
To ditto for board	1,500 "
To ditto for clerk	1,000 "
To Mary Clark, sexton	400 "

Agreed with James Briggs to keep Eliza Mipet for one year and to find her in clothes for 1,260 lbs. tobacco.

To widow Lawrence being poore 300 lbs. tobacco.

From an entry before the book closes, it appears that 16,000 pounds of tobacco sold for £101 11s. 11d.

The church expenses averaged about 70,000 pounds tobacco a year, or in the neighborhood of £450. The price of tobacco varied; but that there should not be an unlimited currency, as it were, the parish was divided into districts, and each year appeared such records as:

Samuel Davis and William Bridger are appointed viewers of tobacco from the river to Blackwater.

It was the business of these viewers, or tellers, as they were sometimes called, to estimate and restrict the number of young plants, that there might not be over-production, lest the church income suffer from too low prices.—American Magazine.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR HAIR.

The Importance of a Stiff Brush and "Elbow Grease."

There is nothing so injurious to the hair as wearing it for any length of time pinned to one particular part of the head. Slowly, but surely, it begins to fall, losing ... until in the end a hateful little spot appears, showing the scalp without the lightest veil to cover its shining surface. Every day some one is heard marvelling over the loss of former heavy suits, splendid locks they keep till 14 and 15 years of age, when the handsome plait gradually shrinks and grows beautifully less. As a rule the loss of one's hair may be traced directly back to neglect and bad treatment. Half the young girls who should wear it braided down their backs mass it in tightly twisted coils held fast to the crown of their heads by a dozen or more rough pins. This is not done for the day time alone, but at nights, when perspiration adds to other injurious effects. The hair falls, of course, splitting and breaking in every direction, and when one fails to use the brush the ugly work of destruction is slightly accelerated.

Volumes have been written on the care necessary to keep the hair soft, glossy and rich in color, but the best receipt is an abundance of elbow grease. Where it is brushed morning and evening with moderately stiff bristles little else is required.—Woman's World.

Queer English Advertisements.

I wonder who "B.D." is? He advertises in the Morning Post for a governess, "a thorough disciplinarian and well able to administer corporal punishment," and she is asked to write full particulars as to the mode of inflicting punishment. Another advertisement is equally strange. The Rev. R. Dott Thompson, Angel Hotel, Knutsford, Cheshire, wants a valet who "must know a bit about boxing and, if necessary, be able to put up the raw 'uns." I should almost think that "B. D." and the Rev. Dott would do well to open up communications with each other, as either the governess or the valet might suit both their requirements, and they would thus save the double expense.—London Times.

Experience Had Taught Him.

Dame—Charley, I like light housekeeping, but this bed-room is too crowded to suit me. I've filled every nook and corner in it, and now I've got to put that dirty linen under the bureau.

Charley—Don't you put anything under the bureau, my dear.

"Why not?"

"Leave that place empty and I shall always know where to find my collar button."

A Satisfactory Explanation.

Wife—What is meant, John, by the phrase, "carrying coals to Newcastle?"

Husband—It is a metaphor, my dear, showing the doing of something that is unnecessary.

W.—I don't exactly understand. Give me an illustration, a familiar one.

H.—Well, if I was to bring you home a book entitled "How to Talk," that would be carrying coals to Newcastle.

A writ was issued on Saturday, on behalf of the corporation of York township, against Mr. H. R. Frankland, the late Reeve, claiming fifty thousand dollars damages for dereliction of duty.

CURRENT TOPICS.

JOHN BRIGHT criticises Gladstone because of his silence regarding the disturbances in Ireland. Mr. Bright need not worry. Gladstone is not in the habit of failing to express himself when time and occasion are ripe. He will be heard from, and the supporters of Balfour's despotic policy are likely to regret that they were in any hurry to stir up the "old man."

ANOTHER gas well has been struck on the shore of Lake Michigan at Chicago, and three big blazes at three widely-separated points are regarded as confirmatory proofs of the theory that a big deposit of natural gas underlies the city. We hope that the gas is there. Chicago without natural gas has been great, but Chicago with natural gas will be greater.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., has enough pulp mills to consume all the spruce in the big woods inside of fifteen years. The amount of wood turned into paper in this country is enormous. The Rochester Paper Company uses seven cords a day for its pulp mill in this city, and as much more for its pulp mill it owns in Lockport

AN interesting tariff contest is in progress on the other side of the Atlantic. The high tariff countries, France, Germany, Spain, Italy and Russia, are struggling to protect their "pauper labor" against the better paid labor of free trade England! Yet England holds her own, and on the continent there are signs of reaction against the high tariff policies.

THE Chicago News makes a comparison of the salaries received by judges in Great Britain and in the United States respectively. Thirty-four judges in England, receiving from $25,000 to $50,000 a year, aggregate $910,000, or nearly a million annually, while eighty judges in the United States draw from $3,500 to $10,500 annually, or $318,000 in the aggregate. "It is about time," says the News, "that the American people recognized the wisdom and economy of paying judicial salaries adequate to secure the best talent for judges."

"FICTION hath in it a higher aim than fact" is not sustained by the recent ruling of the Iowa courts relative to the Glidden barb wire fence patent. It appears that in 1859 Alvin Morley, an insane man of Delaware county, who before and since that time resided in an asylum, twisted a barbed wire fence, sections of which were exhibited at an obscure county fair. Fifteen years later Joseph Glidden obtained letters patent for the barb wire fencing that he subsequently assigned to a large company, who have recently invoked the law to protect their rights. Readers of current fiction will recall Holland's "Seven Oaks," the story of which turns on the wrongs of an insane patentee.

BEFORE the fisheries question is settled our Canadian neighbors will probably have reason to suspect that they are not the free and independent nation they fondly imagine themselves to be. Canada's demands are so outrageously selfish and unjust that they would not be for a moment considered by the United States Congress, and the British Commissioners are now fully convinced of this fact. Under pressure from the home Government, Canada will doubtless feel impelled to abate materially her unfair exactions. Great Britain is not going to get into will or patiently [illegible] each here must [illegible] if they [illegible] and it or not.—Chicago Times.

MRS. LANGTRY'S board fence in front of her residence, No. 361 West Twenty-third street, New York, did not come down yesterday as announced. Mrs. Langtry's lawyer, Mr. Bowers, of Platt & Bowers, called on Deputy Commissioner of Public Works Smith yesterday morning and stated that the objectionable fence was only temporary. Mrs. Langtry intending to keep it only until some repairs and alterations are to be made to her house. It will then be taken down and replaced by a neat iron structure, which, while it will not obstruct her neighbor's lights, will be sufficient to screen her from the public gaze. Mr. Smith gallantly consented to allow the fence to remain. The first complaint made to the Public Works Department was from a Mr. McLean, who is the owner of two flat houses almost adjoining Mrs. Langtry's. Mrs. Livingston, who lives opposite, and Mrs. De Vivo, who resides at No. 359, have both cause of annoyance, the latter alleging that she is damaged to the extent of $5,000, but neither has made any formal complaint. Mrs. Langtry is at present in Philadelphia. —N. Y. World.

THE other day a memorial slab was placed in the Church of Catshoge, Leicestershire, recording the death of Rev. Mr. Hagamore, a very singular character of the county, who died in January, 1886. He left property behind him valued at £700 ($3,500) per annum and £1,000 in sovereigns, all of which went to a railroad porter, Mr. Hagamore's heir-at-law. The queer old man kept one servant of each sex, whom he locked up every night. His last employment of an evening was to go round his premises, let loose his dogs, and fire his gun. He lost his life as follows: Going one morning to let out his servants, the dogs fawned upon him and threw him into a pond, where he was found breast high. His servants heard him call for assistance, but, being locked up, could not assist him. He had 30 gowns and cassocks, 100 pairs of trousers, 100 pairs of boots, 400 pairs of shoes, 80 wigs, yet always wore his own hair; 58 dogs, 80 waggons and carts, 80 ploughs, and used none; 50 saddles and furniture for the menage, 30 wheelbarrows, so many walking-sticks that a toy man offered £8 for them, 60 horses and mares, 200 pickaxes and shovels, and 249 razors.

A worthy Catholic clergyman of New York city has suggested to Mayor Hewitt that saloons be absolutely closed on Sunday, but that beer and other mild drinks might be sold from a porthole through a rear entrance. It is pointed out by this reverend gentleman that some such arrangement as this would add to the number of those who are in favor of enforcing the Sunday liquor law and conveniencing the large mass of people who drink at their homes, and who have no means of storing or keeping a supply, especially during the summer months. Mayor Hewitt considers this suggestion a good one, and has forwarded it to the Commissioners of Excise, who are preparing a bill upon the subject.

INDEPENDENT GOTHAM GIRLS.

They Are Not Afraid to go to the Theatre and Opera Alone.

The question as to the propriety of ladies going out in this city to places of entertainments unattended by male escorts has ceased to be a question. They simply go when they wish to and say nothing about whether it is proper or not, and that is exactly what they ought to do. A civilization which does not insure safety and respect to women as well as men after night is in need of improvement. Not every woman who likes concerts and theatres has male relatives ready to escort her. New York is full of independent, self-supporting women, who like to go when and where they please and ask no man's leave or aid, since they belong to no man. They go in twos, threes and fours to whatever entertainment they wish to see, and nobody respects them any the less. In truth, it would be a sorry day for theatrical managers when they made their theatres less than pleasant for unattended women. They know very well that the bulk of their patronage comes from the beautiful and emotional sex, and ladies who are in the habit of going accompanied only by other ladies pronounce in favor of that habit. Sometimes they say they "don't like the care of a man." Of course, when the man goes along and pays all the expenses and acts in the capacity of a conductor, it is necessary to make him feel repaid by the lady devoting herself to his eyes, ears and tongue, if not heart. This "having to be agreeable" becomes irksome unless she is much interested in the man. That is why she prefers a companion of her own sex.—N. Y. Press.

Mexican Cowgirls.

As we neared a neighboring ranch, however, our glance forsook the surrounding country to wander after two herders, a man and a woman, driving a herd of cattle across the flat. As one little bull determined to go back to the corral, the cowboy went on with the herd, while the lady gave chase. Round and round the corral they raced, until, wheeling suddenly, she met her victim face to face, when a few sharp cuts from her rawhide sent him scampering after his brethren. These cowgirls, when encountered by chance on lonely trails, may be observed riding with a foot in each stirrup, a la clothespin.—Rochester Democrat Correspondence.

Beginning a New Life.

"My beloved brethren," said a Western minister, "it fills my heart with joy to inform you that the Mayor of our little city has experienced a change of heart, and hereafter will labor with us in advancing our great and glorious cause."

Murmurs of approval among the congregation.

"And as a mark of the respect and esteem we hold for him, and the high confidence we repose in our new brother, the taking up of the collection will be intrusted to his care on this blessed Sabbath morn."—New York Sun.

An Easy Place to Find.

A sympathetic female visiting the Texas Penitentiary at Huntsville said to one of the [illegible] ing. "Sabbath [illegible] have [illegible] Sabbath [illegible] did you come here?"

"I didn't have no trouble, marm, finding my way here. I couldn't have lost the way if I had been as blind as a bat. Two deputy sheriffs brought me here on the cars, one holding on to each arm. I never had less trouble in finding a place in my life."

"Did whiskey have anything to do with your coming?"

"Yes. Both deputies were drunk.

A Good Recommendation.

Jones—Hello, Bill! I hear you have a position with my friends, Skinner & Co. Bill—Oh, yes, I have a position as collector there. Jones—That's first rate. who recommended you? Bill—Oh, nobody: I told them that I once collected a bill from you, and they instantly gave me a place.—Judge.

The Professor's Joke.

"I have discovered why some eyes are cross," remarked the Professor.

"Why is it?" asked the Judge.

"You know that there is an aqueous humor in the eye?"

"Yes."

"Well, when this is an ill humor it naturally follows that the eye is cross."—Tid-Bits

For Papa's Sake.

"Give us this day our daily beer," said Flossie as she was repeating her nightly prayer. "What do you mean by that, Flossie?" sharply demanded her mother. "I was praying for papa. I didn't care much for bread, anyhow."—Drake's Travellers' Magazine.

According to the New York World it was so cold at St. Vincent, Minn., a few days ago, that people kept their hands warm by holding pieces of ice.

A plumber was sent to the house of a wealthy stock broker, says an exchange, to execute some repairs. He was taken by the butler into the dining-room, and was beginning his work, when the lady of the house entered. "John," said she, with a suspicious glance toward the plumber, "remove the silver from the sideboard and lock it up at once." But the man of lead was in no wise disconcerted. "Tom," said he to his apprentice, who accompanied him, "take my watch and my chain and these coppers home to my missus at once. There seems to be dishonest people about this house."

It is rumored that ex-Lieut.-Governor Masson will shortly be called to the Dominion Senate.

It is interesting to trace the evolutions of words and expressions. Cultivated people say "How do you do?" Those who are less precise say "Howdy do?" In the backwoods of Tennessee they say "Howdy?" The noble red man of the west says "How?" While the cat on the fence says "Ow?"

Petitions from the counties of Dundas, Stormont, Glengarry and Stanstead for the repeal of the Scott Act have reached the Secretary of State's Department.

A Strange Courtship.

Pretty Bridget Malony, just returned from an evening visit, tripped lightly down the basement steps.

She was making her way toward the match-safe to get a match to light the lamp, when a voice very close to her ear said in muffled accents: "Don't be frightened; I will not hurt you, and have only come to ask you a question."

The tone of the speaker, as well as the words, were meant to be reassuring, but they failed of their effect upon Bridget, who shrieked a series of little shrieks that would have done credit to a female of far more culture.

"Don't do that," and a hand was laid firmly but kindly upon her mouth. "I promise to do you no harm, but only want you to tell me where I can find the silver ware."

Bridget had continued to struggle while he was speaking, but finding she could not shake off his grasp managed to remove his hand from her mouth long enough to say: "How can I tell you when you hold my mouth shut?"

"Promise me you will not scream again and I will instantly release you."

Bridget nodded assent, but as it was dark he only knew it by the motion of her head between his hands.

"How would it be to light the lamp?" asked she.

"As you choose," he replied; "but remember that I have trusted you, and I believe you will not betray me."

As the light flashed upon him she saw a tall form, so gaunt that he looked taller than he really was; a pale face, dark eyes, somewhat sunken in their sockets, and the sweetest mouth she had ever seen, just shaded by a faint black moustache.

That she daily attended to pots and pans and wielded brooms and brushes did not interfere with Bridget being a little sentimental. He did not look at all like a common house-breaker, and he did look almost famished for want of nourishment.

"Sit down," she said, pointing to a chair, "and if any one comes in just now I will say you are my cousin Thomas, and may the saints forgive me for lying."

He did as she bade him, looking at her the while to discover her meaning.

"Would you like me to get you some thing to eat?" she said.

The handsome mouth quivered as he replied: "I have not tasted food for two days."

It did not take Bridget long to spread before him some cold meat, bread, pie and some milk.

He ate ravenously at first, but as his hunger became a little satisfied Bridget ventured to say

"Now tell me what you really came here for. If it was to steal the silverware, I do not intend to let you do it."

It is not only for myself I was about to commit a crime, but for two others dearer than life to me."

"You're young lookin' to have a wife and child," she said.

This time he smiled as he answered: "I have neither. It is a little sister and brother I am speaking of. I have sought for weeks to find employment and I cannot. I have kept them as best I could until now, and this morning I gave them the last food that remained in the house

"Well," said Bridget, "you can go, but not until I have given you something for the little ones who came near to making a burglar out of you." She took a basket from its peg in a closet and filled it well with articles of food such as children would most like. "I will make this up to the mistress, she said, for she is a good one to me, and I would n't take the value of a pin from her, but the children have gone hungry long enough."

In a more hopeful frame of mind he started out on his daily search, the next morning, and whether it was the increased brightness of his face, or the more assured tones of his voice that were produced by the fact that he had breakfasted before going out, at any rate he at last found something to do that would help him to keep the wolf from the door.

That night there was a knock at the door opening into the basement kitchen, which he had entered the night before without that formality. It was opened instantly by Bridget, who took the basket he extended to her with an inquiring look that he at once understood.

"Perhaps it was your good wishes that followed me," he said, with the rare smile she had noticed on his face the night before; "but I am glad to be able to tell you that I have succeeded to-day in finding the employment I have so long searched for."

"Good luck to you in it then," she said, smiling: "and nobody but ourselves shall ever know of the bad intentions that brought you here first. Be the good man you look like and you will prosper in time."

She said this almost like uttering a prophecy, and he accepted it as such.

"Thank you with all my heart," he replied, "and, if good fortune awaits me in the future, may I come once in a while to tell you of it?"

"Why, I don't even know your name," said she, "and I don't believe you know mine, and the mistress don't like me to have callers, anyway."

"My name is Clarence Brown, and I really would like to know the name of one who has been to me like a good angel of mercy."

"Well, then, it's Bridget Maloney, and if you feel as if it would do you good to tell me once in a while how you like your place, you may come with that intention."

All this happened quite a good while ago. In the fine-looking young man and the pretty, rosy young woman sitting side by side in front of the grate in their neat sitting-room we recognize Clarence Brown and she who was Bridget Malony, now Mrs. Clarence Brown.

—"Didn't I order molasses?" she shouted to the grocer through the telephone yesterday. "Yes'm." "And you sent me vinegar?" "Yes'm, so I did. We are out of molasses and won't have any until Thursday. Try and make the vinegar answer for a few days." And as he hung up the trumpet he growled to himself: "The people of Detroit are getting so particular that nothing will suit 'em!"

Bradstreets' reports a total of 319 failures throughout the country for the week ending January 27th, against 350 for the week previous. Sixty of the number were in Canada, eighteen more than the preceding week.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, FEB. 9, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

An article on "independent Journalism" in last week's Dundalk Herald, clearly explains to us how readily and gracefully several representatives of that class of papers have altered their political complexion with every change in the personnel of the Provincial and Dominion cabinets. To blow hot and then cold; to support Sir John to-day and Mr. Mowat to-morrow, and blow them both up the day afterwards—well there is heaps of elasticity about independent journals after all, and no inconsiderable quantity of diplomacy is required in order that everything may be done decently and in order. We shall study the question more closely in future.

As a rule, independent newspapers are not such from principle. It is purely a matter of dollars and cents an endeavor to ride Tory and Grit horses profitably at the one time, and in such a manner as to leave the impression that no partiality or unfair division of the "corn" has been made. To ride two horses which are always pulling away from each other requires the skill of a most accomplished diplomat, and even then, it sometimes happens that the rider gets a pretty rough tumble. It is a very good thing to be independent or act independently, but everybody must perceive that there is a point at which independence ceases and partyism—clearly and unmistakeably defined—begins. As the Herald very truly observes, he—as an independent journalist—may sometimes "express reform views," while it is equally possible that he may occasionally "join in with Conservative views." But the Herald's independence (politically speaking) ceases just as soon as it takes sides with one or the other of the two great parties. If it does not express itself with sufficient definiteness on either side to be clearly understood, however, its remarks have little or no weight, but are likely to bring down upon its head the scornful epithet—"Straddle-the-fence." It is a curious fact, that every independent newspaper (so-called) has strong and decided leanings in the direction of either the Reform or the Conservative party.

The Herald says that it may occasionally not agree with the views of either political party and take "neutral" ground. Bless your heart! why if that were good grounds for neutrality—which is a mental, though perchance not an apparent, impossibility—a great many of both parties could be safely set down as neutral; for, while agreeing with the general policy adopted by the leaders of their respective parties, they often—and not unnaturally—disagree on points of minor importance. But that does not furnish sufficient excuse for outward or apparent neutrality: there is really no such thing as taking a strictly neutral position, mentally. It is one of the tendencies of human beings, that they invariably take one side or the other in all the questions which effect our existence in this world or the world to come. They may not manifest their predilections by any outward signs, but in their heart of hearts, or, if you will, in their mind of minds, the invisible and mysterious ballot marker of that intellect never fails to record its "vote" for or against.

The Editor of the Creemore Advertiser has got his elastic back up because several papers published an item referring to him and which appeared first in the Empire. The Tizer talks very learnedly about biography, but we can assure him that we could go him several better than the "Vortex" racket.

The man who doesn't advertise in the newspapers might just about as well take down his sign and follow some other calling where the use of printer's ink is unnecessary: otherwise he will only do a "from hand to mouth" business, with the possibility of ultimately joining the army of bankrupts and boodlers, whose homes are chiefly found in the neighboring republic.

It is rumored that THE ADVANCE man has re-considered his resolution to "quit smoking forever." When that rash vow was made, he had no idea of the power of habit—and especially that seductive and soothing one called smoking: chewing tobacco is a bird of another kind, and may be very properly designated as condensed nastiness. Well, THE ADVANCE never was a heavy smoker, as asserted by an esteemed contemporary, and never having felt any of the ill effects attributed to the practice, has consequently come to the conclusion to publicly declare the word "forever" annulled, in so far as it refers to ourself personally in this connection. In conclusion let us say to our young readers: The best way to quit any habit, is never to begin it! An ounce of prevention is worth ten thousand pounds of cure.

MASQUERADE CARNIVAL.

Our Band boys may safely congratulate themselves upon the success which attended the Carnival held on the rink here last Thursday evening under their auspices. The attendance of spectators was large; and although the masquers did not turn out in as large force as might have been expected, the proceedings were nevertheless pleasant and interesting.

The following gentlemen acted as judges, viz.: Mr. Wm. Moore, of Priceville; Mr. Wm. Moore, of Owen Sound; Mr. J. G. Russell, of Flesherton.

PRIZES AWARDED:

Best Lady Skater—1st Miss Sarah Smith, 2nd Miss Hattie Cole.

Best Costume (lady)—Miss M. Damude

Best Gent Skater—1st A. R. Fawcett, 2nd D. Clayton.

Best Clown—J. Gibbons.

Best Costume (gent)—Wm. Armstrong

Best Lady and Gent Skater—Miss S. Smith and Joseph Field.

Best dressed Military Man—Thomas Hollinger.

Fat Man—Wes. Armstrong.

Fastest Skater (gent)—J. Gibbons,

Best Dressed Little Girl (special)—Miss Lizzie Strain.

We were pleased to notice the pleasant countenances of a goodly number of young people from Dundalk, Markdale, and Priceville always glad to see visitors from sister villages. Come again.

Heathenism in Canada.

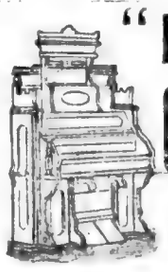
"What! is it possible you don't know anything at all about the Scriptures?" said the surprised Methodist Sunday School Teacher to the new boy in her class last Sabbath.

"No, never heard of 'em," replied the boy, "we have just moved here from Markdale: but pa is going to buy one of R. Trimble's overcoats for five dollars and be real genteel."

Wheezing, gasping suffererers from Asthma receive quick and permanent relief by using Southern Asthma Cure. Sold by druggists or by mail on receipt of price.

WANTED!

A Quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery.
JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton.

Repairing, Eavetrouching, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

HEARDS

Carriage Works, Flesherton,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.

Given to SHOEING and GENERAL JOB WORKING, TRIMMING, &c.

SPECIAL ATTENTION

Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton

Photos,

Photos,

Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For? Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	80 78 to 0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 78
Barley	0 60	0 70
Oats	0 38	0 38
Peas	0 58	0 58
Butter	0 17	0 17
Eggs, fresh	0 17	0 17
Potatoes bush	0 40	0 40
Pork	6 50	6 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	4 50	5 50
Wool	18	21
Sheepskins	0 70	1 06
Geese	0 5	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 60

Change in Business!

The undersigned having bought out S. Spirit's Butchering business in Flesherton, has opened up with a fine stock of Oysters, Salmon, Sardines, Fresh & Dried Meats, Fresh & Salt Fish, Sausage, Bologna, &c., and invites the people to call and get acquainted and leave a trial order for anything in the above lines.

JOS. McCONNELL.
Flesherton, Feb. 1st, 1888.

W. BOOTH,

The Boss Barber,

FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

RICHLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed; we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—|—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton, Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8.

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines,

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams, etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

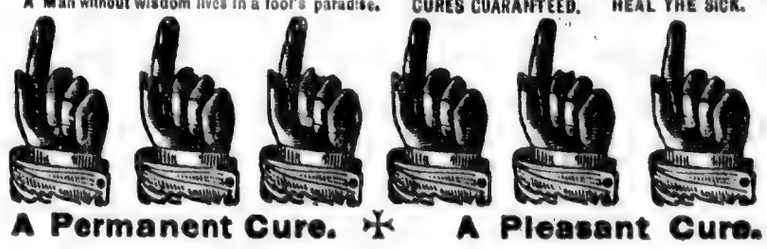
A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.



A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

The Reason Why.

The question is continually being asked, why do so many buy their

FURNITURE

— AT —

J. E. Moore's

FURNITURE WAREROOMS, FLESHERTON.

The answer is simply this, we keep just what the people need and sell at fair prices.

— We are selling —

BEDROOM SUITES

of Beautiful Designs and Workmanship at Prices that Challenge Competition.

MATTRESSES AND SPRINGS

In great variety. Cheap. Very Cheap.

CHAIRS, TABLES,
BUREAUS,
SIDEBOARDS,
CUPBOARDS,
LOUNGES,
SOFAS,
WASH STANDS,

DRESSING CASES,
WATNOTS,
CRADLES,
CRIBS,
COTS,
BEDSTEADS.

In fact everything usually found in a First-Class Furniture Establishment constantly in stock. Having on hand a stock of well-seasoned Lumber and keeping a staff of skilled Workmen we are enabled to make a specialty of

Ordered Work

— AND —

Repairing

In all its Branches. Our

Picture Framing Department

Is again well filled up with New and Beautiful Designs of Mouldings. In this particular branch it is acknowledged by all that we X. L.

Note well the address as it may save you money.

J. E. MOORE,

Flesherton Furniture Warerooms

On Durham St.

For The Advance.]

A Leap for Life.

Lords of creation lend an ear,
I'm to marry a week from to-day!
Pity me, pity, ye scores of men
I was trapped in an innocent way
I knew Miss Jones for a few short weeks,
And I went one day to call,
And the servant shewed me in, you know,
But I met Miss Jones in the hall.
"I hope you are not engaged," I said
In an easy, careless tone,
Judge my surprise when she whispered "No!"
And called me her "loved, her own."
Then she set the week, she set the day,
And she set the hour and all,
While I felt like one who has lost his head,
As I stood there in the hall!

* * * * *

I wish our language had never known
A word like that word "engaged."
Why couldn't she take the meaning I meant,
And leave me thus uncaged!
Lords of creation, lend an ear;
I'm to marry a week from to-day.
Pity me, pity, ye scores of men,
I was trapped in an innocent way.

—Edith B. VanLuven.

Owen Sound, 1888.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

We noticed by the news that our municipal grant was the largest in the township of Euphrasia for the half year ending Dec. 31st, 1887. Kimberley has good prospects and may require a high school before Markdale.

Miss D. Thurston, of Guelph is now visiting her friends in this locality.

We were pleased to learn that Mrs. Gaudin and family have arrived safely in their New Hampshire home.

Miss Thompson is visiting friends in Owen Sound.

Mr. John Carruthers has left our village to seek his fortune in a southern clime. We wish him every success.

On Thursday evening the Temperance revivalists held their first meeting in this place. The songs and earnest appeals of these gentlemen were appreciated by all who heard them. Similar services were held during the remaining part of the week. On Sabbath morning Mr. Smith preached a powerful sermon on "faith and its results," when he related in a very affecting manner the way in which he was led to accept of Christ as his personal Saviour.

During the afternoon the S. S. was visited by the Band. Mr. Irish addressed the children in a very forcible way, after which all joined heartily in some very appropriate songs. The closing service was held on Sabbath evening. Many flocked down from the mountain sides and consequently the church was well filled. To this attentive audience Mr. Smith spoke with great earnestness.

REPORT OF KIMBERLEY PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR JANUARY.—NAMES IN ORDER OF MERIT.

Division I.

IV Class—Ella Carruthers, Ella Dyness, John Dyness, Alfred Thurston.

IV Class (jr.)—Irwin Stafford, Rutledge Stafford, George Burritt.

III Class—Simon Plewes, John Hammond, Sarah Knott.

III Class (jr.)—Fleetwood Battrick, Samuel Thompson, Albert McConnell.

II Class—Hattie Dyness, Ada Burritt, Rosia Curtes.

Division II.

II Class (jr.)—Talmage Dynes, Fanny Battrick, William Thompson.

I Class (sr.)—Lillie Gilbert, Wellington Graham, Willie Thompson.

I Class—Jessie Gilbert, Henry McLean, Wesley Dynes.

I Class (jr.)—Willie McLean, Minnie Battrick, Fida Bowerman.

Average attendance 55.

I. E. GAUDIN, Principal.
M. ABERCROMBIE, Assistant.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

On Saturday last a fine spring calf belonging to Mr. H. Meldrum, of this place, fell through the ice in Mr. Sloan's mill pond and was carried by the current into the flume and drowned.

Mr. J. W. Hoath, and wife, formerly of this place but now of Tottenham, are rusticating here.

Mrs. Corcoran is suffering from a severe cold.

Mr. Daniel McMullen while engaged the other day in carrying a heavy box, slipped and fell. The weight came upon his thumb dislocating it and forcing the joint through the skin which caused a very painful wound.

The other night some sneak thief entered the stable of Rev. J. S. Corcoran and stole a fine pair of bantam fowls. The thief did not succeed so well as he thought he had in covering his tracks.

Eugenia has lost in the person of Mr. McMullen, who has gone to seek his fortune in Michigan, a valued and popular citizen. His many friends will be glad to hear of his prosperity in his new home.

On Monday evening the Gospel Temperance Band held a meeting in the Orange Hall. The Hall was packed and the entertainment was simply grand. The songs and speeches fairly brought down the house with peals of uncontrolable laughter. Miss Thurston, of Kimberley, presided at the organ. The Band also held meetings on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings which were largely attended.

On Being Practical.

We clip the following able editorial article from the columns of the January issue of The Patriarch—a manuscript magazine published in connection with Flesherton Division, Sons of Temperance:—

ON BEING PRACTICAL.

The day in which we live is one in which people are largely dazzled by eloquence; mystified by theories; rendered doubtful by the questions of philosophy or satiated by third-class poetry. And the most wholesome thing to take hold of under such circumstances is practical speech. The best mental tonic is practical work. By being practical we mean doing something that will be of use to the doer or of benefit for that or those for whom it is done. To be practical is not necessarily to be slavish. You may often find people who screw and scrape and toil and slave and at the end of a long life have accomplished far less than others through clear mental insight have accomplished in a few days or weeks. To be practical is not necessarily to be grovelling—materialistic, automatic. That class of people may some time find themselves displaced by modern inventions and their employment taken away by perfect machinery. But no machine can displace the truly practical man—no invention rob him of his employment. He fills a niche in times triumphal arch and well deserves his honor. His presence is essential to the world's well-being; his work a fountain of the nations prosperity—his steps are ordered by a hand unseen; he is a co-worker together with God and an imitator of Him in whom eternal work and endless rest combine. To be practical there needs the formation of a conception, the cultivation of a stern purpose and the patient, ploding, working out of that purpose till that conception becomes an actuality. Each here may become eminently useful and highly successful if only they will be patiently practical, and each here may stand if they will be [illegible] and have satisfaction to themselves. Time is precious, moments are more than monies. Success depends largely on an early start. Be practical begin at once. In the question asked, where must I begin? we answer where you are. Frequent changes in either locality or occupation are neither practical nor benefical. Employ your ablest powers and work to life's noblest ends. Work with your mind, your spirit, your will, and let your physical functions be the willing servants of your spiritual and mental powers. Arouse the mind from its lethargy by working for an idea; bring the mind into a state of discipline by working at that idea and then bring all your mental and physical faculties into line by working out that idea. Search for a living thought like one who searches for a precious gem, and if the thought you find at best seem very poor, don't despise it. Diamonds are very like common stones till they are cut and polished and their literal beauty brought out. Thoughts more precious than diamonds are not born full grown but more than men are. They need nursing into life and then developing into beauty. Nor on the other hand must we strangle a thought at its birth because it is novel, utopiar, or of no apparent use. A certain P.H.D. who lives not a hundred miles from here, stated in Flesherton last spring that men of utopian ideas had never conferred any good upon the world, which statement was very opposite the truth. The idea of an Atlantic going steamer was at first said to be dreamy, visionary and the first steamer that ever crossed the Atlantic brought in it a book written to prove the steamer an impossibility and the idea of it impracticable. If you find the germ of a grand idea, with steady purpose plod on till in all its details it is worked out. In respect to Division work we would urge each member then to be practical for the sake of the reflex benefit they would derive as well as for the benefit that would acrue to the Division. The fact is we have come to a point where work will pay. Ours is a goodly heritage so far as prospects are concerned. Our ore is extensive; our soil fertile; and there are undiscovered veins of rich and precious ore. What has been done may be done again. And what has never been attempted yet may be accomplished.

Let us then delight to labor,
Plodding on with heart and hand
From our purpose never waver
Till on victory's heights we stand.

Salem Sabbath School Anniversary.

The Anniversary of Salem Sabbath School was held last Friday evening with the Superintendent in the chair. The eatables were provided by the mothers of those attending the school and was everything that could be desired. Although the night was very cold there was a good turnout and the children enjoyed it very much. The programme was long, varied and well sustained. Mrs. McGee, Teacher in No. 9 S.S., must have labored hard in preparing so many of her pupils to give so many Dialogues and Recitations all of which were warmly applauded. Miss Hattie Smith, of Flesherton, sang several beautiful pieces which were well received. Miss Pedlar accompanied three Master Pedlar's in a very nice piece. The three boys sang well and Miss Pedlar's accompaniment was really good. Master R. J. Pedlar sang two nice pieces accompanied by his brother George. R. J. has a fine voice and we look forward hopefully for much more from him in the future. Messrs. William Pedlar and his brother Richard treated the audience to several pieces of music. They are both favorites at Salem Tea-Meetings. Messrs. William Pedlar and his cousin Will gave two Dialogues which were well received. Mr. Charles Bruce gave a Recitation in his usual masterly style. Messrs. Robert Hawkins, Samuel Pedlar and Joseph Pedlar, who all hold office in the school each gave a short address.

A standing vote of thanks was warmly accorded to Mrs. McGee for the kind and able manner in which she had assisted on this occasion. Mrs. McGee thanked the audience for their courtesy. Thanks were also given to the children for the orderly and happy manner in which they had rendered their various exercises. Also to Miss Smith and the others who had done so much for the enjoyment of the audience during the evening and to the ladies who had so kindly furnished the eatables for the very excellent viands they had provided. After a vote of thanks to the Superintendent the audience arose and sang the Doxology. The meeting was closed with the Benediction. All seemed highly pleased with the meeting. Salem is emphatically a UNION Sabbath School. All sectarianism is ignored. All are heartily invited to attend and it is largely attended.

Hon. C. Edwards Lester,

Late U. S. Consul to Italy, author of "The Glory and Shame of England," "America's Advancement," etc., etc., etc., writes as follows:—

New York, August 1, 1886.
122 E. 27th st.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.,

Gentlemen:—A sense of gratitude and the desire to render a service to the public impel me to make the following statements.

My college career, at New Haven, was interrupted by a severe cold which so enfeebled me that, for ten years, I had a hard struggle for life. Hemorrhage from the bronchial passages was the result of almost every fresh exposure. For years I was under treatment of the ablest practitioners without avail. At last I learned of which I used moderately and in small doses) at the first recurrence of a cold or any chest difficulty, and from which I invariably found relief. This was over 25 years ago. With all sorts of exposure, in all sorts of climates, I have never, to this day, had any cold nor any affection of the throat or lungs which did not yield to AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL within 24 hours.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Of course I have never allowed myself to be without this remedy in all my voyages and travels. Under my own observation, it has given relief to vast numbers of persons; while in acute cases of pulmonary inflammation, such as croup and diphtheria in children, life has been preserved through its effects. I recommend its use in light but frequent doses. Properly administered, in accordance with your directions, it is in any house. I speak earnestly because I feel earnestly. I have known many cases of apparently confirmed bronchitis and cough, with loss of voice, particularly among clergymen and other public speakers, perfectly cured by this medicine. Faithfully yours,

A Priceless Blessing

C. EDWARDS LESTER.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

LOOK HERE!

For the Next

30 Days

— AT —

GORDON'S

Harness Shop,

FLESHERTON,

Will be Given a

LARGE DISCOUNT

On all Cash Sales over One Dollar.

A Full Stock on Hand of

HARNESS,
WHIPS,
TRUNKS,
SWEAT PADS,
CURRY COMBS,
HORSE BLANKETS
HARNESS OIL,
BRUSHES, &c., &c.

SCOTCH COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

N.B.—All outstanding accounts must be settled within the next 30 Days. If not the books will be placed in other hands for collection.

ROBBED OF ABOUT $20,000.

A Rich Old Bachelor in Minnesota Takes a Ride on Invitation of a Woman—She Proves to be a Man in Disguise, and He is Forced to Give Up His Money.

An Albert Lea, Minn., despatch says: Sanford Tanner has been a well-known character for twenty years in this county. He is a bachelor, and seems to have no relatives or confidential friend. He stays but a few months in a place, being most of the time at Mona and St. Ansgar, Iowa, and at Austin, Glenville and Albert Lea, in this State, looking after his loans and collecting his interest. He is very eccentric. He is worth probably $100,000, and generally carries on his person his certificates of deposit and other papers and a considerable sum in cash. It is said he has been robbed several times, last spring having been relieved of $1,900 at Austin, Minn. The particulars of a recent exciting experience have just been learned.

He had been boarding for a month or more with the family of J. P. Bennett, within gunshot of Glenville, nine miles south of this city. One day during the week preceding Christmas a young, well-informed, stylishly-dressed, and self-possessed woman drove up to Fred. Morrison's horel in Glenville with a horse and cutter, and inquired about Tanner, as to where he boarded, where he was generally to be found, and other particulars. She drove around for a time and finally returned to Albert Lea. The next day she alighted from the cars at the Glenville depot and engaged John Showers, a stranger in that section, to drive her into the country. They drove four miles south to the house of Mrs. Ann Buchanan, where the mysterious woman stopped. She then directed Showers to drive back to Bennett's and tell Sanford Tanner that a lady at Mrs. Buchanan's wanted to see him. Showers did so, and soon returned with Tanner. The strange woman came out and got into the sleigh, took Tanner on her lap and instructed the man to drive further on, as she wanted to talk over some business matters with Tanner. In Glenville she had pretended to some that she was a detective working up the robbery of Tanner at Austin, and she thus partly explained her object to Tanner and Showers.

Arriving at the cross roods, just east of Gordonsville Station, she directed Showers to get out and wait, as she wanted to drive on a short distance and have a confidential talk with Tanner. The accommodating driver did so. She drove with Tanner over a hill to the east and returned in twenty minutes, when they all went to Gordonsville Station. Tanner took the train that soon came along and returned to Glenville, and Showers was hired by the woman to take her to Northwood, where he left her. She doubtless took the train there, and has lived in clover ever since. During the ride Showers had his suspicion aroused, and asked the woman what caused the beard on her face, as it had begun to slightly show through the paint. She answered, "Oh, I have not shaved to-day; it's all right." The pretended woman was in truth a man in disguise, and while over the hill he had robbed Tanner of $20,000 in certificates of deposit of banks of Albert Lea, Austin and St. Paul, and $1,400 in cash. He had threatened Tanner with death if he exposed him, and thus easily worked his bold and successful robbery. As soon as Tanner returned to Glenville he telegraphed to the banks directing them not to pay money on the certificates, and during the past week they were all returned to him in an envelope postmarked at St. Paul, containing also the words: "Lost and found Jan. 17," but Tanner has not again seen the woman who so affectionately held him in her lap, nor the $1,400 which she carried away.

ANOTHER MINE DISASTER.

Fatal Gas Explosion in a Wilkesbarre Pit.

A Wilkesbarre, Pa., despatch says: A terrific explosion of gas occurred in the Lottingham mine at Plymouth yesterday afternoon, by which five men, who were engaged in repairing the timbering, were seriously if not fatally burned. It was an idle day at the mine, but before the workmen entered the pit the fire boss made an examination and reported everything safe, but owing to some defective ventilation gas had in some way accumulated. Not knowing this, the repair men walked into the gas with naked lamps, setting fire to it. The explosion which followed was tremendous and the men were hurled in every direction. They were not alone burned, but were seriously bruised. As the whole party is badly injured and unable to speak, further details are unobtainable. The names of the unfortunates are: Daniel Reese, married, aged 28; Ludwig Bose, married, aged 32; John McElwee, married, aged 35; David L. Lloyd, married, aged 40, and a Polack whose name is not known.

Wants Work for His Wife.

Applicant—Please, ma'am, can you help a poor man who is out of work?

Woman—I guess I can find something for you to do.

Applicant (gratefully)—Thanks. If you could give me some washing to do, I'll take it home to my wife.—The Epoch.

Too Expensive.

No, Patti has no babies. The family have decided that they can't afford it. When they realized that it would cost the youngster £100 every time he wanted his mother to sing him to sleep, cash up, or no concert, they decided that no baby could stand it without mortgaging the nursery and fittings.

Captain Haig, lecturing at the Royal United Service Institute in London last night, hoped that the English Government would procure some of the new pneumatic dynamite guns to experiment with, as their influence on a naval warfare will be very marked.

If thou art rich, then show the greatness of thy fortune, or, what is better, the greatness of thy soul, in the meekness of thy action and thy conversation, sympathize with men of low estate, aid the distressed and show consideration to the neglected; be great.—Laurence Sterne.

The telephone wires in Buffalo are being put under ground.

STOLEN SECRETS.

How Great Inventions Were Got Hold of by Determined Men.

CLEVER TRICKS PLAYED ON MEN OF GENIUS.

One hundred years ago what a man discovered in the arts and mechanics he concealed. Workmen were put on oath never to reveal the process used by their employers. Doors were kept closed, artisans going out were searched, visitors were rigorously excluded from admission, and false operations blinded the workmen themselves. The mysteries of every craft were hedged in by quickest fences of empirical pretension and judicial affirmation. There used to be, close by Temple Bar, in London, an old chemist's shop. The proprietor of it in days gone by enjoyed the monopoly of making citric acid. More favorably circumstanced than other secret manufacturers, his was a process that required no assistance. He employed no workmen. Experts came to sample and assort and bottle his products. They never entered the laboratory. The mystic operations by which he grew rich were confined to himself. One day, having locked the doors and blinded the windows, sure, as usual, of the safety of his secret, our chemist went home to his dinner. A chimney-sweep, or a boy disguised as such, wide awake in chemistry, was on the watch. Following the secret-keeper so far on his way to Charing Cross as to be sure he would not return that day, the sooty philosopher hied rapidly back to Temple Bar, ascended the low building, dropped down the flue, saw all he wanted and returned, carrying with him the mystery of making citric acid. The monopoly of the inventor was gone. A few months after and the price was reduced by four-fifths. The poor man was heart-broken, and died shortly afterwards, ignorant of the trick by which he had been victimised. Like Miss Tabitha Bramble, when informed that the thunder had spoiled two barrels of beer in her cellar, he might have said, "How the thunder should get there when the cellar was double-locked I can't comprehend." The manufacture of tinware in England originated in a stolen secret. Few readers need to be informed that tinware is simply thin sheet iron, plated with tin by being dipped into the molten metal. In theory it is an easy matter to clean the surface of iron. Dip it into a bath of boiling tin, and remove it, enveloped with the silvery metal, to a place of cooling. In practice, however, the process is one of the most difficult of the arts. It was discovered in Holland, and guarded from publicity with the utmost vigilance for nearly half a century. England tried in vain to discover the secret, until James Sherman, a Cornish miner, crossed the Channel, insinuated himself surreptitiously into a tin plate manufactory, made himself master of the secret, and brought it home. The history of cast steel presents a curious instance of a manufacturing secret stealthily obtained under the cloak of an appeal to philanthropy. The main distinction between iron and steel, as many people know, is that the latter contains carbon. The one is converted into the other by being heated for a considerable time in contact with powdered charcoal in an iron box. Now, steel thus made is unequal. The middle of a bar is more carbonized than the ends, and the surface more than the centre. It is, therefore, unreliable. Nevertheless, before the invention of cast steel there was nothing better. In 1760 there lived at Attercliffe, near Sheffield, a watchmaker named Huntsman. He became dissatisfied with the watch springs in use and set himself to the task of making them homogeneous. "If," thought he, "I can melt a piece of steel and cast it into an ingot, its composition should be the same throughout." He succeeded. His steel became famous. Huntsman's ingots for fine work were in universal demand. He did not call them cast steel. That was his secret. About 1770 a large manufactory of this peculiar steel was established at Attercliffe. The process was wrapped in secrecy by every one within reach—true and faithful men hired, the work divided and subdivided, large wages paid, and stringent oaths administered. It did not avail. One midwinter night, as the tall chimneys of the Attercliffe steel works belched forth their smoke, a traveller knocked at the gate. It was bitterly cold, the snow fell fast, and the wind howled across the moat. The stranger, apparently a ploughman or agricultural laborer, seeking shelter from the storm, awakened no suspicion. Scanning the wayfarer closely, and moved by motives of humanity, the foreman granted his request and let him in. Feigning to be worn out with cold and fatigue, the poor fellow sank upon the floor, and soon appeared to be asleep. That, however, was far from his intention. He closed his eyes apparently only. He saw workmen cut bars of steel into bits, place them in crucibles, and thrust the crucibles into a furnance. The fire was urged to its extreme power until the steel was melted. Clothed in wet rags to protect themselves from the heat, the workmen drew out the glowing crucibles, and poured their contents into a mould. Mr. Huntsman's factory had nothing more to disclose. The secret of making cast steel had been discovered.—English Mechanic.

Mrs. Langtry's Private Car.

Mrs. Langtry's private car, which is being built for her at Wilmington, Del., will be one of the most gorgeous palaces on wheels ever constructed. The cost will be about $60,000. It will be equipped with office, dressing-room, bath and bed-room. The bed-room will be padded in every part, so that in case of railroad accident Mrs. Langtry will fall gently. Mrs. Langtry will undoubtedly recover the money thus spent in the curiosity to which the car will give rise, in the same way that W. S. Eden, proprietor of "The Arabian Nights," recovered the 1,000 silver dollars with which he paved his barber shop in the Palmer House, Chicago.

Heavy winds have driven the ice from New York harbor out to sea.

The largest Chinese mining camp in the country is at Warren, Idaho, where hundreds of the celestials are at work in mines abandoned by the white miners. Every year a number of them go back to China, with fortunes of from $2,000 to $5,000, to pass their remaining years in comfort.

THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE.

TORONTO—The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Stratton, on rising to move the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, was received with loud applause. He took occasion to extend hearty congratulations to Sir Alexander Campbell upon taking the office of Lieutenant-Governor of this Province. It was true, he said, that the season's operations among the agriculturists were not altogether satisfactory; yet in some branches, notably in dairy farming, there had been marked and gratifying success. He referred to the recent timber sales by the Provincial Government, and thought that the Province was to be congratulated upon the success which had attended this the ninth sale of timber lands in the Province. He quoted figures relating to the sales of timber limits in Ontario, proving an average of receipts of $360 per square mile of bonus. He quoted also the figures of nine sales during the same period in the Province of Quebec, showing average receipts of only $43 bonus per square mile. It was complained in some quarters that the timber resources of the Province were being too quickly used up, but it was not to be forgotten that the forests stood constantly in danger of being swept away by fire. Moreover it would be inimical to the general interests of the Province to arbitrarily prevent the employment of the great capital invested in Ontario's lumbering intests. Referring to that part of the speech relating to Provincial Lunatic Asylums, he said that it had become evident that further accommodation was necessary for this most unfortunate class. In the last sixteen years the Province had expended over $5,000,000 upon this most unfortunate class. Yet there were 471 last year whose misfortune had been converted into a crime and they had been left in the county jails. In relation to the proposal to appoint a Minister of Agriculture, he dwelt upon the importance of the farming interest, showing that the capital invested in the farms of the Province was $975,292,000, the field crops alone reaching the value of $105,579,000 a year. It was but just to this great interest that it should have special representation in the Cabinet. While the Government showed this attention to the interest of the farming community, the interests of labor were not forgotten.

Mr. McKay seconded the motion in a speech which was well delivered and well received. He was glad to know that in conformity with their policy of extending the franchise as rapidly as public sentiment would justify it, the Government would this session propose that manhood suffrage should be established in the Province.

Mr. Meredith said he would postpone observations upon some points referred to by other speakers until a later period of the session. He heartily concurred in the congratulations extended to the new Lieut.-Governor. There could be no better tribute to the benefits of training in the Conservative camp than the high praise given by gentlemen opposite to Sir Alexander Campbell, and this was also a complete answer to the statements which had been made for party purposes in the House and out of it by members of the Government which would have led one who believed them to regard [redacted] Governor as a tyrant desirous of depriving her of over 100,000 square miles of territory. He was glad to know that the pessimistic views held by their leaders, the Minister of Education (Mr. Ross) being the first among them to voice the opposite view, were not held by the mover and seconder of the Address.

The resolution for the address was carried, the customary form was gone through and the address adopted.

Petitions were presented from the County Councils of Welland and Lennox and Addington praying relief respecting the confinement of insane persons in the common jails.

Hon. Mr. Fraser presented a Bill respecting the closing of shops and the hours of labor of young children and persons therein.

Hon. Mr. Mowat presented a Bill relating to alimony in certain cases. He explained that the object was to provide that the magistrates or police magistrate trying cases of non-support might decide the amount of alimony to be given where the amount claimed was not large, appeal being allowed to the judge of the Division Court.

The Bill was read the first time.

The estimates for expenditures to be made between the opening of the year and the voting of the regular Supply Bill of the session were presented and voted in the usual way.

The House adjourned at 3.45 o'clock.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. Garson—On Tuesday next—Bill respecting stationary engines and engineers.

Mr. Waters—On Wednesday next—Bill to amend the Assessment Act.

Also, bill to enable widows and unmarried women to vote for members of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. French—On Monday next—Bill to authorize the appointment of fire guardians and the better prevention of bush fires.

Mr. McKay—On Wednesday next—Bill for the prevention of accidents by fire in hotels and other public buildings.

A Lucky Trip.

"What have you been doing for a living lately?" asked a very tough-looking citizen of a man who looked as if he might be a boon companion.

"Burglarizing."

"What was your last job?"

"I tackled the residence of a real estate agent last night."

"Have you any luck?"

"Yes; first-rate."

"What did you get?"

"I got away without buying a house and lot."

There is a story of a pretty Kerry lady who had all her life a slight tendency to a redness of the nose, which developed with years. One day, speaking to a neighboring gentleman, she said, simperingly: "All my life I've been in dread of having a red nose," which elicited the following reply, in the broadest Kerry brogue: "And, good heavens, woman, now that you have a red nose, will you tell me what harm it does you?"

WILL RACE FOR A RICH BRIDE.

Two Young Men to Run Eight Miles Next Thursday, the Winner to Marry Miss Annie Douglass.

A Nashville, Tenn., despatch says: Miss Annie Douglass, a graduate of Vanderbilt University, who is known throughout Tennessee as "The Oil Queen," because of her large possessions of oil property in the Spring Creek district, is to be married on next Thursday night to the winner of a foot-race. Miss Douglass is an orphan, residing with her grandfather, James Douglass, proprietor of the noted "Calf Miller Farm." Nathan Overman, a neighbor, was a suitor for the hand of Miss Douglass, and he had no opposition until two years ago, when John Lane, of Indiana, a cousin of Mrs. Hendricks, came to the neighborhood.

The rivalry for the hand of the young lady became intense, and bloodshed was feared. Mr. Douglass, who had no preference between the young men, decided to end the matter, and, being an eccentric man, hit upon a novel plan. He got the three interested persons together and proposed, as the young lady herself could not decide between them, that they run a race of eight miles on parallel roads, the winner to marry the girl before night. All agreed, and promised to abide the result.

At 8 o'clock next Thursday morning the men will start, and on their return they will have a banquet, which will be followed by the marriage. The whole country is aroused and thousands will see the race. Miss Douglass is worth $100,000.

A Doubtful Set.

I have an acquaintance who takes snuff. The other day, when the wind was blowing from the west, he started out in that direction. He was in a hurry, too—important business. By and by he wanted some snuff. He took out his box, stopped, turned his back to the wind to keep the snuff from blowing away, took a pinch and walked on. Yes, sir; walked on in the very direction he had come—didn't know he had turned around. A goose hasn't much brain, but you never saw a goose do such a thing as that.

I am glad I live in this age, there are so many people to hate. I like to hate people, anyway; but I prefer to have them deserve to be hated. Most of them, nowadays, thank heaven, do deserve to be hated. Now, there is that fellow with the moccasins on his feet. Comes up behind you noiselessly, the sneak. You don't know there's anybody within a mile of you. Suddenly you see him from the corner of your eye, right beside you, close up, and your blood jumps and stops. There ought to be a law to make men in moccasins wear sleigh-bells. They frighten decent folks half out of their wits.

Then there is that fellow with the left-over expression, as somebody in the Atlantic Monthly once called it—the fellow who meets a friend in front of you on the street and pokes into your face the expression he intended for him. How am I supposed to know when I meet the man who is grinning the grin of recognition—how am I to know whether it is intended for me or for the man walking in front of me? Perhaps I grin in return. Then I feel like a fool, and all on account of that fellow's left-over expression.

Everybody has met the dodger—the miserable, vacillating creature who never knows which way he is going to turn out for you. Down he comes toward you, walking like a personified hurricane. First he thinks he will turn to the right. Then he changes his mind and darts a little to the left. Then he brings up square in front of you, and you stand there playing peek-a-boo with him till you feel that everybody on the street is looking at you and laughing at you. I meet this wretch every now and then, and I always leave him with a feeling that the law against carrying weapons is an injustice and an outrage.

I want a vigilance committee organized to snuff out the man, who, in the street car in the evening, holds his newspaper by the two remotest edges till he reads everything between. I have tried to read in the same car with this person and I know what I am talking about. I want him shut up in a dungeon till he learns to fold his paper and give other people a chance at the light.

Would Make Him an Architect.

Dawny Campbell went to build a small out-house of brick. After the usual fashion of bricklayers he wrought from the inside, and having the material close beside him, the walls were rising fast when dinner-time arrived, and with it his son Jock, who brought his father's dinner. With honest pride in his eye Dawny looked at Jock over the wall on which he was engaged and asked,

"Hoo d'ye think I'm getting on?"

"Famous, fether; but hoo dae ye get oot? Ye've forgot the door."

One look around him showed Dawny that his son was right; but, looking kindly at him, he said:

"Man, Jock, you've got a gran' heid on ye; ye'll be an architect yet as share's yer father's a mason."—Glasgow Evening Times.

The Difference.

"Oh, Maud, what do you think? My canary bird has laid an egg!"

"That ain't nothin' much; my pa laid two stair carpets yesterday!"

—"How can you afford to give a 5-cent cigar and a shave for 8 cents?" was asked of a down town barber. "Oh, I give 'em the cigar first and they go away without the shave, or I shave 'em first an' they skip without the cigar."

Smith and Kilrain fought a fight,
And want to fight another;
They take the boodle half and half
And thus they £ each other.

A certain doctor in this city, says the Augusta, Me., Journal, was called upon the other day by a man who desired to get a prescription for alcohol. "For what purpose?" asked the doctor. "Mechanical," said the man with a countenance honest enough to look any judge in the country out of countenance. After writing the prescription and handing it to the man the doctor said: "For what kind of mechanical purpose do you intend to use the alcohol?" "Sawing wood. Good day, sir," was the reply.

A return shows that last year the United States consumed English barrelled beer to the value of £174,189, while British North America received beer to the value of £28,024.

LOADED DOWN WITH GOLD.

Wild Extravagance in Melbourne During the Days of the Gold Fever.

Melbourne dates its prosperity from 1851, the year of the gold discovery. That was a period of wild excitement; everybody who could go went to the diggings; an unwonted silence reigned in the well-nigh deserted streets; the shops and public resorts were almost empty, and the few wayfarers who remained at home had a restless and excited appearance. Toward Christmas, however, the deserted city suddenly put on a gay and altered aspect, for the successful diggers abandoned their labors for a time and swarmed in crowds to spend the festive season in the city.

A season of reckless extravagance ensued, and the gold of the diggers was scattered with wild profusion, and was spent even more quickly than it had been amassed.

Every conceivable folly was perpetrated by the rough men with unwashed faces, who paraded the streets arrayed in the finest of broadcloth and with huge rings glittering on their dingy, toil-worn hands.

With them might be seen women decked out in the richest and brightest of silks and satins, below which not unfrequently peeped bare, red feet, while long, tawny locks hung uncombed over their shoulders. The utter incongruity of their conduct with their appearance defies description; they seemed uneasy till all their quickly won wealth had been dissipated.

No materials, however elegant, won their favor unless it had the additional merit of being most costly; and the shop-keepers, finding that articles of a moderate price were almost unsalable, profited by such folly and raised their wares to extravagant prices to suit the taste of the purchasers. With this prodigality was connected an unthinking lavishness; they gave to others as foolishly as they spent on themselves.

Among the well-authenticated anecdotes of such liberality is one of which the daughter of an English gentleman of rank in one of the colonies was the object.

This young lady entered a shop and asked the price of a valuable shawl, which, on being informed of the cost, she regretted to find beyond her means. A stalwart digger was standing near and overheard the colloquy between the young lady and the shopman.

He immediately purchased the shawl, and advancing toward her with his prize in hand he held it out condescendingly to her and said: "Here, my pretty lass, ye shan't be disappointed of your shawl; I can afford to pay for it and ye can't, bless you!"

The young lady, who loved finery beyond the limits of her purse, and who was not troubled with scruples of delicacy or propriety, smiled, bowed, thanked him, and accepted the handsome gift.

A Remedy Against Drummers.

Friend—Don't you have a great many drummers coming in and boring you with their samples and their talk?

Merchant—A good many drummers come in here, but they don't bore me.

"Don't they ask you to look at their samples?"

"No."

"Don't they ask you to give them orders?"

"No, they go right out without saying a word."

"How do you manage to get rid of them?"

"It's the simplest thing in the world. I put a plug hat and an open gripsack on the counter every morning. When a drummer sees these signs of another drummer being on the premises he goes off. Every ten minutes in the day a drummer comes to the door, looks at the gripsack and goes away, and I am left in peace."

Dickens' Beautiful American.

A Middletown (Conn.) reader of the Sunday Republican hastens to write that the identity of the beautiful girl of whom Charles Dickens speaks in his "American Notes" as a passenger on the steamboat Massachusetts from Springfield to Hartford in 1842, is not a mystery—at least in the mind of this correspondent. She was Miss Mather, of Middletown, now Mrs. Kent, of New York, who was with her sister, and both girls were considered among their friends very handsome. Now let some one tell who gave Mr. Dickens the arbutus on his second visit, in 1868, and both mysteries will be cleared away.—Springfield Republican.

Times Have Changed.

"Times have changed. The public taste has changed," exclaimed the professor who was delivering the literary lecture, as he warmed up with his subject and brought his hand down emphatically on the desk. "Where is the man that reads Anthony Trollope to-day?"

"Here he is," said a hollow-eyed, dejected looking man, in the rear of the hall, as he rose up, "I am reading one of his books, but I'm doing it on a bet, and I can lick the ornery son of a gun that has given me away!"

Idiomatic English.

First Party—Hello, Charley! How are you?

Second Party—Oh, I'm enjoying very poor health. How are you?

First Party—Well, I'm suffering very good health.

Sympathy for the Sick.

Funny Man (of Chicago daily)—A sudden feeling of nausea has come over me. It must be something I've eaten.

Horse Editor (sympathetically)—Possibly it's something you have written.

Visitations of Boston schoolboys, under clerical guidance, to the marble statue of Sullivan may have a highly beneficial effect upon the modern Athens some years hence. But it promises to cause a modification in the Bostonian nose and countenance in general. The perpetual squaring off of small boys at street corners at each other, with a subsequent letting out of the right or the left, as the case may be, cannot help causing a variation of species. Every boy who looks at that statue is bound to do something in the line suggested by it if he has mettle in him. When he notes what has thus been immortalised in marble it cannot help having an effect in shaping his aspirations. But they are not our school-boys, and we do not want to interfere.

The Lost Kiss.

I put by the half-written poem,
While the pen idly trailed in my hand,
Writes on, "Had I words to complete it,
Who'd read it, or who'd understand?'
But the little bare feet on the stairway,
And the faint, smothered laugh in the hall,
And the eerie-low lisp on the silence,
Cry up to me over it all.

So I gather it up—where was broken
The tear-faded thread of my theme,
Telling how, as one night I sat writing,
A fairy broke in on my dream,
A little inquisitive fairy—
My own little girl, with the gold
Of the sun in her hair and the dewy
Blue eyes of the fairies of old.

'Twas the dear little girl that I scolded—
"For was it a moment like this,"
I said, "when she knew I was busy,
To come romping in for a kiss?
Come rowdying up from her mother
And clamoring there at my knee
For 'one little kiss for my dolly
And one 'ittle uzzer for me?'"

God pity the heart that repelled her
And the cold hand that turned her away!
And take from the lips that denied her
This answerless prayer of to-day!
Take, Lord, from my mem'ry forever
That pitiful sob of despair,
And the patter and trip of the little bare feet
And the one piercing cry on the stair!

I put by the half-written poem,
While the pen idly trailed in my hand,
Writes on, "Had I words to complete it,
Who'd read it, or who'd understand?"
But the little bare feet on the stairway,
And the faint, smothered laugh in the hall,
And the eerie-low lisp on the silence,
Cry up to me over it all.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Frozen Music.

The "arounder" of the Buffalo Courier is an elegant liar. Here is his latest production: The sexton of a west side church neglected to keep up the fires that warm the Sunday School, last Saturday night, and when Sunday noon the teachers and scholars came they found the temperature extremely bitter. As the result of the intense cold in the room a singular phenomenon was observed. It is customary for the school to sing in concert for ten or fifteen minutes before the formal exercises are begun. The precentor announced the hymn, "I love to tell the story," the pianist played the prelude, and the teachers and scholars all lifted up their voices and gave expression to the first note. But to the surprise of all, instead of a burst of melody there was only the faintest sound, while at the same time the vapory breaths of the singers mingled, and at once congealed and fell in frozen hail on the carpet. Still they sang, as loud as they could, but before the sound of their voices escaped six inches from their lips the notes froze and fell pattering on the floor. By the time the first stanza was finished the floor was white. Another song was tried, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," with the same result—the notes fell thick and fast as they were uttered, and the scrape of music that reached one's ears were abrupt and cracky. So the singing was given up and lessons were begun, but even then it was noticed that in the colder corners of the room if several scholars spoke at once the Biblical narrative dropped on the floor. The precentor, who is of a scientific turn, gathered up a large hatful of the frosty pellets, and it was curious to note the difference in their formation. Those that were the notes of good singers were round and smooth; while others were jagged and uneven. When the precentor went home and he took about half a peck of the hail in his pockets, and showed the stones to the other members of the family, putting them in a heap on the table near the grate. In a moment or two he was startled by hearing in loud ringing tones the first line of "I love to tell the story," which continued, augmenting in sound, until about the middle of the song when several other voices broke in with "Onward, Christian Soldiers," mingled with occasional questions like "What is the ninth commandment?" or "Who was vexed with the devil?" This confusion of tongues seemed to rise from the table, and on looking at the hailstones it was seen that they were melting, and liberating the strains of song that they had locked up in the Sunday School. The medley was almost deafening at times and it was not until the last pearly note had melted away that the music ceased to resound.

Enterprise at Vassar.

A Vassar girl tells in the New York Morning Journal of the curious ways in which some of the poorer students at that institution earn their pocket money. "Some of the girls who come up to Vassar," she says, "are as helpless as babes. They are the daughters of millionaires, and never brushed their own hair or sewed a button on their boots in their lives. They are only too glad to have some one do those things for them, and that is how the poorer girls make pocket money. Last year a pretty blue-eyed girl came to college, and stated during the first week that her tuition and board were paid by a kind relative, but every penny for dress, car fare, and the thousand and one little incidentals she must earn herself."

Soon after her arrival the following announcement appeared on her door:

Gloves and shoes neatly mended for 10 cents each.

Breakfast brought up for 10 cents.

Hair brushed each night for 25 cents a week.

Beds made up at 10 cents a week.

"That little freshman made just $150 the first year," continues the account, "and that paid all of her expenses and a good part of her tuition fees."

She Knew Him.

"My husband, I know, will never jump over the Brooklyn Bridge."

"Why?"

"There are no saloons to stop at on the way down."

A Thoughtful Spouse.

Husband (home late)—Ish you (hic) ready t' have gash turned out, my dear?

Wife—Yes; but I'll get up and turn it out myself, John. I'm afraid to have you get so near the flame.

Protection and Free Trade.

Bagley—Gagley, me boy, I'm blawsted sorry to see you've turned out a rank Protectionist. You were with us once, ye know.

Gagley—I know it; but that infernal English accent you brought over last trip has settled it. No more free imports for me.

TICKET SCALPING.

A Few Facts of Importance to Travellers.

About a month since an advertisement appeared in a Toronto paper offering for sale a ticket from St. Thomas to Calgary on the C. P. R. As the Act Respecting the Sale of Railway Tickets passed by the Dominion Government in 1886 provides that no person shall sell or offer for sale a ticket except such person is licensed to do so by the railway company interested, Mr. Dransfield, representing the C. P. R. Co., investigated, and found that box 808, St. Thomas, the address to which any designing purchaser was requested to communicate, was rented by Mr. L. H. Tarrant, merchant tailor. It appears that Mrs. Kerr, daughter of Mr. Tarrant, came home on a visit from Calgary, purchasing before leaving a limited return ticket. After arriving here her parents persuaded her to remain longer than she originally intended, and as the ticket would expire before the time of her departure, it was offered for sale, the holder not being aware that it was against the law. The ticket was not sold, however. It is now reported that Mr. Tarrant is to be summoned before the magistrate on a charge of misdemeanor. He states, however, that he courts inquiry; that the ticket did not belong to him; that he did not see it, and that he did not advertise or offer it for sale, although he wrote to Dransfield stating at what figure it could be purchased. The same Act which makes it a misdemeanor to sell a ticket compels the agent of a railroad company to redeem such portion of a ticket as has not been used, so that people who almost daily offer for sale unused tickets at the city ticket offices have a right to do so, and the agents are compelled to redeem them if they are for journeys over the line of which they are agents. All that was necessary for the holder of the Calgary ticket to do was to take it to one of the C.P.R. agents and she would have received the full amount of its value in cash.—St. Thomas Times.

The Latest from Paris.

Cloth gowns of pale suede have white moire vests and a trimming of golden beaver.

Accordion pleats are in favor for light silks or woollen fabrics, as well as for net or lace.

Low be it spoken—but there is an unmistakable tendency toward lace for afternoon wear.

Polonaises grow more and more in favor, and are preferably of wool over silk or velvet skirts.

Cloth of gold, subdued by brown chenille fringe woven over it, is a rich novelty for carriage wraps.

Plaid woollens of very light tints, rough surfaced and softly woven, will be worn the winter through.

Epaulets of fur, as well as wide Russian turned-over collars and broad pocket flaps, appear on new coats.

Long, soft vests of silk gauze have a frill of lace at the left side and many drooping bows of brocaded ribbon.

Dressy sealskin turbans have a soft crown, laid in pleats at the left side, and a rolled band of deeper fur.

A mere edge of fur upon draperies, with medallions upon the lower skirt, is far and always more stylish than a deep band.

Pinked edges of cloth gowns are stylishly outlined with gold or silver thread and are underlaid with a band of darker plush.

Deep round collarettes of lace, sewed to the upper edge of ribbon band, fall low upon the shoulders and curve up under a loopy bow in front.

Very young women wear as a finish to high corsages, wide high collars of silk muslin, or narrow puffs of crepe lisse ending in a bow behind.

Directory styles both for gowns and bonnets are affected in Paris by the fashionable minority that finds or thinks it chic to be hideous.

Blue cloth jackets, covered with gilt braid and red or brown jersey, with tinsel vermicelli wriggling over them, are equally and gayly hideous.

We are threatened with a revival of flowers. Already they are seen in panels, and sometimes pleated ones form a front, with plain side draperies.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

A Case of Conscience.

"Look here, Matilda," said a lady to the colored cook, "you sleep right close to the chicken-house, and you must have heard those thieves stealing the chickens last night."

"Yes, ma'am, I heerd the chickens holler and heerd the voices ob de men."

"Why didn't you go out, then; or why didn't you wake us up?"

"'Case ma'am (bursting into tears), 'case ma'am, I knowed my old fadder was out dar, and I wouldn't had him know I'se los' confidence in him for all de chickens in de world. If I had gone out dar and cached him it would had broke his ole heart, and he would had made me tote de chickens home foah him; besides, he done tole me de day before dat he's gwine ter pull de chickens dat night."—Detroit Free Press.

Trained Down too Fine.

"Our landlady told the divinity student his room was wanted yesterday," said the young man that boards on South John street. "You see we had turkey at dinner yesterday, and after the divinity student had worked away on a drum-stick for ten minutes he says: 'Mrs. Grimes, may I ask if this turkey was a member of the Young Men's Christian Association?' 'No, of course not; what an absurd question: what do you mean, sir?' asked the landlady with some asperity. 'Oh, nothing, only I see this bird's been using dumb-bells, or Indian clubs or something for its muscle, and I thought maybe it was a Y. M. C. A. gymnasium bird.' I heard her tell him under the stairs in the hall after dinner, 'that he could go to wunst.'"

Fatal Errors.

Successful Merchant—I have no further need of your services, sir.

New Clerk—Eh! What's happened?

"You have been here but one day and have already cost me two good customers.'

"My gracious! In what way?"

"You addressed Miss Skinandbones, that old maid heiress, as 'Mrs.,' and you called Mrs. Sweetsixteen, who was married last week, 'Miss.'"

HEROISM ON THE ICE.

The Daring Deed of a Youthful Skater, who Tried in Vain to Save a Comrade.

The London Daily News says: The pathetic story of the three little boys who went skating on thin ice upon the reservoir at Glossop, and paid for their rashness by the death of one of their number, well deserves to be recorded in the annals of youthful heroism. The ice suddenly broke, and Henry Taylor, a lad of 11 years of age, was left struggling in the water, when his younger brother, who happened to be at a safe distance, rushed at once to the spot, and plunged in among the broken fragments of ice in the rescue of the drowning boy. Their comrade, named Devlin, seeing the imminent peril in which the brothers were now placed, at once pulled off his jacket and extended a portion to the younger Taylor. Had this manœuvre succeeded, both lads might have been saved; but unluckily the jacket was jerked out of young Devlin's hand. Still the younger Taylor fought with death, and continued to keep his head above the water. Fortunately help at last arrived. A long piece of wood was thrown to Devlin, who at the risk of the treacherous edge of the ice giving way, held it out to the sinking boy, and the latter, having still consciousness enough left to grasp it, was finally drawn exhausted out of the hole. Unhappily, though we may say of the three comrades, as of the three prisoners in Chillon's dungeon, that "each did well in his degree," the younger Taylor had failed in his gallant attempt. The elder lad had slipped from his grasp and disappeared under the ice; but the poor boy had done his best, and he may well look back in after years upon that terrible moment and find comfort in the thought that even had he possessed the strength and experience of manhood, instead of being but a mere child, he could hardly have done more than he did to save a brother's life.

Fashion Notes.

The handsomest carriage cloaks are of gold colored cloth, into which is woven glossy chenille fringes of dark seal brown. Some of them are trimmed with wide bands made of these chenille fringes.

The rage for tinsel has extended to the Jerseys. Dark red, blue and brown Jerseys are braided with spiral whorls of tinsel galloon. A gray one is covered with silver braid set on in a vermicelli pattern.

The use of lace for neck and sleeve wear is increasing. Instead of the smooth bands of silk mull or canvass, which have so long been popular, the dressmakers are sending home dresses with narrow frills of creamy lace plaited thickly in at the wrists and neck.

Women who have pretty feet, and who find low shoes more becoming to their feet than boots, have most ingeniously solved the difficulty of wearing low shoes in cold weather. They still cling to their dainty little ties, but wear with them thick cloth gaiters, which button half way up the calf, and are not only pretty, but very good form. They are fleece-lined, making them warmer than boots, and are of very dark blue or black cloth.

The [redacted] rib bon, too, is fortunately a part of the neckwear and appears in a great many of the dainty fichus, vests and plastrons of transparent materials which are worn with simple costumes to make them more dressy. A ruching for neck and sleeves is made of many loops of this narrow ribbon set into a band, and though it is frequently made up in colors, white is always the prettiest and most effective.

A Famous Pearl.

No explanation ever has been, or ever will be, forthcoming of the extraordinary freak of nature in the formation of the famous pearl known as the Southern Cross. Originally discovered at Roeburn, in western Australia, it consists of nine pearls adhering together in the form of a Latin cross, seven in the shaft and two in the arms, one on each side of the shaft, nearly opposite the second pearl from the top. The pearls are slightly compressed, like peas in a pod, and no trace of any artificial junction can be observed. It has been suggested that a fragment of seaweed may have got into the shell and formed the frame of the construction. The pearls are of fine quality, though slightly misshaped at parts, and the value of the gem is very high. Its character is antique, and so filled the owner—an Irishman named Kelley—with superstitious awe that for a long time he was induced to hide it away and keep his possession of it a secret.—Boston Transcript.

The Commercial Traveller's Story.

Mr. C. W. Woodward, a travelling man hailing from New York, related an interesting story yesterday of a trip from Buffalo to this city in the storm on Thursday night. He is a guest at the Forest City House, and narrated his experience to a small circle of friends. "After leaving Dunkirk," he said, "the wind was so severe that we proceeded along at a snail's pace. At times the force of the hurricane lifted one side of the train several inches from the track, and then it would descend to the rails again with a startling thump. We were asked by the conductor to sit on one side of the cars to balance them. A number of Cleveland passengers left the train at Erie, preferring to remain in that city over night rather than to risk riding any further. It was the first time in seventeen years' travelling that I was ever alarmed in a railway train."—Cleveland Leader.

"Poor fellow, he died in poverty," said a man of a person lately deceased. "That isn't anything," exclaimed a seedy bystander. "Dying in poverty is no hardship; it's living in poverty that puts the thumb-screws on a fellow."

What we call underwriters were not originally so classed. Formerly all the marine insurance in England was taken by private individuals. A contract would be drawn up insuring a vessel and cargo about to sail on a voyage. Under this contract it was customary for different capitalists to write their names for a specified amount till the full insurance required was taken. These persons were called underwriters. Custom has extended the term till it is now extended to all who engage in the insurance business.

DARED TO BE TRUE.

A Great Physician Disregards the Mandates of Royalty.

Dr. Radcliff was the most celebrated physician of England in Queen Anne's time.

He amassed a very large fortune, and was for many years the physician to the Queen as well as to most of the English nobility. For some reason the Queen took a dislike to him at one time, and dismissed him as Court physician. In her last illness, however, she sent for him.

He refused to obey the summons, declaring "since Her Majesty's case is so desperate and her distemper incurable, I hardly think it proper to give her any disturbance in her last moments, so near at hand, but rather let her die as easy as possible."

Dr. Radcliff observed, a short time before his death, "when I was young and yet unskilled in medicine, I possessed at least twenty remedies for every disease; but, now, since I have grown old in the art of healing, I know more than twenty diseases for which I have not even a singe remedy."

The late Dr. Holland, who was an educated physician, some years before he died, said in Scribner's Monthly: "It is a fact that many of the best proprietary medicines of the day are more successful than many physicians, and most of them were first discovered or used in actual medical practice. When, however, any shrewd person, knowing their virtue and foreseeing their popularity, secures and advertises them, in the opinion of the bigoted, all virtue went out of them."

The late Dr. Dio Lewis, who seldom prescribed any medicine, wrote to the proprietor of Warner's safe cure "If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble I should use your preparation. The testimony of hundreds of intelligent and very reputable gentlemen hardly leaves room to doubt that you have fallen upon one of those happy discoveries which occasionally bring aid to suffering humanity."

Dr. R. A. Gunn, Dean of the U. S. Medical College of New York, sometime since wrote and published: "The ingredients of Warner's safe cure are among the most valuable medicines of our materia medica, and the combination is such as to insure the best possible action on the kidneys and urinary organs."

Dr. W. E. Robson, of London, late surgeon in the Royal Navy, wrote to the Family Doctor: "Having had more than seventeen years' experience in my profession, I conscientiously and emphatically state that I have been able to give more relief and effect more cures by the use of Warner's safe cure than by all other medicines ascertainable to the profession.

Dr. Andrew Wilson, F. R. S. E., editor of Health, London, Eng., advises a correspondent of his paper: "Warner's safe cure is perfectly safe and perfectly reliable."

These are physicians so skilled, so independent, so honest, so true to the conscientious teachings of their noble profession that they dare tell the truth to kings or queens or the whole world.

They took a vote in Rolla, Mo., recently on the question who was the "sweetest girl in school," and as a result there have been no fewer than twenty fights between young men and old, friends and brothers of the fair contestants. No event that has occurred in the town's history has so stirred up its society.

A General Tie-up of all the means of public conveyance in a large city, even for a few hours, during a strike of the employees, means a general paralyzing of trade and industry for the time being, and is attended with an enormous aggregate loss to the community. How much more serious to the individual is the general tie-up of his system, known as constipation, and due to the strike of the most important organs for more prudent treatment and better care. If too long neglected, a torpid or sluggish liver will produce serious forms of kidney and liver diseases, malarial trouble and chronic dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are a preventive and cure of these disorders. They are prompt, sure and effective, pleasant to take, and positively harmless.

How It Happened.

"Did you make enough money on your stock deal, John, to buy the sort of carriage you promised? I suppose you did, though," she added, confidently; "you said you put in your money at the bottom of the market.'

"So I did, my dear, so I did; but the bottom itself dropped out.

The Coming Comet.

It is fancied by a grateful patron that the next comet will appear in the form of a huge bottle, having "Golden Medical Discovery" inscribed upon it in bold characters. Whether this conceit and high compliment will be verified remains to be seen, but Dr. Pierce will continue to send forth that wonderful vegetable compound and potent eradicator of disease. It has no equal in medicinal and health-giving properties, for imparting vigor and tone to the liver and kidneys, in purifying the blood, and through it cleansing and renewing the whole system. For scrofulous humors and consumption or lung scrofula, in its early stages, it is a positive specific. Druggists.

Earned by Experience.

Moonlit strolls are romantic and all that, but the god of wedded bliss never smiles with such absolute certainty of a victory as when he sees a coy Beatrice and her bewildered Dante snuggle together on the dark side of a pea coal fire, with no eye upon them but that of a stuffed owl in the next room.—Binghamton Republican.

Woman's Work.

There is no end to the tasks which daily confront the good housewife. To be a successful housekeeper, the first requisite is good health. How can a woman contend against the trials and worries of housekeeping if she be suffering from those distressing irregularities, ailments and weaknesses peculiar to her sex? Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a specific for these disorders. The only remedy, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case, or money refunded. See printed guarantee on bottle wrapper.

ITCHING PILES.

SYMPTOMS—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Proprietors, Philadelphia. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT can be obtained of druggists. Sent by mail for 50 cents.

A New Haven policeman saw a lot of boys bury something in a sand bank. He dug down and found a tin-can containing nearly 1,000 keys of all kinds. It is thought that the boys thought of burgling a little just for fun.

Seven Years

Of suffering relieved in as many days. Corns cause in the aggregate as much suffering as any single disease. It is the magic solvent power of Putnam's Corn Extractor that makes it speedily successful in removing corns. Take no substitute, however highly recommended. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is the best. Sure, safe and painless.

St. Thomas City Council is negotiating with the Grand Trunk Railway to secure the location in that city of the car shops which are to be moved from Brantford.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Disease, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from the common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DUNL. 688.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

FARM for SALE

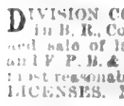
BEING Lot 6, Con. 7, Osprey, half mile from Maxwell, 100 acres, 60 acres cleared, well watered, and under good state of cultivation. Well fenced. Large frame barn and stable, frame house. For further particulars apply to JOSEPH RADLEY, 179 Spadina Avenue, Toronto.

45-3m.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



DENTISTRY.
Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,
Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.
HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

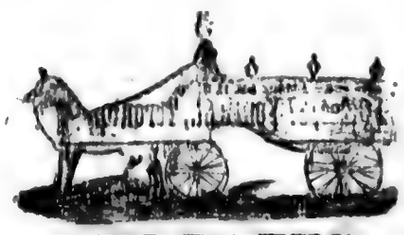
John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.



J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.
FLESHERTON ONT.

THIS PAPER [illegible]

Mr. Bradley and assistants are rapidly getting our Roller mills ready for operation. It is probably the best appointed mill throughout to be found in the county, as it has all the very latest improvements. The work of fitting up the mill for the new system of grinding has now been in progress some three or four months, but it has been done in the most thorough manner, by skilled workmen and under the keen and energetic supervision of Mr. Bradley himself. Flesherton now has very superior milling facilities and the public will not be slow to take advantage of the fact. It is thought the rollers will be operated the latter end of this week or beginning of next.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Orangeville jail contains 19 inmates, not counting the officials.

A syndicate of Mount Forest gentlemen have gone into the purchase of Jersey stock.

Mt. Forest has a snow shoe club, the members thereof getting in their practice after dark and on back streets.

John Kilgour, a Mt. Forest hardware clerk, fell and broke his collar bone while carrying a pail of water on Wednesday of last week.

Mr. H. Tyson, bass singer in the Presbyterian choir, Thornbury, was presented with a fur coat recently by the congregation.

Owen Sound is making preparations for producing a greater quantity of lime next season than usual. The value of last season's output was $15,620.

B. Allen, Esq., the defeated of North Grey for the House of Commons, has been appointed Clerk of the First Division Court in the place of John Stephens, resigned.

A couple of Chesley young ladies attired themselves in men's clothing recently. Perhaps they propose to introduce the "new style" which was talked about in fashion journals so much not long since.

The Mount Forest Representative has entered upon the fourth year of its existence, with Mr. J. Lambert still at the helm. The Rep. is a model journal and brother Lambert is a model newspaper man.

Robt. A. Kerr, of Collingwood township son of the late Squire Kerr dropped dead at his own residence, while stooping to do something for one of his little ones. He was 36 years of age and a prominent Orangeman.

A tagless Spaniel dog has been making its home in the Dundalk Herald office and has endeared itself to the devil. It also made a raid on the paste pot and now Brother Spurr wants it to make free with some other editors flour and water.

A wild cat was chased into a log sheep stable—on the farm of Mr. Hugh Sproule, Amaranth—one day last week. It was locked up and then shot. The animal measured 3 ft. 4 in. from the point of his nose to the tip of his tail, and was 1 ft. 10 in. high.

The Dundalk Herald says: "Rev. Mr. Watson is editor of a new journal published in Flesherton. It is printed by the old established thumb and finger digit press and works with a hand curved lever." The paper referred to by the Herald is issued by Flesherton Division, Sons of Temperance, once a month and is called The Patriarch. We clip an interesting article from its columns, which appears in this week's ADVANCE.

Mr. John Isaac, one of the grand old pioneers of Euphrasia township, died in Toronto on the 1st inst., having reached the ripe old age of 92 years and three months. He was buried in Thornbury cemetery on Friday last. The Editor of THE ADVANCE well remembers the genial, kindly, whole-souled old gentleman, and the many words of sound advice received from him. But he has gone the way of all flesh, leaving behind the record of a good name and unsullied reputation. Peace to his ashes!

There was quite a sensation in a Hanover hotel one night not long since. A man named Weber walked up to the bar and trod heavily on the corns of G. H. Geisel. The latter didn't like this and wanted to know what the former meant by it. Weber said he was going to lick him, whereupon Geisel seized a tobacco cutter and struck his antagonist on the head with such force that he felled him to the ground. A man named Monk intended to assist Weber, but when he saw the latter stretched out on the floor, he wisely got out of the way. Weber will probably size up his man better should he perform the corn-treading operation at some future time.

A Valuable Discovery.

Owen Sound, Feb. 4.—It is learned that there is good prospects of a new and large industry being established at Shallow Lake, in the Township of Keppel, about seven miles from this town. The lake is the property of R. J. Doyle, of this town, who had the enterprise to have the lake drained some time ago; leaving a bed of clay, which with a coating of carbonate of lime overlaying it, makes the finest quality of Portland cement. The carbonate of lime alone furnishes material for the manufacture of the best quality of whiting. Several practical men are so convinced of the value of the materials in the bed of this lake that they are forming a company for the manufacture of Portland cement, whiting, putty, etc., and will at once make application to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council for a grant of charter of incorporation for that purpose.

On the Road to Bliss.

From the Dundalk Herald.

The Flesherton Advance man makes such rapid improvements that to chronicle all of them would arouse the ire of our compositor. One day he is selling wood, another building a house, then ordering new type, and the week before last he invested in a new Taylor safe and bought a bull dog. Last week he let the business improvements alone and swore off the smoking habit, and when last seen he was putting the quoins in the safe, locking up shop and pressing homeward, yet still on the Advance. Pike ahead my hearty! and may you never feel the want of a stick.

It Ended Fatally.

Wiarton, Feb. 2.—Mrs. Hays, who shot herself last Monday morning, died yesterday. She leaves a husband and a small family to mourn her untimely end. She got up on the fatal morning apparently in her usual good health, made on the fire and had begun to prepare the breakfast, when by some sudden impulse she seized a revolver from the shelf which happened to have one chamber charged and lodged the contents in her left side. She never rallied but sunk gradually until death ended her sufferings.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

GRIP

CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.
J. W. BENGOUGH, Artist and Editor.
ISSUED WEEKLY.
$2 a Year; $1 for 6 Months.

GRIP is increasing in influence and popularity every year! It is a supreme household favorite, while every Politician and Professional and Business Man enjoys the clever hits which appear in every issue. Subscribe now!

See our Premium and Clubbing List. Circulars giving full particulars sent free.

Look out for Grip's Comic Almanac for 1888. Price 10 cents.

ADDRESS,
GRIP PUBLISHING CO.
TORONTO, ONT.

CLIMO & CO.

Are preparing to open out a New Stock of Goods in Wm. Wright's Store.

Everybody will be Welcomed.

BOOTS & SHOES!

—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—

WINTER GOODS!

RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS AND FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

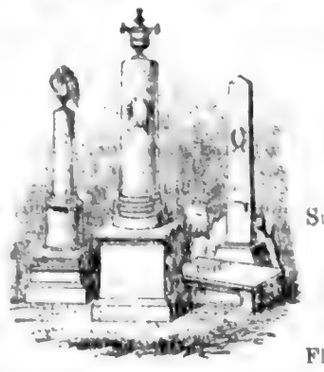
CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!
—THE WELL-KNOWN—
SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual
First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883

HEALTH FOR ALL.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS
Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.
Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

Wm Mitchell 13Jan87

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 347. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

1ST

Clearing ❋ Sale!

1,400

In Fine Goods to select from. Must be reduced to $1,000 if possible by March 1st. The sale will be "genuine" and carried out on the following basis: One-Fifth of all grades Watches and Clocks, ¼ of Silverware, Hollow and Flat, ¼ of Chains, Jewelery, Pins, Buttons, Spex and Rings, 18 k., plain excepted. Unchanged prices in plain figures. If you ever intend investing in any of above mentioned goods, this opportunity to get them near cost, at cost and below cost is the best ever given in this section. No foolish blowing. Adjectives very small. By calling you will find prices so low as to lead you to buy. TERMS CASH. Warrants as usual, signed W.A.Brown. My watch work gives satisfaction.

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale, Ont.

$350

WILL BUY LOT 37 IN 14th CON., ARTEMESIA 107 acres. Apply to CHARLES GAMON, Collingwood.

331-44.

PATENTS,

Caveats, Re-issues and Trade-Marks secured, and all other patent causes in the Patent Office and before the courts promptly and carefully attended to.

Upon receipt of model or sketch of invention, I make careful examination, and advise as to patentability Free of Charge.

FEES MODERATE, and I make NO CHARGE UNLESS PATENT IS SECURED. Information, advice and special references sent on application.

J. R. LITTELL, Washington D.C
Opposite U.S. Patent Office.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Miss Cowan is visiting at Mr. James Beecroft's here.

How is it that there are so few concerts in Flesherton this winter?

Large quantities of telegraph poles, wood, &c. are being shipped at the C. P. R. depot.

Correspondents wanted at Priceville and Proton Station. Write this office for particulars.

First-class station house and freight sheds will be erected at our depot as soon as spring opens.

Mr. Milburn has leased his blacksmith and carriage shops to Mr. D. McTavish and Mr. R. P. Legate respectively.

Flesherton and Markdale Brass Bands will give a union concert in Haskett's hall, Markdale, to-morrow (Friday) evening at 8 o'clock. Admission 25 cents children 15 cents.

Next Sunday morning the pulpit of the Methodist church here will be occupied by Rev. Mr. Buggins, of Markdale. In the evening, Rev. Dr. Griffith, of Guelph, will preach in the same place.

A team of horses, attached to a double cutter and driven by Miss Martha Stone, ran away near Flesherton Station the other day, and managed to upset the occupants into the snow with very little ceremony. The horses were secured and nobody got hurt.

Mr. J. B. Spurr, Editor and proprietor of the Dundalk Herald, spent Sunday last in Flesherton. He was the guest of ye ADVANCE Editor and wife during his stay. Mr. Spurr was much pleased with what he saw of our town and its inhabitants. It reminded him, he said, of the old land.

A paragraph appeared in last week's Markdale Standard to the effect that Squire Armstrong had resigned his position as Treasurer of this Township. This is somewhat misleading, as the Squire has merely asked our Township Fathers to place his salary on a par with that of neighboring Treasurers.

A group photograph of Mr. A. M. Gibson and the young ladies comprising that gentleman's Bible class in the Presbyterian Sabbath School here, was recently taken here by our excellent artist Mrs. Bulmer. Every face and feature in the picture is clearly and beautifully defined. The photo is one of which any city artist might well be proud.

A meeting of Centre Grey Farmers' Institute will be held in Markdale on Monday next, 20th inst. The Agricultural Editor of THE ADVANCE has been asked to contribute a paper for the occasion and as he has been noticed scratching his head the past few days—as if on the hunt after ideas—it is not unlikely that something will come out of it.

Stirring sermons were preached in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, Flesherton, on Sunday last, by pastors Wilson and Shilton. The congregations were large. Rev. Mr. Wilson had been ill for several days, and was far from being well on the occasion referred to, but the spirit was strong and a manly, fearless discourse—breathing pure and lofty sentiments—was the result. The Presbyterian pastor never fails to respond to the call of duty. A co-incidence in the sermons by both ministers, was the absence of sectarianism and a pleasing unanimity of sentiment. It is a gratifying evidence of the progressive and earnest spirit of Christianity, that the dividing lines between the various sects are rapidly becoming less marked.

Sweeping reductions in Furs. My entire stock of Furs must be cleared out regardless of cost. R. Trimble.

A snug little farm close to Flesherton Station is offered for sale in this week's ADVANCE by Mrs. Jane Latimer.

HARNESS FOR SALE.—1 set new Single Harness for sale. Will exchange for wood or furniture. R. TRIMBLE.

Mr. Gibbons, of the Guthrie Home, London, was in town on Monday looking after the interests of the proteges of that institution.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Just received a consignment of No. 1 Salmon Trout, Fresh Water Herring, Labrador Herring, at R. Trimble's.

A new monthly magazine has been received. It is called the Canadian Fireside and contains thirty-two pages of matter. It is published in Montreal at the rate of 50 cents per annum.

A load of hay got upset just in front of THE ADVANCE office on Saturday evening last. A number of cattle soon swarmed around the wreck and from the manner in which they acted one would have thought they had struck a gold mine.

Dry wood wanted at this office. A few cords in exchange for THE ADVANCE.

25,000 lbs. of Corn Meal, Roller Oatmeal, Standard Oatmeal, just received at R. Trimble's.

Bring in your wood while the good sleighing lasts. It won't last forever. Green wood preferred but a few cords of dry wood wanted.

Mr. Frank Porter—late Principal of Markdale Public Schools—has bought "Ye Olde Booke Shoppe," 353 Yonge street, Toronto, from Mr. David Boyle. We wish Mr. Porter success in his new venture.

Mr. C. Treadgold is agent for the best Lamp ever introduced into this section of country. It gives a very brilliant and steady light, requires no lamp glass burns the same amount of oil an ordinary lamp will, gives forth no offensive odor, and is simply invaluable in a sick room or where there are children. We bought one from Mr. Treadgold and found it just as represented.

TAMARAC—Is not an ordinary mixture—in fact its properties are entirely different from any preparation used for Coughs, Colds, Throat & Lung Troubles

I have 50 pairs Boots, which I will exchange for wood. Come right along as this chance will not be open long.
WM. BARNHOUSE, Flesherton.

No other spring medicine has won for itself such universal confidence as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the most powerful combination of vegetable alteratives ever offered to the public, and is acknowledged by the medical profession to be the best blood purifier.

Farm for Sale.

Being pts Lot 150 in the 2nd and 3rd Ranges S. W. of T. & S. Road, Artemesia, consisting of 50 acres more or less. About 25 acres cleared & in good state of cultivation. Adjoining Flesherton Station. Brick schoolhouse on one corner of the place. Good frame house, running creek and never-failing supply of spring water. For full particulars apply to MISS JANE LATIMER on the premises, or Flesherton Station P.O.

The Thorough-Bred Durham Bull,

Gray Champion!

Will stand for service at Lot 151 2 West, Artemesia—about one mile from Flesherton Station. This is a first-class animal and farmers desirous of improving their stock will do well to bring their cows to him. He is in prime condition.

TERMS.—$1 per cow. Reduced rates according to number of cows brought by any one man.

JOHN ADAMS, Proprietor.

STOCK — TAKING — SALE!

Great Sweeping Reductions

AT

J. RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON.

We have decided to go out of the Fancy Goods business and for the future handle only

Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex &c.,

SO WE WILL SELL FOR THE

NEXT SIXTY DAYS

Our whole stock of Berlin and Zepher Wools at 8c. per. oz. worth 12½; Filloselle 5c. a knot worth 10c.; Arrasene at 10c now worth 15c.; Chenelle at 8c. yard worth 15c. Fancy Plush Goods &c. all below cost as we are bound to clear them out. Macrame Cord all colors at 10c. ball or 3 for 25c. We will also clear out our entire line of PIPES at away below cost. Your choice of 1 lot of Pipes worth from 50 to 85c. for 25c.; your choice of Pipes worth 30 to 50c. for 20c.; your choice of Pipes worth 20 to 30c for 10c. A lot of PURSES ranging in price from 35 to 85c. your choice for 25c. We have also decided to clear out some lines in Brooches, Earings, Cuff-Buttons. Your choice of 1 beautiful lot of Brooches valued from 25 to 40c. at 15c.; your choice of another beautiful lot valued from 40 to 60c. at 25c.; another lot valued from 60c. to $1.00 for 50c.; Earings and Cuff-Buttons at the same terrible Reductions.

Come along and get First Choice as they will go like Hot Cakes

As they are all Fine and Good, Warranted to Wear and Keep Color for years. Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c. still 20 Per Cent. lower in prices than elsewhere in this section.

The dealer who tells the people so often about his honesty, &c., must have come to the conclusion that they are very suspicious of him or he would not need to advertise his honesty instead of his goods.

IF YOU WANT A GOOD ARTICLE AT A LOW PRICE ALWAYS GO TO

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELERY STORE, FLESHERTON.

SHIRLEY ROSS:

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

They were still standing together before the fire when Alice and Sir Hugh and the other visitors at the Court came in from a walk through the grounds. It was a clear fine, but frosty winter day and the girls were wrapped in furs and sealskins, and Sir Hugh wore a great-coat trimmed with the darkest of sables, in which he looked very handsome and foreign and distinguished. They were in laughing and chatting merrily, bringing with them, as it were, a breath of fresh cold air from the outside world; and Shirley started and blushed and moved away from Guy's side as they entered, and only Sir Hugh saw the start and the pretty color which rose in the fair girl's face.

"So you have returned," she said, rather nervously, as she left the fireside. "Was it pleasant out?"

"Very pleasant, but rather cold," answered Ruby Capel, a bewitching little brunette, with whom poor Oswald was very much in love, but who, during his absence, was carrying on a desperate flirtation with young Algernon Rivers, an eligible from Dumfife. "You should have come, Shirley, although I dare say you and Major Stuart found it very comfortable by the fireside."

She spoke lightly, and without any special meaning; but the color deepened in Shirley's face, and a slight smile stole up under Guy Stuart's heavy dark mustache as he glanced toward Shirley, whose shy eyes did not meet his.

"I suppose you would like some tea?" Shirley asked.

"Happy thought!" said Alice, who was allowing Sir Hugh to assist her to remove her long sealskin coat. "Ring and order it, Shirley."

Shirley was about to obey, when Guy forestalled her; and, as she lifted her eyes shyly to his, he looked down at her and smiled.

"We shall have skating to-morrow," said Rupy Capel, unfastening her fur cape and tossing it aside. "Are your skates in order, mesdames? It is freezing hard, is it not, Mr. Rivers?"

"It must be if you say so," answered Mr. Rivers gallantly; "but it did not seem to me so very cold, after all."

"I don't think it is freezing hard, Ruby," said Miss Fairholme, who had been watching her cousin a little curiously since her entrance. "Shirley, how you have burned your face over the fire!"

With a pretty little conscious gesture, Shirley put up both her hands to her hot cheeks, and Ruby Capel laughed.

"It is a very pretty rouge," she said lightly, "and very becoming. I should advise you to try it every time that you are going out, Shirley; and I wish you would give me your recipe."

"Is it not the fire?" asked Alice, with affected surprise. "Shirley is always so pale that— Ah, here is the tea! I am so glad! Shirley, will you pour it out? I am so tired!"

She sunk into a low chair, in an attitude of fatigue and exhaustion, giving Sir Hugh a coquettish glance from her blue eyes, which noticed that he was rather paler than was his wont, and that there was an expression of unrest upon his face, and something almost like pain in his blue eyes.

"Are you tired also, Sir Hugh?" Alice inquired, languidly.

But he did not answer—indeed he did not hear the question. He was wondering what was the meaning of those red cheeks of Shirley's, and that new light, luminous and glad, which shone in Guy Stuart's gray eyes.

As she noticed his abstraction, Alice Fairholme's face darkened slightly, and a gleam of annoyance and displeasure flashed into her blue eyes; but she only nestled her pretty fair head against the cushions of her chair with a tired, weary grace.

"You ought to have been with us, Shirley," she said. "You would have gone into raptures over the rime which was on the skeleton trees; it sparkled like myriads of diamonds in the sunshine—did it not, Sir Hugh?"

Sir Hugh acquiesced absently. He seemed to be more occupied with watching Shirley Ross as she stood before the tea equipage than Alice approved of. The handsome blue eyes were fixed upon her cousin with an intent earnest scrutiny which had dispersed all their sleepiness, and his hand, unconsciously even to himself, was clinched as it rested on the table.

"I really think we shall have some skating soon," said Miss Capel gayly. "I have not skated for a long time. These mild winters of ours quite prevent us from excelling in the accomplishment. Just as one has mastered the outside edge, the thaw sets in and puts a stop to everything."

"Yes, it is very provoking," agreed Rhoda Montolieu, a pretty gray-eyed girl, a school-friend of Miss Fairholme's and an heiress; "we never do get any skating. Shall we petition the clerk of the weather, Mr. Rivers, to be clement enough to give us a hard frost?"

"Perhaps he might if you were the petitioner, Miss Montolieu," Algernon Rivers answered, bringing her some tea, and lowering his voice perceptibly. "I know that if I were the clerk of the weather I could refuse you nothing."

Rhoda Montolieu laughed lightly.

"Then I wish you would become so," she said, merrily. "No bread and butter, thank you—a macaroon, please."

"Do you skate, Miss Ross?" Sir Hugh asked abruptly, as he went over to the table to fetch Alice's tea; and Shirley started a little and looked up at him in rather a bewildered manner, as if she had not the least idea what he meant.

"I beg your pardon," she said, nervously. "I did not hear, Sir Hugh."

"Why, coz, your wits seem wool-gathering!" Alice cried, laughingly, from the depths of her great arm-chair. "Sir Hugh is asking you if you skate, and you look as startled as if he had made some alarming proposition. Where are you, Shirley?"

"Not here," Sir Hugh remarked coldly, as he brought Miss Fairholme her tea, and drew up a low chair to her side. "Miss Ross's thoughts are evidently far away."

"And Major Stuart looks equally distrait," said Alice, softly. "I am afraid they have grown sleepy over the fire. But it is a curious coincidence, is it not, that they should both have wandered away together? You look tired, Sir Hugh," she added gently. "Won't you have some tea? It will refresh you. I forgot when we were out that you had ridden over to Maxwell this morning."

"I am not tired, thanks. No, Miss Fairholme, I don't care for tea, you know."

"But we will convert you. I am quite an old woman in my affection for it; and, judging by Major Stuart's performance at present, he seems to share my predilection."

Sir Hugh looked across at the group round the tea-tray, and his brow darkened. Algernon Rivers seemed to be dividing his attentions pretty equally between the two girls; but Major Stuart was standing at Shirley's elbow, cup in hand, while Miss Ross, her face slightly turned toward him over her shoulder, was pouring in some cream with due deliberation. They were both smiling, and Shirley's hazel eyes were downcast. As Hugh Glynn watched them, a passion of hatred and resentment rose in his heart and almost to his lips.

"I had no idea Miss Ross had such a capacity for flirtation," he said coldly. "I fancied she was rather an ingenue."

"And do you imagine that Shirley is flirting?" asked Alice softly. "You are utterly mistaken, Sir Hugh: she is quite in earnest, and I hope for her sake that Major Stuart is equally so. Why, Shirley could not flirt! She does not know the meaning of the word."

"Then she is very unlike most of her sex," said Sir Hugh moodily. "With such a face as hers she need not be long in ignorance, I should think."

"'Such a face as hers!' Do you think her so very pretty?"

"'Pretty' is not the word," he answered quietly. "She is extremely beautiful."

Alice Fairholme bit her lip.

"Yes, she is beautiful, I think," she said, with apparent frankness—"though some people think her too pale. My poor aunt, her mother, was very beautiful, I believe, but I never saw her,"

"How was that? It is not three years since her death, I understand."

"Not three years yet—oh, no; but I have never been abroad, you know."

"And did Mrs. Ross never come to Scotland?" he asked, with some interest.

"No—never," Alice said gravely, with a faint little sigh.

"Never! Why? Pardon my curiosity, Miss Fairholme; but really it seems to me that it was very strange not to return even for a time to her native land."

"Yes, very strange indeed," Alice said softly. "There is some sad story connected with it, I think," she added. "I do not know what it is, because my father and mother have never spoken of it to me; but I was always aware, even in my childhood, of some mystery which surrounded Aunt Marian. Of course I should not speak so frankly to any one but you," she concluded, with a swift upward glance.

Sir Hugh murmured something expressive of his gratitude for the confidence, and relapsed into silence. Alice felt rather annoyed and irritated. What right had this man to show so much interest in what regarded Shirley? Well, if appearances were to be credited, he would not be able to show that interest much longer, or to any purpose—for Alice's quick eyes had immediately discerned that there was something unusually tender in Major Stuart's manner toward her cousin.

"Shirley, can't you give us some music?" she asked languidly. "Try that new song Oswald sent you."

"I could not sing to-day," Shirley said, flushing and trembling a little. "Pray excuse me, Alice."

"Cannot sing to-day- why? Have you a cold?"

"Oh, no; but

"But what? Don't be lazy, child! You never sing now," said Alice, pettishly.

"Oh, do sing us something!" Ruby echoed. "You used not to be so chary of your music, Shirley."

"Will you accept an unworthy substitute?" said Guy Stuart smiling. "Shall I play you something, Miss Fairholme?"

"You will be very kind if you take pity on us, Major Stuart," returned Alice sweetly. "Sir Hugh looks tired and out of sorts, or I would press him into the service; but, when you have played, perhaps Shirley will favor us."

"Major Stuart went to the piano, which stood in a recess facing the mantel-piece, and sat down. He was a good musician, and presently, as his fingers strayed over the keys, a flood of soft rich melody filled the quiet room. Mr. Rivers and the two girls ceased their chatter, Alice closed her eyes and leaned back languidly in her deep arm-chair, Sir Hugh pulled nervously at his long fair moustache and watched Shirley furtively as she sat with her hands clasped idly on her lap, her face turned toward the piano, and a little smile upon her lips.

How beautiful she was—how rarely, wonderfully beautiful! In all his life he had seen no woman whose beauty had so impressed and charmed him as hers did. Could it be that Guy Stuart had won what he would have given so much to possess? Sir Hugh Glynn set his teeth hard together at the thought. It was impossible. He should not have her. She should be his. That very evening he would ask her to be his wife.

It had been his purpose to do so from the first day he had seen her. As she stood in her simple serge dress in the doorway, with a knot of red berries at her breast, she had seemed to him most beautiful and greatly to be prized. He, Hugh Glynn, avowed opponent of marriage as he was, had then and there resolved to make her his wife. But he had been in no hurry; he felt so safe, so secure. This dowerless beauty would be only too glad to accept him whenever he chose to make her the offer, and meanwhile it was very pleasant to treat her with the graceful courtesy, not untouched by tenderness, which he knew could not but be grateful to the lonely girl, while he flirted a little with Miss Fairholme; perhaps with an avowed—even to himself—intention of making Shirley jealous.

But while he had been hesitating another had come forward and had stolen her from him; and, although she had never been his, except in his thoughts—Hugh Glynn felt passionately resentful against the friend who had forestalled him.

Presently the music ceased; and Alice, after thanking the musician, again turned to Shirley; and the girl rose dreamily and went over to the recess. Guy, still retaining his seat, turned with a smile to her.

"Are you going to sing?" he said softly; and Hugh Glynn's eager eyes caught her tender little glance and smile.

"Yes," she said shyly; and, as he gave her the music-stool, his hand touched hers gently for a moment.

"What shall I sing?" asked Shirley, bending over the piano.

"The new song you were practising this morning," said Ruby Capel gayly. "It is firelight, you know, and your back is turned to us, so that no one will see your blushes."

"Yes, that song of Blumenthal's which Oswald sent you," said Alice.

Shirley hesitated for a moment, and then with a swift sudden smile which no one could see, for her face was turned to the piano, she began to sing; and the words of her song sunk into two hearts there with very different effect.

'She has not found her king as yet;
The golden days, the golden days glide by;
They bring no grief, no grief she should forget,
Nor any cause to sigh.
No heart for her devotion made,
No heart the passionate summers bring;
Unharmed she walks and unstrayed;
She has not found her king.

Men bring their titles and their gold—
She turns in scorn away;
That man must be of diff'rent mold
She swear- she will obey.
Titled by gift of God is he,
And rich is a rarer thing than wealth
That unknown man must be
Whom she will own her king.

But when he comes, as come he will,
Strong to support and grand,
With supplication that shall fill
Her soul like a command,
She'll place her hand in his
And take whate er the world may bring,
Proud and content, contented for his sake
Whom she hath made her king."

The rich contralto voice, so beautifully soft and sweet, and so highly cultivated, died dreamily away; and Shirley rose from the piano.

"Thank you, my darling!" Major Stuart whispered softly; and their eyes met for a moment, hers so sweet and fond, his so proud and tender; then Shirley moved over to the fire. At the same moment the dressing-bell sounded, and the girls started up.

"I am afraid she was just a little bit of a prig," Ruby said laughingly. "But it is a very pretty song, Shirley."

"Judging by the words, it would be advisable not to find a king at all," remarked Sir Hugh carelessly, "since before he came she had

'No grief she should forget,
Nor any cause to sigh.'"

"Treason to your sex, Sir Hugh?" said Alice gayly. "Come along, girls; mamma likes us to be in time, you know."

The girls trooped off, laughing and chatting as they went, their quick light steps sounding clearly over the oaken floor. Mr. Rivers soon followed, and the two friends were left alone.

For a moment they stood in silence, looking down at the red glow of the fire; then Sir Hugh took up the fur-trimmed coat he had put aside, and, humming softly as he went, moved away. At the door Guy's voice arrested him.

"Wait one minute, old fellow—I have something to tell you."

Sir Hugh paused; for a moment he put his hand on the oaken frame of the door as if he needed its support, then he turned quickly and made a few steps in the room.

"What is it?" he asked quietly.

"I wanted to tell you— What is the matter, Hugh? Are you ill?" said Guy hastily.

"Ill? No, of course not. What is it, Stuart? I have a letter to write before dinner."

"Do you remember my telling you that we might meet our fates at Fairholme Court?" Guy said, with a smile. "I don't know about you, Hugh, but I have met mine."

"Caught!" exclaimed Sir Hugh, with a forced laugh. "Who is it, Guy? Miss Capel?"

"No, of course not," said Guy, looking surprised. "Why, do you guess her, Hugh?"

"I fancied you admired her more than Miss Montolieu," Sir Hugh answered, carelessly. "But, if it is Miss Montolieu, I congratulate you sincerely, for she's a pretty girl and an heiress to boot."

"It is not Miss Montolieu," said Major Stuart, somewhat gravely. "It is Shirley Ross."

"Shirley Ross!" Sir Hugh exclaimed in an accent of intense surprise that struck Guy almost painfully.

"Yes," he said, simply. "You seem very much surprised, Hugh."

"I am very much surprised," returned Sir Hugh, gravely; and there was a short silence.

"Why are you so astonished, Hugh?" Major Stuart asked then. "I know that I am unworthy, but—"

"My dear Guy, it is not that. I fancied—but I was wrong of course—that Miss Ross, with her great beauty, would look out for a rich man, but—"

"But she has consented to take a poor one, you see," finished Guy, smiling. "You may safely congratulate me, Hugh."

"I will wish you all happiness, old fellow," Sir Hugh said, cordially; but being encumbered with his heavy coat, perhaps he did not see Major Stuart's outstretched hand. "I always think that congratulations should be kept until one sees how the marriage turns out. I will keep mine till then."

He then walked away, beginning to hum softly before he had traversed half-a-dozen yards; and Guy followed, feeling somewhat disappointed and chilled for all his happiness.

CHAPTER VII.

Shirley Ross went up to dress for dinner, feeling wildly, almost deliriously happy. What strange, new, wonderful, beautiful thing was this that had come into her life? Guy loved her; and in one moment all the earth had been changed and glorified. She could never more be sorry or sad or desolate. Guy loved her. He had taken her into his strong arms and whispered it into her ears, and had put his lips to her forehead; and never in all her life, Shirley thought, would she forget that loving clasp, that tender kiss! She was so happy that she could have sung out loud in her joy and gladness, and have danced for very glee.

As she stood before the mirror, changing her dress and arranging her hair with eager unsteady little hands, she leaned suddenly forward and scrutinized her own face with new earnestness, and then drew back, flushing a little, and smiling shyly at her own thought. Yes, she was pretty, very pretty. She had always known that she was good-looking, but it had never been a source of much joy to her before; now, however, she was glad. It delighted her to think that Guy's relatives, at least the old grand uncle, the only one whom he had kept up any intimacy with, and who loved him so tenderly, could not cavil at his choice.

And then she made her little preparations quickly and eagerly. She put aside the usual evening dress of black grenadine, and took out one which she had had in the old happy days when her father and mother lived—a soft dainty Indian muslin quaintly and prettily made, with a good deal of soft lace about it. Both lace and muslin were yellowed bytime; but they were none the worse for that, Shirley knew—they seemed all the softer, and more harmonious; and the dress had never been a la mode, for it had been made after a quaint old-fashioned style of her father's choosing, so that it was not antiquated, even now.

And when she had gathered up the pretty chestnut hair, and coiled it daintily round her head; she donned the pretty robe, and then stood shyly looking at herself, pleased at her beauty, but wondering if Guy would think her foolish, and half hesitating whether she would not remove the Indian muslin and wear the black grenadine. Aunt Geraldine would wonder, she said to herself, and Alice would sneer; but what did that matter so long as Guy was satisfied and she could read approval in his dark eyes? Nothing mattered but that, she thought, smiling a little as she turned away from the glass, and left the room rather hastily, although she knew that it was early, and that she should find no one in the drawing-room for fully half-an-hour yet.

As she passed down the long corridor she was quite unconscious of a pair of passionate resentful eyes, which were watching her eagerly with almost fierce tenderness, and she was too much absorbed in her own happy thoughts to heed the footsteps that followed her down the carpeted stairs; and, while she lingered in the conservatory to get a flower, the footsteps passed her, and went on.

Then, when she came into the drawing-room, smiling softly as she fastened the flowers into the old yellow lace at her throat, she saw a tall slight figure leaning against the mantel-piece, his head resting wearily upon his hand. Her heart leaped up in gladness. It was Guy, she thought, and they would have half-an-hour's chat all by themselves before the others came down; but Sir Hugh Glynn, as he turned to meet her saw all the pleasure die out of her beautiful hazel eyes.

"It is not Guy," he said with a bitterness which Shirley could not but hear; and the color flickered in her cheek for a moment, then faded.

She went forward slowly and gravely. Sir Hugh's words and tone did not please her; yet was he not Guy's friend, and did he not love and trust him, and were not Guy's friends hers from henceforward?

As she drew nearer to the baronet, she saw by the light of the wax candles on the mantel-piece that he was strangely pale and that his hand was unsteady.

"Is anything the matter?" she said hastily. "Sir Hugh, are you ill? Can I get you anything?"

He turned from her with a sudden gesture of pain, and bowed his head upon his hands for a moment in silence. Shirley stood silently also, trembling now with a sudden dread and terror. What had happened? Was Guy ill? She had seen him a few moments before—not quite half-an-hour—but something might have happened between then and now.

"What is it?" she said, almost faintly in her terror. "Guy—is anything—"

"No," he answered, lifting his head and speaking in the same bitter mournful tone, "there is nothing the matter with Guy, and of course you have no thought for any one else."

She looked at him in surprise, her eyes questioning and astonished, her cheek flushing with a little indignation.

"No," he went on, "there is nothing wrong with Guy. You may set your heart at rest—for, since all is well with him, you need not heed what other heart is broken."

"I do not understand," Shirley faltered nervously.

"And yet it is a very simple matter," he said, in a low tone. "What may bring the greatest joy to one man may bring the most intense sorrow to another. Guy has been telling me," he went on, lifting his head and looking at her with mournful, passionate eyes, "of the happiness which you have conferred upon him; but I wonder if you thought that while you made him so happy you were breaking my heart."

Shirley started, looking up to him with wide, frightened eyes and colorless cheeks.

"You did not know," he said gently—"at least I think you did not—and I did not think, or, feel that I was, I would not have let him steal my darling from me. Shirley," he went on passionately, "from the first moment that I saw you I have loved you with my whole heart. Darling, is it too late? Do you care for that man? He cannot love you as I love you—he cannot—"

"At least he is too true and noble to do what you are doing, Sir Hugh," she interrupted, mastering her emotion by a strong effort and speaking proudly and disdainfully. "He would not betray his friend!"

"Ah!" broke from him like a sharp exclamation of pain, and he grew pale to his lips as he drew back a little. "Forgive me," he said hoarsely then. "I was wrong. Forgive me."

But, as he turned from her, the suffering on his face struck Shirley with a sense of remorse for her hasty words, and she said quickly—

"I did not mean to hurt you, but, oh, Sir Hugh, I cannot bear to think that I should grieve you! I never thought that you would care."

"Would it have made any difference to you?" he asked eagerly. "Shirley, if I had spoken first, should I have had any chance? I am rich. Guy is a poor man, and—"

"I love Guy," the girl said simply and gravely; and the gleam of hope which had sprung up in Sir Hugh Glynn's heart faded as he heard the brave simple words and saw the steadfast look in the earnest eyes.

"Lucky fellow!" he said, trying to speak lightly, but failing utterly in his bitterness and resentment. "Well, he deserves his good fortune, if any man ever did. I can give him no higher praise, Miss Ross, than that I think him worthy even of you."

There was a brief silence, and when Sir Hugh spoke again he succeeded in forcing something like cordiality into his voice.

"Will you try to forget my madness, Miss Ross?" he said gently. "I could not help those words, yet I would give half my wealth to have them unsaid again. You trust me enough, do you not, to know that I will conquer what is unworthy of Guy's friend? I will not offend you again. If you wish it, I will go away and—and—see you no more."

At that moment, if she had told him to go, he would have obeyed her, and the misery and wretchedness that grew out of his love for her would have been prevented. For a few seconds her fate lay in her own hands, and she could have decided it. But she did not know it, and she let the chance slip by.

Go away. Why should he go? He was Guy's friend, and he, Guy, would be sorry if he left. Surely he would be able to conquer his weakness—a weakness for which Shirley grieved too truly to feel flattered by it, but which surprised even as much as it pained her. She had thought that Sir Hugh cared for Alice. Poor Alice, perhaps she loved him, and by and by he would give her his love, and they would all be happy together. As she hesitated, these thoughts flashed like lightning through her brain, and her good angel fled, and her mother's fate was upon her.

She put out her hand to him with a frank gesture of trust.

"Do not go," she said gently. "I do trust you. I know you will be true to yourself and to Guy."

"Thank you," he returned gravely. "I will try to be worthy of your trust and friendship. And, as I am his friend, Miss Ross, will you believe that I am yours also—yours most sincerely and faithfully—and that, if ever I can serve you, you may command me for Guy's sake," he added softly, "as well as for your own? Will you believe this, and make use of me if there should be any need?"

"Thank you," Shirley answered, coloring a little as he stooped and put his lips to her hand; and at the same moment Guy Stuart came in looking handsome and distinguished in his quiet evening-dress.

He started slightly as he caught sight of the two at the fire; then he came forward slowly, while Shirley flushed and paled alternately, for she could not conquer the agitation which her interview with Sir Hugh had occasioned.

"I have been asking Miss Ross to accept my best wishes and congratulations," Sir Hugh said easily. "Our old friendship, Guy, will satisfy her that it is not a mere compliment."

"I hope Shirley will find that your old friendship has not made you partial," Guy responded, smiling; "and, when you come to us for our congratulations and good wishes, you will be as sure of their sincerity as I am of yours, Hugh."

At this time their hands met frankly in close pressure, although Guy remembered afterward how cold and death-like were the fingers that clasped his.

Shirley's engagement to Major Stuart was received by Sir Gilbert and Lady Fairholme with quiet pleasure and satisfaction. Her ladyship was sincerely glad that such a dangerous rival should be removed from her daughter's path, for she had not been able to deceive herself as to the impression which Shirley's beauty made. Not only was she more beautiful than Alice, but she possessed that far rarer gift than beauty, rarer and more attractive—that of fascination. Had she been a plain woman, Shirley would have possessed a charm and singular power of attraction; and, even in the bitter days to come, when her beauty faded under the heavy overshadowing clouds, that charm was always felt more or less by all with whom she came in contact.

To Alice herself her cousin's engagement gave almost unmixed satisfaction, the only drawback to her pleasure being that Shirley, although two years her junior, was likely to be married first. But this was such a slight cause for annoyance, and the reasons for being satisfied were so very many that Alice was very warm in her congratulations, and so kind that Shirley felt quite grateful. Shirley was now safely disposed of, and her beauty could no longer interfere with Alice's own triumphs. That Sir Hugh Glynn had been much struck by her cousin's loveliness Alice had been far too quick-sighted not to perceive, but now, of course, such admiration could have no results, and could not possibly interfere with her own plans for the subjugation of the eligible baronet.

Oswald wrote a charming little note of congratulation to his cousin, telling her that he had met some brother officers of Major Stuart's who had amply endorsed the good opinion which Oswald had formed of that gentleman, and Jack sent a few warm lines which, tender and glad as they were, made Shirley's eyes fill with tears, for which she could not account.

Altogether for once the course of true love seemed to be running very smoothly, and Shirley's cup of gladness seemed to be brimming over. And yet—and yet— Poor Shirley! The shadow of her mother's fate was hovering over her and almost ready to fall, and the words which might have saved her from it had died away on her mother's lips, as she lay in the light of the gray October dawn, drifting away from life into eternity.

(To be continued.)

Correct.

Teacher—Correct the sentence, "The liquor which the man bought was drank."

Smart Boy—The man who bought the liquor was drunk.—Harvard Lampoon.

—All men are not homeless, but some men are home less than others.

The Grave on the Hill.

There's a spot on the hillside far away,
When in summer the grass grows green,
Where, beneath a rustling elm tree's shade,
A moss-covered stone is seen.
'Tis a quiet and unfrequented spot,
A solitude lone and wild;
Yet—somebody's hopes are buried there—
'Tis the grave of a little child.

In the winter, alas! that mossy stone
Is hid 'neath a shroud of snow;
But around it, in spring-time, fresh and sweet,
The daisies and violets grow;
And o'er it the summer breezes hum
With a fragrance soft and mild,
And the autumn's dead leaves thickly strew
That grave of a little child.

And every year there's a redbreast come
When the month of May is nigh,
And builds her nest in this quiet spot,
'Mid the elm tree's branches high;
With her melody sweet, by the hour she trills
And if by the scene beguiled,
Perhaps—who knows? 'tis an angel comes
To the grave of that little child.

Yes, somebody's hopes lie buried there,
Some mother is weeping in vain,
For though years may come and years may go,
'Twill never come back again,
Yet blessed are they who die in youth,
The pure and the undefiled;
Some read to heaven, perchance, runs through,
That grave of a little child.

ADVICE TO YOUNG MEN.

Buy a Lot—The Loiterers at the Church Door—A Good Berating.

Every young man who earns wages ought to buy a lot and make a start for a home. The way to get a start is to save a little money each month and make a payment on your purchase, and so, little by little, pay for your lot and build your house. Don't spend all your money on livery turnouts and dances and ice-cream to please your best girl. After a while you will need a home for that best girl and the young sters that some way or another generally come around and want to "put up" with you. Put a little of your spare cash into the ground as you go along, and after many days it will bring you a royalty.—California Architect and Building News.

Will the young man who takes his position along the curbstone in front of the church every Sunday night to wait for his best girl please bend his ear in this direction a minute? Gossip desires a word with him. You are an unmitigated nuisance, you are, and the girl who will permit herself to be picked up by you in front of the church is wanting in self-respect. Why don't you go to her house and take her to church, and sit beside her during the sermon, and learn wisdom, and take her home in a respectable manner? Do you know what you look like ranged along the curbstone? You look like a lot of crows on a fence-rail. That's what you look like.—Harrisburg Telegraph.

A POINT FOR DARWINIANS.

Baby Monkey Cries Like a Child Over Its Dead Mother.

A correspondent with the Nicaragua Canal expedition in Central America writes: A much longer residence in these regions will add materially to the converts of Darwinism, for one has only to see the monkey in his native clime to appreciate the wisdom of the great philosopher. On Christmas Day we gave the men a treat for dinner in the form of a red monkey, which, next to the large lizard, is considered by the natives one of the choicest of meats. Though we were forced to walk over ten miles to reach our canoe, the dead body of the victim was followed the entire distance by one of her young. When we reached home and threw the body down in front of the tent the little one rushed up for recognition. Failing in this, he began to rub vigorously in hopes of restoring life. Still unsuccessful, with a heartrending scream that almost brought tears to hardened eyes, he threw himself upon the breast of his mother and cried like a child.

A Balloonist's Sad Death.

A Duluth, Minn., despatch says: A farmer living in the woods several miles from this city reports the discovery in the woods several miles from his dwelling of a stranded balloon. He also discovered in the limbs of a tree, against which the balloon was caught, the dead and half decayed body of a man, who had evidently been thrown violently from the basket, for the body was wedged in the branches. The man had been probably about 30 years of age. There was nothing in the pockets of the dead man by which he could be identified. The car contained a sand bag half full, a compass, etc. A broken rope, trailing some distance, showed that the unfortunate aeronaut had made every effort to bring his dangerous craft to a standstill before it was torn to pieces by the gale and he was dashed to death. It is supposed the balloon was the one which went up last spring from a southern point and was never heard of.

Married in 1840; Remarried in 1888.

An Eagle River, Mich., despatch says: A strange wedding has taken place here. Col. Wm. B. Wright, an old settler and well-known hotel man, was married again to his wife he married 48 years ago. He is the recipient of a large pension from the United States Government, and knowing how difficult it would be for his wife, in case of his death, to draw his pension without a marriage certificate, had a new ceremony performed. The colonel and Mrs. Wright were married at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., in November, 1840, but while moving from Eagle River many years ago the marriage certificate was lost.

Slips in the Council Chamber.

The Toronto World collects the following "bulls" perpetrated in the Council Chamber of that city:

Ald. Baxter—The voice of the vox populi.

Ald. St. Andrew's Carlyle—Pedestrians on foot.

Ald. Ritchie—To rely upon a thing like this is totally unreliable.

The News Man—I don't see any of the absentees present.

A $30,000 Burglary.

On the 13th ult. burglars entered Taplow Court, near Maidenhead, England, the residence of Mr. W. H. Greenfell, M.P., and ransacked Mrs. Greenfell's dressing-room. They got away with about £6,000 worth of jewellery, principally wedding presents, including a necklet valued at £1,500.

It is true that the busiest man is often the happiest man, but he often doesn't have time to realize it.—Burlington Free Press.

SUPERSTITION EXTRAORDINARY.

A Great Scare in the Town of Birmingham.

THE LAST DAY LOOKED FOR.

A singular evidence of the survival of superstition in the nineteenth century, and of the strong grip which it retains on the fears of ignorant persons, has been furnished in Birmingham. Some days ago the newspapers contained the bold prediction of some sapient astrologer that on the 11th of January, in consequence of the violent "fiery planet Mars" forming a conjunction with the "evil planet Uranus" in the eighteenth degree of the zodiacal sign Libra, and at the same time of the evil aspect of Mercury, which was mischievous enough to present itself 90 degrees distant, the unhappy denizens of this globe might look out for all manner of calamities. Among these were named "many sudden deaths among the nobles of the land, numerous accidents in collieries, fires, explosions, murders, wars and earthquakes," and lastly, as a makeweight, "storms and high winds, with many untoward events, resulting in much fatality." The wide comprehensiveness of this programme of prophecy, while instructive and amusing to the judicious, seems to have had a very different meaning for the unskilful. To them it was explicable only on the supposition that the last day was at hand. It must be admitted that such a programme seems too liberal of mischief for any less momentous occasion. The occurrence of thick darkness at an earlier hour of the day than it might have been expected in the absence of a fog was accepted by more than a few as a startling confirmation of the prophecy, although it had not been specially named by the prophet. There were people who went about with the information, exclusively theirs, that half-past 2 in the afternoon was the exact time at which to listen for the crack of doom, and when that hour had passed in peace and quiet they probably hailed the early darkness as an incident behind which they might shelter themselves from the fire of chaff which had begun to beat upon them. All this, of course, was a source of innocent merriment to the vast majority of people about town, but it was so firmly believed by uneducated people here and there that many of them made fearsome preparation for the end of all things. The police report that not only did old women betake themselves to their Bibles with unusual zeal, but younger women remained in bed all day, dreading the coming earthquake. Children were kept away from school as a similar preparation, and those who attended school came home full of fear and alarmist rumors. Two little folks, the children of a Police Inspector, begged their father at dinner-time not to be out in the streets at midnight, for two stars were going to meet and burst and set the world on fire. In Constitution Hill, the new cable being set running as a trial of its working, a tradesman, startled by the unusual noise it made, rushed out of his shop with a pale face, and called the attention of a passer-by to it, offering the suggestion that it was the first symptom of a convulsion of the earth's crust. From the Ladywood Police Station it was reported that there seemed to be "a general state of fear." Some women called at the Moseley Street Police Station in the hope of deriving comfort and support from the constable in charge of the office, and seemed a good deal shocked at the levity with which he treated their forebodings. They went away at last to buy a copy of the Bible, for which three of them clubbed together their coppers. At Moor Street Police Court, in the morning, a woman of the same class, on being fined a shilling for uttering threats of bodily harm, had accepted the alternative of a week's imprisonment with the observation that it didn't matter, for the world would be at an end soon. She was evidently sincere, and imagined that she would perhaps be lucky enough to cheat the law out of a part of its penalty, although she had not ventured to offer in defence the plea that she would have no time to carry out the threats she had made use of. At night a half-drunken soldier was found praying in Holloway Head, with all the fervor of fright and a troubled conscience. The amount of credulity which actually prevailed with reference to this silly astrological bogey was not even paralleled when many thousands of people assembled in High street and the Bull Ring to see Spring-heeled Jack leap from the roof of the Market Hall against the spire of St. Martin's Church, and for a fortnight afterwards pursued that ubiquitous spectre all over the town.—Liverpool Post.

Irresistible.

Rev. Robert Collyer tells an amusing story of a trained group of monkeys he once saw in London on a stage, whose intelligence was such that he was almost persuaded to accept the Darwinian theory on the spot. They had been drilled carefully to go through a series of military exercises in uniform, and were making a fine display of their attainments when a man in the gallery threw a handful of nuts on the stage, and the simian soldiery at once broke ranks, threw down their guns and scrambled for the hard shelled dainties. "That moment," says Dr. Collyer, "the hand on the dial of time was turned back a thousand years!"

The Catch of the Year.

Utah mother (to daughter)—You will probably meet young Mr. Brigham at the ball to-night, dear.

Daughter—Yes, mamma.

Utah mother—And you must be as pleasant as possible. Mr. Brigham is the most desirable party of the season; he has only one wife, you know.

On General Principles.

Gentleman (to Uncle Rastus, who is troubled with a balky mule)—Uncle Rastus, do you think kicking that mule in the stomach will make him go?

Uncle Rastus—Da haint nuffin wot'll make dat mule go when he 'cludes not to, sah. I'm only kickin' him fo' my own satisfaction.—Accident News.

In many of the churches of Edinburgh on the 15th ult. pulpit references were made to the deaths of the Rev. Dr. Phin, the Rev. Dr. W. Wilson, and Mr. Herdman, R. S. A.

A BLIZZARD HEROINE.

Minnie Freeman, a Nebraska Girl, Saves a School of Children.

Not many miles from the town of Ord is situated the school-house of Mira Valley school district. The house is a small frame structure, and the nearest dwelling to it is at least one-half mile distant. Thursday morning, January 12th, when the blizzard came, there were in the little school-house Miss Minnie Freeman, the teacher, yet in her teens, and thirteen pupils between the ages of 6 and 15 years. The children were wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement by the fury of the storm. In the midst of the teacher's assurance that all would be well a terrible gust of wind struck the building, the windows rattled, the house shook and the door of the structure was torn from its hinges. It was then the young teacher realized the necessity of preparing for emergencies. With an exhibition of rare judgment she gathered her little brood together, and securing a coil of strong heavy twine, began with the largest one and tied the children together by the arms and bodies, three abreast. This completed, she huddled her charges around the stove and awaited the pleasure of the storm king. Its furious work came sooner than was expected. The terrific gale, sweeping everything before it, struck the building and carried away, in the twinkling of an eye, the entire roof of the structure, leaving the frightened little ones exposed to the elements. The time for prompt action had arrived, but the plucky teacher was equal to the emergency. Taking the youngest and frailest of her charge in her arms, she tied the remaining end of the twine around her own body, and with all the words of encouragement she could muster the courageous teacher started with her "team" of frightened little ones into the fury of the storm. Those who have braved the terrors of a Nebraska blizzard need not be told that it required courage to enable a young girl to breast those furies, having in her keeping the lives of thirteen little ones and the happiness of thirteen homes. Those who felt and suffered from the effects of Thursday's storm need not be told that the act of that young girl was one from which strong men might quail. Selecting her way carefully, following the course of the storm, the brave girl led her little charges through snow-drifts and blinding blizzard, now cautioning them about their steps, now encouraging them to cheerfulness, and all the way herself bearing an additional burden of somebody's darling, urging them into renewed efforts. And thus it was that after a wearisome journey of three quarters of a mile, through all the fury a storm could muster, the little band reached the threshold of a farm house, where she received a hearty welcome. At the house where they found shelter one of the children made its home, and if the eyes of a loving mother filled with tears as she pressed her little one to her heart they were not dried when she gave to the brave young teacher an embrace in which was embodied all the love and gratitude within a mother's heart. It is safe to say that the subsequent reception of Miss Freeman in all the homes whose little ones she had rescued perhaps from death were equally as warm as that accorded to her in the first instance.—Omaha Bee.

Wit of Other Lands.

Creditable Relationship.—Visitor—Don't you miss your little nephew very much, Freddie? Freddie (whose nephew died the week before)—Yes, I miss him very much; but I like to be the uncle to an angel.—Life.

In School (Fact): a Class of Little Girls.—The Teacher—What! Don't any of you know what an epistle is? Answer (after some hesitation)—Yes, Miss, I know. An epistle is the wife of an apostle!—Moonshine.

Considerate.—And whatever you do, Mary Ann, said a loving mother to her nursemaid, as the latter set out in charge of her two little children to walk in Kensington Gardens on a rainy April day, don't let my darlings sit down on the wet grass. If they are tired and want to rest, you must sit down yourself on the grass and let them sit on your lap.

A Weary Waiting.—Young Man—Isn't the sermon nearly done? Deacon of Church—About an hour yet. He's only at his "lastly." Young Man—Will it take him an hour to get through his "lastly?" Deacon—No; but there's the "one word more and I am done," and the "finally," and the "in conclusion" to come yet. Don't be impatient, young man, your girl won't spoil.—Australian Lantern.

The Grand Old Name of Gentleman.—Beg pardon, mister, but what particular breed might yer be callin' this 'ere little dawg o' yourn! You'll excuse me a harskin, gov'ner; but me and another gentleman 'ere 'as just been 'avin a small bet about it! (Disgust of Montmorency De Vere Stubbley, who has always described himself as a gentleman.)—Punch.

Worth About $2 a Week.

What is Beauty worth on the stage? The average salary for Beauty alone is about $12 a week. Beauty with talent? That depends on the talent. The salaries of the ladies named run from $50 to $200 a week, according to their talent and experience, not according to their beauty. Miss Cheatham probably gets the smallest and Miss Rehan the largest of these sums. The stage is probably the worst market in the universe to take Beauty to if there is no other ware to be sold with it. When Beauty goes on the stage alone she must very soon go as "Beauty unadorned," and Beauty unadorned on the stage cannot drape and dress as she almost invariably wants to in private life on $12 a week.

Proof Positive.

"Oh, by the way, Job," said Mrs. Shuttle as she handed him his warm slippers, "you remember that you abandoned smoking with the New Year."

"Yes, my dear."

"And I found three cigars in your overcoat pocket this very evening."

"Certainly. If I had been smoking they wouldn't have been there."—Hartford Post.

She Knew What to do With It.

Husband (exasperated)—What in the mischief did you do with the snow-shovel brought home last night?

Wife—What did you expect I would do with it, John? I tied a ribbon around the handle and put it in the parlor.—Epoch.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Worth, the French milliner, lives in the suburbs of Paris in a palace that covers several acres and is gorgeously furnished. Once a year it is thrown open to his employees, and the fete lasts a day and a night. On this day each of the women employed by Worth is permitted to select a dress from his stock, and it is made up according to her directions.

More than $10,000,000 worth of oysters were shipped from Maryland to all parts of the world this season. Over 50,000 persons are employed in the industry in the State, and it supports besides 1,500 schooners and sloops. To enforce the law for the regulation of these vessels the State maintains an "oyster navy," consisting of five steamers, six schooners and eight sloops.

An American who saw the Mikado of Japan at Tokio recently says: "He sat in lonely state, a dark-featured, black-haired, thick-lipped man, dressed in the uniform of a European general, and with nothing grand in his make up or appearance. The absolute monarch of thirty-six million people in a tight-fitting, gold-laced blue coat and a French shako for a cap! Shades of Gilbert and Sullivan preserve us. I wanted to pull off his foreign tailor trumpery and pitch his coat into the nearest canal, scatter his monkey-like soldiers and make him and them all over again in the likeness of their royal ancestors."

A new method of preserving oysters in the shell, so as to transport them to any distance in a perfectly fresh condition, is being tried at Oxford, Md. The process is of the simplest description, consisting wholly in a single turn of iron wire twisted tightly around the shells so as to keep them so closely shut that none of the juice of the oyster can leak out. It appears that it is the opening of the mouth of the oyster when out of water that causes it to "spoil." There is evidence that oysters clamped by wire by this method have kept fresh for several months. Arrangements are already made for the shipment of about twenty thousand oysters a day to Liverpool.

Electricity is about to be put to a new use. The emptying of the sewage of London into the Thames has necessarily polluted that river; and, searching for some means of preventing this pollution, it has been discovered that electricity transmitted into the sewage produces the equivalent of a chemical change. The electric current sets the particles of matter in a circulatory motion, and the result is that the organic matter collects at the top in a semi-solid form, so that it can easily be separated from the transparent fluid beneath. The experiments have so far been conducted on a limited scale, but if the plan should prove to be cheap and practicable it would go far toward solving a problem that agitates every large city.

A curious case is likely to come before the London courts. Some months since a young girl was apprenticed to a fashionable city milliner. She lived with her employers, two maiden sisters, and a week ago for some alleged offence committed in the workroom she was given a severe corporal punishment by one of the sisters. The girl complained to her aunt, who at once wrote demanding an explanation. A reply was received stating that by the terms of apprenticeship the proprietor of the establishment was in loco parentis, and had the right to administer such chastisement as a mother might inflict upon a disobedient child. She further stated that she found the rod an indispensable adjunct of the workroom, and was quite prepared to defend her right to use it. The girl's aunt threatens to bring an action for assault to test the case.

To have made 96 couples happy out of a possible 997 is a marrying record that may well claim the hymeneal championship. Such is the knot-tying performance of Rev. Ellis Howell, now visiting at Kansas, Illinois. He is 83 years of age, and has been a minister of the gospel sixty-two years. It happens, curiously enough, that the one divorce that resulted from the 997 marriages was that of a brother clergyman whom he deadheaded on account of "the profesh." To eke out a day's developments in the line of connubial curiosities there comes from Findlay, Ohio, the story of a colored woman who was married at 11, at 12 bore a child, which, being a girl, was in turn married at 12, and before arriving at the mature age of 13 herself became a mother, so that the original bride of tender years is a grandmother at 25. Then at Fairmount, Illinois, occurred the wedding of two children, aged respectively 11 and 13, by consent of their parents; while at Petersburg, Virginia, a father managed to prevent the elopement of his daughter of 16, who had walked eleven miles to run away with the man of her choice.

Lord Dufferin, says the Edinburgh Scotsman, is a man of many accomplishments. He is probably the most cosmopolitan statesman in the service of Great Britain, and in his time has learnt something of many languages. To his other linguistic accomplishments he seems to have added, at least, a sufficient command of Persian to enable him to read a speech to the chiefs of the frontier tribes at Peshawur, as he was reported recently to have done. It was surmised that the speech, although read by Lord Dufferin, had probably been composed by some one more likely to be acquainted with Oriental languages, but, if an Indian paper which I have just received is to be credited, the Viceroy recently examined the boys at the Badshahi Mosque at Lahore "in their studies in Persian, Urdu, etc., and heard them read the 11th part of the Koran," after which His Excellency "expressed his satisfaction at their progress in education." There may still be some room for doubt whether the versatile Viceroy relied on his own knowledge in commending the youthful students of Persian and Urdu, but Lord Dufferin is a student as well as a diplomatist, and there is nothing intrinsically improbable in his having devoted some of his leisure time to acquiring one or more of the many languages of the East during his enforced sojourn there.

Miss Minnie Freeman, the heroic young school ma'am who saved thirteen children during the Nebraska blizzard, has received nine offers of marriage. Minnie had better ponder the subject carefully before accepting. As a contemporary observes, she might strike a matrimonial squall that would last longer than the blizzard, and a good deal colder in the end.

A London cablegram announces that Lord Bute, who has made many millions during the last few years by the simple process of sitting still and watching the growth of the town of Cardiff, which owns, has donated $80,000 toward building a Roman Catholic church at Rothesay, in Scotland. He had previously given about half a million dollars for a similar purpose in England. His Lordship joined the Catholic Church fifteen years ago.

A New York artist tells a story which will be of interest to any one fond of psychical investigations. He was sitting in his sleeping chamber late at night reading a French novel, when his wife, who had retired some hours before, suddenly awoke and related a dream which she had just had. The dream was an exact counterpart—even to details—of the plot of the novel, which the lady had never read.

In a Vermont town not long ago a justice trial for assault was the order of the hour. The jury had been empanelled, the plaintiff was testifying, and he closed his story by pointing to one of the jurymen and saying: "He saw the whole affair and knows all about it." Whereupon the attorney for the respondent had that jurymman excused in short metre, on the ground that he was disqualified by reason of knowing too much.

Some enterprising Indiana capitalists have undertaken the scheme of transporting natural gas by rail in large reservoirs from the wells to Fort Wayne. If the gaseous fuel which nature is furnishing so lavishly in certain parts of the country can be packed into tanks and carried like oil to distant places for consumption a very great step will have been taken in the direction of reducing the cost of heating and illuminating. It remains to be seen, however, whether the experiment will be in every way successful and feasible.

Carter H Harrison, ex-Mayor of Chicago, writes from Bangkok that he has had an audience with the King of Siam. Speaking of King Chulalanghorn Mr Carter writes: "With a kindly, gentle face, bespeaking a warm and generous heart capable of deep affection, and showing his loving disposition by his real grief for the untimely death of his Queen, he is compelled to take many wives, the daughters of his noblemen, and now, at a little over 30 years of age, he is the father of some thirty odd children." Poor Chulalanghorn!

It is said that when exposed to severe cold a feeling of warmth is created by repeatedly filling the lungs to their utmost in this manner: Throw the shoulders well back and hold the head well up. Inflate the lungs slowly (the garments being loose), the air entering entirely through the nose. When the lungs are completely filled, hold the breath for ten seconds or longer, and then expire it quickly through the mouth. It is important for all to practice this exercise many times each day, especially when in the open air. If this habit were becomes universal, lung diseases and many others will rarely be heard of. A permanent expansion of the chest of one, two and even three inches, will eventually follow.

It will please those who have too long been annoyed with stories of the infelicities of the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise, cables a correspondent, to know that they are travelling on the Continent together. At present they are staying at Naples, where they live in a simple, unostentatious fashion, dining at the public table and otherwise practising rigid economy. The Princess and her husband travelled incognito, and on their arrival at Naples walked to the hotel. The manager, however, recognized the Princess, and offered her a suite of apartments on the first floor, reserved for notables. These were declined, as was a suggestion that the illustrious guests should eat in private.

An Important Little Miss.

A London cable says: No dynastic question is the subject of more political interest in Germany than that of Holland. The King is 73 years of age, and His Majesty's only surviving child is a daughter, not yet 8 years old. If the King survives ten years or so he will have probably to decide between a German or an English husband for this Princess. If she comes to the throne during her minority the matrimonial question will be more anxious; and outside the present limits of Germany, no matter is so near the heart of Prince Bismarck as the entry of Holland into the German Empire upon a footing like that of Bavaria. Not only the position of Holland, so favorable for the development of German strength at sea, but her colonial possessions are especially attractive. They are not so much coveted by Englishmen, but were Holland to join the German States the new empire would at once become the second colonial power in the world.

A Dog Fond of Fireworks.

A dog story recently reached me which shows in a remarkable way how that animal's tastes adapt themselves to his surroundings. Messrs. Brock, the well known pyrotechnists, have at their factory a Newfoundland dog which positively revels in fireworks. He rushes into a shower of sparks with as much delight as most of his kind display in a cold bath, and on a lighted squib being thrown within his reach he will run after the smouldering stump as if it were a bone and trample it out with his paws.—London Truth.

—Love is like the measles; we can have it bad but once, and the later in life we have it the tougher it goes with us.

A pressed glass tumbler nine inches tall with a capacity of eighty ounces, the largest in existence, was made in Rochester a few days ago. A special press was constructed to shape the glass, and glass-workers regard it as much of a masterpiece in its line as the great steel gun cast at Pittsburg recently.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Sydenham Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, FEB. 16, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is interesting to hear a man, who borrows all his reading matter, instructing an Editor in the art of conducting a newspaper successfully. If we were only swimming in the "root of all evil," we might amuse ourself and the public by allowing such wiseacres to run THE ADVANCE about two weeks. That would be quite sufficient.

"Some of you fellows git too many of them advertisements in your papers," said an individual to THE ADVANCE the other day. Dear fellow-mortal, we hope you won't elevate your spinal column if we assure you, that advertising pays you as well as the advertiser and publisher. How? Simply because it reduces the subscription price of the newspaper to cost. The advertiser pays a share of the cost of production, for which, of course, he is amply remunerated. If there were no advertising done, the publisher would be obliged to raise his subscription rates in order to make his paper pay. As it is, you get cheap reading; which, from an economical standpoint, ought to satisfy you. Then the advertising columns furnish you with a large amount of profitable information—in many instances saving you the price of subscription a dozen times over. Wide-awake people consult the advertisements as zealously as they do the other matter; and it pays them well to do so. Just think it over calmly and you will see the force of these statements. Then, let us whisper another little matter in your ear: The subscribers and advertisers reap vastly greater benefits from newspapers in the aggregate than do the publishers themselves. This is self-evident indeed.

A contemporary complains because we advertise its town or, rather, because we do not advertise it enough. Is that it? Well, it would take a large amount of advertising to boom that town anyhow; and as we have not charged them a copper in this matter of advertising, we see no reason why they should grumble. "Quite the contrairy," as Sairay Gamp would put it.

What town or village on the continent has a fire record like Flesherton? Since the place had an existence, we understand that not one dollar has been paid by any insurance company for losses by fire! And there has only been one building destroyed by fire in eighteen years! and even that was not covered by insurance! Notwithstanding this fact, insurance rates are just as high here as they are in places where they have from one to half a dozen big fires every year. In other words, Flesherton derives no special benefit from its unique and high standing in insurance circles.

A scathing editorial article in last week's Collingwood Enterprise, headed, "A Modern Evil," contains many palpable truths. It is evidently aimed at a certain Simcoe county journalist, whose strictures a couple of weeks ago were of a most disgustingly personal character and calculated to develop a very low and depraved taste among its readers. Editors, such as those described by the Enterprise, ought to be sternly tabooed by the respectable portion of the Fourth Estate.

East Grey is to be congratulated upon being the possessor of one of the most vigilant and efficient License Inspectors in the Province, in the person of James Campbell, Esq. We have been personally acquainted with Mr. Campbell for many years, and can say without the slightest degree of flattery, that he possesses in an eminent degree all those admirable qualities of mind and heart which are to be found in the true gentleman and the firm, upright and honorable official.

The Toronto World often discourses anent the "independent press." Will it kindly tell us what line of action the following out of which entitles a newspaper to be called independent? Although professedly a Liberal Conservative paper, THE ADVANCE has often been classed as independent—once, indeed, by no less an authority than the Mail Advertising Agency. Why was this thusly?

Now that the Grand Trunk R.R. has secured control of the Northern & N.W. system, there is less likelihood than ever, that a line will be run across country from Durham to some point on Georgian Bay; but there is a strong possibility that the North Grey branch will be continued on from Meaford to Owen Sound. The Port Hope railway project, outlined in former issues of THE ADVANCE, is really the most important of all the contemplated schemes now before the people.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The correspondence on School matters in this place has caused considerable comment and your correspondent is more than pleased to know that the proper parties have taken the responsibility in the matter. And the world will now be acquainted of the fact that there are two such noted persons as Messrs. Buckingham and Long.

Mr. Medler Guy passed the age of Bachelordom by taking to himself a wife in the person of Miss Grey, of this place. The happy couple are away on their Honeymoon trip. They have the best wishes of all for their future happiness.

Another pair made happy at Feversham, drove through our village on a very cold day last week. But too happy to pay any attention to the weather.

Rev. W. Ferrier lost a valuable horse a few days ago, supposed to have died from indigestion.

It is reported that a new store is to be built by Mr. R. Brown, of Singhampton, adjoining the hotel here.

Our mails were again delayed by a severe storm of last week.

Miss Ella Kerr who has been very ill for some time is slowly recovering. We will be pleased to see her around again.

Mr. John Hamlin has again returned to reside in our village, and has engaged to work the farm of Dr. Kerr.

Eugenia.

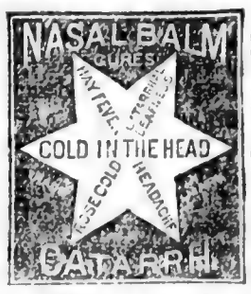
From our own Correspondent.

A cow belonging to Mr. A. Smith, which has been missing for about a week, was found in the river the other day. This is the second animal that has been drowned in about a week.

The water in the river was never known to be lower than at present. The falls are completely frozen over and present a grand appearance.

On Saturday, Mrs. Wright, of Ouray, Colorado, whose husband is engaged in the mining business, paid a visit to this village and collected a few specimens of rock near the falls with a view to testing its mineral properties. It is believed by some of the inhabitants that there is iron in the neighborhood, though whether it is in paying quantities is not definitely known. KATE.

As a toilet article, Ayer's Hair Vigor stands unrivaled. It cleanses the scalp and removes dandruff, cures itching humors, restores the original color to faded and gray hair, and promotes its growth.

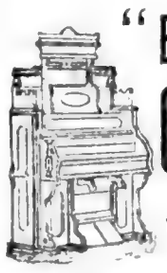


A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

WANTED!

A Quantity of WHITE ASH for Butter Tubs, for which CASH will be paid on delivery.
JOS. McCORMICK.
Flesherton.



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton.

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

INVENTION has revolutionized the world during the last half century. Not least among the wonders of inventive progress is a method and system of work that can be performed all over the country without separating the workers from their homes. Pay liberal; any one can do the work; either sex, young or old; no special ability required. Capital not needed; you are started free. Cut this out and return to us and we will send you free, something of great value and importance to you, that will start you in business, which will bring you in more money right away, than anything else in the world. GRAND OUTFIT FREE. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

HEARD'S

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriage Works, Flesherton,

CUTTERS, SLEIGHS, BUGGIES AND WAGONS.

SPECIAL ATTENTION Given to SIGN and CARRIAGE PAINTING, TRIMMING and JOB WORK.

Manufacturers of Iron Harrows and Farm Gates. HORSE SHOEING promptly attended to. Call and see. Durham Street, Flesherton.

Photos,

Photos,

Photos.

We are now turning out work far superior in style and finish to any ever produced in Flesherton.

COPYING and ENLARGING at MODERATE RATES.

PICTURE FRAMING

done in all its branches. A good stock of FRAMES and MOULDINGS kept constantly on hand. Will also introduce the new BROMIDE PORTRAIT, a picture that is giving entire satisfaction wherever introduced. SAMPLES can be seen at my Gallery where all particulars as to Price, Style &c., can be ascertained.

MRS. BULMER,
FLESHERTON.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

GREAT RUSH!

What For? Where?

To W. S. CHRISTOE'S Medical Hall, Flesherton, for the celebrated medicines, JOHNSON'S TONIC BITTERS, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills, JOHNSON'S ALL-HEALING WHITE OINTMENT

THE RUSH is for the BITTERS as it is known to be the best for all nervous diseases, Hysteria, Debility of any sort, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, and Paleness of Complexion and all disorders arising from poverty of the Blood.

The Rush is for the PILLS as there are none better than these for Liver Complaint and derangement of the digestive organs.

THE RUSH is for the OINTMENT as it ranks first in its healing qualities for all Skin Diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, & c., &c.

And it is to be found at the Drug Store of
W. S. CHRISTOE,
Flesherton.

Come and try and see for yourselves.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00	to 4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	78	to 0	80
Spring Wheat	0	78	0	80
Barley	0	60	0	70
Oats	0	38	0	38
Peas	0	58	0	58
Butter	0	17	0	17
Eggs, fresh	0	17	0	17
Potatoes bush	0	40	0	40
Pork	6	75	6	75
Hay, per ton	8	00	10	00
Hides	4	50	5	50
Wool		18		21
Sheepskins	0	50	1	06
Geese	0	06	0	06
Turkeys	0	10	0	10
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	30
Ducks per pair	0	50	0	60

Change in Business!

The undersigned having bought out S. Spirit's Butchering business in Flesherton, has opened up with a fine stock of Oysters, Salmon, Sardines, Fresh & Dried Meats, Fresh & Salt Fish, Sausage, Bologna, &c., and invites the people to call and get acquainted and leave a trial order for anything in the above lines.

JOS. McCONNELL.
Flesherton, Feb. 1st, 1888.

W. BOOTH, The Boss Barber,

FLESHERTON,

(Late of Shelburne)

Next - door - to - Clayton's - Shoe - Shop.

LADIES' HAIR CUTTING A SPECIALTY.

Shaving, Shampooing, &c., &c. Everything first-class.

Oct. 6th, 1887.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

RICHLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed; we start you. Everything new. No special ability required; you, reader, can do it as well as any one. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY - OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems. By Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-w6

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton, Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

DEEP SEA WONDERS exist in thousands of forms, but are surpassed by the marvels of invention. Those who are in need of profitable work that can be done while living at home should at once send their address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive free, full information how either sex, of all ages, can earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards wherever they live. You are started free. Capital not required. Some have made over $50 in a single day at this work. All succeed.

A Positive Cure. ✠ A Painless Cure.

FACTS FOR MEN OF ALL AGES.

DISEASES OF MAN.

M. V. LUBON'S SPECIFIC NO. 8,

THE GREAT HEALTH RENEWER,

Marvel of Healing, and Kohinoor of Medicines,

Cures the terrible consequences of Indiscretion, Exposure and Overwork.

YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED AND OLD MEN

Who are broken down from the effects of abuse will find in No. 8 a radical cure for nervous debility, organic weakness, involuntary vital losses, etc.

SYMPTOMS FOR WHICH No. 8 SHOULD BE USED.—Want of energy, vertigo, want of purpose, dimness of sight, aversion to society, want of confidence, avoidance of conversation, desire for solitude, listlessness and inability to fix the attention on a particular subject, cowardice, depression of spirits, giddiness, loss of memory, excitability of temper, spermatorrhœa, or loss of the seminal fluid—the result of self-abuse or marital excess—impotency, innutrition, emaciation, barrenness, palpitation of the heart, hysteric feelings in females, trembling, melancholy, disturbing dreams etc., are all symptoms of this terrible habit, oftentimes innocently acquired. In short, the spring of vital force having lost its tension, every function wanes in consequence. Scientific writers and the superintendents of insane asylums unite in ascribing to the effects of self-abuse the great majority of wasted lives which come under their notice. If you are incompetent for the arduous duties of business, incapacitated for the enjoyments of life, No. 8 offers an escape from the effects of early vice. If you are advanced in years, No. 8 will give you full vigor and strength. If you are broken down, physically and morally from early indiscretion, the result of ignorance and folly, send your address and 10 cents in stamps for M. V. LUBON'S Treatise in Book Form on Diseases of Man. Sealed and secure from observation.

Address all communications to M. V. LUBON, 47 Wellington St. E., Toronto.

A Man without wisdom lives in a fool's paradise. CURES GUARANTEED. HEAL THE SICK.

A Permanent Cure. ✠ A Pleasant Cure.

Why You Feel

So weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As well expect the sanitary condition of a city to be perfect with defiled water and defective sewerage, as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest veins. Do you know that every drop of your two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a half minutes, and that, on its way, it makes bone and muscle, brain and nerve, and all other solids and fluids of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the Bible terms it.

"The Life of the Body."

Is it any wonder, then, that if the blood be not pure and perfect in its constituents, you suffer so many indescribable symptoms?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands "head and shoulders" above every other Alterative and Blood Medicine. As proof, read these reliable testimonies:

G. C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: For the past 25 years I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In my opinion, the best remedial agencies for the cure of all the diseases arising from impurities of the blood are contained in this medicine."

Eugene L. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: "As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It gives perfect satisfaction."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally efficacious in all forms of Scrofula, Boils, Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c.; and is, therefore, the very best

Spring and Family Medicine

in use. "It beats all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

does sell." Prepared by

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1, six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

IT PAYS!

— TO — Advertise E

— IN THE —

Flesherton

Advance.

Get Your

JOB PRINTING

— DONE AT THE —

Advance Office,

FLESHERTON.

Maxwell School Matters.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me a short space in the valuable columns of your spicy newspaper, though the article which I purpose writing may seem at first sight to public opinion as one of trivial importance, but to me it is one of inexpressible value, because I do not desire to have my reputation marred in the eyes of public by a long epistle, malicious in its purpose and I hope inefficacious in its consequence written by such a swagger as Mr. Long, whose expression is untrue and whose very sentiment malicious in the extreme. A long epistle I say because it is the confused annal of scholastic career for a period of over two years. In the first place Mr. Long has accused me of uttering disreputable statements about the Trustees; statements which I emphatically and can conscientially deny. He accuses me of calling the trustees a nest of rotten eggs, which I did not. But I said there was a little nest of eggs wanted to be broken up, when a bystander who overheard completed his hyperbolical expression by saying a years nest of rotten eggs. He also says I called them a nest of corruption but he being Trustee at the time, imagined in some of his erratic visions, such to be said and seizing his corruptible canopy well appropriated to his pericranium put it on and is still compelled to wear it as nature once destroyed is hard to rebuild.

He asserts that I took him to task about two years ago for paying too much salary to our teacher. I did but on what conditions. I said we might as well have a teacher who possessed the requisite qualifications of a second class when we were paying sufficient salary for one, a salary of four hundred and fifty dollars. My ideas now run in conformity with what they did two years ago, I see no partial conversion about that. But I am glad to see Mr. Long is getting the beam dragged out of his own eye, for a few years ago, he would have nothing but a professional second class. Did he not hire a nonprofessional? Yes he did and they even hired a third class for the last year. Although Mr. Long was not implicated in the hurry of the latter publicly he must have been privately for he seems to be the prominent spokesman Trustee or Ex-Trustee. He must be the leader of some mysterious clue or why since he is out of office not remain silent and allow the gentlemen who now constitute our school board maintain their own grounds and speak for themselves, men who Mr. Long knows are capable of doing so and will not be allured by the bait of dishonesty to do injustice to any one.

I have no complaint or grievance to make against Trustees, but I do not like to be buried under falsehood by a malicious man like Mr. Long.

Any man guilty of uttering such disreputable statements as Mr. Long credits me with, I would say deserves no commiseration from the public.

Excuse me for occupying so much of space in your paper. Trusting Mr. Long will make no more exaggerated statements and will confine himself a little to facts, I will defend myself against his extenuated insinuations by remaining silent.

JAMES BUCKINGHAM,
Maxwell, Ont.

Maxwell School Matters.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—Much has been said of late with regard to our school section matters. One thing I like about it. W. Long advise his friend to stick to the truth. Now if writing the truth will benefit J.B. why in the name of common sense don't he practice it himself. Thinking that your readers would come to a fairer conclusion from a third party. I will tell what I know about the affair. W. Long was the first to start the controversy, he wrote some (and said more) about J. B. a year ago (at a time too) when J. B. was sick and unable to defend himself which was an act of cowardice. '88 found him at his old trick; I fancy before I get through your readers will get an idea of the size of the man, if they fail to do so from your paper they have only to visit the post-office and see the way it is conducted. The last Teacher was discarded for doing his duty. He sent home one of the worst boys in the school, one of the Trustees' family, it shocked the ring as J.B. calls them. I would suggest united triplets in place of ring for if you step on the toes of one; the whole feels it. The Teacher's dismissal was agreed upon before the switch was grown which W. Long asserts was the cause. The version of the burning of the stick, &c., only shows the bringing up or rather the way those young men were dragged up.

Fearing to take more space in your valuable paper, I will send more in my next letter. A LOVER OF JUSTICE.

BABIES AND CHILDREN.—They are always catching cold in the head. Place a small particle of Nasal Balm in each nostril at night, also rub well over the bridge of the nose, and let us know how they are in the morning.

Orange County Lodge of South Grey.

The annual meeting of the Orange County Lodge of South grey was held in the Orange Hall, Durham, on Tuesday, Feb. 7th, when the following were elected officers for 1888:—

Bro. James Edge, W.C.M.
" Alexander Chilton, D.C.M.
" Alexander Bingham, C. Chap.
" James Brodie, C. Sec.
" W. A. Anderson, C. Treas.
" John H. Carson, C.D. of Cer.
" E. N. Brodie, C. Lecturer.

Bros. John Aldred and W. Stevenson, D.C. Lecturer.

It was decided to hold a semi-annual meeting in Mount Forest, on the 20th of June.

The annual meeting will be held in Durham on the first Tuesday in February, 1889. COM.

We had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Mr. Lanningan, the genial and hand-some C. P. R. station agent at Dundalk, on Saturday. He is a worthy successor to our old friend, Mr. Symington.

W. C. T. U. Department.

Temperance.

PROHIBITION TESTED BY ITS FRUITS.

One of the American papers has this to say concerning prohibition in Iowa, where, a few years ago the sale of intoxicants, as a beverage, was forbidden by statute:—

"The good fruits of the enforcement of the law are seen in the increased attendance at the public schools, the elevation of the public morals, better order on the streets, the great gain in the deposits in the saving's banks, the decrease of the various kinds of pauperism and crime, and the generally improved condition of the people. Forty-five of the county jails are empty, and in most of the others there is a steady lessening in the number of commitments. In this county, Polk, which has a population of 65,000, many of whom are miners, there were in the county jail before prohibition went into effect fifty prisoners on the average: now there are but fifteen. At the last session of our grand jury there were but four bills presented: formerly there were as many as sixty.

Winnipeg, Feb. 1st, 1888.

For The Advance.

Serving Christ.

II TIMOTHY iv., 5v.

Ye servants of Jesus arise,
And haste His commands to obey,
Be earnest and faithful and wise
And labour while yet it is day.

If the word of His grace you believe,
The life everlasting proclaim,
That lost ones may gladly receive
Salvation through Jesus's name.

The pleasures of earth count but loss
Unworthy your soul to detain,
Be dead to the world thro' the Cross,
Let sin not enslave you again.

Your heart, your hand, and your voice,
Your substance and time give to Him,
In labors unceasing rejoice,
Let not your "fine gold be once dim."

Redeemed at an infinite cost,
Constrained by a love so Divine,
Go! rescue the erring, and lost!
In mansions of glory to shine.

Flesherton, 1888. P. W.

THE NEW PAPER.

THE new Conservative Journal about to be started in Toronto, to be called

The Empire,

Will make its appearance on or about the 15th of December. No pains are being spared to make the paper worthy of Canada, and of the great party of whose views it will be the exponent. It will start with a

Staff of Brilliant Writers,

And able Journalists in every department. The public may expect

Full News from all quarters,
Able Editorials,
Accurate Reports,
Fair Comments,
Reliable Commercial News,
Interesting Sporting Intelligence.

And all other Departments well sustained. In short, THE EMPIRE will be a Bright, Readable and Reliable Paper.

Everybody Looks for it. All should Read it.

DAILY EMPIRE, $5 per Annum. | WEEKLY EMPIRE, $1 per Annum.

Send in your Subscriptions now, accompanied by the cash, so as to commence with the first issue. Address, D. CREIGHTON, Manager EMPIRE, Toronto.

County and District News.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

The majority of the February fairs held in this district were poorly attended by sellers.

There were 63 births, 27 marriages, and 15 deaths registered by the Division Registrar, of Mulmur, for 1887.

Somebody stole a hog, weighing 160 lbs. from Rundle's butcher shop, Dundalk, on Saturday night week. Another candidate for that famous penitentiary.

John Marshall, of Normanby, while hauling wood from the bush on Monday last had the misfortune to cut his foot very severely. The wound will lay him up for a week or so.—Grey Review.

The Dundalk Herald's devil has found the owner of the tagless dog. He feels quite disconsolate and has draped the editor's desk in mourning using the printing office towel for that purpose.

The Lindsay Block, Shelburne,—occupied by Skelton & Decatur, general merchants—was partially destroyed by fire on Thursday night week. Skelton & Decatur's loss was $14,000, in consequence of which that firm has been obliged to make an assignment.

A leap year couple ran away from their homes near Proton Station clandestinely and returned to their respective domiciles on the intervention of "her pa."—Dundalk Herald. If this had happened in Dundalk, people might have imagined that the genial and handsome editor of the Herald was the hero of the episode.

A big throng assembled at the roller rink, Saturday night to witness the race between John Wallace, running and Rud Matthews, on skates. The race was fairly and keenly contested and considerable money changed hands. Wallace won by about half a lap out of thirty.—Markdale Standard.

A halter was stolen from the front of Thedford's harness shop, Dundalk, Saturday night week, and pawned for a glass of whiskey. And yet the esteemed editor of the Herald continues to talk learnedly about civilization! When he was succeeded in reforming the barbarians around Dundalk, it will be quite time enough to give outsiders a few pointers.

A sad accident occurred on Friday last on the 8th concession of Bentinck by which Michael Weis, jr. lost his life. He was taking home a load of hay and within a few yards of the house the load upset. He saw the danger in which he was placed and undertook to jump from the upper side, but slipped and fell with his stomach across one of the upturned runners of the sleigh. The poor fellow was taken to the house, where he lingered in intense agony for about five hours, when death put an end to his pain. Deceased was about 22 years of age.—Hanover Post.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while [illegible] medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely [illegible] calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Bates, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. Tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored.

Throughout New England, next to Lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most [illegible].

Dyspepsia

and Chief [illegible] Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful for [illegible] cure."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health

Ayer's Pills,

PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists.

LOOK

HERE!

For the Next

30 Days

— AT —

GORDON'S

Harness Shop,

FLESHERTON,

Will be Given a

LARGE DISCOUNT

On all Cash Sales over One Dollar.

A Full Stock on Hand of

HARNESS,
WHIPS,
TRUNKS,
SWEAT PADS,
CURRY COMBS,
HORSE BLANKETS
HARNESS OIL,
BRUSHES, &c.

SCOTCH COLLARS A SPECIALTY

N.B.—All outstanding accounts must be settled within the next 30 Days. If not the books will be placed in other hands for collection.

STRIKERS VS. SCABS.

Maddened Miners of Shenandoah Attack Scabs and Police—Several People Severely Hurt—The Place a Perfect Pandemonium.

A last night's Shenandoah, Pa., despatch says: To-night was an eventful one in the history of the strike and probably seals its fate. Riot ran loose, and not in years has the town seen such a spectacle. All day the Shenandoah City and West Shenandoah collieries worked with a good force of men, and everywhere among the idle men, especially the Polanders, there were mutterings that foretold the coming storm to-night. It broke at 5 o'clock, when the miners at work started home. Some Polanders opened fire on them with stones, whereupon coal and iron policemen Moyer, Diebert, Shave and Krieger at once went to their aid. Moyer and Diebert caught one Polander and hustled him up the street. Almost as if by magic the region swarmed with men and boys and in a second the prisoner was free and the officers were being roughly handled. They got away and started back for the Shenandoah City Mine, followed by the crowd, now numbering over a thousand. The latter continued beating the workmen and boys as well, when the officers in a body again sprang to the rescue. It was a brave act, six men against a crowd of such proportions, but for five minutes it was successful. Then, as the officers were going off, Moyer and Diebert with one prisoner and Krieger and Shave with another, the crowd surged on them again. Krieger got away with his man, and finally landed him in 'Squire Shoemaker's office. Moyer and Diebert were not so fortunate. They were being beaten with clubs and were both down, when they drew their revolvers and both fired into the crowd, which scattered and ran in all directions. Mike Heffron, a young man, received a ball in the mouth and is badly injured. John Cather, an ironfounder, was shot in the arm, and a Polander was shot behind the ear. A third shot was fired by a Polander, but with what effect is not known. James Shields, a borough officer, then arrested both officers for shooting in the borough. They were taken before 'Squire Monaghan. While there a warrant was sworn out by a Polander, charging them with assault and battery with intent to kill. They pleaded guilty under the advice of Capt. Christian and were awaiting committal to Pottsville jail when things took another bad turn. The two magistrates' offices are on East Centre street, a square and a half apart. That whole space was densely packed with people, a large portion Polish, who were wild with passion. They surrounded both offices, yelling for the officers to "lynch them," "kill them," etc. Suddenly a stone was thrown at Shoemaker's window. It was the key-note for mad work. In a minute the fronts of both buildings were riddled with stones and the inmates had a scramble for safety. Some bruised bodies resulted, but no serious damage was done, except to the offices, which are wrecked. Monaghan and Officers Moyer, Diebert, Orme and Capt. Christian were in a small room separate from the front room. Through a window in its rear they got off safe. Still for a half hour the mob, thinking them still in, pelted the office. The town is in a perfect uproar—mad with passion and drink, and no one appears to have any power to quell them.

JEHIAL WOULD NOT HAVE A JONAH.

A Bridegroom Who Was Backward Has to Reflect in a Cell.

A Halifax despatch says: Jehial Duffy, a wealthy farmer of Moncton, has been arrested at the instance of Jennie Jonah, 17 years old, who has instituted a $10,000 suit for breach of promise against Duffy. The latter is old enough to be the girl's father, but they were to have been married on Dec. 24th last. As the bridegroom did not make his appearance at the appointed time a messenger was sent for him. Duffy sent back word that he would not go out that night, as it was too cold.

To his prospective father-in-law Duffy the next day said that he had objections to going outdoors when it was zero weather, but agreed to fix the date of the marriage for the following Tuesday. A large company assembled that day to witness the ceremony. Duffy appeared and just as the knot was about to be tied asked to go out to the door to get a little fresh air. He went and did not return. Now he is liable not only to have to pay the damages, but to be sentenced to spend two years in the Penitentiary for deceiving a girl under 18 years of age.

BOILING SNOW TO FIND JEWELS.

Diamonds Lost by Wedding Guests Found in a Bridgeport Gutter.

A Bridgeport, Conn., despatch says: In the crush last night at the Everest-Hubbard wedding, Miss Sarah Bartram, of Black Rock, made a misstep in alighting from her carriage, but was saved from a fall. Her diamond pin, containing five stones, was snapped off, however, and lost. A search with lanterns failed to discover the lost gems. Several thousand guests had alighted and re-entered their carriages at the same spot. The search was continued all night. This morning Mr. Charles Powell began searching in the gutter with his bare hands where the carriage wheels had ground the snow and ice to powder. The broken gold pin pricked his index finger, and a further search revealed two of the stones. By boiling the snow two more were recovered.

Mrs. Lucia Shepard lost one of her large diamond earrings in the same locality. A number of people have been employed to boil snow in front of Dr. Hubbard's residence until the lost jewels are found. Miss Bartram has offered a reward of $500 and Mrs. Shepard $100.

Fast Enough for Him.

"Did you ever go tobogganing, Mr. Winterwheat?" "No," said the old man "but I once stepped into the elevator we and fell down four stories in three-tenths of a second. That is fast enough for me I'm getting too old for much excitement."—Troy Times.

The German Government will take part officially in the Paris Exposition by sending exhibits to the fine art department.

It requires capital to start a newspaper; it will stop itself.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

FEB.—The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mr. French presented a Bill to amend the law respecting mortgages, explaining that it was intended not to change the law, but merely to declare its meaning in respect of the payment of interest on mortgages in certain cases. The Bill was read the first time.

Mr. Loes (Lanark) presented a Bill to amend the General Road Companies Act. The Bill was read the first time.

Mr. Garson presented a Bill respecting the examination of engineers and the inspection of boilers. The Bill was read the first time.

Mr. McKay presented a Bill for the prevention of accident by fire in hotels and other public buildings. The Bill was read the first time.

Mr. Waters presented a Bill to authorize unmarried women and widows to vote for members of the Legislature. The Bill was read the first time.

The following other public Bills were introduced and read the first time:

By Mr. Nairn—Respecting conditional sales of chattels.

By Mr. Waters—To amend the Municipal Act.

Also to amend the Assessment Act.

Also to amend the Ditches and Water Courses Act so as to make it applicable to waterways in the lands and under the road-beds of railway companies.

By Mr. French—To authorize the appointment of fire guardians for the prevention of bush fires.

Among the petitions presented were the following:

By Mr. Chancey—From the County Council of Kent, praying for the exemption of farm stock from assessment; also praying for legislation that will promote the making of roads.

By Mr. Stratton—From the Town Council of Peterboro, praying for the equal assessment of vacant and improved land in towns.

By Mr. Harcourt—From the County Council of Haldimand, praying for increased grants to High and Public Schools, also for the election by the people of sheriffs and other officers whose salaries are paid in whole or in part by fees, and for the appointment by County Councils of police magistrates and other officers who are paid by County Councils.

By Mr. Fell—From the Town Council of Lindsay, praying for amendments to the Frontage Tax Law, so as to make all property benefited by such works as sewers assessable in proportion to the benefit received.

By Hon. Mr. Ross—From the County Council of Huron, praying that Scott Act counties be relieved of two-thirds the cost of enforcement or have power to check expenditures by the License Commissioners.

By Mr. Stewart—From the County Council of Dufferin, praying for the exemption of farm stock from assessment.

By Mr. Ferguson—From the County Council of Kent, to authorize the assessment of lands benefited by works under the Ditches and Watercourses Act, for payment for the same.

The following Private Bills were read the first time:

To amend the Act incorporating Trinity Medical School—Mr. Widdifield.

Respecting the debenture debt of the village of Brussels—Mr. Gibson (Huron).

Hon. Mr. Mowat presented a Bill respecting the Department of Agriculture and other industries, which was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. Mowat presented a Bill respecting arbitrations with the Province of Quebec, which was read the first time.

THE FRENCH DECORATIONS.

Quite a Breeze in the Chamber Over the Wilson Scandal.

A Paris cable says: In the Chamber of Deputies M. Paul de Cassagnac asked leave to interpellate the Government in relation to the Legion of Honor decoration scandals.

M. Fallieres, Minister of Justice, expressed his willingness, and also agreed to an immediate debate on the interpellation.

M. de Launay, in a speech, declared that the chief culprit in the scandals had not yet been reached.

In the course of the debate M. de Cassagnac declared that justice had not been allowed to take its course, but had been paralyzed by political intervention. The Government, he said, ought to produce all the evidence in its possession.

M. Floquet, President of the Chamber, protested against the disclosure of judicial documents.

M. de Cassagnac called upon M. Floquet not to interfere in the debate.

M. Floquet advised M. de Cassagnac not to use a threatening tone, which, he said, frightened nobody. This advice occasioned applause.

M. de Cassagnac rejoined, "such language is only fit for a pot-house."

M. Floquet said that the Chamber would judge of the language of those calling themselves gentlemen.

M. de Cassagnac afterwards alluding to M. Floquet's cry in the presence of the Czar, "Vive Pologne,"

M. Floquet exclaimed: "Your patriotism is on a level with your politeness."

Continuing the debate, M. de Launay charged M. Fallieres with opposing the arrest of the guilty parties.

M. Fallieres justified the conduct of the Government. He declared that the attacks upon the Procurer-General were wanton calumny. The Procurer-General had never suppressed any document connected with the case. The object of the interpellation, he declared, was to exercise pressure upon the magistrates. He believed that whatever the decision of the examining judge in M. Wilson's case might be, it would be taken in accordance with the dictates of his conscience. (Applause.)

The order of the day was then adopted by a vote of 305 to 175.

H. H. Singleton, a blind man who lives near Toccoa, Ga., is able to tell the denomination of a banknote or check by feeling it, and can count money almost as rapidly as a bank clerk.

Mrs. Margaret Arnold of New Holland, O., who will be 111 years of age on the 4th of next July, is an inveterate smoker, having used the pipe since her girlhood.

The "Pilgrim's Progress" has been translated into the language of the Fantis, Upper Guinea.

REEFT BY MONSTER SHARKS.

The Terrible Experience of a Shipwrecked Crew—Graphic Story of the Two Survivors of the Twenty-eight Persons Aboard the Alfred Watts—Three of Their Companions Drowned Before Their Eyes—Thrilling Incident in the Loss of a Schooner.

(New York World.)

The loss of the Alfred Watts has been briefly alluded to, but the particulars of the wreck and of the awful struggle for life of the seamen who escaped immediate drowning were brought to this city yesterday by Capt. Young, of the Lizzie Perry. The Alfred Watts, of this port, a ship of 1,955 tons, sailed from Philadelphia for Hiogo, Japan, Oct. 11th last. The crew and passengers numbered 28. Everything went smoothly until the vessel reached the vicinity of the Bahamas. There a hurricane overtook the ill-fated ship. The vessel was thrown on her beam ends, and an overwhelming wave broke over the half-wrecked ship, and swept every man over the side into the boiling ocean. A portion of the forecastle was also carried into the sea, and to this piece of wreckage six of the men managed to attach themselves. It barely afforded them a hold. The ship had not sunk, but floated, a water-logged hulk, some distance to windward. While the storm lasted it was hopeless to make any effort to regain the vessel, and all through the weary hours of darkness the mariners hugged the piece of wreckage, and waited and prayed for dawn. Morning came at last. The sea calmed down, but the water-logged vessel, which the survivors desired to reach, was still at a distance that, without oars or sail, they could hardly expect to traverse. From the floating wreckage they gathered in a few pieces of woodwork, and with these rude oars toiled towards the hulk, where food and water at least might be found. But their progress was slow; the hot sun beat down upon their unprotected heads, and they knew too well that an enemy more cruel than the storm was beneath the surface of the ocean. The waters swarmed with sharks. Without water or food the hardy sailors bent their energies to propelling their unwieldy raft. For thirty-six hours they toiled. Then the mind of one of them, a fine young fellow, the son of the owner of the vessel, gave way under the hardships of the situation. He thought in his delirium that he saw land, and, turning to his comrades, he cried out, in glad tones, that he meant to walk to shore. He plunged into the water. For some distance he swam, probably in the direction of the mirage which his distraught fancy conjured up. Then, with a shriek, he suddenly sunk, evidently dragged down by a shark. The remaining men, horror-stricken by the scene, toiled on with the energy of desperation. When within 200 yards of the ship one of the men took the end of a line between his teeth and leaped into the sea. He had almost reached the vessel when his comrades, who were anxiously watching him, heard a piercing cry of horror and despair, and the swimmer threw up his arms and disappeared, another victim of the wolves of the ocean. The fearful fate of his two companions did not deter another sailor from attempting to get a line aboard the wreck. He, too, attempted to reach the ship by swimming and was dragged down by sharks when he had gone but a few yards. Then a wave, swelling over the raft, swept another man whom despair and privation had rendered too weak to maintain his hold. But two now remained. They were named Linn and Mangus. Night again overtook them, with only a few boards between them and the shark-infested waters. Their little craft, relieved from the weight of the four lost men, was easier to handle, and they toiled on under the starlight in the direction of the vessel. Another sunrise found them on board the water-logged ship. The decks were submerged, only a few feet of the bow being above water. Having reached this point the two survivors sunk, utterly exhausted, into a deep sleep. When they awoke they found that the rigging had parted during their unconsciousness; that most of the spars had gone overboard, and the ship was again on a level keel. The two wooden tanks under the head of the forecastle were full of fresh water, with which they refreshed themselves. They also found a box of codfish, and for eighteen days they lived on codfish and water. About this time the cargo, broken up by the working of the sea in the water-logged hull, began to float out of the hold, and the men were able to secure a diversity of food. On Nov. 20th, the British bark, Lizzie Perry, Capt. Young, rescued the two seamen from the hulk, and on Dec. 11th, the Lizzie Perry was wrecked at the Barbados, but all got safely ashore. The two rescued men sailed from Barbados in the brig Mary Bartlett, for Cienfuegos, and are now on their way to this city, having left Cienfuegos Jan. 9th. A noteworthy incident in this connection is that two sailors, who had learned the story of Linn and Magnus, went to England by the mail steamship and represented themselves as the survivors of the Alfred Watts. Before being detected in the deception they aroused much profitable sympathy.

The Unionists and Parliament.

A London cable says: Lord Hartington has issued a circular to the dissident members of the House of Commons, saying that important business will require their presence immediately upon the opening of Parliament. A Cabinet Council will be held on Friday for the purpose of moulding the statements to be made in the Speech from the Throne. The Ministerial circle is confident that the reference to the foreign situation will be optimistic in tone. The Speech will congratulate Parliament upon the improved condition of Ireland, upon the general revival in trade and upon the hopeful prospects for the national finances. A group of ultra-Radical members of Parliament is communicating with the Parnellite members with the object of concerting obstructive tactics during the coming session. A large contingent of Parnellites will join the group, refusing to adhere to the Gladstone-Parnell policy of non-obstruction.

Sympathizing friend (to widow whose husband was blown to pieces by nitroglycerine)—In what part of the oil country did your husband die, Mrs. Driller? Widow (sadly)—Poor John died pretty much all over it.—Life.

PRESENTS FOR THE POPE.

Over Twenty Million Dollars Sent from Catholics to the Head of their Church.

REMARKABLE TESTIMONIALS.

A correspondent at Rome has furnished an interesting description of the gifts to Pope Leo, on the occasion of his jubilee. He says the gifts have come in so rapidly that two additions have already been made to the building in which they are to be exposed. So far seven thousand cases of articles have been handled, and the end is not yet. Up to January 13th presents to the value of $10,000,000 have passed through the hands of the Vatican inspectors. Even that sum has been exceeded in money, the Spanish Catholics of South America sending in coin $800,000. Ireland has been likewise generous in that respect. Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, brought from his diocese $20,000 and the Bishop of Clonfert $4,000.

The United States has outstripped every other country in cash donations, the archdiocese of New York forwarding by itself $45,000. The exact sum of the whole monied gift cannot be ascertained, all the contributions not being yet in hand. This manner of testifying to Pope Leo the fealty of the Catholics of the United States was strongly recommended by the American bishops, who gave their attention to it principally, though many exquisite presents from their dioceses will be received. It has won the admiration of the Pope, who is more pleased with it than that of any other country, since it furnishes him with ready means to spread the Catholic Church through Europe and parts of the Far East, enterprises for which he has thrown his heartiest energies.

In proportion to the number of Catholics in the various countries, Belgium and Hungary have sent the most gifts. Everything used in the Catholic service is there in profusion.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION.

A remarkable production is in bronze from the College of the Propaganda, portraying human science in a seven-headed hydra as the enemy of religion combatted by the Catholic Church, emblemized in a lion stamping on the serpent with one fore paw and protecting with the other encyclical letters of Pope Leo. In the background are two figures—St. Thomas Aquinas, with finger pointed to the contest, and St. Francis Assisi on his knees praying.

Among the French gifts are a statue of the Virgin protecting an orphan, censers, rings, cruets, croziers and altar lamps, all of gold, and an ostensorium with twenty-four diamonds, each as large as a five cent piece, around the circular opening through which the host is exposed at benedictions; vestments, relic cases of gold, oil paintings of saints, and wax candles; a mat of peacock feathers, with a wing of every bird found in France; the skin of a horse, with the head attached, and a buffalo robe, having furried on it a large Papal coat of arms, as well as a large cathedral organ, rolls of lace, cases of vestments in one alone of which there were seventy chasubles, with cassocks, surplices, albs and copes to match; Sevres vases, woollen and worsted goods, Chinese silk banners and a case of gold articles. Again occur the innumerable assortments of every kind belonging to priest, bishop, cardinal, Pope and Church. Germany, a canopied altar, covered entirely save the main slab of stone on which the chalice rests, with tapestry scenes of the life of the Saviour, from His birth to His crucifixion. Immediately in front of it is a case that cannot be surpassed in design and massiveness by any other in the exposition. It contains seventy chalices, twenty-five ciboriums, five ostensoriums, six censers and seventy potens, all solid gold. On either side of this are two receptacles laden with similar golden articles. A model of the Strasburg clock has been donated by that diocese. Fine cloths, shelved in a glass frame, are the gifts of the Crown Prince of Germany. Snuff boxes, in number sixty, form an interesting collection. They are gorgeous things in silver and gold, the lids of many literally hidden beneath diamonds.

The Irish Catholics, besides their heavy money contributions, are represented by rolls of Irish lace, cases of vestments, golden altar vessels and ornaments in abundance and the finest exhibition of porcelain in the exposition. Patriotism and religion have been prettily blended by them in this portion of their offerings, as instanced in a beautiful oval mirror, framed in the ware and surmounted by the tiara and keys of Peter. At the base is the harp of Erin resting on a bed of shamrocks.

Many of the tributes from Ireland remain unpacked.

A GHASTLY EXHIBIT.

The most realistic exhibit in all the buildings is a wax cast of the face of a dead religieuse. It is in a box on a pedestal in an angle formed by two walls close to the main exit and is so located that a stream of light extends to it diagonally from a side window opposite. The parted lips showing the teeth, the ashy paleness overspreading the features and the half closed eyes, glassy, staring, are ghastly. A visitor wants to hurry past this gift.

Outside the gifts of the sovereigns of the world and Italian nobility the two greatest in the exposition are an altar costing $16,000 presented by the committees of the different countries in Europe represented in the management, and a cabinet containing from the slightest to the most important articles used by priest, bishop, cardinal or Pope in the exercise of his sacerdotal functions, and a full set of altar candelabra, every piece solid gold, elegantly chased, costing in all $16,000 likewise, and intended for service on the altar. The international offering is Gothic-Italian, of the thirteenth century, and contains relics from every Catholic diocese in existence, there being three thousand in the aggregate. Paintings of the Madonna and Child, Mary and the Sacred Heart, occupy the centre and sides above the tabernacle. By means of a secreted knob, which is pulled, the pictures drop from sight, as does also the altar front below the marble stone, and the relics in silver cases are seen.

In the Sheriff Court of Edinburgh, on the 17th ult., in connection with the sequestration of Paterson, Cameron & Co., S. S. C., it was stated that the deficiency on the estate was likely to amount to £50,000.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES IN ONTARIO

Provisions for the Protection of Insurers.

IMPORTANT REGULATIONS PROPOSED

Penalties for Doctored Reports and Evasions of Contract.

The Bill respecting friendly societies prepared by Mr. J. Howard Hunter, Inspector of Insurance, has been distributed to members of the Legislature. The following is a summary of its provisions:

All societies not being within the intent of the Ontario Insurance Act, 1887, which undertake for valuable consideration to enter into contracts of the nature of life, accident, casualty, disability, sickness or mortuary insurance or benefits come within its operation. Fraternal societies and secret societies are brought within the scope of the Act equally with all other associations undertaking insurance. But any society undertaking contracts of insurance or property real or personal for a gross sum exceeding $2,000, or any contract of endowment or tontine insurance or annuity upon life is deemed an insurance company under the Ontario Insurance Act, and may not be registered under the Bill.

Any joint stock society, or a society which belongs to any private proprietary, or which has less than fifty members in good standing, or is conducted as a trading or mercantile venture, or the funds of which are held other than as trust funds, are also held to come under the Ontario Insurance Act.

No society within the Bill shall be required or allowed to make any deposit with the Provincial Treasurer, and the Registrar's initial or renewal certificate of registration shall in no sense be held to vouch for the financial basis or condition of any society registered.

The Lieut.-Governor-in-Council may appoint the Inspector of Insurance or other persons to be Registrar of friendly societies.

Every friendly society undertaking contracts within the intent of the Act must make application for registry by June 30th after the Act takes effect, and shall file a statement of the society's Act of Incorporation, the rules governing the society's contracts, the last annual balance sheet and any other information the Registrar shall require.

If the society is found entitled to registry the registrar, by the 1st of September next, shall issue to the society the certificate of registration.

No society shall be registered under a name identical with that under which any other existing society is registered, and no registered society shall change its name without the consent of the Lieut.-Governor in Council.

Where the registrar is in doubt as to whether a society is entitled to registry, the question shall be determined by the Attorney-General, whose judgment shall be final, unless varied by Order in Council.

When any society is found entitled to registry the registrar shall issue an "initial certificate," and if not suspended this shall be valid until the ensuing 30th of June, when, if the society has filed the proper return, it will be granted a "renewal certificate," and so on for every succeeding 30th of June.

If it is established that a certificate of registry has been obtained by fraud or mistake, or that a society exists for an illegal purpose, or has ceased to exist, the registry may, by Order in Council, be suspended or cancelled.

There shall be published in the Ontario Gazette, in February and July of each year, a list of such societies as are in good standing under the Act.

After the 1st day of September, after the passing of the Act it shall be unlawful for any unregistered society subject to the provisions of the Act to carry on business.

A society whose registry has been suspended or cancelled shall cease to undertake contracts, but without prejudice to any liability actually incurred by the society.

The penalty for contravention by any society or any officer of any society subject to the Act will be $200.

Every society must have an annual audit by two auditors who shall not be officers of the society and shall furnish to each member a statement showing the result of the audit.

If it is established that the accounts of any society have been wilfully falsified or that for eighteen months there has been no audit, or if there is filed a requisition signed by 25 members of a society or claimants under contracts of the society, the Provincial Treasurer shall nominate a competent accountant, who shall make a special audit of the society's books and accounts.

Any director, officer or employee of a society who misrepresents its financial condition shall on conviction be imprisoned in the Central Prison or any common jail of the Province for a period not exceeding three months.

If the report of a special auditor shows fraudulent or illegal acts on the part of a society, the society shall be allowed two weeks to file a statement in reply, and both report and statement shall be laid before the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, who may continue, suspend or cancel the registry of the society.

A copy of the rules of a society shall be delivered to every person on demand on tender of 15 cents.

Every instrument of contract must show complete terms, and no term or condition not set forth shall be admitted in evidence to the prejudice of the beneficiary or of his representatives.

The liabilities of any member of a society under his contract shall at any date be limited to the assessments of which, at that date, notice has been given by the society.

By paying these assessments and giving notice of withdrawal he shall be released from all further liability under his contract.

The rules or by laws of an unregistered society not set forth in the instrument of contract shall not be valid in favor of the society unless they are held by the courts to be just and reasonable.

No forfeiture shall be incurred by any person insured by reason of default until at least thirty days after he has been notified of the amount he is owing, and instructed that his benefit will be forfeited if not paid within the time specified.

The conditions of forfeiture must be such as the courts hold to be just and reasonable.

Where the amount payable becomes a matter of dispute it shall be assumed that the beneficiary is entitled to the maximum amount stated in the contract and it shall lie on the society to prove the contrary and no stipulation as to the proceeds of fees, subscriptions or assessment, or as to the state of any fund, shall affect this understanding.

Every claim against a society shall become legally payable on the expiration of sixty days after the time mentioned in the contract for it to accrue, and if not paid within the next sixty days the society shall be liable to have its registry suspended.

The registrar shall have access to the books of any society, and may give a claimant an order to inspect where inspection may be necessary to establish his claim.

The Act to secure to wives and children the benefit of life insurance shall apply to all contracts made by societies registered under the Act.

There shall not be paid on the death of a child under 5 years of age any sum of money which, added to the amount payable by any other society, exceeds $30, or on the death of a child under 10 years of age more than $50, and all such payments shall be made to the parents of the child or the personal representative of the parent.

Every society, on the first day of January or within one month thereafter, must supply a statement of its financial condition and affairs, to be filed in the office of the registrar and must make prompt and explicit answers to inquiries or become liable to suspension or cancellation of registry.

Towards defraying the costs of the office of the registrar the following fees will be exacted: For initial certificate of registration, $5; for renewal certificate, $2; for renewal certificate after suspension of registry, $5.

Struck the Wrong Man.

Bunko Sharp—I can't be mistaken. Isn't this my father's old friend, Jeremiah Giddings, of Cooperstown?

Mr. Giddings—Yon an't Silas Guppy's boy Bill, are ye?

Bunko Sharp—Why, of course I am; don't you know me?

Mr. Giddings—I've kinder forgot your face, Bill, but I an't forgot that milk bill you owed me when you skipped taown. Three sixty and int'rest it wuz. Sholl out.—Judge.

Roses Pluck—But Not a Thorn.

What is life? It is a garden,
Where are weeds and fragrant flowers,
Briers, brambles, spreading shade trees
Glaring heat and cooling bowers.
One will find serenest pleasures
Where another will but mourn;
Life is truly what you make it—
Roses pluck—but not a thorn.

If you look for joy and gladness,
They will come at your command.
If you seek for woe and sorrow,
They will be on either hand.
Many a thorn, or blooming flower,
Will annoy you, or adorn;
Life is truly what you make it—
Roses pluck—but not a thorn.

Crabbed, cross, despondent, gloomy,
Heavy-hearted, you complain;
Joyous, cheery, gleesome, smiling,
You feel nought of grief or pain.
Glowing sunlight, midnight darkness,
Cheers, or leaves you sad and lorn;
Life is truly what you make it—
Roses pluck—but not a thorn.

Whatsoe'er you choose to gather,
Care or comfort, peace or strife,
Such will be the good or evil
You will scatter through your life.
Seek to find the good and pleasant,
Of the slightest evil scorn;
Life is truly what you make it—
Roses pluck—but not a thorn.

Together.

We two in the fever and fervor and glow
Of life's high tide have rejoiced together,
We have looked out over the glittering snow,
And knew that we were dwelling in summer weather.
For the seasons are made by the heart, I hold,
And not by outdoor heat or cold.

We two in the shadows of pain and woe,
Have journeyed together in dim dark places,
Where black-robed sorrow walked to and fro,
And fear and trouble with phantom faces
Peered out upon us and froze our blood,
Though June's fair roses were all in bud.

We two have measured all depths, all heights,
We have battled in tears, we have sunned in laughter,
We have known all sorrows and all delights—
They never could keep us apart hereafter.
Wherever your spirit was sent I know
I would defy earth—or heaven—to go

If they took my soul into paradise
And told me I must be content without you,
I would weary them so with my lonesome cries,
And the ceaseless questions I asked about you—
They would open the gates and set me free,
Or else they would find you and bring you to me.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

CANADIAN CUSTOMS DECISIONS.

How the Taxes on Various Articles are Collected.

The following decisions have been made by the Dominion Board of Customs at Ottawa during the month of January: Artotype, 20 per cent.; Alhambra colored cotton quilts, 25; bagatelle balls, 35; billiard balls, papier mache, 35; billiard balls bone or ivory, 30; billiard balls, celluloid, 20; counterpanes or quilts with woven colored border, 25; carpenters' tool baskets, 10 cents each and 30 per cent.; composition buttons, 25; cocoanut pudding preparation, a mixture of cocoanut, rice, tapioca, etc., 8 cents per pound; cuticura resolvent in dry powder, 25; coppered iron or steel wire, 15 gauge or coarser, 30; copper sheets or plates half inch thick, free; corn flour not capable of being used as starch without further change, 20; the Dental Journal, an illustrated advertising periodical, 6 cents per pound and 20 per cent.; earthenware door knobs, 35; electric light apparatus, such as lamps, carbons, etc., that cannot be used for any other purpose, 25; fire brick for gas work furnaces, free; fruit tree seedling, grafted, are to be rated according to their kind under tariff items 473 to 479; gluten flour and special diabetic food, 20; hats or caps, linen or cotton, 35; harness for cotton looms, manufactures of twine, 25; homœopathic alcohol, $1.75 per proof gallon; homœopathic tinctures, $2 per Imperial gallon and 30 per cent.; Lessive Phœnix washing preparation, 3c per lb.; lap dusters of cotton, woven colored border, but not embriodered, 25; lap dusters, linen, plain, 25; patterns of iron and brass, 30; plant bed muslin, low grade unbleached cotton, 1 cent per square yard and 15 per cent.; raw hide pickers for cotton looms, 20; sapolio, 3 cents per lb.; sugar discs and globules, 1½ cents per pound and 35 per cent; sugar of milk, 20; sugar of milk tablets, 20; Sappota gum, 20; steel discs for harrow, 35; travellers' official guide, 6 cents per pound and 20 per cent.; wheat meal as wheat flour, 50 cents per barrel; waggon and cart bushes, 35; watch keys, steel or brass, 30; Yuggy's anatomical study, 6 cents per pound and 20 per cent.

Husbands as Nuisances.

Sometimes the effect of marriage is to transform a male exquisite into a sloven, especially if the cares of poverty and an increasing family rest upon his shoulders; or it may be that he is by nature slovenly and easily relapses into that ideal destroying condition when the vanities of youth cease to act as a spur. Husbands of this kind commonly let their beards grow, neglect to polish the heels of their boots, and develop an irritating tendency to affect rubbers in all weathers. Their hats, if not actually shabby, are usually antiquated and their trousers being worn too short invariably bag most ugly at the knees They wear long overcoats, and either carry no umbrellas (caring nothing for their dingy old clothes) or umbrellas of prodigious circumference, of cheap material, and warranted to turn inside out every time the wind happens to catch them right.

These men, if living out of town, are almost sure to hatch a fondness for poultry and to spend their Saturday afternoons and Sunday mornings pottering about henroops and watching the strut of their favorite roosters. They care nothing for society, not much for the opera or the play, and are alarmingly prone to fall asleep over their newspapers in the evening. They usually prefer a pipe to a cigar, and they are mighty consumers of beer. Even to such base uses may the married man descend.—Herald of Health.

—He—"Max O'Rell says that wealth is a destroyer of wit, but Max must be wrong." She—"Why so?" He—"Your father is worth a million, isn't he? Did you ever know anybody not to laugh at his jokes?"

—Judge—"What is your name?" Witness—"Matilda Flanders." Judge—Where do you live?" Witness—"See here, jedge, I ain't here to be insulted. I had that air masher run in for axin' me that wery same question."—Chicago Tribune.

—The man with a magic lantern cannot be expected to hold your opinion. He may have other views of his own.

HER FIRST MARKETING.

Extraordinary Experience of an Aesthetic Housekeeper.

She was a graduate of Girton College, England, and when she married Julius Augustus Smythe was very much like another young lady who has been embalmed in song:

Miss Pallas Andora Von Blarky,
Who didn't know chicken from turkey,
High Spanish and Greek she could fluently speak,
But her knowledge of poultry was murky.

However, she told Julius Augustus that she was a good housekeeper because her mother and grandmother were, and it ran in the family. So, on the strength of this, he went into housekeeping. She bought a sweet little morocco-covered note book, and carried a gold pencil, wore an æsthetic morning costume and appeared like a vision of delight before the magnates of the cleaver at the Central Market.

"Oh, the dear, sweet, cunning little pigs," she exclaimed, stopping at an aldermanic stand where several little roasters were on exhibition. "I'll take a couple of those. How much are they a pair?"

"A sovereign for two," was the realistic answer.

"Isn't that rather high? I guess I'll take a yard of beefsteak instead, and some—Oh, yes—some sweetbreads. Julius said he wanted some; nice fresh ones, please, with plenty of raisins in them."

Then she stepped over to the poultry stall.

"Have you any chickens?" she asked of the woman in attendance.

"Heaps of them," was the reply.

"How much do they cost a heap?" she asked in a rather faint voice.

"Two shillings apiece mem."

"Well, send up a piece to my residence," and she turned to the next stall and picked up some little packages that looked very nice. "What is this sweet stuff that smells so lovely?" she asked of a red-headed boy behind the table.

"Limburger, Miss, and it's just splendid; tastes ever so much better than it smells—have one?"

She took one, and then asked the boy where they sold their quail on toast.

"Ain't any in the market," answered the young reprobate. "Mother's gone after a load, though, and we'll send you some as soon as they're in."

"What are these lovely navy-blue berries?" she inquired. "They will just match my china. You may send me a bushel."

Finally she decided to try a quart, which she carried herself in the artistic basket.

"Have you any hen fruit?" she asked sweetly of an old fellow in a white apron.

He scratched his ear with a pencil for a moment. "Mebbe you mean eggs," he volunteered.

These she also took charge of, as she wanted to make an omelet for Julius Augustus.

But she never did; or rather when she got home the omelet was made within a liberal admixture of blackberries, and the front of her æsthetic dress was ruined. Added to this was an odor which sent Julius into spasms and frightened the cat to death. The Limburger had melted.

The Girton girl did justice to the high Spanish and Greek in the explanation that followed, and the next day they burned the morocco notebook and went to boarding.—London News.

Commerce of the Congo.

The fact that fifteen or twenty-five steamers a month are now arriving at the mouth of the Congo illustrates the growth of commerce in that region since Stanley showed the importance of the great river. One ocean steamer has already ascended the river to Boma, fifty miles from the sea, and the best channels are being marked by buoys, so that deep draught vessels may safely navigate the lower river. Little hotels for the entertainment of travellers have been built at Banana and Boma. One reason why the whites on the lower river enjoy far better health than formerly is said to be because they have discarded canned meats, and now raise their own beef. Cattle thrive finely at Boma, and it takes a steer every three days to feed the whites who are now living at that station.—New York Sun.

Calling for the Doctor.

A physician in extensive practice was lately asked: "What proportion should you say of those people who send a servant flying to your office with 'Come right away!' or make the telephone jingle with 'Come as quick as you can' are suffering chiefly from fear and imagination?" The learned medicine man replied: "Well, I might safely put it at two-thirds. When I arrive the mere announcement that it is nothing serious allays the fear. While I am writing the prescription and chatting pleasantly on some other topic the last stage of convalescence has been nearly reached, and when I say, in an assuring tone, 'Take this and you will be all right in the morning,' the case is settled."

Intuition, Not Conscience.

"Did you never think," asked the chaplain, "did there never come to you a conviction, in your sinful life of robbery, that you were doing wrong?" "Often there did, boss," replied the burglar—half-pay, retired—"many a time it has flashed on me that I was in the nursery, where the first flash of the bull's eye would waken half a dozen howling kids, when I ought to be in the old man's bed-room a-skinin' his trousers and goin' through the wardrobe and bureau drawers regular. Oh, yes, I've often felt as I was doin' wrong. But"—apologetically—"that was when I was a green hand at the business, don't you know."—Burdette.

A Legal Technicality.

A French provincial lawyer recently died. In his will he directed that an annuity of $400 a year be paid to the servant who should "close his eyes." When this clause was read the servant who performed this office jumped with joy; but his delight was speedily dampened by the nephew and heir of the dead man, who reminded the servant that his master had only one eye. And the servant actually failed to get his legacy on this absurd technicality.—N.Y. Times.

—Some days ago Mr. P. C. Morden, of Rockview, Beverly, whilst in his bush preparing wood, froze both feet so seriously that the doctor says he will have to remain indoors for a couple of months.

LOVE AND DIPLOMACY.

Why Chamberlain Lingers After His Mission Has Failed.

When Joseph Chamberlain first came to Washington it was thought his social campaign would amount to more than his diplomatic mission. The fisheries negotiations have practically failed, but the Britisher's admiration for the daughter of a Cabinet officer is one of the current rumors. Mr. Chamberlain appears to be "having a very good time," and is not in any hurry to close the negotiations. He is either the guest or the host at a dinner nearly every night. Theatre parties are frequently given in his honor, and at the balls he is among the most active dancers. His attentions to the young woman referred to have been so marked as to cause comment. The rumor is of course denied by her friends, but there is a certain amount of basis for it. Mr. Chamberlain has been twice left a widower. Although about 50 years of age, he does not look more than 30, and shows the enthusiasm of a boy without sacrifice of dignity. When he came to the United States his attention to the many pretty young women he met were impartial. He for a time made his compliments to them all in such a way that no one could flatter herself that she monopolized his admiration. Of late, however, he has not been so impartial, and this has given rise to the latest story. The young woman, whose friends deny there is anything in it, is a brunette, tall and stately, and noted for her simplicity in matters of dress. She is good looking, but by no means the handsomest girl in official life at the capital. The best blood of New England courses in her veins, and she has all the Boston culture without its affectation.—Chicago Tribune.

A Very Natural Mistake.

Herr Klimper is a very stout man weighing upwards of 200lbs. He is a professor of music, and gives lessons on the piano. He is also somewhat of an inebriate. He recently moved into rooms in the fifth story of a Harlem apartment house. He celebrated his moving into new quarters by getting drunk. He came home about 12 o'clock, and the fact that it took him three-quarters of an hour to ascend the stairs to his rooms proves that he must have been having a very nice time of it with his boon companions.

Next morning two old ladies living on the floor below conversed about the new tenant.

"Have you seen the new tenant, Herr Klimper?"

"No, I've not seen him, but it is very inconsiderate in him to have his piano brought up into his room at 12 o'clock at night, disturbing the boarders. It must be an awful big piano by the trouble they had with it."—Texas Siftings.

The Canal in the Ear.

They had had several lessons on the ear and had been so thoroughly drilled on the names and uses of all its parts that when some visitors dropped in the teacher was glad it happened to be the hour for this class to recite. After asking several questions and receiving prompt and correct answers, she said: What is the name of the canal in the ear?"

The children hesitated a moment, and then one of them spoke up, loud and plain: The E-rie canal."

A Linguistic Blizzard.

Of all the beastly, outrageous, disgusting, unnatural, degenerate, deformed, ill-gotten, misconceived, unlawful, illegitimate, diabolical, hypochondriacal, incongruous, erratical, nonsensical, heterogenous, heteroclitical, dough-headed, brain-spavined, idiotic, snidish, incomprehensible conglomeration of typographical bulls ever perpetrated upon an innocent and unoffending public the indescribable mass appearing in the Boise City Republican of a recent date takes the cake.—Malad Idaho Enterprise

Never Waver.

American papers feebly opine that the late blizzards in the Western States came from Manitoba. Says one:

"If Britannia rules the waves, why does she not, in the name of humanity, keep the Manitoba article on her own territory?"

Britannia waives all claim to have anything to do with such waves as have been troubling Dakota.—Ottawa Journal.

Oh, So Sorry.

We sympathize with the people of Minnesota and Dakota; we are sincerely sorry for them in their grievous losses, but if some of them feel lively enough, after what has happened, to try to saddle their blizzard on Manitoba's shoulders, we feel quite equal to the task of summarily removing it and placing it where it belongs.—Manitoba Free Press.

Nothing to Bother About.

Miss Clara (to Featherly, who is making an evening call)—Poor little Bobby swallowed a penny to-day, and we've all been so much worried about it.

Featherly (somewhat at a loss for words of encouragement)—Oh, I—er—wouldn't worry, Miss Clara; a penny is not much.

Precaution Against Blizzards.

"Mamma" said a little Dakota boy, as he came into the parlor, "where is papa?"

"He is crawling up the chimney, dear, to see what kind of a day it is."—Epoch.

A DILEMMA.

'Tis winter, my daughter, the coal's going fast—
I really can't tell where it goes to;
The period for trifling, it seems to me's past—
You could marry next week if you chose to.
And this is leap year, dear, and youth cannot last,
An offer make one of your beaux to.
"Oh, pa! I've so many," the maid cried aghast,
"I cannot tell which to propose to."

—Boston Courier.

—Annie Rahl, the 13-year-old incendiary who burnt down Mr. Levi Shantz's barn in Woolwich, has been sentenced to one year in the Mercer Reformatory.

—A man in Brantford township gets his living by trapping skunks. During the season of 1886-87 he caught 208 skunks, for the skins of which he receives from 50 cents to $1.50.

—Miss Elation—Congratulate me, Marie, Mr. B—— has just asked me to be his wife, and I have assented. Miss Acidity—Poor girl; he asked me the same question last evening and I gave him a decided negative.

DIVINES DISAGREE.

A Discussion Not Decided by Prayer—Intolerance of Opinion.

The following is an extract from a late New York Tribune editorial: "There is, perhaps, no mental vice so common as intolerance of opinion. Even such as think they have emancipated themselves from the clinging defect find it hard to acknowledge frankly to themselves that the opinion of some one else upon a matter they have studied may very well be as deserving of respect as their own, if it differs radically from their own. If we could all get rid of this 'last infirmity,' not only of 'noble minds,' but of nearly all human minds, how much less friction there would be in life, how much less bitterness and heartburning and envy and all uncharitableness."

In an adjoining column of the same paper was found the following peculiar commentary on the editorial:

"The bitterness of the controversy in the American Board over the question of probation after death was very great. This rather shocked the simple-minded and earnest foreign missionaries who attended the sessions of the Board, one of whom said he had always thought such questions were decided by prayer. But if the debate was not altogether Christian in spirit, it was strictly parliamentary. The brethren didn't forget to put a copy of Cushing's Manual in their valise along with their Bible, and apparently some of them consulted it oftener than the Bible."

Is it a fact that there is but little toleration in this country, and less than in others?

"Comparisons are odorous," said Mrs. Malaprop. Perhaps we have been claiming too much for this free nation.

We must admit that in the professions there is yet much of the old time prejudice against new ideas. Preachers preach the old doctrines and doctors prescribe the old medicines. Bitter controversies arise when anything new is proposed.

But the march of progress is not stayed. Men are travelling heavenward under new creeds and being cured by new medicines.

Much the same state of facts seems to exist in other countries.

When Dr. Robson, a leading physician of London, formerly of the Royal Navy, proclaimed that Warner's safe cure was a specific in kidney derangements, the hidebound school to which he belonged threatened to debar him from practice, if he did not recant. But he replied that his statement was based on such evidence that he could not recant.

Since then, Dr. Wilson, F. R. S. E., Editor of "Health," a recognized English authority, announces in his magazine that "Warner's safe cure is of a perfectly safe character and perfectly reliable." Many English physicians are now prescribing it.

The "schools" in this country still bar all proprietary medicines. But Dr. Gunn, Dean of a New York Medical College, long since published "Warner's safe cure is a very valuable remedy;" and he says he knows that many physicians prescribe it, though not by name.

Good things in creed or practice are not to be cried down by the old fogies simply because they are new. The spirit of toleration thrives on opposition.

The Common Lot.

There is a place no love can reach,
There is a tune no voice can teach,
There is a chain no power can break,
There is a sleep no sound can wake.

Sooner or later that time will arrive, that place will wait for your coming, that chain must bind you in helpless death, that sleep must fall on your senses. But thousands go every year untimely to their fate, and thousands more lengthen out their days by heedful, timely care. For the failing strength, the weakening organs, the wasting blood, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a wonderful restorative and a prolonger of strength and life. It purifies the blood and invigorates the system, thereby fortifying it against disease. Of druggists.

No Use to Him.

Book Agent (to one of the "several times" a millionaire lumber "Barons" of Michigan)—Let me show you, sir, the "New American Encyclopædia"—

Lumber—No; never mind. I am very busy to-day.

Agent—But it will surely require little time to examine—

Lumber—No, no; I tell you I am very busy! And if I weren't I couldn't ride one of the infernal things any way.

Great Little Men.

Some of the greatest men that ever lived were of small stature and insignificant appearance. The reader will readily recall many instances. Very small are Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, but they are far more effective than the huge, old-fashioned pills which are so difficult to swallow and so harsh in their action. The "Pellets" are gentle and never cause constipation. For liver, stomach and bowel derangements they have no equal.

Following History.

Mr. Moxey is giving a masquerade party, and is found by Mrs. Moxey in the wine-cellar during the height of the festivities.

Mrs. Moxey—Nathan, this is abominable! Nice looking Charles the First you are! Aren't you?

Mr. Moxey—S-sh! Thish rep'sents way he looked after the executionsh!

Do Not Forget It.

It is a fact that NERVILINE cannot be surpassed by any combination for the relief of pain. The reason is a good one. Nerviline contains the best, most powerful and the latest discovered remedies. It is a magic pain cure. Rheumatism, stiff neck, cramps, neuralgia, colic, in fact all pain, internal, external and local, are subdued in a few minutes. Go at once to any drug store and get a trial bottle. It will cost you 10 cents, and you can at a small cost test the great pain cure, Polson's Nerviline. Large bottles only 25 cents.

The Cumbrae Collegiate building and Cathedral of Argyle and the Isles have, it is said, been finally closed, and their connection with the Episcopal Church in Scotland has now ceased.

Australia now exports oranges to England.

—It is as dangerous to interfere between a philanthropist and his philanthropy as between a dog and its bone.

Famous Women.

It is a significant fact that most of the women who have achieved fame in art, literature, or "affairs," have enjoyed vigorous health. This shows that the mind is never capable of the severe and continued application necessary to creative work, unless the body is at its best. The woman who aspires to fill an exalted place among her associates must be free from nervous debility and female weaknesses. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will banish these, and it is warranted to restore those functional harmonies which are indispensable to health. As a specific for all those chronic weaknesses and ailments peculiar to women it is unequaled.

A Definition.

Clara (who is charming)—Charley, dear, what is an agnostic?

Charley (who is clever)—He is a fellow who pretends he can know nothing and thinks he knows it all.

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets

The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hawking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HARVEY, the famous mesmerist, of Plymouth, N. H., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable. I was, I must die. My case was such a bad one that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my cough was terrible. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2002 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runnels P. O., Columbus Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty.

Merchants. Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S.

DCNL. 7 88.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES, FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

FARM for SALE

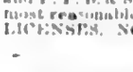
BEING Lot 6, Con. 7, Osprey, half mile from Maxwell, 100 acres, 60 acres cleared, well watered, and under good state of cultivation. Well fenced. Large frame barn and stable, frame house. For further particulars apply to JOSEPH RADLEY, 179 Spadina Avenue, Toronto.

x45-3m.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



DENTISTRY.
Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,
Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.
HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, L.L.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office, Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

Business Cards.

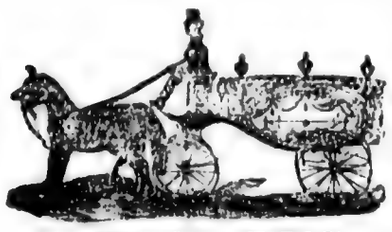
John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
AT LOWEST CURRENT RATES,
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
☞Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.



J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.
FLESHERTON ONT.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

The Landlady of the Temperance Hotel Makes her Debut.

On Thursday afternoon last, Mrs. Robinson, of the Temperance Hotel, Flesherton Station, appeared before Squires Armstrong and Richardson in the Division Court Clerk's office here, to answer to a couple of charges preferred against her by License Inspector Campbell.

The first charge was for keeping liquor on the premises contrary to law. The License Inspector being duly sworn, testified that he had found liquor on the premises. A brown jug, containing one gallon of whiskey, was found in the landlady's bedroom. Jug produced. Their worships sniffed at the opening, after the cork had been withdrawn, then touched their respective tongues to the bottom of the cork itself. It was whiskey. Mrs. Robinson frankly admitted the correctness of their surmises herself, but said she got it for the sole use of her family. She had always kept a little drop around the house, but only for medicine. Was not aware that this was contrary to law, until now, when the certainty of a heavy fine made her painfully cognizant of the fact. She did not keep whiskey for sale. Declined to be sworn, but made a statement, which was committed to writing. Said she got the whiskey on the very day the Inspector visited her. Got it in a liquor store, but declined to say whose or where. Fined $20 and costs.

Charge number two: selling liquor without a license. Dates specified, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 3rd and 4th. J. H. Campaigne, blacksmith, Flesherton Station, being sworn, testified that he was in the bar-room of the Temperance Hotel on Friday. Was there on business with his cousin, Sam Campaigne. Drank nothing whatever. Did not drink cider. Did not bring a bottle of anything away with him. Was in the same hotel Saturday evening. Sam Campaigne and my blacksmith were there also. I treated. Did not drink cider. Did not ask for anything in particular; merely asked for something to drink. It was stronger than water. Enough of it might make a man intoxicated. Do not know whether it was whiskey or not. Positively could not say whether it was whiskey, but it was certainly stronger than water—that's enough, now! Did not pay for the drinks. Offered to pay, but it was not accepted. One of the others treated but that was all the treating there was done. Did not see any money paid. Miss Robinson attended bar. Did not see the landlady. Only stayed a short time, but could not say how long or when I came in or when I went away—that's enough now! [Witness seemed considerably irritated by the sharp cross questioning, and frequently exclaimed "that's enough now!"]

The case was postponed until this afternoon, in order to procure additional evidence. Particulars next week.

FLESHERTON STATION.

Interesting Items Collected for The Advance.

By an Occasional Correspondent.

Mr. McGinnis, the new hotel-keeper here, is becoming quite a popular host.

A Literary Society was formed here recently, and on Tuesday evening of last week the members thereof indulged in an exciting and interesting debate. Subject: Which would be the most beneficial to the early settler, the ox or the horse?

Mr. Purdy, post-master here, is able to move around again.

The Durham stage-driver has put in an appearance here every day this winter, notwithstanding inclement weather.

Campaigne has rented his blacksmith shop to G. McKelvanie.

P. Harrington is the new night operator in the C. P. R. office here.

W. A. Parker was visiting friends in Priceville a few days last week.

Miss Sarah Hogg has been visiting friends at Eugenia.

Mrs. J. Phillips—formerly of the Station and now of Bolton—has been very ill but is now recovering.

W. J. Wadsworth and family removed to Toronto last Thursday.

Donald McPherson has returned from Michigan.

The landlady of the temperance hotel here has got into trouble with License Inspector Campbell, who had her before the magistrates last Thursday on two charges of (1) keeping liquor on her premises and (2) selling the same contrary to law. Fined $20 and costs on the first charge; hearing of second postponed one week.

ANTI-TOBACCO LEAGUE.

Contributed for The Advance by The Fighting Editor.

Anti-Tobacco League nuthin! That is what I say. What's the Herald's spar kickin' at anyway? Seems to hev a hobby fur startin' up a lot of societies, sich as wild injun redmen etcetery, to keep track of which is enough to knock the cogs of a fellow's brains out of gear. Humph! strikes me I'll hev to git another club and load it with dynamite, so's that every time I strike anybody there'll be an explosion, likewise a funeral—and I'll provide the corpse. Its fairly aggerwatin'. Here the spring's comin' on, too, and I'll be awfully busy with them sky-larkin' tom tooters of Spring Poets. Why in thunder can't the Herald bottle up his old Anti-Tobacco Leaguers for a few months and give me and the boss a show. They'll keep.

The other day—Friday I think it wuz in comes the boss (I mean the Editor) with a lot of letters and papers. In course he reads the letters first. He read two or three of 'em, and then picked up one that didn't 'pear to hev anything in it but the envelope. "Hallo!" says he, "what's this?" A little slip of printed matter dropped out. He took it up and read as follows:—

"He who doth not smoke hath either known no great griefs or refuseth himself the softest consolation, next to that which comes from heaven."—Bulwer-Lytton.

"Here, bub," says he, addressin' me (he's blamed familiar with me, that's a fact) "you can just count me out of that League. Write what you like for THE ADVANCE next week, but you must express your own sentiments, my boy." As if I'd bother my head with other people's foolishness. I've quite enough to do to attend to my own, thank you.

But this Anti-Tobacco League is a great racket and no mistake. Our devil says he'll raise the mischefs own racket if he should ever chance to run up against the man that wrote that piece in the Herald about him. The day the article was read to him, he fired a lot of type into the Gehenna box and swore he would have revenge if he had to pawn every hair on his head. I told him he'd better size up his man first—that's the way I always do. Once a man called me a cussed blue shark of a liar in a somewhat unfriendly manner, and put a stick on his shoulder and dared me to knock it off or be called "cowardly custard." He was about 70 lbs. heavier than me, so I just turned on my heel and treated him with silent contempt. Next day a little chap, who looked like a walking stick, said I was a prevaricator. The undertaker and tombstone man got a job, "in course." Always size your man up.

But dropping Spring Poets and coming back to this tobacco business, I am of the opinion that a great deal could be said on both sides. There's the man that would like to smoke but can't he is a Leaguer. There's the man that never smoked—he's a Leaguer. Ther's the man whose better half is such in reality—he's a Leaguer and no mistake about it; if he weren't, he might as well have the bell tolled for his funeral right away. There's the youth that's courtin a nice young lady over the way, who strongly objects to smoking—he's a Leaguer. There's the man to whom smoking is positively injurious—he's a Leaguer. Then there's the man to whom smoking has always been a pleasant and harmless pastime, but who, in a moment of enthusiasm or impulse, gives it up—he's a Leaguer—never!

Ahem! P'raps now I have said enough about Anti-Tobacco Leaguers. Nevertheless I could say much more, and if I can only get a quiet evening to myself before the crop of Spring Poets are ripe, I'll let people know a thing or two about this tobacco business that'll knock 'em cold with surprise. I will and no mistake.

G·R·I·P
CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.
J. W. BENGOUGH, Artist and Editor.
ISSUED WEEKLY.
$2 a Year; $1 for 6 Months.

GRIP is increasing in influence and popularity every year! It is a supreme household favorite, while every Politician and Professional and Business Man enjoys the clever hits which appear in every issue. Subscribe now!

See our Premium and Clubbing List. Circulars giving full particulars sent free.

☞Look out for Grip's Comic Almanac for 1888. Price 10 cents.

ADDRESS,
GRIP PUBLISHING CO.
TORONTO, ONT.

CLIMO & CO.

Are preparing to open out a New Stock of Goods in Wm. Wright's Store.

Everybody will be Welcomed.

BOOTS & SHOES!

—I have a Full Supply of all Lines of—

WINTER GOODS!

RUBBERS, OVERSHOES, FELT BOOTS AND FELT STOCKINGS SELLING CHEAP.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!
—THE WELL-KNOWN—
SPEIGHT WAGON!
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual
First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKERS' EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S, - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,
Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.
Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT
is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS
Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 348. FLESHERTON, ONT., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1888. A. R. FAWCETT, PROPRIETOR.

1st

Clearing ❋ Sale!

$1,100

In Fine Goods to select from. Must be reduced to $1,000 if possible by March 1st. The sale will be "genuine" and carried out on the following basis: One-Fifth of all grades Watches and Clocks, ⅓ of Silverware, Hollow and Flat, ⅓ of Chains, Jewelery, Pins, Buttons, Spex and Rings, 18 k., plain excepted. Unchanged prices in plain figures. If you ever intend investing in any of above mentioned goods, this opportunity to get them near cost, at cost and below cost is the best ever given in this section. No foolish blowing. Adjectives very small. By calling you will find prices so low as to lead you to buy. TERMS CASH. Warrants as usual, signed W. A. Brown. My watch work gives satisfaction.

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN.

Markdale, Ont.

REMOVED.

Booth the Boss Barber, has removed to one of the shops in Wm. Strain's block near Wm. Davidson's boot and shoe shop, Toronto street, where he will be happy to see the smiling faces of his old customers and as many new ones. Have concluded to give me a chance to maintain my reputation as the Boss Barber not only of Flesherton, but of the entire district for twenty miles around.

The patronage of the ladies respectfully solicited.

Feb 17th, 1888. WALTER BOOTH.

W. W. TRIMBLE

FOR

First Class

ROLLER FLOUR.

No. 1 Stone Flour,

OATMEAL,
ROLLED OATS,
GRAHAM FLOUR,
CRACKED WHEAT,

Shorts, Chop and Bran.

POTATOES, APPLES, ETC.

OYSTERS FOR SALE.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Flesherton, Dec, 1st, 1887.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Local Notices intended to benefit any individual, Society or Corporation, charged at the rate of 10 cents per line each insertion. No local inserted for less than 25 cents. Special rates to regular advertisers.

Mr. Jos. Dinwoody, of Stayner, is home on a visit.

Miss B. Hurd, of Thornbury, is visiting friends in Flesherton.

Mr. W. A. Brown, jeweller of Markdale, was in Flesherton last Thursday.

W. & J. Anderson, of Orange Valley, Artemesia, have a number of good Cows and a fine Mare for sale.

A gentleman was in Flesherton last week endeavoring to get a water-power for the purpose of establishing an oatmeal mill. We have not heard whether he succeeded or not.

Dr. Sproule, M. P. for East Grey, was in Flesherton last Thursday. Dominion parliament commences business to-day, and the Doctor left for Ottawa early in the week.

The second case against Mrs. Robinson of the Flesherton Station temperance hotel will come up for hearing this afternoon in Squire Armstrong's office, having been again postponed.

A new bekery has been started in Flesherton, under the proprietorship and management of Mr. James Kester. He has secured the services of an experienced Baker and solicits public patronage. See bills for particulars.

A meeting of the ratepayers of School Section No. 5 (Flesherton) will be held in the schoolhouse on Saturday next (25th inst.) at 3 o'clock p. m. sharp, to submit statement of Building Account and take into consideration the issue of additional debentures.

Mr. W. A. Milburne, late carriage manufacturer here, purposes embarking in the cheese factory business at Desboro the coming spring. We wish him all manner of success, and can assure the farmers around Desboro, that in Mr. Milburn they will find a straightforward, wide-awake and honest business man, as well as an excellent citizen.

The following question and answer, which we clip from the Montreal Witness of the 8th inst., will probably be an eye-opener for some of the legal luminaries around here, who severely criticised an answer given by us to a similar question.

"F. R., Newton Brook, Ont.—Q. A draws a note payable to the order of B. B sells the note to a party unknown. Will A have to trace the note, or will it have to be presented for payment? Ans. Neither. A may pay the note at the place at which it was made payable.

The Missionary services in the Methodist church here Sunday evening last were of an unusually interesting character. The pulpit was filled by one of the bright and shining lights of Canadian Methodism, in the person of the venerable Rev. Dr. Griffin, of Guelph. A large congregation assembled to hear this gifted preacher, and although the sermon lasted over an hour and a quarter, the Dr's powerful and, at times, thrilling exposition of Gospel truths maintained an unbated interest throughout; rather, should we say, the interest increased as the words of life and light flowed in gracefully rounded periods from the lips of the speaker. The text was Psalms 67th, 18th, "Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive: thou hast received gifts for men; yea for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them." At the close, a special collection was taken up and subscriptions in aid of the missionary fund solicited. We might add, that the services of the evening were prefaced by a few earnest and practical words by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Shilton, B. A., who also read brief extracts from the Missionary Report.

Miss Alice Leitch has gone to Toronto, where she will remain until the opening of the Millinery season.

The sad news was recently received here from England of the death of a brother of Messrs M. and W. Richardson of this place.

Mrs. Jas. Hales, of Quebec city, is visiting friends in Flesherton and neighborhood. Her husband is an employee in the historical old citadel and a brother of Mr. John Hales of this town.

Those owing THE ADVANCE office for entertainment bills, &c., are respectfully asked to remit the several amounts to us this week. We do not wish to transfer such accounts to the ledger.

Mr. Wm. Paton, the well known and enterprising Proton farmer, has purchased a splendid imported Clydesdale stallion from Mr. Richard Leech the celebrated Minto importer of thorough-bred stock. Mr. Paton deserves credit for this great stroke of enterprise.

It is a good rule to accept only such medicines as are known to be worthy of confidence. It has been the experience of thousands that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best medicine ever used for throat and lung diseases.

Mr. J. W. Henderson the popular Inspector of the N. of S. M. Co., Toronto, was in town last week.

Messrs. Barnhouse, Gordon and Blair represented Fountain Council, R. T., at the Grand Lodge meeting held in Toronto last week.

Mr. Wm. Wright of this place has been seriously ill for some time back. We hope soon to see him restored to his accustomed good health.

Mr. J. W. Bates and Mr. S. Dennison attended the Grand Lodge meeting of the A. O. U. W., held in Hamilton last week, as representatives of Flesherton lodge.

Auction sale of farm stock and implements at Lots 146, 147, 1st West T. & S. R., Artemesia—adjoining Flesherton—on Monday, March 5th, cattle fair day, commencing at one o'clock p. m. Without reserve as owner has quit farming. See bills for particulars. Ward Harrison, proprietor; A. S. VanDusen, auctioneer.

Everybody needs a spring medicine, by using Ayer's Sarsaparilla the blood is thoroughly cleansed and invigorated, the appetite stimulated, and the system prepared to resist the diseases peculiar to the summer months. Ask for Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take no other.

Rev. Mr. Biggins, of Markdale, exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Shilton, on Sunday morning last, and preached a sermon here which will not soon be forgotten. The text was Gal. 6c., 14v., "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." We sincerely regret that our space is so much taken up with other matter this week. Otherwise it would have given us unbounded pleasure to have presented an outline of the sermon for the benefit of those who did not hear Rev. Mr. Biggins singularly beautiful and practical discourse upon that never tiresome theme, "The story of the cross." It bristled with brilliant gems of thought, wrapped in charming poetic imagery; but through all and above all shone the old old story of the cross, which can never die of age, and whose brightness and purity have not been dimmed by the lapse of centuries.

A PERSON unable to sleep in bed, unable to work, unable to take ordinary exercise from the effects of Asthma, until using Southern Asthma Cure. A sample package relieved, three packages permanently cured.

STOCK TAKING SALE!

Great Sweeping Reductions

AT

J. RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON.

We have decided to go out of the Fancy Goods business and for the future handle only

Fine Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex &c.,

—— SO WE WILL SELL FOR THE ——

NEXT SIXTY DAYS

our whole stock of Berlin and Zephor Wools at 8c. per oz., worth 12½; Filoselle 5c. a knot worth 10c.; Arras to at 10c. now worth 15c.; Chenille at 8c. yard worth 15c. Fancy Plush Goods &c. all below cost as we are bound to clear them out. Macrame Cord all colors at 10c. ball or 3 for 25c. We will also clear out our entire line of PIPES at away below cost. Your choice of 1 Lot of Pipes worth from 50 to 85c. for 25c.; your choice of Pipes worth 30 to 50c. for 20c.; your choice of Pipes worth 20 to 30c for 10c. A lot of PURSES ranging in price from 35 to 85c. your choice for 25c. We have also decided to clear out our stock of Brooches, Earrings, Cuff-Buttons. Your choice of 1 lot of fine Brooches valued from 25 to 40c. at 15c.; your choice of another lot valued from 40 to 60c. at 25c.; another lot valued from 60c. to $1.00 at 50c. Earrings and Cuff-Buttons at the same terrific Reductions.

Come along and get First Choice as they will go like Hot Cakes

As to our all Fine Gold, Warrant Keyless Watches and Jewelry we will allow 20 Per Cent. off prices charged elsewhere in this section.

The dealer who tells the people so often about his honesty, &c., must have come to the conclusion that they are very suspicious of him or he would not need to advertise his ——.

—— IF YOU WANT A GOOD ARTICLE AT A LOW PRICE ALWAYS GO TO ——

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELERY STORE, FLESHERTON.

EXTRAORDINARY STORY OF THE SEA

Terrible Cruelties Alleged to Have Taken Place on Board a Canadian Vessel—Five Seamen Maltreated to Death and Then Thrown to the Sharks.

A Philadelphia despatch says: The Record has the following account of the voyage of the ship Macedon from Philadelphia to Hiogo, in which it is shown by the finding of a court of inquiry that the crew were subjected to the most cruel treatment. The Macedon left this port on May 19th, 1887, in command of J. W. Jones, master, and after a voyage of 218 days, reached her destination on December 22nd, with her crew reduced in number by death and disease, and the survivors half dazed from the brutal treatment to which they had been subjected at the hands of the ship's officers. The crew were all shipped at Philadelphia. Five unfortunates succumbed to their tortures and were thrown overboard to be devoured by a school of sharks that followed in the wake of the ship. The list of the dead included Alvin Chapel and Angelo Bianchi. On the arrival of the Macedon at Hiogo, out of a total surviving complement of seventeen persons on board thirteen were suffering from scurvy, only the master, mate, cook and steward having been exempted from the symptoms of that dreaded disease.

Charges of gross tyranny were formulated at Hiogo against Clarence N. Cox, the mate, and C. F. Beveridge, the boatswain, and a naval court, with James Troup, British Consul, as President, was organized to investigate the complaints which had been entered by the surviving members of the crew. Of the five men who died at sea, the evidence showed that Edward Grant's death occurred on September 25th, 1887, of scurvy, after having been the victim of a wanton act of cruelty on the part of the mate. Eight days before his death Grant was tied up to the mast by Cox, and was kept at work until the morning of the day before he died. John Miller was lost overboard on October 1st, and the master allowed the man to sink without making any effort to rescue him. On November 19th, while suffering from scurvy, James Armstrong was sent aloft on the mizzen-mast by the boatswain to scrape the mast—a task that was not of an urgent nature. While performing this duty Armstrong fell to the deck and died of his injuries. Alvin Chapel and Angelo Bianchi died of scurvy, the former on December 13th and the latter six days after. For Bianchi was reserved the most shocking acts of cruelty, he having been dragged along the deck on several occasions by Cox and Beveridge while in a dying condition. The outbreak of scurvy was shown to be due to a gross violation of the English statutes requiring the use of lemon juice, and to a deficiency in the quantity of other anti-scorbutics in the food supplied for so long a voyage.

The mate and boatswain were held to answer before the British Consul at Japan for their gross ill-usage of three of the dead men, Grant, Bianchi and Armstrong. In the treatment of the survivors of the crew by Cox and Beveridge the court found nothing to justify a charge of gross tyranny, though the accused men "had been on occasions unjustifiably harsh." The master and his officers were all reprimanded for cruel treatment, and were required to pay the statutory fines for failing to serve out the anti-scorbutics regularly, and for non-entry in the official log of the ship's crew. During the voyage one of the steward's feet was bitten off by a shark when the ship was thrown on her beam ends by a sudden squall.

A St. John, N. B., despatch says: The brutality on board the St. John ship Macedon, as telegraphed from Philadelphia, is believed here to be exaggerated. Wm. Shannon & Co., the owners, say it cannot be true. Capt. Jones belongs to Digby, N. S., and is a brother of the member of the Dominion Commons from that county. He bears an excellent character. In a letter to the owners, Captain Jones says that although the officers were sick they had to go aloft with the crew who were able to move along in order to work the ship into port. It was a case of life or death for the whole ship's crew, and every man able to help at all had to lend a hand. The first mate, and it is believed the captain, have been detained at Hiogo as witnesses. The ship has sailed for Hoilo.

FATAL BLOW UP.

Explosion of Two Tons of Powder—Four Men Instantly Killed—Several Buildings Destroyed—Other Two Workmen Blown to Atoms.

A Wilkesbarre, Pa., despatch says: A violent explosion occurred at Dupont's powder works at Wap Wallopen, in which four men were instantly killed and several injured, but none of them fatally. The new Methodist church at Wap Wallopen, which was dedicated last week and stood 300 feet from the scene of the explosion, was completely wrecked. There was about two tons of powder in the building when the explosion occurred. Kishbough, one of the men who was killed, had recently lost his wife and leaves six children. Rassan leaves a wife and five children. The other two men were single. There is no trace of the packing-house left—not even the foundation remains. Rocks weighing ten pounds and more were blown to the top of the mountain, a quarter of a mile away. Dupont's loss and the loss on some thirty other buildings cannot be estimated at present. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

Big Clothing House Fails.

A Montreal despatch says: The large wholesale house of Wm. Ewan & Co. has just suspended payment with liabilities of about $100,000. The firm was until about ten years ago under the name of Muir, Ewan & Co., when Muir retired from the business. He went into the coal trade in which he has been engaged ever since. Ewan has continued the clothing business along with his son.

Many of the marine underwriters in San Francisco have given up the British barque Glenavon as lost. She was last spoken October 28th, off the Falkland Islands.

Reports from Tiffin, Sandusky and Put-in-Bay, Ohio, say an earthquake shock startled the inhabitants shortly before 10 o'clock yesterday morning. No damage done.

NO BUTTONS IN THEIRS.

The Strange Eccentricities of a New Religious Sect.

REMARKABLE CONDUCT OF A PREACHER.

A Goshen, Ind., despatch says: An eccentric religious people known as the Amish sect are attracting much attention here. Just now the most conspicuous personage in this remarkable company is John Kaufman, their new preacher, who suddenly graduated the other day from a farm hand to a full-fledged minister of the Amish gospel. One day while at work he fell in a swoon, and when he recovered he announced that the Holy Ghost had taken full and complete possession of him, and he refused to work any more, but has since been giving his whole time to preaching.

Every Saturday afternoon an odd procession of these peculiar people march through the streets of Goshen. It is made up of men dressed in somber black with broad-brimmed hats and long, untrimmed hair and beards, and women in quaint old Dutch caps. Their settlement is just outside the town of Goshen, and they are a plain, economical and apparently perfectly sincere people. They put every cent they can save into land, which they are steadily improving. They have foresworn the use of buttons and hence are called the "hooks and eyes."

Kaufman, who is spoken of above, was reared in the faith, and from earliest infancy his mind seems to have been a jumble of texts and scriptural stories. They live in simple style, yet so far as their table affords they enjoy the fat of the land. They have no social relations with any outsiders, and their sentiments on this subject were well illustrated when one of the girls, who had been "working out" at a neighboring family, was taken by her employer to a writing school. She took the first prize. When her father was informed that his daughter had thus been permitted to indulge in the frivolities of the world he was greatly grieved. He advised seriously with the brethren, all of whom prayed over the wayward girl, and finally forgave her on the destruction of the trophy, with the assurance that she should never have another opportunity to commit so appalling a crime.

Elder Miller says that the sect was founded by Jacob Amen, a Swiss, who lived in the sixteenth century. In principle they are Mennonites, the denomination founded by Menno Simonis, which rejects infant baptism, refuses to take oaths and declines military service. But the Amish sect separated from the Mennonites on the question of buttons. They found no authority for the use of buttons, and so adopted hooks and eyes.

At a meeting of the sect held in the cottage parlor of one of their number, Kaufman, the new minister of Amish faith, gave an exhibition of his supposed spiritual power. He sat a few moments silently on a stool in the centre of a group. Suddenly he rose to his feet with a shrill cry, waved his arms, shrieked a jumble of German phrases and swung his arms about like a windmill. After a time he spoke in English and more calmly. After talking for three hours he threw up both arms, exclaiming, "Father, I give thee back thy spirit," and fell upon the floor. Four elders gathered him up and carried him to bed.

HEROIC MRS. AMMON.

The Cleveland Woman Who Wouldn't Tell Her Secret still in Jail.

A Cleveland, O., despatch says: Probate Judge Tilden, who has been in office for thirty years, has stepped down and out and his successor duly installed. This change of judges is of special importance to Mrs. Josephine Ammon, who has been a prisoner in the County Jail for over a month. Mrs. Ammon is a wealthy lady living on Euclid avenue, and because she would not disclose the whereabouts of a young girl named Josie Blann, who is heir to part of an estate worth about $100,000, she was placed in jail. The guardian of the girl, it is alleged, wants the mental condition of his ward passed upon, he claiming that she is not capable of taking care of her property. Mrs. Ammon is not related to the girl, but takes a charitable interest in her, and is bound to see that she has fair play. Proceedings were begun about January 1st to bring matters to a crisis, but the girl could not be found, having hied herself away to await a more convenient time. Mrs. Ammon refused to tell where she was, and consequently was placed in jail until such time as she made up her mind to reveal her secret. Mrs. Ammon claimed that Judge Tilden was prejudiced against the girl, and said she would remain in jail until his term expired. The new Judge says Josie Blann must be produced in order that he may decide the matter at issue. There the case rests at present, but it is expected that a crisis will be reached shortly. Mrs. Ammon furnished her cell in the jail to suit her own taste, and seems to think that she has made a heroine of herself. She believes in woman's rights, and is a strong advocate of female suffrage.

An Antediluvian Relic.

An Ottawa telegram says: The fossil remains of a harp seal (Phoca Greenlandica) have been unearthed in a clay pit at Hull. Whilst digging in a clay basin 25 feet from the surface, a quantity of bones were struck, which at first were thought to be human. When they were examined by an anatomist, however, it was readily seen that they were those of a harp seal, thousands of which are killed annually on the shores of Greenland. Although the bones must have lain where they were found thousands of years, they were yet well preserved, having become petrified. The clay in which these remains were found belongs to the "Leda Clay" formation, and are of marine origin. In the museum of the Geological Survey there is a skeleton of a specimen found by Sir William Logan at Montreal. This new find is the most perfect found in the Ottawa Valley. Sir James Grant years ago got a specimen which had been discovered at Green's Creek.

The best judges of live beef cattle do not always know the quality of meat by either appearance or touch. Not one of the carcass awards at the recent Chicago fat stock show went to an animal that took a prize when alive.

A DREAD DISCOVERY.

A Lover Finds His Betrothed Cold in Death—A Rival Arrested for the Crime.

A last (Wednesday) night's Lacrosse, Wis., despatch says: Anna Daniels was to have been married this week to a young man who lives a few miles south of this city. When her lover came to see her last Thursday morning he found the door of her room locked. He went into the street and saw that a light was burning dimly in the girl's apartment. The young man then re-entered the house and forced open the door. Lying upon the floor near the threshold was his sweetheart. Her long hair was upon her shoulders and breast, and her arms were outstretched She was only partially dressed. Beside the body were four tallow candles. A tiny flame burned in the centre of each, and the space between the carpet and the fire was scarcely the thickness of a lozenger. Kerosene oil had been sprinkled over the carpet and upon the clothes of the dead girl. In half an hour the candle flames would have eaten to the oil and burned the body. The policemen could find no marks of violence on the body of the girl, nor were there signs of suffering in her face. Albert Kennett, a beardless youth, had been seen in her company for ten days or more. They were out riding together on Sunday, January 29th. On Monday Kennett told the colored janitress she need not clean Anna's room as Anna was going away to remain several weeks. Kennett was seen going to the girl's rooms many times after that, but the last time Anna was seen was Sunday afternoon, when she went out riding. Last Wednesday night Kennett left on the 6 o'clock train for Cincinnati. At the post mortem examination it was discovered that the girl had been killed by chloroform and that Kennett had made frequent purchases of this drug at the drug store on the plea that the drug was for his father. One theory advanced is that the boy, becoming jealous of his rival, deliberately killed the girl as she lay asleep in bed and then sought to remove all evidence of his crime by means of fire. The alleged murderer was captured and brought to this city yesterday.

MAJOR TEMPLAR ARRESTED

Because He Divulged Secrets Regarding Balloon Construction

A London cablegram says: Major Templar, of the 7th Rifles, and one of the chiefs of the balloon department of the army, who was arrested at Chatham on Saturday for divulging army secrets, will shortly be tried by court martial. The offence of the major consisted in his imparting to a member of a Birmingham firm secrets upon which rested the success of the military ballooning system, the most important of which was the method of inflating and the manner of transporting gas for that purpose. The gas receptacles, whose peculiarities of construction Templar explained to the Birmingham man, consist of steel cubes of complicated make, which are filled with gas and carried upon waggons or otherwise during a march, and may be attached to a balloon and discharged within a surprisingly brief space of time. Major Templar accompanied Commoner Powell when the latter was drowned in the English Channel from the balloon Saracen four years ago. The balloon landed near a high cliff, and had its occupants kept their seat in the car all would have been saved. Templar and another of the party of three lost their heads and jumped out. The balloon, relieved of their weight, rose and Powell was carried out to sea and drowned. The affair, which created a tremendous sensation at the time, is recalled by Templar's arrest. Major Templar was in command of the balloon party in the Soudan campaign. The Birmingham manufacturers to whom Major Templar divulged the information constructed a similar apparatus from the plans furnished and sold it to the Italian Government for use in the expedition against King John of Abyssinia, and the excellence of the balloon service at Massowah, which received universal compliment, was due to the Birmingham firm immediately and to Major Templar primarily.

SHE BEAT THE WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Died at the Age of 40, After Having Been Married Seven Times.

A Reading, Pa., despatch says: Rev. T. N. Reber to-day officiated at the funeral of Mrs. John Gruber, aged 40 years, who died at Macmigle flats. The burial took place at Salisbury Church, and a large crowd attended from the fact that the woman in her short life had been married to seven different husbands. She was the daughter of the late Daniel Heimbach and very good looking. At the age of 16 she married an old man, and they soon separated. The second marriage was equally unsuccessful. The next four marriages were happy, but the husbands died. The seventh marriage was with John Gruber, thirty years older than herself, but this proved also happy. They had one son, who survives. With her last husband she lived nine years. At the church to day many persons were referred to St. Luke xx. 29-36, concerning the seven brothers who married the same wife. Deceased was a highly respectable woman, and through her varied matrimonial experiences always preserved a good reputation. She died of consumption, and was sick but a short time.

Bill Arp on the Rod.

There is a power of original sin and acquired cussedness in some boys and nothing but corporal punishment will bring it out. It is like measles; if it strikes in and stays there the boy is ruined. Better bring it to the surface by a little gentle irritation of the cuticle, and thereby save the boy's life. As a general rule, parents are perfectly willing for other people's children to be whipped. You never hear a schoolboy say that the teacher did wrong in whipping some other boy. Teachers and preachers are the preservers of the public morals. It takes both to keep the world out of jail, and I am on their side always and everywhere. —Atlanta Constitution.

The ambition to have a swell funeral and the boss monument of the country actuated Mrs. Ramsdell, of Rochester, N.Y., to make a will devoting her entire estate of $120,000 to these uses. She did manage to save out a carpet and a stove for a daughter and $500 for a grandson.

THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE.

TORONTO,—The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Cruess asked whether it is the intention of the Government to place in the estimates of the present session a sum of money to purchase grass seed for distribution, or otherwise, for the purpose of seeding the burned lands in the northern townships.

Hon. A. M. Ross said representations had been made to the Government last summer that immediate relief would be necessary to prevent great suffering. An officer of the Crown Lands Department had been sent to examine into the facts and report. The report showed that there would not be any immediate suffering inquiring Government relief. It had been represented that great benefit would arise to the people if the Government would furnish seed for seeding down the burned lands, on the assumption that it might prevent the spread of fires. But those experienced in such matters were not of that opinion. Therefore no action in the direction suggested was taken. The Government was informed that application of a similar character was made to some of the Councils of the district, but the response was not favorable.

Mr. Wood (Hastings) moved that a select committee be appointed to consider and report as to the efficiency of existing legislation for the formation and carrying on of the operations of companies for the manufacture of cheese and butter. And also to consider and report upon the best means to be adopted to secure the delivery by the patrons of such companies of pure and unadulterated milk. Said committee to be composed as follows: Messrs. Awrey, Ballantyne, Drury, Bishop, Clancy, Dryden, Fell, Graham, Hammell, Miller, Blezard, Waters, McKay, Lees and the mover. He said he had intended to introduce a Bill for the further protection of cheese and butter factories, but he had received letters proposing so many amendments to the Bill that he had decided to place the matter in the form of a motion. In 1887 there were in Ontario 800 cheese factories with 43 000 patrons, and 270,000 cows, yielding 650,000,000 pounds of milk, which was made into 66,500,000 pounds of cheese, bringing in the market $7,000,000. Great Britain imported in 1883 8,000,000 pounds of butter from Canada, but from other countries she imported 253,000,000 pounds of butter. Canada, however, supplied Great Britain with 60,000,000 pounds of cheese as against 143,000,000 pounds of cheese sent from all other countries. He attributed these results to the high quality of Canadian cheese, as compared with the cheese of other countries, and to the fact that Canadian butter had not reached the same high standard. He regretted to learn that the practice of adulterating milk was increasing all over the country. But owing to difficulties connected with incorporation, these factory associations had great difficulty in prosecuting those who adulterated milk.

Hon. A. M. Ross said that the House would agree with Mr. Wood as to the importance of this subject. The Government would cheerfully accede to the motion.

Mr. Ballantyne said he had been connected with this industry since its introduction, both in manufacturing and dealing, and might be supposed to know something about cheese manufacturing. Milk, as was well known, was the most sensitive article known, and it was necessary that all possible should be done to secure a supply of pure, unadulterated milk. It was true, as was said, that the product had improved, but simultaneously with this improvement had arisen worse than carelessness on the part of those supplying the milk. To meet this and secure good milk, the association with which he was connected, the Western Dairyman's Association, had adopted a special system. Dividing their territory into districts, they had appointed inspectors, the best men whose services were available, to visit the factories, and not only give instruction to the cheesemaker, but also to make suggestions as to the buildings and implements and to inspect the milk brought in, using the best instruments procurable to test it in every way. Mr. Robinson, Professor of Agriculture, was a sort of court of appeal in these matters. The Western Dairymen's Association was the first, so far as he knew, to adopt this system. The result had been eminently satisfactory, securing for the factories a better class of milk than ever before. He agreed heartily with what had been said as to dairying being the most important branch of farming in the present day, and Ontario was specially adapted for it. Nothing would do more to improve the position of the farmer than to promote this great industry. He cordially supported the resolution. (Loud cheers)

The motion was carried.

Mr. Waters, moving the Bill to amend the Ditches and Watercourses Act, explained that the measure was intended to make applicable to railway lands and the roadbed of railways the provisions of the Ditches and Watercourses Act. At present there was machinery for putting public drains through these lands, but not those drains constructed under the Ditches and Watercourses Act. The interests of the farmers were most important, and there was nothing more necessary to the farm than good under drainage and surface drainage. But, with railways running through every part of the Province, the lands could not be properly drained unless the means were given of making drains through their lands and under their tracks. The measure he proposed, he contended, was on the whole just, though he desired a full discussion and the amendment of such features as might be found undesirable. If Ontario was to maintain her proud position as an exporting Province, anything which would interfere with the proper drainage of the land should be avoided. It might be said that the Province had not the necessary authority over these roads. But let the Legislature assume that it had that power and act upon it. Certainly it had the power to tax them. And if the measure were disallowed it was one that would be worth contending for. Let them appeal against the veto if it were vetoed. The farmers of this Province would not be content to remain much longer in the position of being prevented by these railways from draining contiguous lands.

Hon. Mr. Hardy said this was an important matter and one to which the hon. member had given much attention. There were difficulties in the way of carrying out the measure. It might be that railway companies and railway engineers had taken an exaggerated view of these difficulties. However, they not only pointed out that there would be great expense, but contended that there was danger of causing such injuries to the roads as would lead to serious disasters. The Commissioner of Crown Lands, who was Chairman of the Railway Committee, was influenced in his views by these representations. But the mover of the Bill had given great attention to the subject and pointed out how these questions were met in various States of the Union. He (Mr. Hardy) thought it would be well to have the Bill go to the Municipal Committee, where railway engineers and others interested might be heard and any suggestions made for amendments in the Bill.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Ballantyne, rising to a question of privilege, called attention to the report made by a morning paper of his remarks on the motion of the member for Hastings (Mr. Wood) regarding the cheese and butter industry. He (Mr. Ballantyne) was represented as saying that at the factory in a German settlement 70 per cent. of the milk sent in was found to be adulterated. He did not mention nor did he refer to a German settlement. In the district he referred to he doubted that there was a single German contributing milk to the factory. He had the management of two factories in a German district and he believed there was no place in the world where purer milk was supplied.

Mr. Creighton and Mr. French then introduced Mr. Whitney, the newly-elected member for Dundas, who took his seat amidst the cheers of his friends.

The following private Bills were presented and read the first time.

Respecting the incorporation of the village of East Toronto—Mr. Smith.

To enable the Orphans' Home in Ottawa to borrow money—Mr. Bronson.

To consolidate the debenture debt and extend the limits of the village of London West—Mr. Tooley.

Mr. Ingram presented a Bill to amend the Act respecting the payment of witnesses for the Crown, which was read the first time.

Mr. Gibson (Huron) presented a Bill respecting the payment of grist millers for grinding, which was read the first time.

The House adjourned at 3.50 o'clock.

Excuses Given by Singers.

Do I think there are many such fraudulent excuses? Yes, lots of them. What is more, many a minor performer bears the brunt of a hitch or failure to shield the leading performers. It is an old saying that a bad workman blames his tools. It is a good deal that way with singers and musical performers. I remember a case in point when the great Nilsson was the real culprit. She sang here just before the great fire in a concert of which I was the director. A flutist had to play an obligato accompaniment to an aria which Nilsson was to sing. With characteristic egotism she refused to attend the rehearsal. At the performance she sang in an entirely different key to that which the flutist had practiced. There could be but one result, and that a failure. Nilsson threw down her book in a fret at the feet of the terrified flutist, who was pulled over the coals and roundly condemned by the audience. Poor fellow, he was not to blame; it was Nilsson's fault. A few days later she was to take part in the production of "The Messiah." I told Max Strakosch, the impresario, that I should insist on Nilsson's presence at the rehearsal or not be responsible for a break in the performance. In this case she came like a lady, and everything went off smoothly. It requires a good deal of tact to get along with such people. Some prime donne are the embodiment of gentleness and courtesy so long as you stroke them the right way. When you stroke them the wrong way the fire flies.—Chicago Times.

A Psychological Puzzle.

There are very many things in nature which nobody's philosophy has dreamed of yet. We are very far from a solution of all the riddles that turn up now and then to puzzle us. What is the secret bond between twins which makes one suffer from the pain the other feels, however distant? That this is some degree is true there are numerous instances. Here is one from Tiffin, O.:

"Charles Foncannon, aged 25, got his arm in a planer at the churn factory, and it was ground to pulp to the elbow. At the exact time this happened, 2.45 p. m., his twin sister, living over a mile away, suddenly cried out in great agony, saying that there was a fearful pain in her arm. She suffered so in a few minutes that a physician was sent for, and soon after he arrived three other physicians arrived, bringing her brother, whose arm they proceeded to amputate at once. When his sister had first been taken with the pain she had cried out, 'Oh, Charley is hurt!'

"While the arm of her brother was being amputated the sister, who was kept in another part of the house and did not know what was going on, suffered terribly and screamed with agony. It was necessary to give her an injection of morphine in the arm to quiet her. Since then, whenever the brother is unusually restless or suffers much, the sister suffers in a similar degree."

Somewhat Chilly.

"It's pretty cold out in Nebraska, isn't it?" asked a New Yorker of a Western man.

"Yes, right chilly at times."

"How low does the thermometer get?"

"I don't know anything about the thermometer, but it's got to be so cold that my wife puts on gloves to wash the dishes."

He was talking to a Kentucky audience on the subject of the tariff. Said he, "Take whiskey, for instance," when every man in the audience arose with the remark, "Thank you; don't care if I do," and the lecturer had to stand treat or die.

The proprietor and editor of a paper in Blakely, Ga., blacklisted himself by the following card: "On and after date, the undersigned gives notice that he will prosecute any person selling him intoxicating liquor of any kind, to the full extent of the law. This is not for the purpose of injuring whiskey dealers, but to get sober and stay so."

CURRENT TOPICS.

LITTLE MAMIE WILSON, the 11-year-old cherub who deliberately set fire to the New York Hospital for Crippled Children four times in succession the last week, has a round, plump face, large blue eyes and golden hair, and was the pet of the whole establishment. All of which goes to show that you mustn't place too much confidence in outward appearances.

THE late William Crackanthorpe, of Westmoreland, England, was an old chum of Lord Brougham, Coleridge, Southey, Wordsworth, Herschell, Lyell, Davy, Murchison, Sydney Smith and Mrs. Somerville. Wordsworth was his cousin. In company with Lord Bute he crossed in 1815 from Livorno to Elba and had an interview with Napoleon Bonaparte the day before he made his escape back to France.

THE Empress of Austria, alarmed at her increasing embonpoint, has taken the advice of her physicians to go in for plenty of exercise. Any day may be witnessed at the Castle of Godolo a sight, awe-inspiring or comical, according to the opinions of the spectators, of a stout, elderly Empress fencing with a demure young archducess, Marie Valerie by name. A dozen years ago the Empress was able to belt herself with one of her august husband's collars—a No. 17.

OWING to the alarming frequency of attacks of robbers upon mail trains on sparsely settled routes in the Far West and the almost constant peril in which the lives of postal employees are placed by these marauders, the United States Post-Office Department has determined to arm, at the expense of the Government, every postal employee on these exposed railroad routes with weapons of the latest and most effective kind. It is a wonder that this precaution has not been taken long ere now.

Printers' Circular: Some advertisers feel that the publisher of a newspaper is under an obligation for their patronage, and, if offended, threaten to withdraw it. Newspaper men should omit no opportunity that offers itself to teach their patrons that they confer greater obligations than they receive. No man advertises unless he expects to receive more benefit than the worth of the money that he pays. The publisher is under no more obligation to his advertiser than the doctor is to his patient, or the lawyer to his client. The business transacted is for mutual benefit.

THE approach of St. Valentine's Day has led in Washington to a disgraceful piece of impudence on the part of a firm which publishes cheap prints. A design composed of two large hearts, with a picture of President Cleveland in one and of Mrs. Cleveland in the other, has been issued with the gushing legend printed underneath, "Two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one." Mrs. Cleveland was much annoyed at this impertinent production, and certain misguided friends attempted to buy up the pictures. The publishers, however, not understanding the true cause of the rapid sale, have dumped a second and larger lot on the market.

During the discussion of two papers dealing with artificial lighting, read at the recent meeting of the American Gas Light Association, Dr. Morton, the well-known physicist, drew attention to a point apt to be overlooked in these days of electric and incandescent gas lighting, viz., the importance of a thoroughly diffused light, if injury to the eye is to be avoided. He said that diffused lighting, emanating from not too brilliant sources, is better in every way than that which, though equal in absolute quantity, proceeds from intensely bright points; and he referred to the paralysing effect and ultimate injury to the eye produced by frequent exhibitions of powerful naked lights of any kind. All lights of great brilliancy should be placed above the ordinary line of vision, and suitably shaded.

GENERAL TCHEN-KI-TONG, the military attache to the Chinese Embassy in Paris, has written to M. Franck, Professor of the Academy of Sciences, to thank him for making him a member of the French Anti-Atheist League. He takes advantage of the occasion to enlighten Europeans on an interesting point of Chinese theology. The general says it is not true, as the materialists declare, that the Chinese are atheists. On the contrary, they recognize and proclaim the existence of God. He protests against the attempt made to prove that Confucius was a materialist. He says that God and heaven are synonymous terms among the Celestials. Moreover, as further proof of their belief in the existence of a Supreme Being, he informs us that the word atheist does not exist in the Chinese language, and that the Emperor of China is regarded by his subjects as the representative of the Divinity.

A LITTLE northeast of India is Kafiristan, whose lovely valleys are densely populated by tribes that are physically among the handsomest of Asiatics. Their country is almost a sealed book to us, for only one white man, Mr. McNair, has succeeded in crossing their threshold. About four years ago, staining his skin with walnut juice and in the guise of an Indian doctor, he pushed some ways into the territory, until the suspicious natives became so inquisitive that he thought it prudent to retreat. No scientific traveller has ever reached Lhasa, the capital of Thibet and the Rome of the Buddhists, or penetrated far into Southern Thibet, though many notable attempts have been made. Recently Prejevalsky has tried twice in vain to reach Lhasa, and last year Mr. McCauley, after elaborate preparations and after he had spent an year in getting the permission of the Chinese and Thibetan authorities to visit Lhasa, was finally turned back before he had crossed the frontier.

LETTERS have been received from Her Majesty's ship Egeria, Commander Pelham Aldrich, containing particulars of a visit she has recently made to Christmas Island, which she was ordered to explore for scientific purposes. The Egeria claims to be the first vessel that ever explored this island. Christmas Island is situated in the Indian Ocean, in latitude 11 degrees south, longitude 105 degrees 30 minutes east; it is 1,100 feet above the sea, is 12 miles long and 8 broad. It was found that the whole place was composed of coral and rock. Notwithstanding this, however, it is covered almost completely with trees and shrubs, the trees, which are of large dimensions, seeming to grow out of the rock itself, earth-surfaces being conspicuous by their absence. It is uninhabited by human beings, nor could any trace of animals be discovered, but sea birds swarm over every part of the island and about 400 wood pigeons were shot by the explorers while they remained there. No fruits or vegetable matter fit for consumption could, however, be found, nor the existence of any supply of fresh water, and the belief is that the vegetation of the island is dependent for nourishment on the dews and heavy rains that fall. The various specimens collected of birds, plants and insects, carefully preserved on board under the direction of Mr. Lister, the well-known naturalist—who went specially to the island in the Egeria—will be sent home for the British museum and Kew gardens.

AT the associated soiree of the Literary, Scientific and Art Societies of Liverpool, Professor Hele-Shaw delivered a lecture on "Perpetual Motion," which was copiously illustrated by means of lantern pictures. The lecturer explained to his audience that the idea of perpetual motion was very ancient, and that its successful achievement was as far off as ever, because it is impossible. An old Sanscrit manuscript tells of an attempt at a perpetual motion machine, which was probably connected in some way with the praying wheels of the Buddhists. In Europe, the first definite attempt at perpetual motion was made about the twelfth century; but many crude contrivances have been made. The favorite idea seemed to be that of a wheel so weighted with movable balls as to be whirled around in spite of the laws of gravitation. Professor Hele-Shaw exhibited a wheel thus arranged, which flew round at a most extraordinary speed, apparently by means of a clever arrangement of balls. The Chairman examined the table and the machinery, but found no motive power except the weights on the wheel. The solution of the problem of perpetual motion seemed to have been solved; but the Professor called out for his "motive power," and a small boy appeared who had been hidden underneath the platform, and had worked the machine by a strap passed up through the leg of the table. Such was the motor of one of the most successful "perpetual motion" machines ever made.

ACCORDING to Mr. Cox, "there is scarcely a family in Turkey, which has the means, that does not possess a number of women and girl slaves, black and white. The black are from Central Africa and Nubia; the white are Circassians sold by their parents." The price of the female slaves varies with their pretensions to good looks, the comely ones being to some extent educated and taught to sing, dance and make themselves agreeable. We learn that a "girl under 10 will bring $100, a maiden between 12 and 16, if she be attractive and can play upon the zither, from $3,500 to $5,000. If the young woman be a blonde, with black eyes and otherwise of rare beauty, she may bring from $4,000 to $6,000. An amateur will pay double that for a choice specimen, well educated in French and other graces." But Mr. Cox adds that "this tariff by no means applies to the slaves from Africa, the depots for whom are in Scutari and in the villages of the Bosphorus. The black male slave will bring $90, the black maiden $75, and a eunuch perhaps $400." We are assured by the author that "the slave has not a hard lot. The child of the slave has a part of the inheritance of the father. More than half of the marriages in Turkey are with slaves." Each so-called wife of the Sultan, for instance, is a slave, his rank being too exalted to permit of his entering into any marriage proper. "The fact is," thus Mr. Cox sums up his observations on the subject, "slavery in Turkey is but a name. The slaves have nothing to complain of. The white slaves rush to slavery as an alternative to something else and worse; only the black slaves who are brought from Africa have (in the course of transit) undergone the horrors of the traditional slave trade. Once received, however, the house slave, though perhaps looked down upon as one of under-condition, is nevertheless, from infancy to old age, treated as one of the family. After a female slave has worked faithfully for awhile, say seven years, she is nearly always freed by the mistress or master of the household."

He Dazed the Landlord.

"I desire to retire," said a Boston guest to the proprietor of a hotel in Arkansas.

"You which?" asked the dazed man.

"I desire to retire."

"You what?"

"I desire to retire."

"Well—I—I—don't b'leeve we've got it in the house, mister."

"Got what?" said the amazed guest. "I didn't ask for anything."

"Well, say it agin an' see if I kin ketch on."

"It is strange you cannot understand plain English. I simply said I desire to retire, that is I wish to go to my room."

"Oh—aw—oh! That's hit? You wanter turn in, eh? Why n't you say so? We don't know nothin' 'bout 'desirin' to retire' here in Arkansas. We just put off to bed."

And when he came downstairs he said to his wife, "If that's the way they talk in Boston it ain't no wonder there's so many fools there. 'Desire to retire!' Well, I'll be—!"—Tid-Bits.

A Bad Dream.

"What can be more depressing than a terrible dream?"

"I will tell you what is more depressing; it is to have a pleasant, delightful dream and wake up to find that it is nothing but a dream."

"Have you ever been there?"

"Just the other night. I'll never forget the anguish I felt when I woke."

"What did you dream?"

"That my room rent was paid a month in advance."

The young son of A. K. Ballew, living near Spring Place, Ga., loosened a large log that was lying on the mountain side and started to run ahead of it to see if he could beat it in a race downhill. The log gained velocity at every turn, and soon overtook the boy, crushing him to death.

A large shipment of carriages has been made by a Guelph firm for the Centennial International Exhibition at Melbourne next July.

Kingston Board of Health has decided to ask the Legislature for power to license dairymen living outside the city.

THE PLYMOUTH BRETHREN.

Origin of the Organization and What it Professes.

(Plymouth Correspondent Canada Presbyterian.)

